TO THE

MOST ILLUSTRIOUS

AND

High-born Princeſs

PRINCESS OF

MADAM!

WHEN my unhappy Circumſtances obliged me to retreat from Your Highneſſes Perſon and Service, it ſoon came into my mind what engagements I remained ſtill under, to teſtifie, as I had occaſion, my ſincere and Profound Reſpect and Devotion to both; And that although I could not enjoy the Honour and Happineſs of a near attendance, yet I ſhould never think my ſelf emancipated and at liberty. The rare Goodneſs and Sweetneſs of Your Temper and Behaviour; The exemplary Piety, Virtue and Prudence of ſo exalted a condition have ſo powerful an influence upon all who approach Your Highneſs, that nothing but a perfect inability can hinder them from ſerving You without any other reward than the honour and ſatisfaction of its performance and acceptance.

 Highneſs,

Perſons of our Garb and Profeſſion have ſeldom any better way of ſignifying our reſpect than a Book, ſometimes our own, ſometimes anothers; of the former I had none ready, of the latter it hath happened I had no contemptible one under my hand: A Divine of Your Highneſſes own Country, A Son and Dignitary of the Church of ENGLAND; In one ſort of Learning the moſt knowing perhaps of any Man in Europe, and the moſt enquired after in the Country where Your Highneſs now reſides of any Engliſh Divine. Inſomuch that moſt of theſe Engliſh Works are (as I am informed) Tranſlating into Latine by ſome of our own Country-Men here and in Holland, as his Latine ones are here in England now Tranſlated into Engliſh. Theſe laſt, with ſome pieces in Engliſh never before Printed, are Collected into a Second Volume and with the firſt humbly beg the honour of admiſſion into Your Highneſſes preſence. This will ſtill more confirm Your Highneſſes own Obſervation and the proof of Your Highneſſes own Cloſet, that no one Country hath and doth ſtill more abound in Learned, Pious, Judicious, writing Divines, than ENGLAND. In Talking, Noiſe and Geſture, perhaps they may be equallized or out done.

Not that I will anſwer for all, or perphaps a great number of Notions and Obſervations of the Author (that's enough to do for ones ſelf): Some things were written when young; Some things were the Syſtematical and received Opinions of the Times;

Times; But, generally ſpeaking, as many uſeful and peculiar Notions are to be found in this Author as in moſt other.

I am not unſenſible that although the Author be in Engliſh, yet not only the meanneſs but alſo the unſuitableneſs of ſuch a Preſent to Your Highneſs, being ſo full of Hebrew and Chronological Learning, may ſeem to want excuſe enough: But firſt the greateſt part of this Volume is the whole Hiſtory contained in the Scriptures, the moſt Venerable and Valuable for Antiquity, Certainty, Variety, Rarity and Uſe of any extant; and that ſo well Methodized and laid together, according to order of time, as to make it very eaſie and pleaſant. And then for the Hebrew, as all other the Learned Languages, they are generally rendred into Engliſh, except the unuſualneſs of the Writing, or the Emphaſis of the Phraſe, or ſome other ſuch cauſe hinder. Finally for the Chronological part, The great Condeſcenſion and moſt obliging Freedom with which Your Highneſs is pleaſed to Treat thoſe who have ſerved You in my Quality, have given me opportunity enough to know ſo much, as not to doubt of Your Highneſſes capacity to underſtand and make uſe of it when You pleaſe. Beſides the Dedication of this Authors Works thus Reviſed and Corrected to ſo Great, ſo Judicious and exemplary a Patroneſs of the Church of England, and ſo Illuſtrious an Ornament to it by Your Practiſe, ſeems a convenient expiation for (I had almoſt ſaid) the innocent fault, or the unhappy miſtakes of the Author in that kind; having through an exceſs of miſguided Gratitude prefix't the Name of one of the Worſt of Men (free Confeſſion may ſooner gain pardon) to one of the beſt of his pieces.

I am

I am not here to detain Your Highneſs any longer than with the addition of my unfeigned and unceſſant Prayers for the improvement of thoſe excellent Qualities already attained in ſo great a degree by Your Highneſs, of Religion, Virtue and Prudence, the proper Characters of great Minds who are to fill great Places; the Continuance and Preſervation of Health; the Bleſſing of Poſterity in Gods due time; the Encreaſe of all Proſperity here, and the Immortal reward of Pious and Virtuous Souls hereafter. Theſe I am ſure have the concurrence of all who have had the happineſs of knowing any thing of Your Highneſs; But are more eſpecially due from him who hath had the Honour and Benefit too of attending Your Highneſs in Holy things, and ſtill retains the juſt Ambition of ever continuing

Your Highneſſes

THE PREFACE TO THE READER.

ALthough this very Learned Author's Epiſtles and Prefaces to many of the Engliſh pieces contained in this Volume may ſave me much the labour of a general Preface to them all: Yet it may be convenient to add ſomething concerning the uſe of this kind of Learning, the Author himſelf, and theſe Engliſh Tracts of his.

AS for the Firſt, the Reader muſt not expect a Treatiſe about it in a Preface to Anothers Book: But only ſome brief ſuggeſtions for the direction and encouragement of the Studious; that the Author might not ſeem to have employed ſo much time and tedious labour too fruitleſly in Writing; nor my ſelf ſomewhat of both in Reviewing, Correcting and Publiſhing what is here preſented to him. There ſeems to me two chief Points of a more comprehenſive Wiſdom, the one is juſtly to eſtimate and prize the ſeveral parts of Knowledge, and that principally from their uſefulneſs; not ſo much from their Antiquity, their being eſteemed and cultivated perhaps by great Perſonages, or the like ſlight and pedantique conſiderations, any further than as they are ſigns or arguments of the former: The other is to underſtand the inclinations, capacity and ability of any perſon for one or more of them. Theſe two things are principally to be obſerved by thoſe who apply themſelves to any ſtudy (and indeed to any imployment) in making their choice: Which is in it ſelf of greateſt uſe and importance, and which a perſon can make moſt progreſs in; what is beſt in it ſelf, and what he can beſt do. If any thing be of no good uſe or advantage, it is not to be undertaken at all; if a man wants ability or capacity for it, it is not to be attempted by him. Although there be truly great difference between the ſeveral ſorts of Science in reſpect of their value; yet there is hardly any which hath not its uſe, and oftimes much more than the ignorance, or envy, or faſhion, or humor of an Age will allow.

There are four things which our Author hath been very diligent and laborious in, and where we may be conſiderably benefited by the Reading of theſe Tracts. I. The Chronology of the Holy Scriptures. II. Their Chorography. III. Their Original Texts and various Verſions. IV. Talmudical and Rabbinical Authors.

First, For Chronology, it is nothing but the knowledge of the Relation and the existence of things one to another, before, with or after; and particularly with the conversions and situations of the Sun and Moon, i. e. years, months, weeks, days, as being the most constant and the most universally known. Though the time of a things existence may be and frequently is characterized by the existence of other things likewise, nor is it so easie to define what is the first measure of time. But this is not so much to our purpose. The uses of the knowledge both of the times of writings, and of their matter or contents, are very considerable, and in short these among others. First, From thence we collect many other circumstances, and consequently a more full and adequate knowledge of things; such as place, Authors, qualities, conditions, persons to whom, reasons why, and twenty others: Whence it frequently helps to the discovery of the true writing in an Author, or of its meaning and sense; and in prophane and fallible writings, the truth or falshood of things themselves therein delivered. Instances of the former are numerous in the Scriptures, (for as to the latter, the truth of what is delivered therein, we are secure). As in pag. 80. of the ensuing Volume, according to our Author, the sense of למלכות לאסא i. e. of the Kingdom of Asa (2 Chron. XVI. 1.) in the thirty sixt year, of which Baasha King of Israel is said to come up against Judah, is not his personal but his National Kingdom, if I may so call it, not his Reign, but the Kingdom of Judah in opposition to that of the ten Tribes, since their division. This appears from the Chronology or computation of Baasha's reign, who is said 1 Kings XV. 33. to begin it in the third of Asa, and to continue it but twenty four years, that is, to the twenty seventh of Asa; and this according to all the translations too. Baasha therefore could not come up against Israel in the thirty sixt of Asa's reign being understood of his personal reign or Kingdom. Wee'l take leave to argue from the Chronology of the Scripture, especially where all Copies and Translations agree, notwithstanding the assertions and conjectures of the late famous Critick, ★ That no exact Chronology (what for no time?) can be stated upon the Authority of these Books; till he lays surer foundation for his Opinion, and more particularly explains it. However this and other following instances are proofs and illustrations of what use Chronology may be; although the integrity and truth of the present writing in the Hebrew Copies be only supposed not proved. Thus also Omri's beginning to reign over Israel twelve years in the thirty first year of Asa King of Judah according to the Hebrew Text, and all the Versions must have the sense which Chronology will there allow. vid. Harmony of the Old Testament, pag. 81. In p. 87. Ahaziah's being forty two years old when he began to reign, 2 Chron. XXII. 2. and Jehojachin eight years old, 2 Chron. XXXVI. 9. must be otherwise rendred than it usually is to make it consistent with Chronology, supposing no error in the Hebrew Text. But both the Greek and Oriental Versions in the first place, having the number twenty two or twenty instead of forty two; and in the other place, the Oriental Versions having eighteen instead of eight, makes it probable that there is a mistake. Grotius's confident assertion concerning the reading of Isa. 7. 8. viz. that in the Hebrew it should be שש וחמש i. e. six and five, not ששים וחמש sixty and five five (though this laſt agree with all the verſions too) and conſequently that it was to be ſix and five or eleven years, not ſixty and five to the time when Ephraim ſhould be no people, to the taking of Samaria and captivating the ten Tribes; I ſay this aſſertion of his is to be rejected (however otherwiſe that place is to be interpreted) becauſe it is inconſiſtent with Chronology as well as for other reaſons. For this Propheſie muſt be in the third year of Ahaz at the furtheſt, becauſe it was in the time of Pekah King of Iſrael, when he invaded Jeruſalem with Reſin King of Syria. Ahaz began to reign in the ſeventeenth year of Pekah's twenty years reign, 2 Kings XVI. 1. and therefore could be contemporary with him but three years at moſt. But now from Ahaz's third year to the taking of Samaria, which was the ninth of Hoſea King of Iſrael, was eighteen years, not eleven as Grotius would have it. Even to the beginning of the ſiege it was fifteen years. For Hoſea began to reign in the twelfth of Ahaz (2 Kings XVII. 1.) there is nine years; and Samaria was taken in the ninth of Hoſea, there is nine more. The reaſon of Grotius's miſtake, we read in the 2 Kings XV. 30, viz. that Hoſea ſlew Pekah, and reigned in his ſtead. This he takes to have been immediately after Pekah's death, which is not neceſſary. And it appears from the other computation, that there was an Interregnum in the Throne of Iſrael ſeven years; or at leaſt that Hoſea was not accounted to reign, as our Author hath obſerved. The reaſon of which he probably conjectures to have been that Shalmanezer, the Aſſyrian King, had conquered him and his Kingdom, and kept them for about ſeven years; afterwards he permitted him to govern as his Tributary, or Hoſea by force reſcued himſelf from that ſubjection. Our Author in pag. 104. makes the ſame obſervation ſerviceable for the methodizing and explaining Iſa. I. 9. and XIV. 28. Once more the moſt probable reading of that known place, Exod. XII. in the Samaritan Text and Alexandrine Copy of the Septuagint is determined by Chronology. A number of other places there are both in the Propheſies and Epiſtles eſpecially, beholding to the knowledge of the time both of their writing and matter for their meaning; As on the other hand oftimes the matter is a Character of the time.

The proof of the completion of Propheſies by Chronology is a matter of great importance, to aſſure us that there hath been ſuch a thing as Revelation in the World, by one of the greateſt Miracles the prediction of contingent futurities. As that of the habitation and ſervitude of Abraham and his poſterity in Canaan and Ægypt four hundred years, a round and even number for an uneven and more particular; a thing ſo uſual in the Scriptures, that the Rabbins have made a rule of it in the interpretation of them. And the number four hundred and thirty recorded Exod. XII. is an argument of no deſign in the Writer or Compiler of the Pentateuch to make the Propheſie and its Completion exactly agree; but that he ſet down, as he receiv'd by writing, tradition, or Inſpiration. Remarkable alſo are indeed the Propheſies of the pollution of Jeroboam's Altar, about three hundred and fifty years after the prediction, by Joſiah offering up the Prieſts of Baal, and burning mens bones upon it; 1 King. XIII. 2, 23. That of Daniel's ſeventy weeks or four hundred and ninety years from the going out of the Decree to the coming of the Meſſiah; That of the 70 years Babylonian Captivity; The expreſs argument on the other ſide. That famous place of difficulty, Exod. XII. 40. The ſojourning of the children of Iſrael who dwelt in Egypt was four hundred and thirty years, would be juſtly ſuſpected of defect from the Samaritan Text, and Alexandrine Copy of the Seventy, though there was no evidence from Chronology. Both of which have it, The ſojourning of the children of Iſrael, and of their Fathers in Egypt and Canaan: and even the Roman edition, of the Seventy, adds the land of Canaan to Egypt.

In old Jacobs Propheſie concerning his youngeſt ſon Joſeph, Gen. XLIX. 22. The Samaritan Text confirmed by the Seventy ſeems much the better reading than the Hebrew. In the Hebrew it is בְּנוֹת צָעָדָה עָלַי שׁוּר Which our Engliſh tranſlation renders, whoſe branches run over the wall. But indeed according to the preſent punctation it can hardly be conſtrued: But in the Samaritan Text it is בנה ושמשון and in the Seventy υἱὸς μου νεώτερος, i. e. Joſeph my youngeſt ſon: which alſo well anſwers that in the prediction concerning Reuben, verſ. 3. Reuben my firſt born. In Gen. IV. 8. The agreement of the Samaritan Text and Verſion, the Syriack, Septuagint, Vulgar Latine, for the interpoſition of נלכה השרה (as it is in the Samaritan Text) i. e. let us go into the field, in the ſpeech of Cain to Abel (beſides the word ויאמר and he ſaid, neceſſarily requiring it, and a void ſpace left in the Hebrew Copies) makes it extreamly probable that thoſe words are really wanting in our preſent Books. As for the great difference of the intervals, or ſum of years, from the Creation to the Flood, and from the Flood to Abraham's birth, which is between the preſent Hebrew, the Samaritan and the Septuagint, I leave it to Chronologers. This is not a place to diſpute it.

That there are alſo many Errata's and faults in many places of the preſent Hebrew of ſingle letters, both conſonants and vowels (I mean the ſounds, not the characters of vowels, which without doubt are very late) cannot reaſonably be denyed by one unprejudiced, as principally from other arguments, ſo from one or more of the Verſions. I do not allow of all the Examples produced by Learned Men, and ſome of them as much partial on the other hand, and almoſt ſpiteful againſt the Hebrew: But I think ſome inſtances are juſt and reaſonable. As to ſingle out one or two, Pſal. II. 9. we read now in the Hebrew תִּרְעֵם i. e. Thou ſhalt break them with a rod, or rather a ſcepter of Iron: But in the Septuagint and in the New Teſtament, as Rev. I. 27. it is ποιμανεῖς αὐτούς Thou ſhalt feed or rule them: to which agree all the other tranſlations except the Chaldee Paraphraſe. Whence we have very likely reaſon to believe that they did read it תִּרְעֵם in the Hebrew, which ſignifies, thou ſhalt feed, govern, or rule them. It is true the ſenſe of both readings is much the ſame, and therefore the variety of no great conſequence. For the ſame reaſon it is probable that in Hoſ. XIII. 14. the true reading of the Hebrew formerly was איה where are, which St. Paul follows, 1 Cor. XVI. 55. not אהי I will be thy Plagues O Death. Though the conjecture of the very Learned Dr. Pocock, obſerved alſo by Buxtorf in his ordinary Lexicon, concerning a Metatheſis or tranſpoſition of the letters י and ה be ingenious. But I confeſs his citation of the Chaldee Paraphraſt, verſ. 10. of the ſame Chapter is ſo far from proving it, that it might as well argue another defect in the Hebrew of the ſame kind; and that there alſo

The Paraphraſt as well as the Vulgar, and all the reſt of the tranſlations, did read in the Hebrew formerly, איה where not אהי I will be. Nor I doubt is there one example of אהי by a Metatheſis ſignifying interrogatively. And yet Buxtorf in his Lexicon before cited, only upon the Authority of theſe two places, hath given us this new word אהי for where. Our Engliſh Tranſlation following the preſent Hebrew hath more truly rendred it, O Death I will be thy Plagues; and I will be thy King. For nothing more ordinary than for the future tenſe of the Verb, היה to be written defectively with an Apocope. Again Amos 9. 12. there ſeems to be three words otherwiſe read by the Septuagint, and followed by St. Paul, Act. 15. 16. than is now extant in the Hebrew, which much alters the ſenſe; for ירשו they ſhall poſſeſs the Septuagint read ידרשו they ſhall ſeek; for את the Article of the Accuſative Caſe אותי me; and for אדום Edom אדם Man or Mankind. The Septuagint, and out of them the Arabick reading one way; the Chaldee, Vulgar Latine, and Syriack reading another; leave it uncertain which is the right unleſs it can be determined by other means,

Theſe things are now almoſt known to every body, and are brought here only for inſtances with ſome little additional obſervation.

Moreover it may not be amiſs to take notice that the punctation of the preſent Hebrew is not always accurate. This is apparent enough as from many other Anomalies not mentioned by the Maſora; ſo alſo from many proper names otherwiſe written in the Verſions, and that according to their own Analogy of the Hebrew Tongue. As בִּלְעָם שִׁנְעָר in the Seventy Βαλαὰμ and σεναὰρ and ſo likewiſe in the Vulgar: whence it is moſt likely theſe words ſhould have been pointed בִּלְעָם שִׁנְעָר As כְּנַעַן with pathach not ſcheva before the guttural.

And to add this upon this occaſion; It hath been nothing but meer ſuperſtition, I concieve in the Modern Jews, and perhaps in the more ancient even beyond the time of the Seventy, to put the vowels of אדני Adonai under יהוה Jehovah the proper Name of the God of Iſrael. For it ſeems to me more likely that this proper Name of God was pronounced, becauſe it frequently made a part of mens names both in the beginning and ending. As in יְרְמְיָהוּ וְשַׁעְיָהוּ (to be pointed as יִרְבְעָם יְכָנְיָהוּ not יִרְמְיָהוּ as it is falſly in our Hebrew Bibles) יְהוֹנָתָן &c. vulgarly written, Iſaiah, Jeremiah, Jonathan. Nor is it leſs probable that the true punctation of this proper Name יְהוָה Jehovah as now pointed was anciently יַהְוֶה Jahavoh, As שְׁלוֹמֹה יִצְחָק יַעֲקוֹב &c. But this by the bye for a little digreſſion. Another uſe and benefit of the ſeveral Verſions of the Scriptures is oftimes to ſuggeſt to us ſome ſignifications of phraſes or words which otherwiſe we ſhould not have thought of. Thus Iſa. xxviii. 16. In the Hebrew we read חמאמין לא יחיש which our Engliſh Tranſlateth, He that believeth will not make haſt: But the Seventy render it ὁ μὴ καταισχυνθεὶς and St. Paul Rom. ix. 33. ὁ καταισχυνθήσεται ſhall not be aſhamed, and the Chaldee Paraph. לא יזדעזעון ſhall not be troubled or diſturbed, and the Syriack לא נרחל ſhall not fear. Now from theſe different Tranſlations it may not be unlikely that the Hebrew word may ſignifie all theſe four ſenſes, eſpecially being of ſo near an alliance one to another; though in our modern interpretations we take notice but of one. Which is rendred ſomewhat more probable by that very learned Orientaliſt Dr. Pocok, who tells tells us the Arabick verb Hauſch anſwering to the Hebrew חוש ſignifies three things, viz. to haſt, to fear, to be aſhamed. And in the Heptaglott Lexicon of the indefatigable Dr. Caſtle, now the worthy Arabick Profeſſor in Cambridge, who with the loſs almoſt of his Senſes, Limbs and Eſtate, undertook that laborious Work; and underwent a great part of the toil in the edition of the Engliſh Polyglott Bible (ſuch is too often the fate of Learned drudgery) I ſay in this Lexicon appears four or five more ſignifications. But as to this laſt, It ſeems I confeſs that the arguing from the various ſignifications in one Tongue, to the like in another, may be too much relied upon. For what is more ordinary than for people in a little Tract of time by reaſon of many accidents to change the ſignification of words, and to give others; and for one Country who firſt borrowed a word from another, to add more ſenſes and oftimes quite to loſe the firſt. As for example, The word concieve hath many ſignifications in Engliſh different from thoſe of Concipio in Latine, from whence it is derived. Nor doth infælix in Latine ſignifie both unhappy and miſchievous, becauſe unluckie, in Engliſh, which anſwers to the Latine infælix ſometimes ſignifies both. Nor do the French words Trier and Craquer ſignifie any other thing that I remember at this day, than to pick or chuſe, or cull, and to ſhake or quake, not to try, attempt, make an eſſay, or to boaſt; Though the Engliſh words to try, and to crack do, which are derived from thoſe French words. Nor finally doth the word Letten in Dutch ſignifie Contraries, viz. to hinder and to permit, becauſe the Engliſh word to lett, which anſwers to it doth: of which Dr. Pocock takes notice (loc. cit.) as one inſtance of a word ſignifying contraries amongſt many others of other Languages. No more will it follow that צעיר in Hebrew is ἀναπόσπαστον of two repugnant ſignifications, becauſe the Arabick ſometimes tranſlating it according to ſome of their Lexicographers is of that kind.

I know that the Engliſh to lett, ſignifying to permit, comes from the Dutch word Belaten not from letten; but the word lett in Engliſh ſignifying to hinder, is written with the ſame letters, and anſwers to the Dutch letten in one ſenſe, whence one might infer that letten in the Dutch ſhould have the ſame ſignifications. But I fear I ſhall almoſt tyre my Reader before I come to that I principally deſigned, which was the beneſit and advantages of Talmudical and Rabbinical Learning, the chief talent of this learned and laborious Author.

This kind of ſtudy hath now flouriſhed in theſe Weſtern parts about the ſpace of one Century, and ſomewhat more; But at preſent begins (as it ſeems) to be neglected and laid aſide, partly becauſe it is thought that the beſt of it is already extracted and prepared to our hands, by the hard and aſſiduous labours of many both Learned and Judicious Men, (in which may be much miſtake) partly becauſe it requires much time and pains not attended with ſuch ſecular Advantages as other Studies more eaſie and delightful. Since its reſtauration it hath had ſomewhat the fortune of Chymiſtry, and hath been by degrees inſpected, improved and uſed not only by men of whimſey, memory, or vanity, but by the more Wiſe, Judicious and Philoſophical. Many of both ſorts have given us a large account and examples of the great uſefulneſs of it: perhaps beſides ſome more inſtances of what they have obſerved I may ſuggeſt or more inſiſt on one or two which they have not taken ſo much notice of.

Firſt then, The very knowledge of the opinions and cuſtoms of ſo conſiderable a part of mankind, as the Jews now are, and eſpecially have been heretofore, is valuable both for pleaſure and uſe. It is a very good piece of Hiſtory, and that of the beſt kind, viz. of Humane Nature, and that part of it which is the moſt different from us, and commonly the leaſt known to us. And indeed the principal advantage which is to be made by the wiſer ſort of men, of moſt writings, is rather to ſee what men think and are, than to be informed in the Natures or Truth of things they write of; To obſerve what thoughts and paſſions have run through mens minds, what opinions and manners they are of. Particularly it is of good importance here to take notice of the ſtrange ignorance, the putid fables, the impertinent trifling, the ridiculous diſcourſes and diſputes, the odd conceits, the fantaſtical obſervations and explications, the childiſh reaſonings, the groundleſs arrogance and ſelf-conceit, the ſuperſtitious temper of this people univerſally, except Maimonides and one or two Modern more Philoſophically given, who yet had enough of it too. The very Spirit of Hypocriſie, Weakneſs, Pride and Superſtition, which our Saviour and the Prophets, thoſe illuſtrious Preachers of inward and real Righteouſneſs, of a ſolid and intelligent Piety and Virtue, reproved and inveighed againſt in their times, runs ſtill generally through their writings. It appears yet by them, how blindly or hypocritically they prize the ſmaller matters of their Religion and their own additional circumſtances beyond the weightier and more important. They make a great noiſe of their being Gods peculiar people, in ſpecial Covenant with him; of the Divinity of their Religion, and the jus Divinum of all their little inſtitutions and non-ſenſical myſteries, eſpecially of their Cabbala, either from the groundleſs and whimſical interpretation of ſome command of their Law, or from uncertain or falſe tradition; when in the mean time they little mind the great end and deſign of what is true and uſeful in them. They will diſpenſe with Charity and Humanity it ſelf, to obſerve their own deciſions, while they think it lawful to compaſs the Death of an Iſraelite, who wears Linſey-woolſey, and unlawful to take up a Heathen out of the Sea ready to periſh. They talk as if God were ſo enamoured of their Anceſtors, and doted on their poſterity, that he made the World only for their ſake; and thought himſelf ſtill ſo obliged to them for their honour they do to him, by preferring and chuſing him and his Laws, and Religion, before others; that he muſt needs be their Protector and Saviour, nor ever ſuffer one of thoſe his dear people to periſh or ſcarce come to any harm. This is a diſeaſe in all Religions, and but too ready to creep into the beſt of Religions, Chriſtianity it ſelf. Which hath ſo expreſly diſcover'd, and ſeverely condemned it, in the fooliſh Hypocrites of the Moſaical Religion, to which it ſucceeds. We may further alſo obſerve how much the Jews and other Oriental people, are given to ſtrange, uncouth and ſtrong imaginations, eſpecially about intellectual things, like the Pythagorean's and Platoniſts, who had their Learning and Notions from the Eaſt and the South: which as it hath its uſe for invention and diſcovery, ſometimes of more than what ever enters into the thoughts of the dull generality of mankind; ſo it is a great diſadvantage of nature too, ſtuffing the mind with a great many impertinencies, follies and falſhoods, and that believed with great pertinacity, unleſs it be managed by the ſupreme faculties of underſtanding, reaſon and judgment. After all this a man may meet with ſome opinions among them, either by chance or Tradition, and many Inſtitutions, Rites and Laws, with the explication and application of them, which may be good hints to Wiſer Men. Though I have been generally inclinable to believe that the moſt of the conſiderable Doctrines among them, about intellectual matters in Divinity and Philoſophy, As concerning the Nature and Attributes of God, ſome things of the Meſſia, the nature and orders of Angels, of the Holy Spirit, and Divine preſence (רוח הקודש and שכינה) of the Reſurrection of the dead, the Immortality of Souls and their ſtates after death, of the firſt and ſecond death, of a kind of Purgatory, of the day of judgment, of original ſin, &c. of ſome of which there is ſome account in the Theol. Jud. of Du Voiſin; I ſay, I have been always prone to think that the Jews, eſpecially the Modern, ſuch as Ramban, Raſi, Saadia, Kimchi, Abarbanel, &c. have received them though inſenſibly, and not known to themſelves, and with ſome mixture and interpolation of their own from Heathen and Chriſtian Philoſophers, Fathers, Schoolmen, who firſt taught them and ſet them about in the World. I have ſaid the moſt not all; and this I think I could make probable in many particulars, if this were a place for it. But this is enough for the firſt Advantage.

A ſecond uſe of the Talmudical and Rabbinical Authors, may be the confirmation of the Hiſtory of our Saviour Jeſus the true Meſſias. That there were ſuch perſons as Jeſus and his Diſciples, who lived in ſuch a Country, and in ſuch an Age, that he performed ſuch actions, and delivered ſuch diſcourſes, that there was ſuch places, opinions, cuſtoms, practices, publick and private, in that time. For the Jewiſh Writers, who then lived or not long after, and others from them make mention of theſe matters of fact, they report to us ſuch uſages and rites among themſelves, they relate and diſcuſs ſuch opinions and controverſies; Their ſtile and phraſe is perfectly the ſame with that of the Evangeliſts, nay much of the matter too, ſuch as Proverbs, Parables, Similitudes. Now what confirms or weakens the credit of an Hiſtory in ſome particulars doth it in all the reſt; for the oftner any one relates things truly or falſly, the more probable it is he may do ſo again. Were it not in our own Tongue I ſhould think it almoſt ſuperfluous to give but an inſtance or two, out of many of our own obſervation, there being ſo great a number already produced by our Author, and other Learned Men, to commend and encourage this ſtudy. How like to that of our Saviour, in his Sermon on the mount, Matth. VI. 25. and Luke XII. 22. Therefore take no thought for your life, what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink, &c. is that, in the Babylonian Talmud, in the Gemara of the Treatiſe Sota, fol. 48. col. 2. ר"א הגדול אומר כל מי שיש פת בסלו ואומר מה אוכל למחר אינו אלא מקטני אמנה

i. e. 'Twas a ſaying of Rabbi Eliezer the elder, That whoſoever having one morſel in his basket, enquires what he ſhall eat on the morrow, he is no other than one of little faith. ὀλιγόπιστος. This ſame ſaying is quoted by our Author, in his Horæ Heb. but at the ſecond hand, out of R. Abuhabb's Preface to Menorath Hammaor. And again, T. B. kidd. in Miſn. Miſn. 14.

דם מתפרנסין שלא בצער אני שנבראתי לשמש את קוניאינו ין שאתפרנס שלא בצער. i. e. Shall the Beaſts and the Fowles be fed without ſolicitous care and trouble, and ſhall not I who am created to ſerve my Maſter and Maker? Again, Matth. X. 35, 36. Our Saviour tells his Diſciples, That he was come to ſet a man at variance againſt his father, &c. We meet with the very ſame Tradition almoſt in the ſame words, T. B. cap. 9. miſ. 15. The citation is too long to be all recited. It begins בעקבות משיחא חוצפא to this purpoſe, That about the time of the Meſſias, impudence ſhould abound, &c. and then a little after בן מנוול אב בת קמה באמה כלה בחמותה אויבי איש אנשי ביתו. The ſon ſhall revile and ill treat his father, the daughter ſhall riſe up againſt her mother, and the daughter in law againſt the mother in law, and a mans foes ſhall be they of his own houſhold. R. Judah tells the ſame ſtory in T. B. Sanhed. fol. 97. Col. 1. Although theſe unwonted things ſeem to be ſpoken by theſe Rabbins, not as the conſequents or effects, but as the immediate precedents of the Meſſias coming. Some of the moſt notable parables of our Saviour, in the Goſpels, we meet with them, the very ſame or very like, with ſome few alterations in their Talmuds. That of the rich glutton, Luke XVI. in T.B. Gem. Berac. That of the Labourers in the Vineyard, Matth. XX. in T. H. Gem. Berac. That of the Marriage feaſt, and the wiſe and fooliſh Virgins, T. B. Gem. Schab. 153. Theſe tranſlated by Cunrade Otho, are already cited by Sheringh. In his Preface to Codex Joma. The laſt of which is looſely and ill rendred, with additions and omiſſions, for the better explication and accommodation of it to the Text of the Evangeliſt. Furthermore, how exactly true doth that reproach of our Saviour to the Scribes and Phariſees appear, Matth. XXIII. 3. from their own diſputes and deciſions, in *T. B. Maaſ. Miſn. cap.*4. *Miſ.*5. our Saviour pronounceth a wo againſt them for their greater care and accuracy, in paying Tythe, of Mint, Anniſe and Cummin, than in Judgment, Mercy and Faith. Their great Doctors and Wiſe Men, in the place cited, make it an important queſtion, whether Anniſe (which they call שבת) ſhould give Tythe of its ſeeds, leaves, ſtalks or ſprouts altogether (as I ſuppoſe). R. Eliezer was of opinion that it ought: but the Wiſe Men (חכמים) who always carry it, judged that nothing was to be Tithed in its leaves and ſeeds, but only השלחים וגרגר Naſturtium & Eruca, which ſome Engliſh creſſes and rocket. Scores of places might be here ſet down which have not been taken notice of by other Authors: nor was it worth their while always to do it, unleſs very briefly to indicate ſuch a cuſtom or phraſe, and the places in their Authors where for curioſity or exerciſe they may be found. And to keep my ſelf within the bounds of a Preface, I will here together juſt note many places in the Talmuds where there is mention made of our Jeſus, that the learners or learned may conſult them at their leiſure: Moſt of them are to be found ſcatteringly in Buxt. Lex. Talmud. only we muſt obſerve that partly out of ignorance, partly out of malice, they have mixed many fooleries and falſities with what is true. In T. B. Sanh. Gem. 43. 1. It is delivered as a Tradition, that Jeſus was hanged (upon a Croſs) the day before the Paſsover, becauſe he had enchanted, ſeduced and drawn away the people; that it being proclaimed three days for ſome perſon to appear in his behalf, to teſtifie his innocence, there was none found to do it; that he was קרוב למלכות regno propinquus, i. e. either of the Royal Family or in favour with ſome Courtier; that there was five of his Diſciples (the names except one agree not with ours) who pleaded they were not to be put to death. Again, in the ſame Treatiſe, fol. 101. 2. and in Sot. 47. 1. they ſay, Jeſus uſed enchantments and ſorceries; and they tell a ſtory of his going into Ægypt with one Joſhua ſon of Perachiah, and that he was excommunicated by R. Symeon. The reſt of the places are T. B. Avod. Zar. 17. 1. and in thoſe which ſpeak of בן סטרא an Apoſtate. By whom Buxtorf and others think they covertly mean Jeſus. As T. B. Sanhedr. 67. 1. Schab. 104. 2. and T. H. Sanhed. cap. 7. about the end. It were eaſie to fill many ſheets more under this head: but theſe are abundantly ſufficient for inſtances of this ſecond uſe of Talmudical and Rabbinical skill. The Reader alſo in peruſing this Volume will find a multitude of paſſages and obſervations to this purpoſe, and particularly Chap. 9,10. Of the Temple Service: and Sect. 77. Of the Harmony of the New Teſtament.

To theſe ought to be added the known benefit and advantage of the interpretation of many places of the Old Teſtament, concerning the Meſſias; the rendring more probable even to Chriſtians, and the eſtabliſhment of many Chriſtian Dogms againſt the Jews, denied by ſome, or many, or almoſt all the later of them, from Authors and Writers of greateſt Authority in their account. As to this laſt point againſt the the Jews, it matters not ſo much of what Authority they are in themſelves, (though ſome may be allowed them) or from whence they had their opinions. Such are for example, the time of the Meſſias coming, the excellency of his Nature, the greatneſs of his Power, that he was to be a Spiritual Prince, to have Spiritual Power againſt Satan, and to turn him and wicked men into Hell; yet a Calamitous, Afflicted and Deſpiſed Perſon, though highly Meritorious, the Juſtification of men for his ſake, his ſatisfaction by his Merits for the ſins of penitents, &c. I do not ſay that what we meet withal among the Jews, eſpecially more ancient, is exactly the ſame with theſe Chriſtian Doctrines; but that at leaſt it is ſo like, and comes ſo near them truly and intelligibly explained, that they have reaſon to be fairly diſpoſed to the belief and reception of them.

And, Firſt, I will very briefly put together (that I take in as much as I can into this Preface) many Scripture interpretations, eſpecially of the Ancients, concerning the Meſſias, to which many more may be added. Iſa. I. 6. His Name ſhall be called Wonderful, &c. Maimonides in his אגר' תימן confeſſeth theſe ſix Names to belong to the Meſſia, conſtruing the words as we do. So doth ABen Eſra. But R. Lipman, R. Selomo and D. Kimchi make another conſtruction, viz. that the mighty God, the everlaſting Father, &c. ſhall call him (the Child) Wonderful, &c. Iſa. XI. 1, 2. and there ſhall come forth a rod out of the ſtem of Jeſſe, &c. The Gemariſts in T. B. Sanh. 93. 2. and Maiem. in his אגר' תימ and the Chaldee Paraphraſt interpret it of the Meſſia, Iſa. LII. 17. Behold my ſervant ſhall deal prudently, he ſhall be exalted, &c. Tanch in Jalkut underſtands it of the Meſſias, and R. Houna in the ſame place refers the fifth verſ. of Chap. 53. He was wounded for our Tranſgreſſions to the afflictions of the Meſſias. That whole Propheſie is generally by the Antients interpreted of the Meſſias; though R. Saadia, and ABen Eſra, whom Grotius thought good to follow, refer it to Jeremy; and the Kimchi's, R. Solom, and ABarbanel, with with much leſs reaſon or ſenſe, to the people of Iſrael. Iſa. XI. 10. To it ſhall the Gentiles ſeek. In Bereſ. Rabb. fol. 110. it is ſaid to be meant of Meſſiah: So indeed do all the Jewiſh interpreters. Iſa. II. 4. And they ſhall beat their ſwords into plow-ſhares, &c. it is ſpoken of the times of the Meſſias in Jalk. out of T. B. Schabb. Zech. XI. 12. And they weighed for my price thirty pieces of Silver. R. Chanian, and R. Jochanan in Bereſ. Rab. are of opinion that thoſe thirty pieces were thirty new precepts, which the Meſſias was to bring with him, whence would follow ſome change in their Law. Though there are there who object that thoſe thirty precepts are to be given to the Gentiles, not to the Iſraelites, as the Scholiaſt R. Iſſachar there interprets it. Zech. XII. 10. And they ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced (which place I think may be better rendred to ſecure it againſt the Grammatical objection of the Jews) R. Douſa in T.B. Succ. 52. 1. will have it meant of the Meſſias the ſon of Joſeph. Mich. V. 2. Out of thee ſhall he come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Iſrael. The Chaldee Paraph. tells us this is the Meſſia. Buxt. in his Lex. Talm. gives us above ſixty places where the Chaldee Paraphraſts mention the Meſſias: Many or moſt of which interpretations or alluſions being fantaſtical, and not owned by any Chriſtian Expoſitors, who have handled the Scripture with Judgment and Sobriety, are impertinent to our purpoſe. Although I fear I have already cloyed the reader with the firſt ſort of citations, yet I muſt beg his patience a little while, for one or two more of the ſecond, viz. thoſe that belong to the eſtabliſhment and more eaſie reception of ſome Chriſtian Dogms. That Gloſs of Tanchuma in Jalkut on Iſa. LII. 13. a place juſt before mentioned is now quoted by every body. The words of the Prophet are הנה ישכיל עבדי ירום ונשא וגבה מאד i. e. Behold my ſervant ſhall deal prudently, he ſhall be exalted, and be extolled, and be very high. That ancient Author gloſſeth, i. e. ונשא. זה מלך משיח ירום מאברהם ממשה וגבה ממלאכי השרת שנ' וגביהם גבה להם This is the King Meſſias, He ſhall be exalted above Abraham, extolled above Moſes, and high above the miniſtring Angels; For it is ſaid, (Ezek. I. 18.) As for their heights or backs, there is a height above them. I know in the Hebrew this laſt ſentence brought for proof, may and ought to be otherwiſe rendred: But it is ſufficient to my purpoſe that the ſenſe muſt be as I have tranſlated it, according to this ancient Author, becauſe otherwiſe it proves not the thing for which it was quoted. Now that which is principally obſervable is that by the living creatures in Ezekiel. This Author and others underſtood the ſupreme order of Angels (of which they make ſeven) called חיות הקודש or holy animals, and by גביהם which we tranſlate rings, they backs, they mean their dignity: and yet they ſay there was גבה להם a height or dignity above them, which was that of the Meſſias; and therefore that he was next God the fountain of being: And why not then that he did from eternity emane or iſſue from him. This Doctrine of this ancient Author is directly contrary to the opinion of Majemonides, who tells us, that the dignity or eminency of the Meſſias ſhould be greater than that of all the Prophets except Moſes. But nothing can be more agreeable to the firſt Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews and eſpecially to the 7. & 14. verſes; and indeed this Chapter, and the beginning of St. Johns Goſpel, and the Epiſtle of Jude, and many things in St. Johns and St. Peters Epiſtles, in the Apocalypſe and elſewhere, have ſo much of a Cabbaliſtical ſtrain, both as to matter and phraſe, that the Jews methinks ſhould have a kindneſs for them, if it were but only upon that account. I ſhould here ſcarce mention ſo whimſical a Writer as Baal Hatturim, who ſeems to attribute at leaſt the formation of the Chaos to the Meſſias; did not our Learned Author, in his Harmony of the New Teſtament, tell us that the ſame is to be met withal in Zohar and Bahir, two of the moſt eſteemed books among the Jews. Upon the words, &c. רוח אלוהים מרחפת the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, Gen. I. 2. that Author notes, זה היא רוחו של משיח This was the Spirit of the Meſſias. Nor is that Tranſlation and Paraphraſe of the Chal. Paraph. Iſa. LII. 13. to the end of Chap. LIII. now I ſuppoſe leſs commonly known, where Juſtification or Remiſſion of ſins is ſo plainly aſcribed to the interceſſion of the Meſſias. Chap. LIII. 4. &c. בכן על חובנא Therefore he ſhall pray for the remiſſion of our ſins, and our iniquities ſhall be forgiven for his ſake; and verſ. 6. & 7. In the Chaldee, &c. כלנא כענא i. e. we all of us have been ſcattered like Sheep, every one ſtrayed and wandred in his own way: But it hath ſeemed good to God to forgive us all our ſins for his ſake, he prayed and was heard, nay before he opened his mouth he was accepted. It may indeed be ſome doubt whether the Paraphraſt by this, He, who ſhall interceed, underſtands the Meſſias or ſome other; becauſe thoſe things which are ſpoken from verſ. 13. of Chap. LII. to verſ. 4. of Chap. LIII. He ſeems to mean them confuſedly, ſometimes of the Meſſias, and ſometimes of the people of Iſrael, as many of their modern Authors do: But the doubt may ſoon be reſolved by obſerving, that he attributes remiſſion of ſins to the ſame perſon, of whom he ſaith, That he ſhall gather the captivity of Iſrael, and ſhall ſend the wicked to Hell: But this cannot be meant of the people of Iſrael, and conſequently it muſt be underſtood of the Meſſias. Nor is it any wonder that the Jews ſhould do this honour to the Meſſias, when they give ſo great a part of it to their Anceſtors, Abraham, Iſaac, &c. The Jeruſalem Targum, Gen. XXII. 14. introduceth Abraham, deſiring of God that when the children of Iſrael ſhould addreſs themſelves to him in time of neceſſity, he would remember Iſaac's voluntary oblation of himſelf to be a ſacrifice (for ſo they think it was) and pardon them and forgive their ſins. And in T. B. Ber. 7. 1. there is one Rabi who interprets thoſe words in Daniel's prayer, Dan. IX. 17. for the Lords ſake, בשביל אברהם i. e. for Abrahams ſake. But the plaineſt and cleareſt place to this purpoſe, as if it had been written by a Chriſtian under the diſguiſe of a Jewiſh ſtyle, is extant in a book of great repute among the Jews for its Antiquity (Though for ſome reaſons I conjecture the Author lived after Mahomets time) called Peſikta. It is quoted in Jalkut on Iſa. LX. 1. Buxtorf. hath already given us this place largely tranſlated into Latine, in Arc. fœd. cap. 14. I'le here ſet down as little as may be of it, for brevity ſake, with an obſervation or two. התחיל הק"בה מתנה עמו וכ' God beginning to make a Covenant with him (the Meſſias) thus beſpake him. Thoſe whoſe iniquities are hid with you, will put you into an iron yoke, with which they'l make you like an heifer almoſt blind with labour, and ſtrangle you; for the cauſe of their iniquities your Tongue ſhall cleave (with grief and drought) to the roof of your Mouth. Do ſuch things as theſe like you? To which the Meſſias anſwers, Perhaps thoſe afflictions and ſorrows may laſt for many years. God tells tells him, That he had decreed him to ſuffer them for a whole week of years, but if he did not conſent thereto he would preſently remove them. To whom the Meſſias returns, That he would moſt willingly undergo them upon condition that not one Iſraelite ſhould periſh, but that all of them ſhould be ſaved. Thoſe who lived and dyed in his days, thoſe who were hid in the Earth, thoſe who were dead ſince Adam, even all embryo's and untimely births, finally all who had been or ſhould be created.

Are not theſe expreſſions very near the Chriſtian Doctrine of the Meſſias ſuffering for the ſins of all mankind, or of Chriſts being a propitiation for the ſins of the whole World? Only theſe true Jews according to their wonted uncharitableneſs and arrogance, reſtrain the benefit to themſelves. Again the ſame Author Peſikta tells us, That it is a tradition of their Maſters, that in the month Niſan their forefathers are to riſe up and ſay to the Meſſias, O Meſſias, Although we are your Anceſtours, yet thou art more excellent than we, becauſe thou haſt born the iniquity of our ſons, and harder, and heavier afflictions have paſſed over thee than ever yet happened or ſhall happen to any man, &c. Is it your pleaſure that our children ſhould enjoy the benefits which God will beſtow upon them? For peradventure becauſe thou ſuffereſt even from them while they caſt thee into priſon (he came unto his own and his own received him not, John I. 11.) thou mayſt be leſs favourable unto them. To whom the Meſſias anſwered, That what he had done, he had done it for the ſake of them and their children. What's all this but what the Chriſtians teach, that the Meſſias was to be a perſon deſpiſed ('tis there one inſtance of his condition) afflicted and cruelly uſed even by his own Kindred and Countrymen? It is true, in the ſame place of the ſame Author, we have two traditions likewiſe of the victorious, pompous, ſplendid and proſperous ſtate of the Meſſias at laſt: but they are different traditions of different perſons, the one of R. Iſaac, the other of R. Simeon. And then ſuppoſe they had been of the ſame perſons, yet ſtill the Meſſias was to have been a man of mighty ſufferings; and no marvel if they withal retained their inveterate Opinion of his temporal Power and Greatneſs. In the ſame place, a little before, they feign a ſhort Colloquy (according to their faſhion) between God and Satan; where God tells Satan, That the light which he ſaw under his Throne of Glory belonged to him, who ſhould in time confound him with ſhame; and that Satan when he ſaw it fell down and trembled, crying out, that He truly was the Meſſias, who was to caſt him and all the Heathen people into Gehenna. For this purpoſe was the Son of God manifeſted (ſaith St. John I.3,8.) that he might deſtroy the works of the Devil. Much more might be obſerved and tranſcribed in this quotation, and many more inſtances might be brought: but I am to remember I am writing a Preface not a Treatiſe.

But laſtly, The principal uſe of Talmudical and Rabbinical Authors is yet behind, namely the right interpretation of the Holy Scriptures, eſpecially of the New Teſtament. Inſpired writings are an ineſtimable treaſure to mankind; for ſo many ſentences, ſo many truths, but then the true ſenſe of them muſt be known; otherwiſe ſo many ſentences ſo many Authorized falſhoods. Whatever therefore contributes to the finding out of that, muſt in proportion be valuable. And no greater help to do it with eaſe, ſpeed and plainneſs, than the knowledge of the phraſes, Phraſes, Opinions, Laws, Rites and Cuſtoms, as well as other circumſtances of the Jews at the time of thoſe writings. This appears from the great and frequent ignorance or miſtakes of many both ancient and modern interpreters, who had as great a ſhare of piety, parts and wit, and other ſutable qualities as other men, but wanted this aſſiſtance; and even Jerom and Origen who had the moſt skill would have done better if they had had more of it. In this age all Commentaries are full of this kind of Learning, and none hath more frequently, and perhaps to better purpoſe made uſe of it than this our laborious and learned Author. I will only here, as I have done in the particulars before, add an inſtance or two out of many of our own obſervation, and put an end to this ſhort eſſay of the utility of oriental Learning. In Matth. XII. 36. the ῥῆμα ἀργὸν or idle word, for every one of which our Saviour ſaith men ſhall give an account (he doth not ſay ſhall be condemned or puniſhed) may perhaps be of the ſame importance with that which the Talmudiſts and Rabbins call שיחה בטילה i. e. the talk of thoſe who are idle, at leiſure, have little to do; ſuch as is uſed among people in ordinary converſation when they meet together. As what news? How doth ſuch a perſon? Or the like. Even this may be well or ill done, prudently or fooliſhly; and therefore even of this an account will be required. See Maiem. Comment. in Pirk. Av. cap. 1. That of our Saviours promiſe, Matth. XVIII. 20. Where two or three are gathered together in my Name, I will be in the midſt of them; is well parallel'd and illuſtrated by the ſaying of R. Chaninah Pirk. Avo. cap. 3. שני יושבים ויש ביניהם דברי תורה שכינה ביניהם If but two together employ themſelves in the Law, the Shechinah or divine preſence will be among them; the like alſo T. B. Ber. 6. 1. That of St. Mark XIV. 56. concerning the falſe witneſſes againſt our Saviour, that their witneſſes agreed not together, ὅτι οὐκ ἴσαι may be ſomewhat explained by the cuſtom we read of in T. B. Sanh. Miſn. cap. 5. they uſed to put ſeven queſtions to every one of the witneſſes apart; namely in what Jubilee or ſpace of forty nine years any thing was done, in what year of that Jubilee? What month? What day of the month? What day? What hour? What place? If the words of the witneſſes agreed not, the Teſtimony was called עדות בטילה or an idle Teſtimony which was to no purpoſe, if they did agree it was עדות קימת a firm and effectual Teſtimony. And a ſomewhat more obſcure ſaying of our Saviour to the Samaritan woman, John IV. 14. Whoſoever drinketh of the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall never thirſt, but the water that I ſhall give him ſhall be in him a well of water ſpringing up into everlaſting life. This may receive light from a like ſaying in in pir Avo. cap. 6. נותנת מלכות לו וממשלה וחקר דין ומגלים לו רזי תורה ונעשה כמעין שאינו פוסק וכנהר מתגבר והולך i. e. The Law gives him that ſtudies in it a Kingdom, Dominion, Sagacity in judgment, revelation of its ſecrets, and becomes to him like a never ceaſing fountain, and mighty flowing river. The קורת רוח ב"עה i. e. the refreſhment of Spirit in the World to come, of which R. Jacob (in pir Av. cap. 4.) pronounceth that one hours enjoyment is more worth than a whole life in this World, is very like St. Peters καιροὶ ἀναψύξεως, the times of refreſhment which ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord, Acts III. 19. The Apoſtles advice, Cor. I. 8. to abſtain from things offer'd to Idols; was in compliance with thoſe Brethren who thought it unlawful from a Jewiſh Canon. T. B. Avod.

בשר הנכנס לע"א מותר והיוצא אסור מפני שהוא מובחי המתים Avod. zar. Miſ. cap. 2. It is lawful to eat of the fleſh which is carrying into an Idols Temple, but not of that which comes out, becauſe it is of the ſacrifices of the dead, i. e. to inanimate Idols or to dead perſons. That place of 1 Cor. XI. 10. where St. Paul commands the women to cover their heads in praying, becauſe of the Angels, would have given Criticks and Expoſitors no trouble, if they had obſerved that the Apoſtle alluded to, and allowed of, the received opinion of the Jews concerning Angels being preſent, and that with curioſity in ſome humane affairs of importance, but eſpecially in Religious matters. We may learn thus much and ſmile into the bargain from what we read concerning R. Joſhua and R. Joſe the Prieſt in T. B. Chag. 14. 2. 'Tis this, ר' יהושע ור' יוסי הכוהן היו מהלכין בדרך אמרו אף אנו נגדש במעשה מרכבה פתח ר' יהושע וגרש ואותו היום היה תקופת חמוז נתקשרו שמים בעבים ונראה כמין קשת בענן והיו מלאכי השרת מתקבצים לשמוע כבני אדם שמתקבצים בחומוטי חתן וכלה׃

To this ſenſe. As R. Joſhua and R. Joſe the Prieſt were walking together they ſaid one to another let us diſcourſe of the Mercavah or Chariot (that is the Metaphyſical part of their Cabbala or traditional myſterious Philoſophy, ſo called from the viſion of Ezekiel where they think it was myſtically taught) R. Joſhua began (and it was upon the day of the Summer Solſtice) preſently the Heavens were covered with clouds, and there appeared a kind of a Bow in a cloud, and the miniſtring Angels were crowding to hear as men uſe to do at the ſolemnities of the Bridegroom and Bride. This ſtory will not fail to bring to our minds that of St. Peter 1. I. 12. εἰς ἃ ἐπιθυμοῦσιν ἄγγελοι παρακύψαι. Into which things (the matters of the Goſpel) the Angels deſire to look into. Which makes me a little wonder at the opinion of our Author, pag. 303. ſo well verſed in thoſe Books, that by the Angels are meant the Devils making a bait of the beauty of the women to entangle the Eyes and Hearts of the men. Perhaps he hath changed his opinion in his notes upon the Epiſtle to the Corinthians which I could never yet ſee. He that reads in the Chaldee Paraph. commonly called Jonathan's on the Pentateuch, Gen. XXXV. 25, 26. That the Angels uſed to meet together at certain times to praiſe God vocally; and in the ſame Targ. as alſo in the Jeruſalem, how the Angel which wreſtled with Jacob deſired him that he would let him go becauſe that very morning was his firſt courſe from the Creation with others to laud and praiſe God; He that reads the long ſtory of R. Chaninah and R. Kaſma. in the Medraſchim Printed with Zohar, fol. 46. pag. 2. col. 2. concerning the Angels Aza and Azael (עזא & עזאל) who murmuring and rebelling againſt God, and by him tumbled down from his holy place, and then clothed with aiery vehicles, playing pranks with women, were bound with long Iron chains to the mountains of darkneſs; I ſay he that reads theſe, cannot but refer them to 1 Cor. XIII. 1. The Tongues of Angels; and 2 Pet. II. 4. The Angels that ſinned and were caſt down to Hell and delivered into chains of darkneſs; and Jude verſ. 6. The Angels which kept not their firſt eſtate, but left their own habitation, he hath reſerved in everlaſting chains under darkneſs. I have put as many things together here as I could conveniently, and could add much more. But it is time to put an end to this part of our little diſſertation, and to draw to a concluſion of the whole.

But his reflection upon the Proteſtants in another place wants either judgment or ſincerity; where when he hath ſhewed, as he thinks, the very great difficulty in tranſlating the Holy Scriptures, he infers the great ignorance of the Proteſtants, or the little pains they have taken in finding out their difficulty, when they affirm that the Word of God contained in the Scriptures is plain and not at all intricate. But what Proteſtant ſaith ſo? They ſay indeed, that the matters neceſſary to ſalvation are plainly contained in the Scriptures; which in my opinion is ſo certain and eaſie a truth, that neither he nor any other will be able to confute it; and for my part I am ſo far from believing that all neceſſaries to ſalvation are not plainly contained in the Scriptures, that I think both they and a multitude of not neceſſaries too (though of great uſe) are there plainly to be found. Yet I am not ignorant what they have ever ready to object againſt Proteſtants.

Hiſt. Crit. lib. 2. *cap.*14. And for his explication of Authentick, viz. A faithful Copy which one cannot ſuſpect to have been altered. It is not only equally (as himſelf honeſtly acknowledgeth) but much more applicable to all the Modern Latine and Vernacular Tranſlations than to the Vulgar Latine, a great part of which no body can tell what it is or whence it comes. For the preſent Hebrew Copy it ſelf, though it may have its defects: yet without doubt coming infinitely nearer the true firſt Original, as himſelf confeſſeth, than the Vulgar Latine, muſt be a more faithful Copy, and conſequently more Authentick. And then all the Modern both Latine and Vernacular Tranſlations, though they have their faults, not every where truly rendring the Hebrew, yet more agreeing with the preſent Hebrew than the Vulgar Latine, as every one knows, they muſt be more faithful Copies, and conſequently more Authentick too.

Defence of the Crit. Hiſt. *p.*57. And in effect the reaſons of the ingenious Pariſian Divine, who is ſo well pleaſed with this Notion for the Authentickneſs of the Vulgar Latine, are only becauſe the Council of Trent hath ſaid ſo; and thoſe of Father Hiſt. Crit. lib. 2. cap. 14. Simon an unreaſonable ſuſpicion of all other Tranſlations from the Hebrew, and the long uſe of it for ſome Centuries in a corrupted ignorant Church.

It is pretended for the reputation of that Council by this Critique, Bellarmine and others, who were too Learned not to ſee the advantage of Proteſtants againſt the Romaniſts by this Decree; that the Conncil did not intend either to exclude the preſent Hebrew, or to prefer the Vulgar Latine before it. But either the contrary is true, or elſe they were ſtrangely negligent in a moſt important affair which they ſhould have firſt ſetled, viz. the beſt Verſion of the Holy Scriptures. Otherwiſe why did they not appoint ſome of their own to review and correct the Latine Tranſlation of San. Pagn. from the Hebrew, encouraged by Leo the tenth, or elſe to make a new one and a better? Beſides the words of the Decree, in publicis lectionibus, diſputationibus, prædicationibus & expoſitionibus pro Authentica habeatur, & ut nemo eam quovis prætextu rejicere audeat vel præſumat. Can infer nothing leſs than that every one ſhould be bound, either quite to neglect the Hebrew and conſequently to exclude the uſe of it, or elſe whereſoever they found the Vulgar Latine differing from or contrary to the Hebrew, yet to ſtick to the Vulgar Latine; and what is this but to prefer it before the other?

This

This methinks is a conſiderable inſtance of the indefenſibleneſs and wilfulneſs of ſome of the opinions of the Roman Church. Wherefore this Learned and induſtrious Critick follows the preſent mode of France to make the moſt plauſible and tenable explications of their received Dogms; which for my part, ſuppoſing they be not only plauſible but true, ſhall have not only my permiſſion but commendation. But that they have been always the general ſenſe of their Church, or though true, ought to be impoſed upon all Chriſtians as conditions of Communion; the one I do not always believe, the other I do not by any means allow. I am glad to ſee ſuch effects of the increaſe of ſolid knowledge amongſt a people more ingenious, free and generous, that they are aſhamed ſomewhat of follies and falſhoods though too ancient and too much Authorized.

This Writer indeed is Learned and hath much conſidered the task he undertakes; but all is not extraordinary, and all that is ſo is not perhaps true. For very many things are now commonly known, and many obſervations concern the Pontifician or the more early reformed Criticks and Commentators, altogether ignorant or indifferently skilled in Oriental Learning, nor gotten out of the prejudices of an infallible Church or more modern Syſtems, not then to be queſtioned without the ſuſpicion of Atheiſm or Hereſie. Many alſo are his remarques, which though they have the hap now firſt to appear in publick, yet they have been taken notice of by many among the Proteſtants, who have not been ſo forward to publiſh them, but choſe rather to reſerve them to longer conſideration. And in general I think it may be obſerved that that Learned Genius, that free, judicious and ſerious Spirit, in Philoſophy, Morality and Religion, which hath of late ſhewed it ſelf amongſt the French, hath been much earlier and more propagated among us here in England; if it be not again oppreſſed or diſcouraged by confidence, ſuperſtition and intereſt. For I look upon Roman Catholicks, till lately in France, under too much reſtraint, and the reformed generally under too much employment, and both under too much prejudice to make any conſiderable diſcovery or improvement in Science, Religion and Learning. In fine, as there is in this ingenious and new Critick many unuſual and uſeful remarks, ſo he will give occaſion for, and hath need of many Animadverſions.

But to return to our Author, What he hath written in Latine is as much and perhaps more conſiderable than what is here collected in Engliſh: The various pieces are now with us Tranſlated into our own Tongue, and Printed altogether alſo in one Volume. Amongſt theſe are his Horæ Hebraicæ & Talmudicæ upon the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, which I had not ſeen when this Preface was firſt written and gone off from the Preſs, but ſince I have ſeen and peruſed it. And the managers of this whole Edition for ſome reaſons of their own, having deferred the perfecting and publiſhing of it till this preſent time, have put me upon a neceſſity of altering ſome things in this ſheet, and given me opportunity of adding others.

I have before in this Preface mentioned the moſt natural and eaſie interpretation in my Judgment of that ſo much criticized and ſeemingly difficult place 1 Cor. 11. 10. For this cauſe ought the Woman to have power on her head διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους becauſe of the Angels. It ſeems a received opinion among the ancient Jews, that ſome of the good Angels, when they pleaſed, uſed to be preſent with ſome curioſity and concernment in their Religious affairs and aſſemblies, as perhaps the evil ones were in the filthy and Idolatrous ones of the Heathens which were by their own contrivance, ſuggeſtion and encouragement. This opinion in it ſelf not improbable to reaſon, the Apoſtle might approve and make uſe of. It was there ſomewhat unexpected to me that our Author ſo well verſed in theſe writings ſhould not take notice of it: but that contrariwiſe in Page 303. of the enſuing Volume he ſhould interpret that place of evil Angels making a bate of the beauty of Women to entangle the Hearts and Eyes of the Men. Yet I ſuſpected that he might have changed his opinion in his Notes upon this Epiſtle to the Corinthians. But now upon peruſal I find he hath here taken little notice of the firſt, and I think moſt genuine interpretation, and ſtarted a new one. Becauſe of the Angels, that is ſaith he, becauſe of the meſſengers or deputies of eſpouſals, the Women were permitted the liberty either of unvailing their faces to ſhew their comlineſs and beauty, or of vailing them to ſhew their modeſty. Which interpretation as it ſhews his notable conjectural faculty, ſo it ſeems to me remote and improbable.

For firſt, It is hard to find any inſtance in the Scripture where ἄγγελοι without any addition ſignifies an office and not an order of beings which we call Angels: nor in the Rabbines themſelves, as he acknowledgeth, do we find the word שלוחים without the addition of קדושים ſignifying thoſe deputies, unleſs they have been before mentioned together.

Secondly, The Apoſtle ſpeaks not only of Women to be married, but of Women in general married or unmarried: whereas the reaſon by this interpretation of the Womens having power on their Heads would reach only the unmarried. But this only occaſionally and to fill up a Page.

In the late ill and unjuſt Times he was not for nothing taken from his Country employment, and put into the Maſterſhip of Katherine-Hall in Cambridge; By thoſe who out of intereſt did oftimes reſpect and draw in Perſons of ſome Account and Reputation for Learning. Here he continued till the happy Return of our Sovereign to the rightful poſſeſſion of his Crown and Kingdom, when he ſoon ranged himſelf in the Church of England, in which his Innocency and Learning were ſo far taken notice of by his Superiours, and eſpecially the late moſt Reverend and Generous Archbiſhop, and the Lord Keeper Bridgman, two impartial countenancers of honeſt Men and Scholars, that (as I have been informed) they always uſed him with kindneſs, reſpect and liberality. And indeed his Dedicatory Epiſtles before his Latine Commentaries on St. Mark and St. John are ſufficient witneſſes both of his Benefactors and his gratitude. By their care and bounty it was, that what he had before his Majeſties Reſtauration, was continued to him, and moreover a Prebendary of Ely beſtowed upon him. In thoſe Stations Stations he followed his Studies, and conſtantly and honeſtly diſcharged his duty till his Death, which hapned in December in the year 1675. And thus much of the Author. Much more without doubt might be ſaid to his Advantage by thoſe who had more acquaintance with him or knew him better. I have done what right I could to his Worth and Memory.

It remains only, in the laſt place, that we ſay ſomething concerning this Edition of theſe ſeveral pieces of the Author, and ſo conclude this ſomewhat long Preface. All his Writings being in very good eſteem here among us, and in greater beyond Sea, where I have been more than once enquired of about them, and his Engliſh ones being grown ſcarce; ſome Bookſellers were deſirous to reprint theſe in Engliſh, and put them altogether in one fair Volume: In order to which they requeſted me to Diſpoſe, Reviſe, Correct and put ſome Preface before them, which I have now done.

I have ordered them according to their more natural uſe, not according to the time of publiſhing them by the Author: and therefore I have put in the firſt place, The general Harmonies of the Old and New Teſtaments, then the particular Books, as the Harmony of the four Evangeliſts, his Obſervations on Geneſis and Exodus, his Commentary on the Acts of the Apoſtles, and in the rear his two Tracts of the Temple Service and Miſcellanies, which contain many Obſervations applicable and uſeful, to the interpretation of the Scriptures. The latter of which was written by him when very young, and when that Learning was not ſo much cultivated nor diſperſed by others Works,and therefore no wonder if there be in it many things now more ordinary and well known. I have Corrected hundreds of Errors both in the Texts and Hiſtory, and in the Chronology and Figures. In the firſt notwithſtanding I left ſome ſmall Matters, as being uncertain whether they were the Printers faults or the Authors own way of Writing, which was ſometimes a little out of the common road. My principal care was in the Hebrew, Talmudical and Rabbinical quotations, which were generally miſprinted. This I thought more worth the pains, becauſe the many Citations and Tranſlations of theſe Authors, are a very conſiderable help for young beginners to underſtand them, otherwiſe tedious and difficult enough. They are many and very uſeful examples, ſo that many good notions may be gotten at the ſame time with the Language. In the Chronology were a great number of faults likewiſe to be mended: Thoſe which were more manifeſt and plain I did alter; but ſome which to me ſeemed miſtakes, yet uncertain whether it was the Authors opinion, I have left to the obſervation and correction of others if they ſee cauſe. And indeed it would have been endleſs to have examined all the little accuracies; as the Interregnums, the concurrent reigns of ſeveral Kings, eſpecially the laſt and firſt years, when they were compleat and in order ſucceeding one another, when they were in part coincident and concurrent, ſo that the laſt year of one ſhould be the firſt of another.

There is one thing generally altered for the beſt. Whereas in the former Edition the numbers of ſeveral Epocha's anſwering one another were ſet any how as the Printer could hit it, now they are put one over againſt another in the ſame line, except here and there where the Printers have neglected neglected my directions in the Copy; of which I ſhall preſently adviſe by an inſtance or two. There is alſo a place or two where I know not how to reconcile the numbers, as in pag. 99, 100. For Jotham's firſt year and Uzziah's laſt and the 3252[d] year of the World ſhould be concurrent according to the Author himſelf; unleſs he gives a double ſenſe to the word reign of Jotham; namely one more improper as Deputy to his Father Uzziah ſtruck with Leproſie in his laſt year, and the other more proper by himſelf alone the year after his Fathers death; which is a way of Solution he ſometimes uſeth. How far it is to be allowed I am not here to ſay. I am not to ſet down my own but my Authors ſenſe, be it what it will, or what others can make of it. And in general, once for all, I hope no man will think me oblig'd to applaud or approve every notion or remark of theſe Treatiſes. It is not my buſineſs to make an Author, but to give him made; not to tell what the Author ſhould ſay, but what he hath ſaid; every one may take or leave as he pleaſeth. For he ſeems I confeſs too ſeriouſly to make and imitate Cabbaliſtical and Rabbinical obſervations, ſuch as that of the Talmudiſts and Baal Hâtturim. But ſometimes perhaps the importance of the matter of the obſervation, more than the certainty or probability of it, might induce him to do ſo. Though indeed I think more generally it was his kindneſs for ſuch Authors, and his ſetled opinion of the Authentickneſs of every point and tittle of our modern Maſoretical Copies of the Old Teſtament. As p. 86. He obſerves that the Hebrew Text hath divinely omitted a letter in one word, viz. the letter (א) in מאומה which ſignifieth ſomething; (as all Tranſlations render it) and written it מומה ſignifying a blott; to brand Gehazi for his villany in running after Naaman, and deſiring ſomething from him in his Maſter Eliſha's Name, 2 Kings V. 20. As the obſervation is taken from R. Salomon in his Commentaries upon that place, an Author much given to ſuch Talmudical phanſies: ſo it is alſo founded upon a miſtake. For it is not written מומה but מאומה in the Copies which our Polyglotte Bibles followed, and in Athias edition, all that I had at preſent to conſult beſides Buxtorfes Bibles with the Rabbinical Commentaries. Here indeed it is מומה the reaſon of which is I ſuppoſe the Maſora's marginal note upon that word which is חסר אלף כפר"ש i. e. Aleph in מומה is wanting according to the Commentary or explication of R. Salomon Jarchi. It ſeems therefore only to be ſo written in the Copy which that Rabbi uſed and thoſe who were pleaſed to follow him. Beſides that the word which ſignifies a blot is not מומה but מום and even this laſt is ſometimes written with an Epenthetical Aleph מאום. But enough of this trifle. Such alſo is his conjecture, pag. 129. concerning the reaſon of the tranſpoſition of the Hebrew letters (ע) and (פ) in the Alphabetical Chapters of the Lamentations, or rather of the verſes which begin with (פ) being ſet before thoſe which begin with (ע); whereas (ע) in the Hebrew Alphabet is before (פ). The reaſon may be (ſaith our Author) to hint the Seventy years deſolation of Jeruſalem, becauſe the Hebrew letter (ע) ſtands for the number Seventy. If it were to denote any ſuch thing, it might as well have hinted Eighty years as Seventy, (פ) being the Numeral letter for Eighty. Beſides the Syriack and Arabick Verſions there have retained their uſual and natural order. His note upon the extraordinary and unparalled punctation of the Hebrew words לנו ולבנינו To us and to our children belong the revealed things, Deut. XXIX. 29. With points over every one of those letters, nay with eleven points according to the Masora; I say this is of the same nature. It is, saith he, to give warning against curiosity in prying into Gods secrets, and that we should content our selves with his revealed will. But it is far more probable or certain, that these things were the casual mistakes or crotchets of some transcribers. His style also is often less proper, sometimes Grammatically defective, which is to be attributed to his perpetual converse with the Talmudists, Rabbins, and other Oriental Languages, whose Genius is so extreamly different from that of the Western; and to the want of reading Authors in our own Tongue, being sufficiently employed with his own thoughts and compositions, and sometimes perhaps to the singularity of his notions. It may be observed also, that he often differs much from many or all other Chronologers; As in the time of Christs birth, the time from Christs Baptism to his Death, the two terms of Daniels seventy weeks or four hundred and ninety years. In his account from the Flood to Abraham's Birth, he differs sixty years, from the generality of computists, and that upon a different interpretation of Gen. XI. 26. and proof that Abraham was not Terahs eldest son. From whence it necessarily follows that where he agrees with others in the intermediate intervals, as from Abraham's birth to the Promise, to their going out of Ægypt, to the building and destruction of the Temple, &c. he must assign these to different years of the World, viz. sixty later than usual; perhaps in some points he may have as good reason and proof as others; of which let the Reader judge; for I intend not in this place to dispute or decide any Chronological controversies which are numerous, often operose and of little moment.

Tis pity he finished not his Harmony upon the Evangelists and added not a fourth part, or perhaps as many as are Printed. But it may be the Bulk of them, and the time they would take up to perform them as the rest are done, he having by him other collections and designs might make him unwilling to go on. He might also suppose that some other hand in time might add the rest in the like method. So likewise his Commentaries on the Acts are imperfect, they go no further than Chap. IX. and the year of Christ 45. whereas the whole story reacheth to about the year of Christ 60.

In the last place, according to promise, it is to be advised that all is not so well Printed as might be desired; some numbers are not so accurately placed over against other. As pag. 81. numb. 24. of Baasha. And pag. 81. The first of Jehoash should have been set two lines higher against the 15th of Jehoahaz. Sometimes a Column and Name at the head of it is needless; As pag. 49. Abimelech. Sometimes the Name in the top of the Column mistaken; as pag. 50. Jair for Tolah and pag. 83. Ahab for Jehosaphat. But such small things as these, as they could not be easily prevented, so they may easily be remedied by any one who will make use of the Chronology. And as for other Errata's I hope they are not worth the pains of collecting, or else are such as will be at first sight mended by an intelligent Reader; The sheets being carefully corrected by a Reverend and worthy friend of mine in London, of long study and great skill in this kind of Learning; when I by the undeserved favour of my Superi-

Superiours was called to an Honourable employment out of my own Country.

To conclude all. As I doubt not but the ſerious and intelligent Reader in the peruſal of this Volume, will ſee abundant reaſon highly to eſteem the great and profitable labours of the Pious and Learned Author; ſo I hope he will be pleaſed kindly to accept my little care and pains in publiſhing it with decency and advantage, and thereby endeavouring to contribute ſome ſmall aſſiſtance to the ſtudy and underſtanding of the Holy Scriptures, and conſequently the Advancement of Piety together with the moſt uſeful knowledge in the World.

SOME ACCOUNT OF THE LIFE OF THE REVEREND and moſt LEARNED John Lightfoot D.D.

THE exemplary Vertue and Induſtry of good Men hath always had a conſiderable influence upon the manners of Men: Great Examples do work more powerfully than the moſt ſubtle Reaſonings, and the moſt Elaborate Arts of Perſwaſion. For though Men are generally ſhye of an Eloquent and Witty Man, and apt to ſuſpect an Artifice where they diſcern a piercing Wit, and a ready Invention; and conſequently are little bettered by the ſtrongeſt Arguments of Perſwaſion, but go on in a courſe of Vice, and Sloth in ſpight of all endeavours to reclaim them; yet there is ſomething in a good Example which does more powerfully charm them: Here is a certain force not eaſily eluded: This confirms the Truth of what we ſhould not without it ſo firmly have believed. Beſides, it does after the moſt lively manner repreſent Vertue and Goodneſs to us, and its Deſirableneſs, and its Beauties in the moſt ſenſible and familiar way that we can deſire. A great Example does alſo convince us, That it is a poſſible thing to do Vertuouſly, and that our excuſes are but pretexts and covers to our Sloth and Lazineſs.

Hence it is that as the Death of a vertuous and good Man is a great loſs to the Community, ſo the preſervation of his Memory, and repreſenting his Example to thoſe who ſurvive him, doth greatly advance the Publick good. Many excellent Perſons have paſſed through the World with little obſervation; They have affected privacy, and avoided crowds, and ſhunned Publick notice. Their Modeſty hath been as great as their other Vertues; and many others, who could not be concealed while they lived, have yet been ſoon forgotten after their deceaſe, for want of ſome to do them right in tranſmitting their memory to poſterity.

Upon theſe conſiderations, and upon no other whatſoever, I have undertaken to give the World ſome ſmall account of our Reverend and very Learned Author. I Sincerely declare I had much rather it had been done by any other hand: For, beſides my want of time and leiſure, and of many other helps needful for ſuch a Work, which I could plead for my excuſe; I might juſtly have expected that this ſhould have been done by ſome one who upon all accounts was better provided for it.

Our Author, John Lightfoot D. D. was born in the Rector's Houſe of Stoke upon Trent, in the County of Stafford, on the 29th day of March (being Tueſday) Anno Domini 1602. As for this time of his birth I find it under his own Hand in one of his Academical Exerciſes, which he performed being Vice-Chancellor, in the ſtead of Dr. Arrow-Smith, Publick Divinity Profeſſor and Maſter of Trinity College in Cambridge, who was at that time Sick: He tells us there That that Doctor and Himſelf were born in the ſame year, on the ſame day above named, and almoſt in the ſame hour; that Doctor near New-Caſtle upon Tine in Northumberland, Himſelf near New-Caſtle under Line in the County of Stafford. For which he had a very dear affection, calling it, in one of his Epiſtles, his Mother, the Mother of his birth, and the Mother of his deareſt intereſts. And in another, moſt paſſionately, and moſt elegantly, lamenting her under the miſeries, that the Civil Wars had brought upon her.

He was the Son of Mr. Thomas Lightfoot Vicar of Uttoxetar in the County of Staffford; A man not to be named without a preface of honour and reſpect. He was born in a little Village called Shelton in the Pariſh of Stoke above named: He was a Man of exemplary Piety, and of an induſtry indefatigable, and one of the greateſt examples of this laſt Age for his conſtant care of thoſe Souls which were committed to his Charge. This he ſhewed by his conſtant Preaching, and diligent Inſtructing and Catechizing the Youth of his Pariſh, which his Preaching did not excuſe him from. He was a burning and ſhining light, and ſhewed his love to his great Lord and Maſter by the unwearied care of his Sheep. He was in Holy Orders ſix and fifty years, and thirty ſix years Vicar of Uttoxetar above named. Died July 21. Anno Domini 1658. and in the eighty firſt year of his age.

Our Authors Mother was Mrs Elizabeth Bagnall, a Gentlewoman of a very good Family; Three of which Family were made Knights by Queen Elizabeth for their martial Proweſs and Valour in the then Wars in Ireland againſt the Rebels. She was a Woman of exemplary Piety, and died Jan. 24. Anno Domini 1636. at the age of ſeventy and one.

Our Author, when he was fit to be ſent to a Grammar School, was committed to the care of Mr Whitehead School-Maſter at Morton-Green near Congerton in the County Palatine of Cheſter. There he continued till June, Anno Domini 1617. And thence he was ſent to Chriſt College in Cambridge, where he was admitted under the Tuition of the very Learned and Pious Mr. William Chappel then Fellow of that Houſe, and afterwards Doctor in Divinity, and Maſter of Trinity College in Dublin, and laſtly Lord Biſhop of Cork in Ireland.

While he continued in Chriſt College he gave great proofs of a pregnant Wit, and great proficiency in his Studies. His Tutor told ſome of the Heads of the Univerſity, at that time, that he had a young Pupil, meaning Lightfoot, whom he thought the beſt Orator of all the Undergraduates in the Town. He made an extraordinary proficiency in his Studies during his ſtay in that place, eſpecially in the Latine and Greek Tongues. For the Hebrew Tongue he neglected it there, and loſt that ſkill in it which he brought thither. And for Logick he could by no means fancy that contentious and quarrelſom ſtudy, it being very diſagreeable to the quiet genius of this young Student. He could not be ſo happy as to ſtay any longer in that learned Society than till ſuch time as he was Bachelor of Arts.

After this he was admitted as an aſſiſtant to his former Maſter, Mr. Whitehead, who was then Maſter of a famous School at Repton in the County of Darby, where he continued a year or two, and made great improvement in the Greek Tongue. His converſation there was as pleaſing to the Maſter, as his mildneſs was acceptable to the Boys who were under his truſt.

Sometime after this he entred into Holy Orders; and the firſt place of his ſettlement, after this, was at Norton under Hales in the County of Salop: This was near to Bellaport in the ſame County, which was the Manſion Houſe of the very Learned and Worthy Sir Rowland Cotton Knight, who was his conſtant hearer then, his Patron afterwards, and his faithful friend whiles he lived.

This Sir Rowland Cotton was a Man of very ſingular learning: He was the Son of Mr. William Cotton Citizen and Draper of London: He had great ſkill in the Hebrew Tongue by the early inſtructions of Mr. Hugh Broughton, who often lodged, and, for ſome conſiderable time, reſided at his Fathers Houſe. There were few places in the Hebrew Bible which he was not able readily to read, and render into Engliſh, when he was but ſeven or eight years of age, and he did not only underſtand but readily ſpeak the Language. This worthy Knight our Author often mentioned as his great Friend, and a perſon of a moſt exemplary life, as well as of great Learning and Judgment. I have ſeen a Sermon of our Authors prepared to be Preached at his Funerals, in which he bewails his death; and complains at the cloſe of it that he was hindred by the expreſs Command of this worthy and modeſt Knight, upon his death bed, from ſaying any thing of him.

This may ſeem to be a digreſſion, but it is a very pardonable one, it being deſigned only to take an occaſion of ſpeaking well of one who deſerved well of the World, and particularly of our learned Author, whoſe incomparable learning and ſkill in the Hebrew affairs are under God in great meaſure owing to the Learned and Religious Gentleman.

Sir

Sir Rowland Cotton did, whiles our Author preached at the place above named, out of reſpect to his hopeful parts, take him into his own family, as his Chaplain: There he laid the foundation of his Rabbinical Learning, for which he is juſtly renowned, not only here in England but beyond the Seas. And that which put him upon it, as our Author himſelf would frequently relate it, was this. Sir Rowland would often queſtion him in that Language, in which our Author was then but a Novice; and this after ſome time wrought upon him ſo effectually, that out of ſhame and indignation that he wanted that Learning, which his Patron had, he ſet himſelf cloſe to the Study of the Tongues, and the Hebrew eſpecially. He was aſhamed to be batfled (as he confeſſed he often was) by a Country Gentleman; and that alſo in a piece of Learning which he by his Profeſſion and his Character, was much more obliged to attain to than his Patron could be ſuppoſed to be. And this was the occaſion of his applying himſelf to thoſe very uſeful Studies, to which otherwiſe probably he would have continued a ſtranger.

In his Studies in this Family he made a great progreſs, and was greatly cheriſhed in them by his Patron, to whom he was always very dear. With him he continued at Bellaport, till Sir Rowland left the Country and went to reſide at London with his Family, at the requeſt of Sir Allen Cotton, his Fathers younger Brother, who was Lord Mayor of the City.

Within a little while our Author followed his Patron to the City: He continued not long there before he returned into the Country again, and viſited his Father and Mother at Uttoxetar above named, of whom he took a ſolemn leave, with a reſolution to travel beyond the Seas, to their no little ſorrow. But having left his Father and Mother and travailing as far as Stone in the County of Stafford, which place was then deſtitute of a Miniſter, he was, by the importunity of thoſe who were concerned, perſwaded to accept of that place: And ſo he did, and forthwith ſet his Parents at eaſe by letting them know that his Travels were now at an End. At this place he continued two years or thereabouts: During this time (May 21. 1628.) he married Joice, the Daughter of William Crompton of Stone Park Eſq; and Widow of George Copwood of Dilverne in the County of Stafford Gentleman.

From Stone our Author removed to Hornſey near the City of London, for the ſake of the Library of Sion College, to which he often reſorted; and from thence in the Spring, Anno Domini 1630. he and his Family came to Uttoxetar aforeſaid; where he continued till the September following, when Sir Rowland Cotton preferred him to the Rectory of Aſhley in the County of Stafford: Here our Author continued in great eſteem for the ſpace of twelve years; and here he very much purſued his Rabbinical Studies. And to that end he bought a ſmall piece of Land lying near unto his Parſonage-houſe, where he built a ſmall Houſe in the midſt of a Garden, containing a Study and withdrawing room below, and a lodging Chamber above. Here he cloſely followed his ſaid Studies with great delight, and unwearied diligence, and did chooſe to lodge here very often, though it were ſo near to his Family and Parſonage Houſe. He continued in this place till June Anno Domini 1642. when upon what occaſion ſoever it was (moſt probably being called up to the Aſſembly of Divines) unwillingly he ſeems to leave his abode and Country, and became a kind of Exile in London: as we may collect from his Epiſtle before his Handful of Gleanings upon Exodus. Where he thus beſpeaks the Pariſhoners of S. Bartholomews behind the Exchange, That when exiled from his own, they made him theirs. But in this his deſtitute ſtate, it ſeems, he continued not long. His parts and worth, like a great light, could not be hid; but ſoon were taken notice of in the City. So that he became Miniſter to the Inhabitants of the Pariſh aforeſaid. Where, as we learn from that Epiſtle, their firſt meeting was with extraordinary kindneſs, and the ſame mutual affection abated not between them. About this time it was alſo, that another employment was laid upon him: namely to be a Member of the Aſſembly of Divines at Weſtminſter. Whether I ſhall now follow him, and give ſome account of his carriage and demeanour there.

In the year 1643. The Miniſters of the City of London met together to conſult whether they ſhould preach on the Chriſtmas day following as they had been wont to do, or take no notice at all of the day. One of them (whom I ſhall not name) of great Autority among them was againſt their Preaching, and was very near prevailing with the reſt of his Brethren to forbear: Our Author was at that meeting (being at that time Miniſter at St. Bartholomews aforeſaid) who was ſo far from conſenting to the advice of that perſon who gave it, that he took him aſide, and argued the Point with him; and did not only maintain the lawfulneſs of the thing in queſtion, but the expedience of it alſo; and ſhewed that the omitting it would be of dangerous conſequence, and would reflect very much upon thoſe Men who made profeſſion of no other deſign but reforming what was culpable and faulty. In a word he ſo far prevailed with the Company, that when it was put to the queſtion it was carried in the Affirmative, and there were not above four or five of the whole who diſſented. I forbear to mention the particular arguments which our Author made uſe of (which I could eaſily have done) becauſe I do not mention it as an inſtance of his Learning that he was able to maintain this cauſe; than which no thing can be thought more defenſible; but only to let the Reader know, that though our Author lived in the late unhappy times, and converſed with Men who were extravagantly bent upon extreams, yet he did not want courage and integrity in ſtanding againſt the ſtream.

In the debates of that Aſſembly at Weſtminſter, our Author uſed the like freedom, and gave great proofs both of his courage and learning alſo, in oppoſing many of thoſe Tenets, which the Divines were endeavouring to eſtabliſh; of which I ſhall give ſome inſtances, which I do not take upon hearſay and uncertain report, but from better grounds, and ſuch as are unexceptionable.

It is very well known that thoſe Divines ſpent much time concerning Lay Elders, and their power of ruling. This they endeavoured to prove from 1 Cor. XII. 28. Helps, Governments: This opinion our Author did not forbear to oppoſe, and did with great truth and judgment affirm that the Seventy two uſed the word Κυβέρνησις (Prov. 1. 5. & XI. 14. & XX. 18. & XXIV. 6.) to tranſlate תחבלות which word imports not the act but the ability of gifts fit to govern. And that the ἀντιλήψεις, and Κυβερνήσεις in the place in hand imported helps to interpret the Languages and ſenſe of thoſe who ſpake with Tongues: as may be gathered by a diligent comparing of the 28, 29, and 30 verſes together.

And whereas ſome would have founded Lay Elders upon the Elders of the Jewiſh Church, and did affirm that there were two Conſiſtories in every City, and that they were Civil and Eccleſiaſtical; Our Author replied that the two Sanhedrin's or Conſiſtories in every City are not owned by the Jewiſh Authors: and for that he alledged Maimonides at large. He proved that there were three Courts in Jeruſalem, but that they were not diſtinguiſhed into Eccleſiaſtical and Civil; and that there was but one Court or Conſiſtory in every other inferior City. He granted indeed that there were Elders in the Sanhedrin that were not Prieſts or Levites, but withal they were Civil Magiſtrates.

At another time when they were for making a Court to conſiſt of Lay Elders mixed with Presbyters to decide Eccleſiaſtical matters, and that from the Jewiſh practice; Our Author ſhewed that in divers things the Prieſt had a propriety and was only concerned, and the Civil Magiſtrate had nothing to do, as in the caſe of Leproſie, and the trial of Jealouſie, and judging between clean and unclean, &c. and that in thoſe things where the Lay Judges were concerned, as in Blaſphemy, Idolatry, falſe Doctrines, &c. the cenſure was Civil, it being Capital.

And when ſome of them affirmed that the Civil Elders in the Sanhedrin judged in all caſes, our Author replied that this was impoſſible in the caſe of Leproſie: It being evident that Leproſie was infectious to all Iſrael, but only to the Prieſts. And as for that place, Deut. XVII. he affirmed that it ſpake not of Appeals but of Advice, not of Judicature but of Direction. For that the Judges of the inferior Courts were to go to the place which the Lord ſhould chooſe to inform themſelves in a matter too hard for them in judgment.

In that Aſſembly, in diſcourſing of Church Officers, there was a certain Divine who affirmed that Widows were to be eſteemed as ſuch; and for the confirmation of his opinion he alledged that it appeared from hence, viz. that they were choſen at ſixty years of age. Our Author oppoſed that fond opinion from that very argument on which the Divine aforeſaid grounded it, alledging that under the Old Teſtament the Officers at the Temple were diſmiſſed at fifty years of age, and that it was therefore unreaſonable to ſuppoſe that in the New any ſhould be admitted to Office who were not under ſixty. And whereas another Divine in that Aſſembly affirmed that the Prieſts were diſmiſſed from their Service, becauſe of the burden of carrying the Ark, &c. our Author replied that the Ark was fixed in Solomon's time, and that the courſes of the Prieſts were ſo full as that eighty oppoſed Uzziah; and that Joſephus ſaith, That the courſes had five thouſand a piece at leaſt in them, and their ſervice but one week in about half a year, and that therefore they could not be ſuppoſed to be overladen with Work.

Our Author was againſt the Peoples election of their Miniſters, which ſome in that Aſſembly attempted to prove from the word χειροτονία, which they would have to ſignifie not Laying on of Hands, but Election. He argued againſt this opinion from Zonaras and Balſamon and from an Apoſtolical Canon, and from the notation of the Greek word. To which he added, That it was not poſſible for the people in thoſe early times of Chriſtianity to Elect their Miniſters, becauſe none were fit in thoſe times to be ſuch but by the gift of the Holy Ghoſt; and that it was not reaſonable to ſuppoſe that the People did nominate and chooſe ſuch who were to receive that heavenly gift.

I find

I find alſo that upon a conſultation whether they ſhould add ſomething forbidding the Directory to be turned into a ſet Form, that our Author ſpake againſt it as a dangerous thing ſo much as to intimate any thing againſt a ſet Form of Prayer.

Upon that Propoſition relating to Baptiſm, it is lawful and ſufficient to ſprinkle the child, our Author oppoſed them that worded it in that manner; it being unfit to vote that as lawful only, which every one grants ſo to be. And whereas one of that Aſſembly attempted in a large diſcourſe to prove that טבילה (which ſignifies Baptiſm) imports a dipping overhead: Our Author replied at large, and proved the contrary. 1. From a paſſage of Aben Ezra on Gen. 38. (2.) From R. Solomon Jarchi who in his Commentary on Exod. 24. ſaith, That Iſrael entred into Covenant with ſprinkling of blood and טבילה which the Author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews expounds by ſprinkling, Heb. IX. (3.) From this, That John the Baptiſt ſometimes Preached annd Baptized in places where he could not poſſibly Dip thoſe who were Baptized. In concluſion, He propoſed to that Aſſembly to ſhew him in all the Old Teſtament any one inſtance where the word uſed de Sacris & in actu tranſeunte implied any more than Sprinkling. It is ſaid indeed, That the Prieſts waſhed their Bodies, and that the unclean waſhed himſelf in Water, but this was not a tranſient action. And when they came to the Vote whether the Directory ſhould run thus, The Miniſter ſhall take Water and Sprinkle, or pour it with his Hand upon the Face or Forehead of the Child; ſome were unwilling to have Dipping excluded; ſo that the Vote came to an equality within one: For the one ſide there being twenty four, and for the other twenty five. The buſineſs was thereupon recommitted, and reſumed the day following, where our Author demanded of them, who inſiſted upon Dipping, the reaſon of their opinion, and that they would give in their proofs; Hereupon it was thus worded, That pouring on of Water, or Sprinkling in the adminiſtration of Baptiſm is lawful and ſufficient. Where our Author excepted againſt the word lawful, it being all one as if it ſhould be determined to be lawful to uſe Bread and Wine in the Lords Supper; and he moved that it might be expreſſed thus, It is not only lawful, but alſo ſufficient. And it was done ſo accordingly.

Concerning the Members of a Synod the Propoſition was, That Paſtors and Teachers and other fitting perſons are conſtituent Members of a Synod; This our Author oppoſed and gave his Interpretation of the Brethren and the whole Church, Act. XV. viz. that by Brethren was meant the uncircumciſed Converts, as verſ. 1, & 23. And that it was moſt likely the Churches of the uncircumciſed, would ſend their Miniſters, and not Laymen; And that by Ἐκκλησία was meant not the Church, but the meeting of the Council.

There were many other matters debated in that Aſſembly in which our Author was greatly concerned, and did not fail to argue very ſtrenuouſly upon occaſion againſt thoſe opinions that were then in vogue. I could give a particular account of what he ſaid in the debates touching the admiſſion of perſons to the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, of Private Baptiſm, of the Learning required in thoſe who were to be Ordained, of the raiſing Doctrines from a Text, of the uſe of learned Languages in Sermons, &c. But I forbear theſe things not being willing to exceed that ſhort account of our Author which I only undertook at firſt.

In the later end of the year 1643. I find our Author was preferred to the Rectory of Much-Munden in the County of Hertford, void by the Death of that excellent Perſon Samuel Ward D. D. the Lady Margaret Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Cambridge. In that Rectory he continued to the day of his Death; He reſided upon his Living as much as was conſiſtent with his relation to Catharine-Hall in Cambridge, of which he was Maſter many years before his Death. He was uneaſie when he was from his Living, and would expreſs a great deſire to be at home with his Ruſſet-Coats, as he was wont to call his Country neighbours, when he was abſent from them. His Labours in that place were very great and exemplary: He was unwearied in his Studies, which he followed early and late with indefatigable diligence; he was a moſt conſtant and painful Preacher. His Parſonage-Houſe was about a mile diſtant from his Pariſh Church, whereunto he reſorted every Lords-day, read the Prayers, and Preached Morning and Afternoon, and did many times continue there all the day, and returned not home till Night, remaining in the Church, not diverting to any other Houſe to refreſh himſelf, until Evening Service was all finiſhed. He had for his Flock the care and compaſſions of a Father; he lived among them in great peace and with great Hoſpitality. There he continued without let or diſturbance many years. Indeed ſoon after the happy Reſtauration of his Majeſty, a Fellow of a College in Cambridge procured a grant of our Authors Living. Of this he was ſoon advertiſed by his Neighbour and worthy Friend, Sir Henry Caſar, upon which, by the favour of the late Archbiſhop Sheldon, our Author was confirmed in his Rectory. This great favour of the Archbiſhop, our Author gratefully acknowledgeth in two Epiſtles Dedicatory to him, prefixed to his Horæ Hebraicæ upon St. Mark, and St. Luke. And he would often mention the great favour he received from that worthy and very excellent Perſon Sir Henry Cæſar, whoſe Neighbourhood and encouragement was one of the greateſt comforts of our Authors life.

He commenced Doctor in Divinity in the year 1652. His Latine Sermon was upon thoſe words, If any Man love not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, let him be Anathema Maranatha, 1 Cor. XVI. 22. When he was in the Univerſity, he Preached frequently, and to the great advantage of the Students there. He always preſſed an exemplary Life upon his Auditors, and to very good purpoſe Preached up the neceſſity of humane Learning, and exploded the Enthuſiaſm which had at that time gotten a great poſſeſſion of the minds of unſtable Men: He Preached up the lawfulneſs of Forms of Prayer in thoſe times, when many Men were ſo extravagantly vain as to decry it. And for Schiſm and Separation from an Eſtabliſhed Church, he was ſo great an Enemy to it, that he did in thoſe times urge the neceſſity of Communion with a Church, which had corruption in it. And whoever will be at the pains to conſider what he hath to this purpoſe in his Horæ Hebraicæ upon St. Matthew, Chap. VIII. verſ. 4. and eſpecially in his Sermon Preached at St. Michaels Church in Cornhill, before his Country-men of the County of Stafford, upon St. Joh. X. 22. (which is Printed with the reſt of his Works) will be abundantly convinced of this. When he Preached at Cambridge, he did generally pitch upon ſome difficult Text of the Holy Scriptures which he explained to the great ſatisfaction of the learned Auditors. In which, I reckon, he did very conſiderable ſervice to the Publick. In doing ſo he relieved the minds of honeſt and inquiſitive Men, who were at a ſtand, and defended the Holy Scriptures from the contempt of thoſe who were prophane Scoffers, and were ready upon all occaſions to leſſen their Autority. And indeed he was very happy this way: I have heard a very Learned and Reverend Divine (lately deceaſed) Profeſs, that he never heard our Author preach but he learned ſomething which he did not know before. He was of very ſingular uſe in the Univerſity in thoſe times, and his diſcourſes were of that nature that they greatly gained upon the more Studious, and inquiſitive ſort of Men. He laboured much in proving Infants Baptiſm againſt the Antipædobaptiſts of thoſe times: This he did upon moſt ſubſtantial grounds and ſuch as commended themſelves to the lovers of Truth: I doubt not but that he did confirm many by his way of proof who were wavering before. I find among our Authors Papers a letter directed to him from a very Learned Divine William Outram D. D. who was then his Auditor in Cambridge. In which he gives our Author all poſſible thanks for his choice and truly learned Obſervations (as he juſtly calls them) in relation to the Lords Prayer, in which he aſſerted the lawfulneſs of Forms; and is earneſt with him to grant him his Notes of his Sermons on Baptiſm, which (ſays he) I have moſt earneſtly longed for ever ſince they were Preached, and not without due cauſe: For verily had I not heard them I ſhould not to this day have been ſo well reconciled to Infants Baptiſm, (as I bleſs God I now am.) I deſire therefore that you would be pleaſed to conſider what real uſefulneſs your notes may be of; and how (for my own part) I am infinitely more perſwaded by your way of probation, than by ſome other ratiocinations of Men ordinarily uſed. There are many perſons now living that have great cauſe to bleſs God for our Author, and will confeſs the eminent ſervice which he did in that time.

In the year 1655. our Author was choſen Vice-Chancellor of the Univerſity of Cambridge; which Office he diſcharged with great care and diligence, though he had at that time a multiplicity of affairs to divert him, eſpecially that of peruſing the ſheets of the Polyglott as they were wrought off from the Preſs. He was extreamly ſolicitous during his being Vice-Chancellor that he might not do any wrong to any Man, or any unkindneſs to his friend. He did once fear, during that year, that he had by a Sentence determined injuriouſly againſt a Friend of his. This was ſo great a torment to his mind, that he told a Friend that is yet alive, that he thought it would accompany him with ſorrow to his grave. But the good Man was ſoon ſatisfied that what he had determined was not only juſt but neceſſary alſo.

Nor were our Authors Labours confined to the Univerſity and to his Rectory. For beſides the many excellent Books which he wrote (of which I forbear to give any account here, becauſe I find it done to my Hand) he was concerned in the uſeful undertakings which were begun and finiſhed in his time.

Among which the Edition of the Polyglott Bible, which was finiſhed in the year 1657. deſerves to be mentioned in the firſt place. This excellent and uſeful Work was in great meaſure accompliſhed by the indefatigable pains of the Learned and Reverend Brian Walton D. D. (and afterwards Lord Biſhop of Cheſter) and remains a monument of the exemplary diligence and eminent Learning of that excellent Prelate. I ſhall only at preſent conſider how far our Author was concerned in that Work. I find him conſulted about that whole Work by Doctor Walton at his firſt entrance upon it in a Letter of the Doctors to him bearing date Jan. 2. 1653. In which he begs our Authors aſſiſtance, as to the Samaritan Pentateuch, which he beſtowed much pains about; Vid. Dec. Chorograph. in S. Marc.

S. Marc. Cap. X. §. 5. Nor was this the first application which had been made to him; for by that Letter it appears that our Author had modestly declined the employment upon the score of his inability, to which the Doctor in that Letter replies, that our Author had given sufficient and publick Testimony to the World of his ability. I find also that Doctor Walton (as appears by his Letters bearing date *Feb.*23.1653. and April 24 1654. and June 14. 1654. and several others) sent our Author the several Alphabets of sheets as they came off from the Press, and desired him to peruse them as he had done, and note the mistakes he should meet withal. In one of which he tells him that as to the Samaritan, his Diligence and Judgment had been so exact that there would be little cause to alter, much less to censure and correct. I find also that our Author assisted in that Work several other ways, not only by procuring Subscriptions toward its encouragement, but by furnishing him with several MSS. out of the University Library, viz. a Syriac MS. of the Prophets (which the Doctor acknowledges in a Letter bearing date Nov. 7.1655.) and a Syriac Lexicon, a MS. He assisted him likewise in rectifying the Map of Judæa, as appears by another Letter dated July 23. 1656. and with certain Notes out of the Jerusalem Talmud, (as appears by another Letter Nov. 4. 1657.) Besides this our Author sent him his Chorographical Observations which we find prefixed to the Polyglott Bible under his Name.

Next to the Polyglott Bible, and in order to render that the more useful also, the greatest Work of this last age, and indeed of any other of that kind, is that incomparable Book, the Lexicon Heptaglotton. by Edmund Castell D. D. published in the year 1669. I find that Dr. Castell (a Man for his great Piety, incomparable Learning, and incredible Diligence not to be mentioned without a Preface of honour) before he entred upon that Work, consulted our Author about it, and submitted it to him either to stifle or give it life, as he expresseth himself in a Letter to him bearing date Dec. 2. 1657. To which when the Doctor had received our Authors Answer, in which he approves his excellent design, in a second Letter the Doctor returns him his thanks, and after his acknowledgments he adds. And truly (says he) had we not such an Oracle to consult with, bootless and in vain it would be to attempt such an undertaking. And a little afterwards he adds, O nos felices ter & amplius, quibus contigit, Te vivo, opus hoc tam grande, quam arduum auspicato suscepisse: Et benedictus ob hoc semper sit summus ille rerum Arbiter. This Letter is not dated, but must be written upon the beginning of that great undertaking.

I forbear to relate in how many particulars his Advice and Assistance toward that excellent Work was requested. The Doctor tells our Author in a Letter dated (Feb. 22. 1663.) what his sense of him was in these word, your Worth and Works, so transcendent to the Vulgar way of writing, all the learned World doth and ought highly to esteem: I have and shall (as does become me) in this Work now upon me sundry times with honour mention, &c. Our Author did not only advise, and command, and speak well: These are cheap things. He assisted by supplying with Money, and supporting the excellent undertaker: This I find acknowledged by the Doctor in a Letter bearing date, March 14. 1663. How far our Author gave his assistance this way I know not, but this I find, that in that Letter the Doctor is transported, that in these three Kingdoms (says he to our Author) there should be one found (בלא אח for such a second has never yet appeared to me) who has manifested such a sentiment of my ruined and undone condition. He does indeed except in that Letter the Bishop of Exon whose kindness to him was incomparably great.

Doctor Lightfoot indeed was very much concerned for that most Worthy undertaker, and did, I find, do his utmost to support the Good Man in that excellent Work. He wrote often to him, and failed not by all manner of ways to encourage him in his Labours. The Doctor tells him (in a Letter bearing date Nov. 15. 1664.) next to the Divine I meet with no lines like yours, that so sweetly refresh and delight my Soul when quite wearied with labour, &c. When the first Volume of that excellent Book came out, I find the Doctor giving our Author the notice of it, and promising him to transmit it, with a request to give a Censure of it, none being either more able to judge, or that will do it with greater Candor; especially he desires his more severe scanning of the Arabick. This he does in a Letter dated Jan. 14. 1667. He acquaints him also with the finishing of the Second Volume in a Letter dated to him June 9. 1669. By this it appears how far our Author was concerned in the encouraging of this excellent Work.

For the Synopsis Criticorum undertaken by Mr. Matthew Pool, I find our Author likewise concerned. For I have seen many Letters of Mr. Pools to him full of thanks and acknowledgment, and one bearing date Jan. 7. 1673. in which he does acknowledge to have received his second Papers, and expresses his great desire of receiving the Remaining. How far our Author was concerned in that very useful design of that Diligent and Worthy Man hath not come to my knowledge, and therefore I cannot give a particular account of it. This only is not to be omitted, that a Friend of mine hath seen many short Annotations in Latine, written by his own hand, upon many Chapters of Exodus, Numbers, Numbers, Joſua, which he communicated to Mr. Pool; whether for the uſe of his Synopſis, or ſomewhat elſe, it is uncertain.

This Reverend Man was divers years before his Death preferred by the favour of Sir Orlando Bridgeman, then Lord Keeper, to a Prebend in the Church of Ely: But in what year this was, hath not come to my knowledge: And I muſt confeſs there are many other things in which I wanted information: I did never think it would be my lot to give any account to the World of this excellent Perſon: had I foreſeen that, I could, ſome years ſince, have been more plentifully furniſhed with materials to this purpoſe; having had the honour to be acquainted with him my ſelf, and the opportunity (which is now paſſed) of informing my ſelf better of His Life than now I have. And I do acknowledge that this account that I now give I receive for the moſt part, from the Hands of the Reverend, and my worthy Friend, Mr. John Strype, Miniſter of Low-Leyton in Eſſex, who hath furniſhed me with ſuch an account, as (though it be ſhort of what might have been had, yet) may be relied upon. And I thought it better to give ſome (though imperfect) account of this Learned and Pious Man, than that he ſhould go without any at all.

As to his great Learning, his Works are a proof beyond all exception; I make no doubt but that the Reader will receive great benefit by them. Our Author was a very perſpicacious Man, and very happy in clearing the difficulties of the Holy Scriptures, and greatly furniſhed with that Learning which enabled him that way. His great abilities were acknowledged by the Learned of our own Country, and thoſe beyond the Seas. I ſhall not need to inſiſt upon the Teſtimonies to this purpoſe, which I could eaſily produce. However I ſhall not forbear to mention ſome. Our Author had ſent Doctor Caſtell one of his Books, at that time when he was engaged in his Lexicon. In a Letter of his (bearing date Aug. 16. 1664.) he makes this following acknowledgment: Sir, you have laid an unutterable obligation upon me by the gift of this Learned and much longed for Work--- you have enriched my poor Library with an addition ſo excellent and delightful, that truly, when I firſt received it, I could not contain my ſelf from reading it quite through, notwithſtanding the importunacy of my publick engagement, and the clamor of all the Work-men, Corrector, Compoſitors, Preſs-men, &c. to all whom I turned a deaf Ear till I had ſatisfied my Eye with the entire peruſal of it. And afterwards he adds --- Sir, I will never be aſhamed to confeſs by whom I have profited: All that would underſtand that clear light, together with the myſterious hidden uſe and beneſit, which the moſt ancient Records of the Jews bring unto Holy Writ muſt confeſs themſelves, above all others, deeply indebted to your Elaborate and incomparable Writings, who have fetched out more of theſe profound and rich Mines than any of the beſt Seers in this or the precedent Ages, have been able to diſcover. I might have added much more from that very excellent Perſons own hand. Take the ſuffrage of another Learned Man, Mr. Herbert Thorndike, who in a Letter to our Author bearing date May 18. 1669. expreſſes his eſteem of his Learning in the Jews Writings, and deſiring his Judgment of the Exercitations of Morinus in words too long to be tranſcribed. And for Foreigners I ſhall content my ſelf with two only. The firſt is that of Mounſieur Le Moin, a moſt Learned Miniſter of the Proteſtant Church of Roan, who in a Letter to Dr. Worthington, ſpeaking of his Notes and Exercitations upon Joſephus, he ſaith: In iis utor ſæpiſſime Lightfooti Talmudicæ Doctiſſimi, quem ſi inter Philebræorum familiam ducem dixero, nihil certe dixero, quod aſſurgat ultra meritum eruditiſſimi illius viri. Quæ de Templo, dechorographia ſacra, in Matthæum, in Actus, erudite & feliciter Conſcripſit, diu eſt quod illa poſſideo, iiſq; præclaris operibus Bibliotheca mea ſuperbit. The other Teſtimony is that of the moſt Learned Profeſſor of Baſil, the late Doctor John Buxtorf: This great Man ſpeaking of our Author, in a Letter of his to Doctor Caſtell, hath theſe words. Ex horis ejus Talmudicis incepi illius doctrinam & diligentiam valde amare. Illæ ſalivam mihi moverunt, ut propediem ab ipſo ſimilia videre deſiderem & guſtare. Precor ipſi omnia læta, ac meritis ejus digna. Again, in a Letter of the ſame Profeſſor to our Author, dated at Baſil, Dec. 12. 1663. I find he expreſſes the higheſt eſteem for him, whoſe diligence and accuracy, and dexterity, in illuſtrating the Holy Scriptures he tells him he admires. Raræ hæ dotes hoc noſtro ſæculo in viris Theologis, rari hujuſmodi Scriptores, &c. as he goes on in that Letter too long to tranſcribe.

As no man can queſtion the great Learning of our Author, ſo he will appear to be very exemplary for his indefatigable diligence, if we duly conſider under what diſadvantages he arrived to this great degree of knowledge. He was young when he left Cambridge, and a ſtranger to thoſe Studies which he was afterward ſo deſervedly famous for: He went as an Uſher into a Country School, remote from the Books and helps which might aſſiſt him: His hours were taken up with the care of Boys, and his Head filled with their noiſe and importunities. After this he entred into Orders, but that did not advance him in Learning: Beſides, he entred upon conſtant Preaching when he was very young. After this he married a Wife and ſoon had the charge and burden of Children, and the cares of the the World to divert him from his Studies. His worldly circumſtances were not large, and his family encreaſed, and his work in Preaching was conſtant: He was far from the help, and the leiſure which a life in the Univerſity would have given him. But this brave Man ſurmounts all theſe difficulties and diſadvantages: He in his great Judgment ſaw that the Oriental Learning was worth his while, that Chronology, and other difficult pieces of knowledge would be of uſe to him; and make him ſerviceable to others; he was ſenſible of his defects, and generouſly does this young Divine reſolve to ſhake off all ſloth, and to make no excuſes: He knew very well that what he undertook was a great Work, that it was

Magnum mentis opus nec de Codice paranda
Attonitæ----

And now he betakes himſelf in good earneſt to theſe abſtruſe and perplexing Studies. He defrauds himſelf of his reſt and eaſe, withdraws from his Friends, and abſtracts himſelf from the World, and all Secular intanglements, and early and late purſues his wiſe and worthy End. His Motto ſeems to have been (for we find it written, in one of his Note Books, under his Name) השכם והערב denoting his reſolution to riſe up early and ſit up late in the purſuit after knowledge.

Our Author had not the helps of Tutors to inſtruct him in theſe Studies; he had not the time of Students in the Univerſities who need take no care for their dayly bread; He had not the advantage of Books and learned Society which thoſe Men have, who live in Cities; nor had he the advantages of Wealth or Dignities to provide himſelf of helps; nor intereſt in great Perſons who might have encouraged his Studies; and yet when he appeared in the World he gave the greateſt proofs of his abilities. He drew after him the Eyes of the Learned part of the Kingdom, and exceeded far the expectation of all Men. What would not our Author have done if he had had the advantages which he wanted? Had he been aſſiſted by States and Kingdoms, encouraged with a ſupply of all Foreign helps, excited by ſome great Rewards, placed in a better Light, directed in his firſt attempts and Studies by the wiſeſt Guids and Maſters which the Age could afford?

He was not only a Man of great Learning, and exemplary Diligence, but of great Modeſty and Humility, and Gratitude, and Candor: He did not ſwell with pride upon the account of his Learning or his Labours. He was far removed from any great opinion and conceit of himſelf, or a low and mean one of his neighbour. Thoſe who knew him will confeſs this. Indeed he was ſo far from thinking highly of himſelf and his own performances, that ſome Men have thought him extream and ſomething faulty, and that he did not value himſelf as he ought to have done. There did not perhaps live in the World a Man of more profound humility, than our Author was: A Man ready to hear others ſpeak, willing to be put in mind of any thing that was a miſtake or ſlip; full of the ſenſe of another Mans worth, and without a juſt ſenſe of his own. The moſt grateful and modeſt Man, and of the greateſt Candor and Humanity, and ſweetneſs of Temper our Author was.

He died at Ely, Decemb. 6. 1675. To the great loſs of the whole Kingdom, and particularly of the Inhabitants of Munden; to whom he was a Father, a diligent Paſtor, and a bountiful Friend. Among them he ſpent the greateſt part of his time for many years: He was not at eaſe when he was abſent from his Flock. It was not the Fleece he regarded, but the Sheep: They had alſo a great regard for their Shepheard, they gladly heard his Voice and did not go aſtray in his time.

Thus I have given ſome ſhort account of this excellent Man, and of his uſeful Life in the World. He lived to great purpoſe, died much lamented, and hath left us who ſurvive an excellent Example. God grant that we may cloſely and vigorouſly follow every thing that in our Author, or any others was Virtuous and Exemplary: we ſhall in due time reap if we faint not.

thing. (He ſeldom ſpeaks ſo confidently,) but the Hap of becoming publick is not happened unto it. Though now at laſt by good hap it is.

But however the World has at length gained this Map ſo long ſuppreſſed, yet his Chorographical Deſcription of Canaan, and the places adjoyning, is irrecoverably loſt. You will be the more ſenſible of the loſs of it, if you will hear what the Deſign of it was, and what pains he had taken about it. Take it from his own pen in one of his Epiſtles, He intended to deſcribe the Land of Iſrael in a way ſomewhat new indeed and untrodden, and, as he believed, unattempted: he means, out of the Writings of the Jews. For he had obſerved three ſorts of things, that might be picked up out of the Talmuds, and other Jewiſh Authors (if dextrouſly managed) in reference to the Land of Canaan. I. In exceeding many paſſages, when they come to ſpeak of places of the Land, that are mentioned in Scripture, they either deſcribe them, or ſhew their ſituation, or diſtance from ſuch or ſuch places. II. They give us abundance of names of Cities, Mountains, and other places in that Land. Which names are neither to be found in the Scripture, nor Joſephus; nor in the Heathen, or Chriſtian Records, that ſpeak of the places of that Country; but in theſe Judaick Writers only. But yet carry a fair probability, and rational Evidence, that there were ſuch names and places. III. They relate many choice, eminent and remarkable ſtories, occurring in ſuch and ſuch places, which are not to be found in any Records, but their own: and of ſingular illuſtration both of the ſituation, and of the ſtory of the Land and Nation. Now the taking notice of paſſages of this nature had been his courſe for many years together, as he had occaſion to read the Talmudical Writers. So that he had gathered a great ſtock of theſe Rarities, as he ſtyles them, for the uſe of his Chorographical Work; even to the bulk of a great Volume. In ſo much that what he ſaith of his Book of the Temple, That it coſt him as much pains to give that deſcription of it, as to travail thither, is as much, or more true of this. The unhappy chance, that hindred the publiſhing this elaborate piece of his, which he had brought to pretty good perfection, was the Edition of Doctor Fullers Piſgah Sight; Great pity it was, that ſo good a Book ſhould have done ſo much harm. For that Book handling the ſame matters, and preventing his, ſtopped his Reſolution of letting his labours in that ſubject ſee the light. Though he went a way altogether different from Doctor Fuller, and ſo both might have ſhewn their faces together in the World, and the younger Siſter, if we may make compariſons, might have proved the fairer of the two. But that Book is loſt utterly, ſave that many of his Notions are preſerved in his Chorographical pieces put before his Horæ.

And for the laſt thing (whereof that Preface was to conſiſt) namely to give ſome Hiſtorical account of the affairs of the Jews; that is done in part in his Commentary upon the Acts of the Apoſtles publiſhed Anno 1645. and in his Parergon, Concerning the Fall of Jeruſalem, at the End of the Harmony, Anno 1655. But alas! theſe are but light touches of their ſtory, rather than any compleat and full account thereof. But ſuch as they are we muſt be glad of, and contented in the want of the reſt. Indeed the Jews Hiſtory from the beginning of the Goſpel downwards for ſome Centuries would have been as excellent and uſeful, as the ſubject would have been rare and unuſual. And a thing of that difficulty alſo, that the modeſt Doctor propounds it to others rather than dares to undertake it himſelf. For we find in one of his Epiſtles Dedicatory *, He recommends it to ſome able pen to continue the ſtory of the Jews, where Joſephus and Egeſippus end theirs, and where Jeruſalem ended her days, until theſe latter times, out of the Jews own Talmud and Writings; for the illuſtration of the Truth of thoſe predictions of Scripture that foretel their doom, and for the evidencing that juſtice, that hath ever ſince haunted them for the murder of the Righteous One, whom they crucified.

II.

Concerning his Learning and Studies.

NAture had endued him with a ſtrong and ſound conſtitution of Body: ſo that in his old age he was able cloſely to follow his Studies without finding any inconvenience by it: and though he had not ſpared his Eyes in his younger years, yet they ſtill remained good; for which he bleſſeth God in a Letter to the Learned Buxtorph, Anno 1664. And divers years after that, he acknowledgeth the ſame bleſſing of health in his Epiſtle to his laſt Book that he put forth, which was not above a year or two before his death: calling it Vivacitatem corporis, animi atque oculorum; The Vivacity of his Body, Mind and Eyes. This excellent temperament qualified him for Study. Which he purſued hard all his days. He had read much. Which may be gathered from his Note Books, wherein are ſhort Notes from Book to Book and from Chapter to Chapter, of the chief Contents of many Authors, collected by his own Hand, and both Fathers and Hiſtorians, and and especially the latter: and such of them chiefly as might afford him light into the affairs of the Church in the earliest times of it. And hereby he laid himself in a good stock of materials to make use of in his future Rabbinical Studies. That abstruse and more recondite Learning he from his younger years greatly affected. To those Studies *, he tells us himself, he was most fervently carried out, ex innato mihi nescio quo genio, by he could not tell what innate Genius: and that there was nothing so sweet and delicate to him: * istis deliciis nihil mihi dulcius delicatiusque.

* Ep. Ded. before the Hor. upon S. John.

Indeed this Learned Man seemed to have a Genius, that naturally affected the Study of such things, as were beyond the sphere of ordinary and common Learning; and delighted to tread in * untrodden paths, to use his own phrase; and loved to lead rather than follow. He was willing to spare no labour, and to take up all things at the first Hand: as he speaks somewhere. And this appeared by the very Title that he gave some of his Books. His Observations upon Genesis are called by him New and rarely heard of. In his Handful of Gleanings, he promiseth solution of difficulties scarcely given by any heretofore: And in the second part of his Harmony published Anno 1647. he professeth to give Observations upon Text and Story, not commonly obvious, and more rare and unnoted. And that Proposition before mentioned, of a just History of the Jews, bespake the high and more than ordinary flights of his Learned mind. But especially his Harmony shewed this. Wherein he reckons himself the first that ever essayed a Work of that nature in the English Language: which he himself calls an untrodden path, and a bold adventure.

* Ep. before his Harm. publish. 1647.

But let us follow him to his beloved Rabbies, or rather to the beloved Writings of the ill-beloved Authors. Of whom he gave this character, That the Doctrine of the Gospel had no more bitter enemies than they, and yet the Text no more plain Interpreters. The reason he bent himself to the Study of them was because he was fully convinced an insight into their Language and Customs was the best way to a safe and sure understanding of the New Testament; which he thirstily gasped and breathed after the knowledge of. And though the barbarous and difficult style, and the great store of trifling, wherewith they abound, might, and doth, justly discourage many from reading them, yet Dr. Lightfoot undervalued all hardships and discouragements for the compassing that great and noble end he aimed at. Let us now view him tugging day and night at these Studies, and especially take notice of that excellent method he proposed to himself for the prosecuting them with the more fruit and advantage. Which was to Note, 1. Whatsoever any way tended to illustrate the Phrase or Story of the New Testament. 2. Whatsoever tended to the better knowledge of the places in the Land of Canaan. And 3. whatsoever related to History, and especially that of the Jews. And to acquaint you more particularly how he ordered himself in taking up these notices, he used large Note-books in Folio. And therein he digested what he intended to Note, as he read the Talmuds, and other Jewish Books, under such Titles as these: Quædam de Terra Israelitica sparsim collecta; Things scatteringly collected concerning the Land of Israel. And ארץ ישראל Quænam. What was the Land of Israel. And ארץ ישראל Things appropriated to the Land of Israel. And there is an Alphabet by him framed, in this method: א ארץ. ב בבל. ג גבל. ק קדש. ד דרום. ה ארץ. in Græc. ג גר. ח חוה. ו איו. ל לא, &c. Under which according to their initial Letters he used to reduce all places of the Holy Land mentioned in the Talmud, and something of their Situation, or History, with references unto the page of the Tracts, where they were mentioned. And lastly, There is another Title, viz. Places in Babylonia, under which he collected the Names and Stories of Towns or Cities in that Country also.

He was very curious indeed in tracing the Countries and places mentioned in Scripture, and especially wherein the Jewish Nation were any ways concerned. This sufficiently appears in his laborious Disquisitions premised before each of his Hebrew and Talmudical Exercitations. And in one of his Note Books, he is tracing with much accuracy the Marches of Israel out of Egypt, under this Ὁδοιπορία, The Motions and Stations of Israel in their March out of Egypt. Pity it is, it was not perfected by him.

He read over both Talmuds often, and with great deliberation, as appears from several of his Paper Books, in which are many rough Notes of the Contents thereof taken by him at several times; and sometimes short Observations of his own thereupon. He seemed to have had a Design of publishing a brief account of the Jerusalem Talmud, and of the chief matters, whereof it treats from Tract to Tract. For there is such a thing fairly written out by him in Latin, bearing this Title, Index aliqualis Talmudis Hierosolymitani. But it is imperfect, reaching but to the seventh Tract of the first Classis.

He was as studious of the Sacred Chronology, of the Old and New Testament, as, we have seen, he was of the Chorography of the Holy Land: as accounting this highly necessary to the understanding of the Scriptures. When it was once debated by the Assembly of Divines at Westminster in what parts of Learning the Candidates for holy Orders should ſhould be examined, and ſome were for waving the trying them in Scripture Chronology, Doctor Lightfoot urged the neceſſity of it in order to the apprehending the ſenſe of the Sacred Volumes; alledging, that he held, that he read not Scripture, who was not expert in Chronology. And he prevailed in that debate. His abilities in that ſort of Learning may be ſeen in ſeveral of his Works publiſhed, and in divers rude Eſſayes in MS.

He had long and very carefully ſearched into the Tranſlation of the LXX, and compared it verſe by verſe with the Hebrew Original, as appears by his MS. under this Title, Diſcrepantiæ ☞ LXX a textu Hebræo, with brief Notes here and there. And under another Title, viz. Σφάλματα ☞ LXX, he enumerates all their errors throughout the whole Tranſlation; and them he makes to be very many in this method; Inaniter addita Periculoſe decurtata. Senſum clarum obfuſcantia. Vitiantia pulchrum. Reddita in ſenſum, alienum. Reddita in ſenſum plane contrarium. Reddita in ſenſum nullum. Traditiones Judaicas redolentia. Hebraica retenta. Reddita pro fama gentis. Pro fama textus. Paraphraſes. Propria nomina facta Appellativa. Numeri male calculati. Locorum nomina recenſa. Vocales male Lectæ. Literæ male Lectæ. Senſus fœdatus. Variatio nominum. Verſus male conjuncti, &c. And accordingly under each of theſe Heads the places of Scripture, ſo miſtaken are by him diſpoſed, which are infinite. Which coſt him no ſmall pains. By theſe things it appears he was no good friend to the LXX. It was great pity he lived not to digeſt into a juſt Volume theſe his careful Studies concerning the LXX, as he intended to do; and had begun it in Latine, in three or four Chapters, written fair with his own hand, carrying this Title, Diſquiſitio modeſta de LXX, & de Verſione Græca: and had likewiſe conſulted the great Buxtorph about this his purpoſe.

He was alſo well ſeen in Joſephus. He ſeems to have communicated his own Joſephus, with Notes of his own written in it, unto Monſeir Petit, a Learned Man of Niſmes in France: who had laboured hard in preparing a good Edition of that uſeful Author: For Anno 1666. in a Letter June 12. from Dr. Worthington to him, ſpeaking concerning Petit, he hath theſe words, I doubt not but when you have your own Joſephus returned, you will meet with ſome obſervations of your own noted in him. Another French Man about the year 1666. viz. Monſeir Le Moyn, reputed to be one of the Learnedeſt Men in France, and Miniſter of the Proteſtant Church at Roan, laboured in the ſame work that Petit before had done. And for the furthering of his deſign he wrote to the ſaid Learned and Pious Doctor Worthington, that if he had any thing for the benefit of that Edition, to impart it. Whereupon he applies himſelf to his old Friend Doctor Lightfoot, (who, as he tells him, was well verſed in Joſephus) that he would aſſiſt him with his hints and ſhort obſervations upon the doubtful paſſages in that Author: a thing that he knew would be very acceptable unto that Learned Man. What the iſſue of this requeſt was, appears not; only we know the Doctor did not uſe to be backward in communicating any knowledge he had; who had ſo freely yielded his aſſiſtance to the Polyglot Bible, to the Heptaglot Lexicon, and the Synopſis of the Criticks, as we ſhall ſee by and by. We are ſure Monſeir Le Moyn made great uſe of what the Doctor had before publiſhed, eſpecially in the Chorographical Century before S. Matthew, where he had occaſion to ſpeak to ſeveral places in Joſephus. And ſo he writes expreſly to Doctor Worthington, ſpeaking of his Notes and Exercitations upon Joſephus, In iis utor ſæpiſſime Lightfootii Talmudice Doctiſſimi, &c. In theſe I do very often make uſe of the Works of Doctor Lightfoot, a man well ſtudied in Talmudical Learning, &c.

What Doctor Worthington contributed to this Work, beſides the uſing his intereſt with his Learned Friends for the ſame purpoſe, let me mention, though not ſo much to our preſent Theam. At the Library at S. James's there was a Joſephus in Greek, Printed at Baſil: probably once belonging to the very Learned Iſaac Caſaubon; for in the Margin were various Lections written by his hand, which he had gathered out of MSS. and ſome conjectures and hints of his own; there were alſo marked in it other Notes of Patrick Young, written moſt in Greek. Theſe the aforeſaid Doctor tranſcribed, and numbred the Pages and the Lines, which made three Sheets of Paper cloſe written, a matter of no ſmall pains, and ſent them over to the ſaid Monſeir Le Moyn. But to return to our Author.

III.

Some account of him as a Divine.

HE gave no ſmall ſpecimen of his ſkill alſo in Divinity, as well as in Oriental and other Learning, when he proceeded Doctor, which was Anno 1652. The Queſtion upon which he diſputed, was, Poſt Canonem Scripturæ conſignatum non ſunt novæ Revelationes expectandæ. Which he managed againſt the Enthuſiaſts, againſt whom he by by all means oppoſed himſelf; as being greatly ſenſible how that Sect tended to the overthrow of the Holy Scriptures; which were his deareſt Care and Delight. He managed this Queſtion by diſcourſing firſt, Concerning the Sealing of the Canon of the Holy Scriptures; And ſecondly, Concerning not expecting Revelations after it was once Sealed. His meaning he ſtated in theſe three particulars; That now after the Scripture Canon is ſealed, Revelations are not to be expected. I. To reveal new Doctrines of Faith. Nor, II. To diſcover the ſenſe of the Scriptures, or to explain the Doctrines of Faith. Nor, III. To direct our Lives and Manners. And among other Arguments whereby he proved his Queſtion, he produced two Hiſtorical paſſages for that purpoſe. The one was, That in thoſe very Times wherein Revelations, Inſpirations and Propheſies abounded, even then Men were directed to the written Word. Yea (which is more, and moſt worthy of notice) from the firſt founding of the Church of Iſrael unto the expiration of it, though for the moſt part Prophets and Men inſpired were at hand; yet God ordained not theſe for the ſtanding and conſtant Miniſtry, whereby the People were to be inſtructed, but Prieſts, that were skilled in the Law, and ſtudied the Scripture. How far do our Enthuſiaſts, ſaith he, ſwerve from this Divine Inſtitution concerning the publick Miniſtry; Who ſuffer none to be a Miniſter, who is Learned and Studious, but he only, who is inſpired with the Spirit, and who can preach by the Spirit? The other is, That the Apoſtle S. Paul, after the firſt age of the Goſpel in which Revelations were often very neceſſary, would no longer uſe the Impoſition of his hands, which conferred the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe he well knew, that God ſaw good no further to make uſe of ſuch a Miniſtry: and therefore placeth Timothy in Epheſus and Titus in Creet, and other excellent Men elſewhere, who, though they could not confer the Spirit, yet they ordained Miniſters, not inſpired by the Spirit, but Learned by Study. He the next day determined Learnedly upon that Queſtion, An mors Chriſti fuerit in Redemptionem univerſalem. His Clerum which he Preached was upon 1 Cor. XVI. 22. Ἴδις ὁ φιλῶν τὸν κύριον Ἰησοῦν χριστὸν ἤτω Ἀνάθεμα Μαρὰν ἀθά. The ſum whereof was afterward by him publiſhed in his Horæ upon the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians.

And ſince we are conſidering him now as a Learned Divine, having before taken notice of him as a Learned Man; let us hear him arguing and ſhewing his great abilities among the Divines at Weſtminſter. Whoſe notions he did not ſeldom oppoſe, even to a challenge; ſometimes by the ſtrength and clearneſs of his reaſonings, and evidence of Scripture (for he ſeemed to deſerve that character that was given to Apollos, a Man mighty in the Scriptures) he turned the whole Aſſembly: and ſometimes, ſuch was his honeſty and courage, he would in ſome caſes diſſent from the whole Company, and be the only Negative in the Aſſembly. Some paſſages of his judgment in that Aſſembly are related in the Account of his Life, there are divers more, that deſerve to be recorded to his fame and memory.

Doctor Lightfoots judgment was for general admiſſion to the Holy Sacrament, and ſpake for it by theſe arguments. I. That though the Law forbid the unclean to come ad Sacra, yet it gave not power to any to repel thoſe that offered themſelves to come. Nor find we any ſuch example. II. That in Matth. VII. Sanctum canibus, Give not that which is holy to the Dogs, is ſpoken in reference to the Apoſtles ſafety For the Jews themſelves, who uſe this Proverb, by Dogs and Swine underſtand the bitter Enemies and Perſecutors of the truth. And ſo our Saviour hereby warrants his Diſciples, though they Preach not to Perſecutors, and Enemies, leſt it coſt them their lives. III. Circumciſion was indifferently miniſtred to all the Seed of Abraham, Ergo. IV. Judas received the Sacrament, Ergo. And when Mr. G. inſtanced in Uzziah his being repelled, our Doctor anſwered, That it was ab Officio & loco, and withal ſaid, Grant the Prieſt did and might repel the unclean, yet the caſe was different. For that uncleanneſs was external, and it might be known, whether they were purified or no. But ſo cannot a Miniſter now judge of a Mans Conſcience. For though he were ſcandalous yeſterday, yet may his repentance be unfeigned by to day, for ought he knows. Dr. B. urged, That though Chriſt was καρδιογνώστης, yet Judas his Villany was not now known among the Diſciples. Our Doctor anſwered, Chriſt had publickly marked him out for a Traitor before. Dr. H. urged, After the ſop he went out. The Doctor anſwered, That was no Paſsover nor Sacrament, but before it. Upon this the matter aroſe to a great heat (for he ſeemed herein to oppoſe the whole Aſſembly) and leave was publickly given to our Author and Mr. P. to debate the point about Judas. And they did it ſomewhat largely. And the next day Dr. H. offered to diſpute the ſame matter againſt him; but the Aſſembly thought fit not to allow it. Again, Matth. VII. was taken up, which Dr. Lightfoot again oppoſed, and deſired, that the verſe might be taken in this ſenſe, which they would have, Give not the Sacrament to Dogs, leſt they rend you; and then that they would conſider, how doth this agree? And further urged, that Dogs in Scripture doth moſt conſtantly ſignifie An Enemy: and where Dog once ſignifies a prophane Man at large, it ſignifies many time for that one, either thoſe without, or utter enemies of the Truth. Mr. S. pleaded of Aſcalon. Let not the Jews hear it, nor the Turks underſtand ſuch a thing: leſt they blaſpheme our Lord of Life, more than they do. For the proving that clauſe in the ſame Article, To reconcile his Father to us, they produced Ezek. XVI. 63. which the Doctor oppoſed, as improper for the thing in hand.

At another time, being upon Diſcipline, when there had been great bandying of that place Epheſ. IV. 11. Paſtors and Teachers: Diſputing what officers they were, whether diſtinct or the ſame, whether ordinary or extraordinary; the Doctor ſpake to this purpoſe, That he for his part was of a ſtrange indifferency in this place and point. For with the one part he held, that theſe two here named are diſtinct Offices, but it was pro hic & nunc, & ad tempus. For by that μέχρι καταντήσωμεν, &c. Till we all come, &c. verſ. 13. he means the coming in of the Gentiles: and that is ἑνότητος πίστεως, & μέτρον ἡλικίας, &c. The unity of the Faith, and the meaſure of the ſtature, &c. there ſpoken of. And, that theſe Officers were thoſe that God appointed for the bringing in the Gentiles to the union with the Jews, ἐν ἑνότητι πίστεως; and therefore is no inſtitution of ſuch Offices for the time to come. A Paſtor indeed is to continue, but this ex neceſſitate rei, rather than hujus loci. But a Doctor is not of ſuch neceſſity. Then indeed there were, as Act. XIII. Prophets and διδάσκαλοι, Teachers, but it was κατὰ τὸν ἕξῆ ἐκκλησίαν, according to the Church being, but now not ſo.

I will mention but one or two paſſages more, that will ſhew how accurate a Man he was, as well as Learned. When the Directory for Prayer was reading over, and they came to that clauſe, Freeing us from Antichriſtian darkneſs, he excepted againſt the expreſſion as too low: for that Antichriſt importeth an activeneſs againſt Godlineſs; and Darkneſs is but a privation of Godlineſs. Therefore it was thus mended, From Antichriſtian darkneſs and Tyranny. And again, whereas it was thus penned, Theſe things we ask for the merits of our High Prieſt: This he likewiſe excepted againſt, for that the alluſion would not hold. For the Jews prayed to God by the Mediation of the High Prieſt, but never by the merits. Whereupon the word mediation was put in.

By all which paſſages laid together we may diſcover not only his knowledge in Divinity, his great parts and quickneſs, and his happy ſkill in interpreting Scriptures, and the great progreſs he had then made in the Oriental Learning: but alſo much of his judgement in the Presbyterian points; and how frequently and freely he oppoſed their moſt beloved and eſpouſed Tenets.

He was now but a young Man, little above forty years old: but by all this it appears he had read much, and maturely digeſted his reading, eſpecially Jewiſh Learning. Nay long before this he was an Author. For he publiſhed his Erubhin, or Miſcellanies at ſeven and twenty years of age. By the frequent quotations in which Book it appears, that he had then read and ſtudied even to a prodigy. For he doth not only make uſe of divers Rabbinical and Cabbaliſtical Authors, and of Latine Fathers, but he ſeemed well verſed in the Greek Fathers alſo, as Clemens Alexandrinus, Epiphanius, Chryſoſtome, &c. well read in antient Greek prophane Hiſtorians and Philoſophers, and Poets, Plutarch, Plato, Homer, &c. well ſeen in Books of Hiſtory Eccleſiaſtical and prophane of our own Nation: and in a word ſkilled in the modern Tongues as well as the Learned: as is evident from his quotation of the Spaniſh Tranſlation of the Bible, and a Spaniſh Book. And of what worth and value the Book it ſelf was, you may gueſs by the Cenſure, that a Man of great Learning and Wiſdom gave of it: I mean that Worſhipful perſon to whom he dedicated it, his Patron Sir Rowland Cotton. Who in a Letter to him upon the receit of the Book tells this young Author, That he had read it over, and that there were many rarities; nothing ſo Vulgar that he needed to fear his Books entertainment, unleſs it lapſed into the hands of an envious or ſtupid Dunce. And that he joyed much in his proficiency.

Some Remarks upon his Horæ Hebraicæ & Talmudicæ.

I Deſign not to give a particular account of his Works as they came forth, ſomething hath already been ſpoken of them; his ſeveral Epiſtles before them will ſhew that: only of his laſt pains, that crowned all the reſt, I mean his Horæ Hebraicæ, I would remark ſomething: and that is, the univerſal approbation and applauſe they met with in the Learned World, both at home, and in forain parts. When our Author had ſent his Horæ upon S. Mark to the great and profound Linguiſt Dr. Caſtel, he calls it an unutterable obligation laid upon him; that it was a learned and much longed for work, and that it enriched his poor Library with an addition ſo excellent and delightful, &c. And upon the Doctors ſending him his Horæ upon St. John, he writes thus; I received laſt week by your appointment a gift auro quovis, gemmiſq; contra non charum: that all the riches of the Levant congeſted together cannot equal: ſuch a מכתם as will juſtly deſerve to be enrolled among the very next Records to thoſe of Infallibility. And truly, Sir, all your rare diſcoveries of Celeſtial

Celeſtial Verities, ſeem to me to be at ſuch, above the reach either of doubt or heſitation. And again, Your Criticiſm of Bethabara and Bethany (ſaith he) is ſo native, proper, genuine, and ingenious, I no ſooner read it, but ſtraitway ſaid to my ſelf, Securus jurarem in Verba Magiſtri. Tis like all the other births of your bleſt Minerva. And upon the edition of another of thoſe pieces Mr. Bernard of S. Johns, Oxon, a Man of known learning, worth and piety, writes thus to him; I moſt humbly thank you for the happy hours on the more copious Evangeliſt; by which that moſt excellent part of Holy Scripture is finiſht, and compleatly expounded in the moſt proper and yet untrodden way. God reward you both here, and in the better World for this, and the reſt of your labours in this ſort; which poſterity will admire, and bleſs, when they ſee them altogether. Dr. Worthington another perſon of great judgment, learning and goodneſs, treats our Doctor with theſe words in a Letter wrote to him, Feb. 166½. concerning the ſame ſubject; I wiſh you length of life, health, vacancy and freedom for what remains. I hope that you are ſtill proceeding, and are not weary in well doing, though Books ſell but little: thoſe that are able to buy, leſs mind Books, and thoſe that would buy are leſs able: having little to ſpare from what is neceſſary for their families. But your labour will not be in vain in the Lord: nor here neither. The learned Men beyond the Seas had alſo an high value for theſe pieces: let ſome of them ſpeak for themſelves. Frederick Mieg, (ſon to a great Councellor of the Elector Palatine, once brought up under Buxtorph in Hebrew, and Rabbinical Studies, and of whom he gives a high character) thus writes to our Doctor from Paris 1664. concerning thoſe precious Hours, as he ſtyles them, and publick Labours. Publicos enim labores non vereor appellare, quos in publicum literarii Orbis commodum redundare, nemo eſt qui ignoret. And tells him beſides, that there were no learned Men, as he knew, on that ſide the Seas, but did ſummis anhelitibus, earneſtly pant after his Hebrew and Talmudical Exercitations upon the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, which he had then ready for the Preſs. And begs him in his own Name and in the Name of all that love thoſe Studies, ut lucem non invideas ſcripto luce digniſſimo, neq; illud intra privatos parietes conſeneſcere ſinas, unde tantum imminet publico emolumentum. That he would not envy it the light, ſince it was ſo worthy of it: nor ſuffer that to lie longer concealed within private walls, whence ſo great profit would accrue to the publick. In a Letter from Nicholas Hoboken, Secretary to the Dutch Ambaſſador, here in England, written to Dr. Lightfoot in the year 1659. he acquaints him with the ſenſe Gisbertus Voetius (Profeſſor of Divinity, and a Man of great Name in Holland) had of his Chorographical Century before his Horæ upon S. Matthew, namely, That he had expreſſed to him (the ſaid Secretary) the complacency that he took from thoſe Geographical illuſtrations of his, fetched out of the Talmudiſts: ita tamen, ut ſpe largiori frui deſideret plura Lucubrationum ejuſmodi tuarum videndi. And if we ſhould travail into France, there we ſhall find a Man of as great fame as the other was in Holland, and, it may be, of greater Learning, I mean, Monſeir Le Moyn, who in a Letter to Dr. Worthington, Anno 1666. expreſſing the value he had of Dr. Lightfoots Books, and among the reſt of his ſacred Chorography before S. Matthew, he ſaith, that his Library is proud of them. But the judgment of the Venerable Buxtorph is inſtar omnium, who in a Letter to Dr. Caſtel in the year 1664. earneſtly deſires to know what Dr. Lightfoot did: and ſaith, That by his Talmudick Hours he began greatly to love his Learning and Diligence, and wiſhed heartily to ſee more of them. And in the year before that in a Letter to our Doctor himſelf, he thus accoſts him: Ex quo Horas tuas Hebraicas & Talmudicas in Matthæum vidi & legi, cœpi te amare, & pro merito æſtimare: Tantam enim in eis Talmudicæ lectionis peritiam, & ad illuſtrationem SS. literarum dexteritatem; tantam etiam diligentiam & accurationem in illis deprehendi, ut non potuerim non Te magnificere, & in admirationem Tui rapi. Raræ hæ dotes hoc noſtro ſæculo in viris Theologis, rari hujuſmodi Scriptores; qui nil niſi ſuas proprias obſervationes lectoribus proponunt: Unde ab eo tempore deſiderium me tenuit, ob ſtudiorum communionem propius tecum conjungi, & familiarius te noſcere. Since the time I ſaw and read the Hebrew and Talmudick Hours upon Matthew, I began to love you, and to eſteem you, as you deſerved. For in them I obſerved ſo great skill in Talmudical reading, and dexterity in illuſtrating the Holy Scriptures, accompanied with ſo great diligence and accuracy, that I could not but extol you, and be carried away with an admiration of you. Theſe endowments are rare in Divines in our days, writers of this nature are rare; who propound to Readers only their own obſervations. Whereupon from that time, I had a deſire from the commonneſs of our Studies, to be better acquainted with you.

This was the reception theſe Learned Hours of his found in the World: and a great and invaluable loſs it was, that he went not through the whole New Teſtament in that excellent method of explaining them. His friends indeed often called upon him and ſet him on to proceed. Dr. Worthington's judgment was, that he would do better to publiſh more at a time than he did, ſince he needed not to fear now their reception; ſo as Luke and John might make one Volume, and after that the Acts and the Epiſtle to the Romans would make another; and then his Works would meet at the Epiſtle to the Corinthians.

But if the tediouſneſs of the Work ſhould diſcourage him to go on, yet he earneſtly recommends one Book at leaſt to him, and that is the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, the matter of it being ſo ſutable to his Hebrew Studies. Such good ſuggeſtions were made to him, but they took not effect: not that his ſtrength began to fail him, or that he was unwilling to give his pains, (for he had a mind generouſly diſpoſed to communicate his knowledge) but the true reaſon was, becauſe he could not get them Printed, and had ſo much impaired his own eſtate by what he had before ſent abroad. This he complains of more than once: and particularly in a Letter to Buxtorph: into whoſe boſom thus he pours out his mind. Exaſciavi paucis adhinc annis commentariolum, &c. A few years ſince I prepared a little Commentary upon the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians in the ſame ſtyle and manner as I had done that on Matthew. But it laid by me two years and more, nor can I now publiſh it, but at my own charges, and to my great damage: which I felt enough and too much in the edition of my Book upon S. Mark. Some progreſs I have made in the Goſpel of S. Luke, but I can print nothing but at my own coſt. Whereupon I wholly give my ſelf to reading, and ſcarce think of writing more. Our Bookſellers and Printers have dulled my edge, who will print no Book, eſpecially Latine, unleſs they may have an aſſured and conſiderable gain. So that I know not whether we ought to be more angry or grieved; grieved that we are deprived of ſuch uſeful Labours, or angry with thoſe, who were the occaſions of it.

V.

The aſſiſtances he gave to the Polyglot Bible, the Heptaglot Lexicon, and other Learned Works and Men in his time.

THUS his fame ſpred it ſelf far and wide: and this made him ſought unto by many Learned Men for his Counſel or furtherance in their Studies, or for his directions or caſtigations in their Labours that they intended for the publick. How much the Right Reverend Biſhop Walton made uſe of him in his Bible, one of the braveſt Works that ever came forth, and Reverend Writer of the account of the Doctors Life ſheweth. It was as good a Work as it was great, and this raiſed a wonderful zeal and affection in the Doctor to it, and excuſed the trouble that he was at about it, in reviſing it; and ſpecially the Samaritan Pentateuch: and ſo the great Undertaker tells him in one of his Letters to him. And it much rejoyced his heart, when the Work was brought to perfection: which he expreſſed in a congratulatory Letter to Mr. Samuel Clark of Oxon, who had a great hand in it. To which that excellent Linguiſt makes this anſwer: As for the Work paſt through, I have great cauſe of thankfulneſs, bleſſing God, that hath even beyond our own hopes, carried us through it. Yet I have no reaſon to attribute to my ſelf, as due, any part of that thanks and praiſe, whereunto you are pleaſed joyntly to entitle me with others far more deſerving: But I rather contract a greater debt of thankfulneſs, that by the Teſtimony and ſuffrage of one ſo eminently Judicious as you are, I am adjudged to have been faithful. I conclude this matter with a part of Dr. Lightfoots ſpeech, that he made at the Commencement, Anno 1655. being then Vicechancellor: wherein he mentions this Work then in hand in a kind of triumph, as ſo much tending to the honour of Learning, and particularly of the Engliſh (then deſpiſed) Clergy, and finally for promoting the knowledge of the Bible all the World over. Sic ſub protrito & proculcato ſtatu Cleri nuper Anglicani germinavit, & adhuc germinat, nobile illud eruditionis germen, editio Bibliorum multi-linguium, qua quid generoſius vix vidit unquam Reſp. literaria, nec quicquam Anglia ſibi honorificentius. Opus æternæ famæ, monumentum memorabile in ſempiterna ſecula futurum, ſummæ eruditionis, zeli, & in Deo bonarum literarum protectore fiduciæ Cleri Anglicani jam tum ſumme periclitantis. Macti eſtote, viri Venerandi & Doctiſſimi, qui in opere tam magnanimo deſudatis. Pergite, quod facitis, trophæa vobis erigere, Patriæq; & perlegant ope veſtra omnes Gentes Sacra Biblia ſuis linguis; atque iiſdem linguis eadem ope prædicentur fama eruditionis & literatura gentis Anglicanæ. Thus under the now deſpiſed and trampled on Engliſh Clergy, hath grown up, that noble iſſue of Learning, the edition of the Polyglot Bible, and ſtill it grows: than which the learned World hath ſcarce ever ſeen any thing more generous, nor the Engliſh Nation any thing to its ſelf more honourable. A work of eternal fame, a memorial to endure to everlaſting ages of the Engliſh Clergies, great learning, zeal, and truſt in God the Protector of Learning, when now it lay under mighty hazzard. Go on, ye Reverend and Learned Men, who are ſweating in ſo brave a Work. Proceed, as ye do, to raiſe trophies to your ſelves, and your Country. And by your labours let all Nations read the Holy Bible in their own Tongues: and by the ſame Tongues, and the ſame labours let the Engliſh Nations fame for its Learning and literature be proclamed. Thus did the good Man rejoyce in Learning, and in the fame of his Coat, and of his Country.

The

The next Book to the Polyglot Bible, for Labour and Worth, and which is always to be named with it, is the Heptaglot Lexicon: to the laborious Author of which our Doctor alſo contributed his aid. A Work it was of ſeventeen years; a ſeventeen years drudgery, as he ſtyles it in one of his Letters: in which, beſides his own pains, he maintained in conſtant ſalary ſeven Engliſh, and as many ſtrangers for his aſſiſtants: all which died ſome years before the Work was finiſhed; and the whole burthen of it fell upon himſelf. Though by Gods grace he at laſt finiſhed it, before it finiſhed him.

And here I cannot but turn a little out of my way, to condole with this Author, that wore out himſelf, and his Eſtate too in a Work ſo generally beneficial; and had little thanks after for his labour. See and pity his condition, as he ſets it out in one of his Letters to Dr. Lightfoot: where he ſays, He had ſpent twenty years in time to the publick ſervice, above 12000 l. of his own eſtate, and for a reward left in the cloſe of the Work above 1800 l. in debt. Thus he kept his reſolution, though it was as fatal to him as uſeful to the World. For in the beginning of the undertaking, he reſolved to proſecute it though it coſt him all his Eſtate, as he told Mr. Clark. This forced him to make his condition known unto his Majeſty, wherein he petitioned, That a Jayl might not be his reward for ſo much ſervice and expenſe. Tis pity ſuch true Learning and hard Labour ſhould meet with no better encouragement.

But to go back whence for mere charity and commiſeration, we diverted. In this great undertaking Dr. Caſtel more than once acknowledgeth the help of our Author. Sure I am my Work could never have been ſo intire as it is without you. All pretenders to the Oriental Tongues muſt confeſs their great obligation to you. And in another Letter, with which he ſent him his Lexicons, he tells him, That his Name ought to have ſhined in the Front, who had given the moſt orient ſplendor (if there be any ſuch in them) unto all that is Printed, and may therefore moſt juſtly (ſaith he) be called Yours. And again, He calls him His greatlieſt and moſt highlieſt honoured Maſter, Father and Patron. Indeed our Doctor did frequently encourage and comfort him with his Letters, got him Subſcribers and Friends, afforded him his Lodgings at Katherine Hall, whenſoever he came to Cambridge to read his Arabick Lectures, for ſome years, and ſuch like kindneſſes. For which he always profeſſed a moſt dear affection and honour for him.

Another great Man in this kind of Learning, I mean Mr. Samuel Clark, one employed in both the aforeſaid great Labours, applied to him for his Counſel and help in a learned Work, that he deſigned for the publick. Which was the publiſhing of the Targum upon the Chronicles, with his own Tranſlation; which was a part of the Hebrew Bible belonging to the Library of the Univerſity of Cambridge. A MS. it ſeems that the Univerſity ſet ſo highly by, that he made three journies to Cambridge, before he obtained it. But he borrowed it at laſt by Dr. Lightfoots means, about the year 1659. And by the Doctors intereſt had it continued to him for ſome years. This he deſigned (as ſoon as he had finiſhed it) to joyn, with ſome other Additionals, to the Polyglot Bible. Which deſign he communicates to our Doctor before he came to a reſolution about it; telling him, that if he and ſuch as he approved the deſign, it would be an encouragement to him to proceed in it. That the Doctor approved of his purpoſe it appears, from that conſtant aſſiſtance that he gave him afterwards about it: Mr. Clark ſending it as he tranſcribed and tranſlated, ſheet by ſheet, for the Doctors review and correction. For which in a Letter dated from Holywel, Sep. 3. 1667. He profeſſeth himſelf exceedingly engaged to him for the great pains he had taken, and that he had ſo freely declared his judgment in ſome places he had noted: being ſo far from unwillingneſs (ſaith he) to have my errors ſhewed me, that I am very thankful to you for it: and entreat you to go on as freely with the reſt. This Targum, it ſeems, by a place in the Talmud mentioning Onkelos, the Doctor was moved to think Onkelos might be the Author of. For which diſcovery Mr. Clark heartily thanks him, telling him, that he would do him a great favour, if he would pleaſe to let him know his ſenſe of it, whether he conceived that paſſage of weight enough to entitle him to this his Targum (as he calls it) upon the Chronicles.

This ſame worthy Perſon had Printed that Tract of the Talmud called Beracoth, which he ſent to our Doctor, deſiring his impartial judgment upon his performance therein, and begging him to ſignifie to him wherein he might be guilty of miſtake.

Nor ought we to forget the aſſiſtance he gave to the Author of the Synopſis of the Criticks, upon his deſire. For he cheerfully devoted himſelf to the publick good. Firſt, He encouraged him with an ample Teſtimonial of the uſefulneſs of the deſign in general, and of the careful and impartial management of it by the undertaker. Then as to his pains in the Work it ſelf; he ſeems to have reviewed it piece by piece as it paſſed from the hand of Mr. Pool, before it went to the Preſs. For in one Letter he tells the Doctor, that he therewith ſent him one part upon Numbers, begging ſtill his thoughts upon any thing as he ſhould meet with it. He likewiſe promiſed him, in ſuch places as he obſerved to be moſt defectively done, to give him ſome explications tending to the clearing of the He- brew words, or phraſes or matter which Mr. Pool deſigned to bring into a diſtinct Volume as Paralipomena, to go under the Doctors name, by themſelves, with ſome other things, as Appendices to his Work; as De Nummis, ponderibus, menſuris, De Templo: Quæſtiones Chronologicæ, Chorographicæ, Hiſtoricæ, &c. Some ſheets of theſe Explications of Scripture I have ſeen, which he had ſent to Mr. Pool according to his promiſe. There is all the Book of Joſua, and ſome Chapters of Exodus and Numbers. Where the Doctor proceeds Chapter by Chapter briefly to give the ſenſe or illuſtration of difficult paſſages according to the Talmudiſts and Rabbins. But this laſt deſigned additional Volume, I think, Mr. Pool never publiſhed. And this was not all, for in another Letter he takes notice of a promiſe, made him by the Doctor, of his aſſiſtance in reference to the Hiſtorical Books of the Old Teſtament from Joſua to Job out of the Rabbins and Talmud: unleſs perhaps this was the ſame with the former.

VI.

The addreſſes of Learned Men to him.

IT would be endleſs to mention the Applications of Learned Men to him. The deeply Learned Mr. Herbert Thorndike in the year 1669. writ to him a long Letter, deſiring him to communicate the ſum of his judgment concerning Morinus his Exercitations of the Jews, in the ſecond Book of his Exercitationes Biblicæ. Mr. James Calvert, a Learned Man of York, begs his advice about the right poſition of the Prieſts portion in the holy ſquare of Ezekiel. This Learned Man for the clearer underſtanding of divers paſſages in the Prophetical writings, was inclined to think, that that Viſion of Ezekiel, commonly underſtood myſtically, is rather literal and hiſtorical. The only or main objection againſt this Hypotheſis is the placing of the Prieſts Portion: for if the Temple be either five, or thirty miles diſtant from the City, there can be no queſtion but that the Viſion is myſtical: (they are his words) but if there be an error in placing of the Prieſts portion, and that the City and Sanctuary may meet together, the greateſt objection againſt the literal ſenſe will be removed. And thus concludes his Letter, Sir, I do not know your perſon, but I have both read and heard ſo much of your excellent Learning, and your candid and ingenuous nature, that it emboldens me to write thus freely to you, and to entreat you, that as you have hitherto, ſo you would ſtill make this one great end of your rare Learning, to illuſtrate the Scripture Text, that inſtead of too many aerial and ſubtil ſpeculations the Church of Chriſt may be fed with ſolid food: I mean, the ſimple and ſincere meaning of the Holy Ghoſt, be it Hiſtory or Myſtery.

It would be too long to tell of young Buxtorph, upon whom the Magiſtrates of Baſil conferred his Fathers Hebrew Profeſſors place at ſeventeen years of age. Maximo Parente ſpe major filius, as Dr. Caſtel characters him; John Henricus Ottho, a Learned Man of Berne in Switzerland, Frederick Miege a Noble, Learned and Ingenious German, D. Knory a very Learned Man of Sileſia, Theodore Haac, and many other forrainers of divers Nations; that came into England chiefly to ſee Dr. Lightfoot, and to be directed in their Rabbinical Studies by him: All whom he did with much humanity and affability receive: and from him they departed with great ſatisfaction; as by their Letters to him after their departure does appear.

His Correſpondences.

HE held a Learned Correſpondence, eſpecially with perſons moſt eminent for that recondite Learning, that he was ſo famed for, and was dear unto and highly valued by them. Namely, The great Buxtorph while he lived, and at home, the Right Reverend Father in God Brian Lord Biſhop of Cheſter, deceaſed, Dr. Pocok, Hebrew Profeſſor at Oxon, Dr. Caſtel, Arabick Profeſſor at Cambridge, Dr. Marſhal the Reverend and Learned Rector of Lincoln College, Oxon, Mr. Samuel Clark, ſometime Keeper of the Famous Library of the Univerſity of Oxon, Dr. Worthington, ſometime Maſter of Jeſus College in Cambridge, Mr. Bernard of S. Johns College, Oxon: all Men famous in their generation, whoſe names we need only mention; and among the laity, he held a moſt intimate friendſhip and correſpondence with Sir Tho. Brograve, of Hertfordſhire, Baronet, his Neighbour and Kinſman, a Gentleman well ſeen in thoſe abſtruſer Studies. Nor did their Letters conſiſt of vain ſtrains of Complements, nor were they ſtuffed with idle and unprofitable News, of affairs in the State: but they carried deep and Learned enquiries enquiries about difficulties of Scripture, or doubts in their Oriental Studies: they conferred about brave and high Designs for the better promoting of Truth and Religion, and solid, useful Learning. One Conference I meet with between Dr. Castel, who was the συζητητὴς, The Propounder, and our Doctor, The Resolver, was upon this subject proposed by the former, Whether when the ordinary Interpretation of any Hebrew words renders the sense hard and rough, recourse may not be had to the Interpretation of those words according as they signifie in Syriac, Chaldee or Arabic. This question had been occasioned from Dr. Lightfoots excellent Interpretation of that difficult place, Ezek. VIII. 17. Upon which place he put a fair sense (as it seems) by Interpreting some word or words there, according to some of those Languages. Whereupon he tells him, That he met often with many seeming contradictions and absurdities in our English (though one of the best) as well as in other Versions. As Job III. 5. Let the shaddow of death stain it (in the margent, chalenge.) A Catacresis I remember not to be found elsewhere. But נאר (the word there used) in the Arabic use is Excipere, Colligere, as the LXX, not there alone best. Chap. XV. 4. תגרע Thou (speaking to Job) restraineſt prayer. Whereas Job was often in Prayer: in Arabic (in which Language many words with him occur) عنى is, to Protract and Multiply, as the Syriac and Arab there render it, Thou art much in complaints, Chap. XVIII. 2. קנצי למלין Aucupia Verborum, again from the Arab قنص Contradicendi vices, as the Arab and Chaldee both. Chap. XVI. 18. O Earth cover not thou my blood, ויהי so that there should be no place to my cry: Because blood is a Crying sin. To pray his Cry should have no place: I am a Davus to that sense. Prov. XXIII. 7. כמו שער בנפשו As he thinks in his heart --- and yet his heart is not with thee: seem very repugnant. Whereupon he propounds this Question, That meeting with a World of these (seeming contradictions) every day, he craves his judgment, Whether the Arab, Chaldee, Syrian may not sometime sit upon the Bench, and pass their Vote concerning their old Mothers meaning? All the News communicated between these Correspondents was about the further progress of Oriental Learning, the discovery of more Books of that Nature, &c. which was the best and joyfullest news to them. It may be it will not be amiss to communicate a Letter or two of this nature. The one is of the aforesaid Dr. Castel, written 1664. Sir, Though I perish, it comforts me not a little to see how Holy Writ flourishes. I lately received an Armenian Psalter given me by Professor Golius, come newly off the Press: where they are Printing (at Leyden) the whole Bible in that Language. The Old Testament is there Printing in the Turkish Language, perfected by Levinus Warnerus. The New Testament in Turkish, done by Mr. Seaman, is just now in the Press at Oxford: of which I have some sheets by me: as I have also of the old Gothic, and Anglo-Saxon Gospels, now Printed with a Glossary to them at Leyden. Mr. Petreus hath Printed some parts of the Old Testament in Ethiopic, and hath many more prepared both in that and the Coptic Language. The Lithuanian (of which I have a good part by me) and the New England Bibles, I need not name. I have a specimen of a Turkish Dictionary Printed at Rome, and of a Chaldee Dictionary in folio in the Hebrew Language, composed by the Learned Coken de Lara; which our ὁ μαγιστὴς Professor Buxtorph much desired he might live to see finished: tis said to be now near its period at the Press. And News of the same import the Learned Mr. Bernard communicated to him from Oxon about the year 167¾. which let it not be too tedious to peruse also: it ran thus.

Reverend and Right Learned, I cannot but acquaint you, that the Learned and Pious Mr. Robert Huntington, present Minister of the Church of the English Factory at Aleppo, hath lately sent over hither, a good Samaritane Pentateuch, together with an account of the Religion of the Samaritans of Sichem, written by themselves there upon his request, and sent as it were to their Brethren here in England (as they mistook Mr. Huntington, who told them that there were Hebrews here, he meaning Jews, and they their own Sect.) The Translation whereof into Latine out of the Samaritane (which is nothing but the Biblical Hebrew, save some Arabisms here and there: for that is the Language commonly made use of by them at Sichem) I have here sent: and, if you think it worthy the while, I will also transmit a Copy of the Samaritane unto you. Mr. Huntington acquaints me that there are about thirty families of these Samaritans at Sichem, and not more, that they desire correspondence here. But care is to be taken that we do not dissemble with them, but beg their History of Joshua, and their Liturgy; and also examine them upon points that may be material. If you please to send what Questions you would desire resolution from them in, I will send them to Mr. Huntington, to whom I shall write about three weeks hence. The said good Mr. Huntington hath likewise sent over an hundred and fifty MSS. Arabic and Hebrew. Among which are Cosis in Hebrew, R. Saadias his Sepher Emunah in Arabic, Bar Bahlul's Lexicon well written, Maimonides his Yad entire except two Tracts, which are not quite compleat, R. Saadias his Version and Notes on Job in Arabic, Maimonides's Moreh, both in Arabic and Hebrew,

Maimonides

Maimonides his Sons Notes on his Fathers Yad, Gregorius's Syriac Grammar, pieces of R. Tanchum, and his Lexicon, or Murshed, Kimchi's Michlol, R. Alphes, and Tanchuma, and other good Books in Hebrew MSS. Besides, he hath sent over a Catalogue of Books to be had now at Damascus in Arabic and Persian, and some in Hebrew. He is skilful himself, and ready to serve you in any thing Jewish or Oriental, that may be had there. This opportunity I would not let you be ignorant of, knowing how you have recommended above all others the Study of Jewish Learning, as plainly necessary to the right understanding of the New Testament, as well as the Old. And then by way of Postscript. As for Greek MSS. he could meet with none, that were classical, but Ascetics enough. The account of their Calendar in the Samaritanes libel is somewhat obscure and defective. Whether these two Gentlemen or either of them, are yet alive, my Country retirement and want of Society gives me not opportunity to know. But if they be, I am confident such an intire respect they have to the memory of this excellent Man, that they will not be unwilling these their Letters should be exposed to the publick, or any thing else, that I have mentioned from them, that may any ways tend to the preserving his fame or honour. If it be said that these matters are no news now, though they were then. I answer, Probably divers things here related are not so common and ordinarily known, at least to many, but that they may be read with satisfaction. But the truth is, I produced them not so much to inform the World of News, as to discover some of the Learned matters of the Doctors correspondence.

VIII.

An account of his imperfect pieces.

BEsides the Works of this our Learned Man, that saw the Light, and of which we have spoken somewhat, he had several other considerable things upon the Anvil: which shew as well his abilities as his inexhaustible and continual labour and industry. Of which give me leave to give this Catalogue.

In Latine.

I. *Historia Quadripartita. Encomiums given him by Learned Men.

ALL these Labours of his, published and unpublished, and those deep notions in the way of his Learning, that he communicated by Letters or in Conversation, raised high and Venerable opinions of him amongst the best and most knowing Men. It would be endless to recount what large Testimonials and Commendations they have given him. Some we have read already. Let us hear a few more. Your Name (saith Dr. Castel) is indeed a sweet Odour poured out into all Nations, who are all bound to pray heartily for you, your health, welfare, prosperity, longevity. And again, Nemini notus, quin te humani generis æstimet delicias; nemini ignotus, cui non absconditus maximus sub Cœlo Thesaurus. And if you will, once more, in another Letter: Chaldea, whose antient glory, and multiplicity of Sciences are, by the wheels of Nature in the long decurse of time, rolled into Munden. Which you, Sir, a right Trismegistus, for Christian, Jewish and Ethnic literature, will make to after ages more illustrious than either Babylon, or Athens were of old. Another, namely Mr. Samuel Clark, speaks thus, Your own great worth is sufficient to preserve your memory verdant with me, or any other, that hath any sense of Learning or Goodness. Mr. Bernard does violence to the Doctors modesty in these words: I know your self and Doctor Pocok to be the very Pillars of Sacred Learning, like the Monuments of Seth, in a corrupt and vain age. God add, I beseech him, yet to your years and health so advantageous to his Church. And for forainers, besides what we have heard from them already, take the Value they had for him by the words of one of them, named before, viz. Johannes Henricus Otto: He was a Learned young Man of Bern, who it seems had travailed into France and other places for his improvement, and at last came into England, and being at Oxon, sends a Letter to our Doctor: wherein apologizing for his address, he tells him, That the fame of his Piety and singular Learning had so spred it self over the World, that there was no Scholar, who loved him not in his mind, and was not ambitious of his friendship. Plurimi sunt qui nondum meruerunt a te cognosci, qui tamen inter alias Gentes famam nominis tui exceperunt, & post præclarorum scriptorum tuorum lectionem, in cultum tui venerabundi iverunt. But especially (he assures him) all studious of Hebrew do applaud him. Concerning his love to, and endeavours of promoting Oriental Learning.

THERE was no Man under the Sun our Author more reverenced and honoured, than Buxtorph Profeſſor of Divinity and Hebrew in Baſil: and the reaſon was becauſe, next to his piety he had been ſo inſtrumental by his publiſhed Labours in furthering the knowledge of Jewiſh Learning: to which from his Youth the Doctor had a ſtrong, and almoſt natural inclination, and it continued with him to the end of his Life. When Dr. Buxtorph had writ a Letter to him by the Hands of one, who had formerly been his Scholar, our good Man received both Letter and Bearer with the higheſt reſentments of joy and complacency, for the ſake of the Reverend Profeſſor. And when he had ſignified in a Letter to our Doctor, that by reaſon of age and infirmities growing upon him, and finding himſelf greatly to decline in ſtrength of body and mind, he muſt lay aſide all thought of publiſhing any thing more; this our Doctor took heavily to heart, and lamented in a Letter he ſent him. For by him he acknowleged himſelf to have arrived to what ſkill he had in his Rabbinical Learning; and from the grateful ſenſe he had of this, aroſe a vaſt love and reverence for him. Placet (ſaith he) Honoratiſſimo Domino, de peritia mea in Talmudicis loqui, quæ ſiqua eſt (quam ſcio quam ſit exigua) tota tibi ipſi referenda eſt, & incomparabili Parenti tuo, &c. It pleaſeth you, moſt honoured Sir, to ſpeak of my skill in the Talmudiſts, which if it be any, (and how ſmall it is I well know) is wholly owing to you, and to your incomparable Father. Plowing with your Oxen (uſing your Lexicons) I have ſowed, and if any crop comes of it, it is yours. And what Chriſtian is there, I pray, who reads over the Talmudick Writings, that ows not the ſame tribute? So much is the whole Chriſtian World endebted to the great name of Buxtorph. And then he profeſſes to him, he could not read it without tears, when he told him, that by reaſon of the weakneſſes and indiſpoſitions of old age, he muſt promiſe the World no more of his Writings. This was in the later end of the year 1663. And indeed the death of that Learned Profeſſor happened not long after, namely in the beginning of September the year after. For whom the Magiſtrates of Baſil had ſuch a great eſteem, that before the Fathers death, they choſe his very young Son to ſucceed him in the Hebrew Profeſſorſhip; as in his other of Divinity Dr. Zwinger (deſcended of that famous Man of his name) was alſo elected. And one of the laſt reſpects Dr. Lightfoot could pay the memory of that great Man he wrote an Epicedium upon him, and got Sir Tho. Brograve to write another in ſome of the Oriental Languages: and ſo alſo did Dr. Caſtel: which were ſent to the Friends of the deceaſed. And when not long after the young Profeſſor came into England, he received a moſt kind and obliging reception from our Doctor as well for his Father, as for his own ſake.

It was his love of this Learning, and his great deſires to ſee it more Studied, that made him ſo great a friend to Dr. Caſtel, under his ruinating and deſtructive Undertaking, as he himſelf truly called it, and under that which was the bittereſt pill of all for him to ſwallow, namely the ſcornful reproaches of his pains that he met with from ſome, as if they were of little or no uſe. This had quite broke his almoſt broken heart, had not our Worthy Man continually upheld him, encouraged him, by Mony, Subſcriptions, Counſel, Comfort. So that, that the Work was ever finiſhed was owing in a great meaſure, (ſub bono Deo,) to Dr. Lightfoot, and a few more Men in the World of that tendency of Learning. But the truth is, ſaith he, one Dr. Lightfoot is more to me than ten thouſand ſuch Cenſors. Beſides ſome few others amongſt our ſelves, I have a Golius, a Buxtorph, a Hottinger, a Ludolfo, &c. in forain parts, that both by their Letters, and in Print have not only ſufficiently, but too amply and abundantly for me to communicate, expreſt their over high eſteem of that, which finds but a Prophets reward here in its own Country.

He highly admired Mr. Broughton and Mr. Selden, Men deeply Studied in this kind of Learning, calling them a matchleſs pair; and never mentioned them without honour; undervaluing himſelf to nothing, as often as he had occaſion to ſpeak of them, or ſuch as they.

And for the better ſetting afoot theſe Studies, upon the death of the Learned Golius, Hebrew Profeſſor beyond Seas, who had an excellent collection of Rabbinical, and Oriental Books, vaſt were the pains and diligence he, and Dr. Caſtel, and ſome others uſed for for the purchaſing of them for the enriching the Library of Cambridge, or ſome other publick one here in England. Though I think they ſucceeded not, thoſe Books being afterwards ſold at a publick Auction in Holland.

He could not patiently hear the antient Records of the Rabbines too much aſperſed, as proceeding moſt commonly from ignorance of their admirable uſe in explaining the Holy Scripture. When Rutherford in the Aſſembly of Divines had ſaid, that there was no news of ſomewhat in controverſie, but in the Rabbines, (It was of a Cup in the inſtitution of the Paſover,) ſeeming to ſpeak contemptibly of them; Dr. Lightfoot replyed, That there are divers things in the New Teſtament, which we muſt be beholden to the Rabbins for the underſtanding of, or elſe we know not what to make of them.

So much did he delight in any Scholar, that took in hand the Study of thoſe Eaſtern Languages, that in caſe any were minded to ingratiate himſelf into Dr. Lightfoots affection, next to Piety and Religion, he could not take a readier courſe to do it than bending his Studies that way. And very officious he was to aſſiſt ſuch with his directions; labouring to bring young beginners into an affection and liking to that Learning, and facilitating the crabbedneſs of it to them, as much as he could. I know, ſome now alive, that have had the experience of what I ſay.

XI.

His kindneſs and affection to Katharine Hall.

AS he truly loved Learning, ſo he had an intire favour to the Univerſities, where it was foſtered and promoted. This appeared in that publick and open joy and Triumph that he expreſſed in his Oration, when Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, which was Anno 1655. at the opening of the Commencement. For when in thoſe unjuſt and Violent times wherein ſo much malice was exerciſed againſt Religion, no wonder its handmaid Learning was deſigned for ruine: nothing then was talked of ſo much, and ſo much intended, and almoſt come to a final reſolution, as the ſeizing the poſſeſſions and revenues of the Univerſity, and turning out the Scholars to ſhift for themſelves. But by Gods gracious overruling Providence this feral deſign took not place. Upon which our Vice-Chancellor made a long Harangue, expreſſive of wonderful joy and thankfulneſs. Non fingere nobis idq; mœſtis animis tremuliſq; non potuimus, qualis futura Anglia erutis oculis, &c. We could not but imagine, and that with ſad and trembling hearts, what England would have been, her Eyes, viz. The Univerſities, and Clergy, being put out: what Cambridge would have been without Cambridge: what a ſpectre of a dead Univerſity, what a Sceleton of empty Colleges, what a funeral of the Muſes, and a carkas of deceaſed Literature, &c: and after breaks forth into thanks to Almighty God for their happy deliverance. And then taketh occaſion hence to expatiate Learnedly in his Rabbinical way of the Antiquity, uſe and neceſſity of Univerſities. Academias primum fundavit ipſe Deus, &c. God was the firſt Founder of Univerſities, of equal age with his Law and viſible Church, and not to dye but with them, &c. as he Elegantly and Learnedly goes on.

Thus his good will ſpred it ſelf over the whole Univerſities, but it was more peculiar to two Colleges in that of Cambridge, unto which he was particularly related, viz. Chriſts College, where he had firſt been bred, and Katharine Hall, over which for many years he preſided. And this kindneſs he ſhewed by dedicating a Book to each. That to Katharine Hall is before the firſt, Horæ Hebraicæ he publiſhed. Wherein by giving them account of his firſt falling upon Jewiſh Studies, and the excellent method he uſed in peruſing the Rabbins, he, like a careful Maſter, directs their Studies; and in the cloſe he profeſſeth his Dedication proceeded from that real reſpect and endearment he had to them, and that he deſigned his Book as an eternal memorial of it. What elſe ſounded thoſe kind words which he uſed in his Letters to forainers concerning his College, ſtyling the Students thereof, Catharinenſes mei? And Doctor Caſtel, who knew as much of his mind as any, there being a great friendſhip between them, ſpeaking to him concerning the College, calls it, Your delighted in Katharine Hall. Tis true he was at firſt put in Maſter there by the Powers that then were; but upon the happy ſettlement of theſe Kingdoms upon their old and true foundation of Monarchy, and the reſtitution of the King, our Doctor knowing the right of that place belonged to another, namely to Dr. Spurſtow, voluntary and freely went and reſigned it up to him: but upon his refuſal to return back again, and take that charge, he applied to the King, who graciouſly beſtowed his Letters upon him to confirm and ſettle him in that Maſterſhip. And upon his coming down with thoſe Letters, the Fellows of the College rode out ſome miles to meet him, and to receive him with that ceremony, as if he had been a New Maſter of Katharine Hall.

A ſmall College indeed it was, and illy built, but yet was ſo bleſſed by God, that it could boaſt of many famous and excellent Divines and Prelates of the Church of England, and other very worthy Men, formerly members of it; and was uſually ſtored with ſuch numbers of Students, that they could hardly be contained within the Walls of the College. For the honour therefore of it, as well as its neceſſary enlargement, this our Maſter and the Fellows reſolved to pull down at leaſt ſome part of it, and to build it with more decency, capacity and advantage. Towards which as every Fellow preſently laid down twenty pounds, ſo our Doctor gave a very liberal and generous contribution; and moreover was inſtrumental by his intereſt with his Friends to procure good benefactions for the ſame uſe from others. But he died ſoon after the Work was begun. So that the good Progreſs that is ſince made in that chargable Work is owing in the firſt place to the indefatigable pains of the Reverend and very Worthy John Eachard D. D. preſent Maſter, and thoſe very many generous perſons in London, and elſewhere, whoſe love of Learning, and favour to him, have excited them freely to contribute thereunto. But to return to Dr. Lightfoot. Who beſides the former contribution, had before been a Benefactor to his College by redeeming a piece of Land to it. And therefore is always mentioned at the Commemoration of the Benefactors.

It was not his want of affection to his College, that made him reſide not much there, but partly becauſe he thought himſelf moſt bound to be chiefly among his Flock, of whoſe Souls he had the care: and partly becauſe in the Country was moſt retirement, a thing that for the ſake of his Studies he greatly affected to the laſt. Which were not ingrateful to his old Age, but rather an eaſe and a pleaſure to it. Studendo ſolor ſenectutem, was a ſaying of his to a Learned Man.

XII.

His Patrons and Friends.

HIS great Learning and excellent Qualities reconciled him Friends and admirers among thoſe of his own Rank and Degree, and made him a favourite to Men of Eminency and Honour. Beſides thoſe I have already mentioned he was dear to, and highly valued by, his Grace, the moſt Reverend Father in God Gilbert late Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury: through whoſe mediation, his Parſonage of Great Munden, and his Maſterſhip of Katharine Hall were confirmed to him by the King. Which he acknowledged in two Epiſtles before two of his Hebrew and Talmudick Exercitations. The Right Honorable, Sir Orlando Bridgman, ſometime Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, a Learned and Good Man, took a pleaſure in his Learning; and when he was Judge, and went the Circuits, he always deſired, and frequently procured Dr. Lightfoot to preach at the Aſſiſes at Hertford, whom for his Learned and unuſual Notions he delighted to hear. He was one of his great Encouragers to proceed in his Hebrew and Talmudical Explanations of the New Teſtament; Conſilio, auxilio, Patrocinio, Munificentia, by his Counſil, aid, Patronage, and Bounty, as he ſpeaks himſelf in his Epiſtle Dedicatory before the Horæ upon S. John. The Right Honorable and Right Learned Sir William Morice Kt. one of the Principal Secretaries of State, deſerves to be mentioned in the next place; who, unaſked, unſought to, was very ſerviceable to our Author in procuring the Kings favour and his Letters Patents for him: The ſenſe of which (for none ſo ſenſible of kindneſſes) made him think himſelf obliged to put his Name before one of his Books. He was alſo endeared to two Perſonages of Hertfordſhire, of great Honour and Integrity, viz. Sir Tho. Brograve Baronet, and Sir Henry Ceſar Knight.

The former of theſe was doubly related to the Doctor, viz. in affinity, and in the courſe of his Studies, being Learned in the Jewiſh literature. As appears by a deſign he and the Doctor had of going to Dr. Caſtels Library to peruſe ſome Books of his of that nature. To which Dr. Caſtel in a Letter gives them free leave, telling them, That his Cabbaliſtic and Rabbinic Books were moſt of them at Higham Gobyon: where his Study doors ſhould ſtand wide open to give Sir Thomas and him entrance, every Book they found there moſt truly at the ſervice of them both, to take and uſe at their pleaſure. The entercourſe between Sir Thomas and the Doctor was very frequent both by Letters and Viſits, the diſtance not being ſo great, (only two miles) but that they might walk the one to the other on foot: which they often did, out of that great endearedneſs that was between them, and for conferring together in the things of their Studies. A Friend of mine has heard the Doctor tell more than once, how upon occaſion of ſome diſcourſe between them about ſuch a Subject, Sir Thomas departed from him, and preſently penned a Diſcourſe about the the Univerſity of Athens, and brought it to him; which the Doctor after lent out to ſome one, that had deſired it, but could not call to mind to whom; ſo that that Learned piece was ſtifled, and irrecoverably gone. And I have great cauſe to ſuſpect, that this which happened to the Writing of the Doctors friend, happened alſo otherwhiles to himſelf. In whoſe hands ſoever any of his Books or Writings lie concealed, to ſay no worſe of them, they deſerved not the Friendſhip of ſo worthy a Man.

His friendſhip to Sir Henry Ceſar appeared in the ſeveral Viſits he gave him in his ſickneſs, the ſmall Pox, which I think was mortal to him. Though he was very fearful for his own Family; yet his ſingular love and reſpect to Sir Henry made him not to prefer that conſideration to his ſervice in ſuch a time. Whoſe early death he very much lamented.

But his firſt and antient Friend, Chaplain and Patron, (as he uſed to call him, and that in many juſt regards) we muſt not, we cannot forget: for he never forgat him to his dying day, and ſcarcely ever ſpake of him but with a tranſport of affection. I mean Sir Rowland Cotton of Shropſhire. Who gave him the Preſentation of Aſhley in Staffordſhire, and was the great inſtrument of putting him upon the ſtudy of the Rabbins, and being himſelf very Learned in them was his Tutor, as well as his Patron. With much care, tenderneſs and condeſcenſion did he guide and lead on my Studies (as he publickly declares in an Epiſtle to Mr. William Cotton his Nephew and his Heir) in the ſame way, that he himſelf had been trained by that choice and incomparable Oracle of Learning, Mr. Hugh Broughton. And in the ſame Epiſtle, He profeſſeth, he always eſteemed it one of the choiſeſt advantages that ever accrued to him, that it was his hap and happineſs at his firſt ſetting out into the Study of Scriptures and Divinity, to be ſettled in his Houſe, and to come under his Tutorage and Inſtruction. Undoubtedly Sir Rowland had perceived a good Spirit, and an excellent genius in young Mr. Lightfoot: and that he wanted nothing but counſil and direction, and ſome body to recommend a good method of ſtudy to him, to make him a great Scholar; and this made that worthy Perſon undertake him himſelf; as foreſeeing what he would afterwards prove, in caſe his Studies were well regulated at firſt. This kindneſs he ever remembred: which let him ſpeak for himſelf. He (meaning Sir Rowland) laid ſuch doubled and redoubled obligations upon me by the tender affection, reſpect and favour that he ſhewed towards me, as have left ſo indelible an impreſſion upon my heart, of Honour to his dear Name and obſervance to his Houſe of Bellaport, that length of time may not were it out, nor diſtance of place ever cauſe me to forget it. As a Commentary upon which words, I might mention the care and regard he ever had to the family of the Cottons. And I do remember, that when I was a Student of Katharine Hall, there was one who was a Cotton, and an heir of that Family, was likewiſe a Student, and admitted there by the Doctors means: over whom he had a more eſpecial Eye; and frequently had him ſent for into his Lodgings, to eat with him, and confer with him, and to ſhew kindneſs to him for Jonathans (I mean his Great Uncles) ſake. And out of reſpect to that dear name he cauſed one of his ſons to be called, Cottonus. Nay he loved the very name of Bellaport, the ſeat of Sir Rowland. And I have a Letter, which Sir Rowland wrote Anno 1629. in anſwer to his Epiſtle Dedicatory to him before his firſt Book, that he publiſhed; this beloved Letter the Doctor preſerved unto his dying day, as a kind of Sacred Relique: upon which was wrote with his own hand, Sir Rowland Cottons Letter.

And for a concluſion of our Diſcourſe of Sir Rowland Cotton, whom we have ſpoke ſo largely of (and of whom Dr. Lightfoot could never talk enough) hear the Concluſion of his Funeral Sermon upon him, prepared, though not Preached, upon what occaſion I know not. "That bleſſed Soul, that is now with God, in the night of its departure, "laid the burthen of this preſent Work upon me, in theſe words, You are my old ac-"quaintance, do me the laſt Office of a Friend, make my funeral Sermon, but praiſe me not.
"A hard taſk, Fathers and Brethren, is laid upon me; when I, who of all Men this day "have the greateſt cauſe to mourn for his loſs that is departed, ſhould of all Men this day
"be allowed the leaſt liberty of mourning, becauſe of this preſent work. And a ſtrange
"taſk, Fathers and Brethren, is laid upon me, when I muſt make to you all a Funeral
"Sermon, and yet muſt tell to none of you for whom tis made. For if I do but call "him Sir Rowland Cotton, I commend him. It was not a time to ſay ſo then, but now I "dare ſay it over again; a hard taſk, Fathers and Brethren, is laid upon me, when I
"muſt have much cauſe of tears for his death, and yet not be allowed to weep; and "ſuch reaſon of remembrance of his life, and yet be denyed to praiſe. I obey, Bleſt
"Soul, I obey: but I am full, I cannot hold: Diſpence with me ſomething, for I cannot "hold. It is for your ſake, Worthy Audience, that I muſt hold tears, leſt they ſhould
"hinder my ſpeech. Be pleaſed to give me liberty of ſpeech, in recompence of my re-
"ſtrained tears. And it is for thy ſake, Bleſt Soul, that I muſt withhold commendation,
"leſt I ſhould break thy command: give me liberty of indignation againſt that command

"in

"in recompence of my reſtraint from thy Commendation. Meus, Tuus, noſter, imo "Chriſti, as Hierom of Nepotianus: ſo we of him, whoſe departure we may commemo- "rate: My, Sir Rowland Cotton, Yours, the Countries, nay Chriſts, hath forſaken us: and "becauſe Chriſts, therefore he hath forſaken us, to go to him, whoſe he wholly was.

"Oh! that my head were waters, or rather words, for only that manner of mourn- "ing; and my Tongue a fountain of tears, for only that inſtrument of weeping is al- "lowed me now: that I might weep day and night, not for him that is gone; for he "is gone where he always was, and where he would be: but for my ſelf, but for "you, but for the Country. It is not my ambition, but my ſorrow, that I claim the "firſt place, and to be firſt ſerved in this heavy dole of lamentation. For I have loſt, I "cannot tell you what: My Noble Patron, my beſt Friend, my Father, my -------- my "Self. I ſhould loſe, if I ſhould but begin to tell what he was to me. Why ſhould I "ſpeak more? For ſhould I ſpeak my ſelf away, I could never ſpeak enough. Oh! my "Father, my Father, the Chariot of Iſrael, and the Horſeman thereof; How thy love "to me was wonderful, paſſing the love of Women! And is it nothing to you, O ye that ſit "by? Behold and ſee, if there be any ſorrow like unto my ſorrow, which is done unto me, "wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger. He it was, that firſt "laid the foundation of my poor Studies, and always watered them with his diſcourſe, "and encouragement: and now the Lord hath taken my Maſter from my head. He it "was under whoſe branches I ſheltred, when any ſtorm was up; and now my Tree of "defence is cut down. He it was, that was my Oracle, both for things of this life, and "of a better: and now my Prophet is not any more. He it was, that was all things to "me, that man could be; but now can be nothing to me, but ſorrow. And is this no- "thing to you, O all ye that ſit by? Yes, the Cup is gone among you alſo, and a great "Man is fallen in your Iſrael. Hath not the Magiſtracy, hath not the Gentry, hath not "the Country, loſt ſuch a Man, as was -------- But you muſt ſpeak out the reſt: for his "Command ſtops my mouth. You of the Magiſtracy know how he had Wiſdom in an "high degree, as was his calling, and withal care and conſcience anſwerable to his Wiſ- "dom, to diſcharge his calling. And you may commend this rarity in him, I dare not. "You of the Gentry know, that he was a prime Flower in your Garland, that he ſpake a "true Gentleman in all his actions, in his comportment, in his attendance, in his talk, "once for all, in his hoſpitality, even to admiration: and you may commend him, I "dare not, &c. A ſenſible ſtrain of Rhetorick! which paſſion and inward ſorrow had as large a ſhare in dictating, as Art.

XIII.

His Relations.

HAving expatiated thus largely in our notices of this Man, that we may omit nothing that is material, we will now begin to conſider him in his more private and perſonal capacity. His Reverend Father had five Sons, whereof our John was the ſecond. His eldeſt was Thomas, the only of all his Sons bred to a ſecular employment, being a trades Man. The third Peter, a very ingenious Man, and practiſed Phyſick in Uttoxeter; and beſides his Art, he was of great uſefulneſs in that Country, and often in Commiſſions for ending of differences. He alſo had intended to have writ the Life of his Brother Dr. John Lightfoot, but was prevented by death. The next was Joſiah, who ſucceeded his Brother Dr. Lightfoot in his Living of Aſhley; the only of the Brothers now living. The youngeſt was Samuel, a Miniſter alſo, but long ſince deceaſed. And as it was his Honour, that he was derived of an honeſt and gentile ſtock by both Father and Mother: ſo it was a part of his Happineſs, that God bleſt him with a Poſterity. He was twice married, and both times into Families of Worſhip. His firſt Wife was Joyce, the Daughter of Crompton, of Staffordſhire, Eſquire, a Gentleman of a very antient Family and of a good Name, and Eſtate. Her Mother was an Aſton of the family of the Lord Aſton of Tixal, but before they were Papiſts. This their Daughter was the youngeſt, if I miſtake not, of nine Siſters, all the reſt that lived, having been married into worſhipful Families there. In the Church of Stone in that County, where the Doctor ſometime was Miniſter, there remains the Pourtraiture of them all, with three Sons, and their Father and Mother, in Braſs. She was firſt wedded to Mr. Copwood, a Gentleman of a good Eſtate in that County: by whom ſhe had two Sons and one Daughter. The Sons ſince died; but the Daughter is now living, and married there, and inherits the Eſtate. The Relict of this Gentleman the Doctor became acquainted withal, when he lived in Sir R. Cottons family, and not long after married her, himſelf being yet young. By whom he had iſſue four Sons and two Daughters. To one of which the the Lady Cotton was Godmother. His eldeſt ſon was John, who was Chaplain to the late Right Reverend Father in God Brian, Lord Biſhop of Cheſter, the famous Undertaker of the Polyglot. By whom this Mr. Lightfoot was much eſteemed, but died ſoon after his Lord and Patron, and lies buried in the Cathedral Church aforeſaid. He had ſix Daughters, all now deceaſed, but two, who live at Cheſter. Anaſtaſius was his ſecond Son, who had alſo theſe additions to that name, viz. Cottonus, Jackſonus, in memory of Sir Rouland Cotton, and Sir John Jackſon, two dear friends of the Doctors. This was alſo a Clergy-man, Incumbent of Thundridg in Hertfordſhire; and died there; leaving one Son ſtill living. The third Son was Athanaſius, brought up a Trades Man in London: deceaſed alſo. And his fourth Son Thomas died young. His Daughters were, Joyce, now the worthy conſort of Mr. John Duckfeild, Rector of Aſpeden in Hartfordſhire: (whom I muſt not name but with an addition of reſpect for communicating to me moſt of the Papers and original MSS. and Letters of Dr. Lightfoot and others, that I have made uſe of both in theſe relations, and in the publiſhed Sermons.) And Sarah, now a Widdow, formerly married to one Mr. Colclough, a Gentleman of Staffordſhire, deceaſed.

This pious Matron, and diſcreet Wife the Doctor buried in the year 1656. in his Church of Munden: after he had lived well near thirty years with her. Afterwards he took to Wife Anne, the Relict of Mr. Auſtin Brograve, Uncle to Sir Thomas, before ſpoken of. By her he had no iſſue. Whom he likewiſe ſurvived. She died alſo at Munden, and was buried there.

His pious Father, Thomas Lightfoot hath a great but a true character given of him in the Account of the Doctors Life. I ſhall only add the Inſcription upon his Monument, as it now is in the Church of Uttoxeter; a Copy whereof Mr. Michael Edge, the preſent or late Miniſter there communicated to us: compoſed as it ſeems by his Learned Son, Peter Lightfoot, Phyſician, lately deceaſed.

His laſt Sickneſs and Death.

AND now we are arrived at the laſt ſcene of this great and good Mans life. In the later end of the year 1675. that year when Colds were ſo rife and ſo mortal, our Doctor going to his reſidence at Ely, fell into one of theſe Colds: which he complaining of was perſuaded to eat a Red Herring, and to drink two or three glaſſes of Claret. The former he eaſily did, but the later he was more difficultly drawn to, having always uſed to drink nothing but ſmall Beer or Water. This little Wine, according to the judgment of his Phyſician caſt him into a Fever, or at leaſt heightned it. The diſeaſe much affected his head, ſo that he lay dozing and ſlumbering, ſaying but little: only when any aſked him, how he did, he would devoutly ſay, In the Hands of a good God; which he repeated often. His behaviour all the time of his ſickneſs was with exceeding much meekneſs, patience and ſilence, ſpeaking much with God and himſelf, but little, as I ſaid, to others. When Dr. Callamy, then a Fellow of Katharine Hall, went to Ely to Viſit him, he found him in this condition, uſing very few words; when he aſked him if he had made his Will, and ſettled his Secular affairs, he anſwered, He had, and told him where his Will was. His Phyſicians were Dr. Goſnald of Cambridge, and Dr. Hicks of Ely. Dr. Mapletoft, the Reverend Dean, and Dr. Womock, a Prebend there, now Lord Biſhop of S. Davids, were his chief Viſitants, who performed the Offices of the Church with him. Thus he lay near a fortnight, and then rendred up his Pious and Virtuous Soul into the Hands of his good God, in a good old age, being ſeventy four years old within ſome few months: and yet might have lived much longer, if one may gather conjectures of the length of Mens lives by their healthfulneſs, and vivacity. But beſides his years, his Works, and the excellent ſervice he did in his generation would have beſpoke him an old Man indeed. In which regard none was freer from that which Seneca makes the great reproach of old age, viz. when there is nothing to compute age by, but years. Nihil turpius eſt, ſaith he, quam grandis natu ſenex, qui nullum aliud habet argumentum, quo ſe probet diu vixiſſe, præter ætatem. His body was brought from Ely to his beloved Munden, where he had been Miniſter near two and thirty years, and was there buried; Mr. Gervaſe Fulwood, formerly a Fellow of Katharine Hall, and who had long known him, preaching his Funeral Sermon. He was interred greatly beloved and greatly lamented by all that knew him, and eſpecially his Pariſhioners, who took their laſt leave of him with many ſighs and tears.

XV.

His Temper and Spirit, Piety and Vertues.

AND thus having gone through the moſt remarkable ſtages of his Life and labours in an hiſtorical way; let us now ſtop a little, and by way of reflection look back upon the Man, the ſubject of this long diſcourſe, and take ſome notice of his Temper, Courſe and manner of Life. He was of a comly Perſon, and a full and ſizable proportion, of a mild and ſomewhat ruddy Countenance, and a moſt ſtrong and hail conſtitution: good ſignatures of his mind. Eaſie of acceſs, grave, but yet affable and courteous in his deportment, and of a ſweet, obliging innocent and communicative converſation. And though he was plain and unaffected, yet there appeared ſomewhat of a becoming gentility in his behaviour. When he light into company of ingenious and good Men he was free and diſcourſive; but if he happened to be preſent, where rude, idle or debauched talk was, he was ſilent and moſt uneaſie, and would take his leave as ſoon as he could. He was very temperate and abſtemious in his diet, the nobleſt part of Phyſick, as Queen Elizabeth uſed to call it: his Food was plain, and coarſe; Wine he altogether abſtained from, and likewiſe from Beer and Ale abroad, drinking only Water; except he were at home where he had his Beer brewed for him, which was very ſmall; and that he delighted in, drinking it alſo very new. He eat ſeldom above once a day, namely, a Dinner on the week days, and a Supper on Sundays. Whereby he redeemed the more time for his Studies, and preſerved himſelf in ſuch a conſtant good plight of health. He was of a Genius more curious than ordinary, affecting an inquiry into hidden things, and to tread unbeaten ways: as may be ſufficiently judged by the Studies that he followed. He ſeemed to be inquiſitive into the nature of Spirits, and concerning the apparitions of deceaſed perſons. There was a long account of the appearance of a Spirit in Driffield a Town in Yorkſhire, which was ſent to Dr. Burton, when fellow of Magdalen College in Cambridge by a friend of his, formerly his Collegian, he receiving the Relation from the Woman her ſelf, to whom this Spirit often appeared. This Letter Dr. Burton communicated to our Doctor, who tranſcribed it with his own Hand, though it filled almoſt a ſheet of paper, as not only pleaſing his curioſity, and ſatisfying him of the Truth of apparitions, but alſo ſurprizing him by the various and ſtrange diſcourſe that that Spirit uſed: too long here to be repeated. He was of a very meek and tender ſpirit, eaſily diſcouraged, often melting into tears. I have been told, that being to give a publick Admonition to a lad of his College for being guilty of ſome high miſdemeanors; The College Bell being rung, and the Students met together in the Hall, the Maſter gave the Scholar his admonition with much gravity, and with as much compaſſion, tears being obſerved to ſtand in his Eyes while he did it. This ſoft diſpoſition made him eaſily diſcouraged. I know not to what better to attribute that paſſage, whereby the World had almoſt been deprived of his excellent Tract of the Temple: Which was this (as he himſelf tells it) That going that very morning that he began his Deſcription of the Temple, to ſee a piece of Land, but a mile off from his Houſe, which he had been owner of many years, but never ſaw, he choſe to take direction, and ſo to go alone by himſelf for meditation ſake. But in fine miſt his way, and loſt himſelf. Here his Heart (he ſaid) took him to taſk, and called him fool, ſo ſtudiouſly to ſearch into things remote, and that ſo little concerned his intereſt, and ſo neglective of what was near him in place, and that ſo particularly concerned him: and a fool again, to go about to deſcribe to others places and buildings, that lay ſo many hundred miles off, as from hence to Canaan, and under ſo many hundred years ruines; and yet not able to know or find the way to a field of his own that lay ſo near. And this ſo far prevailed upon him, that it put him upon a reſolution to lay by that work; and ſo he did for ſome time, till afterward his Bookiſh mind made him take it in hand again. So eaſily, and upon ſuch little accidents are generous Spirits ſometimes daunted. No Man was more ſenſible of favours than he, and none more apt to paſs by injuries: being of a calm, ſettled and undiſturbed Spirit.

He was alſo wary, and diſcreet in his purpoſes, duly weighing circumſtances, and peircing into the conſequences of things. This appeared in the Arguments he made uſe of againſt certain City Miniſters many years ago, more zealous, than wiſe, and ſome of them Aſſembly Men, who earneſtly adviſed to lay aſide the Celebration of Chriſtmas day; When beſides reaſons taken from Religion; as that the thing was in it ſelf lawful, and that our Saviour preached at the Feaſt of Dedication, which had an humane Original: he urged the inconveniences of it in point of prudence; as That it would bring an Odium upon the Aſſembly, That it would certainly breed a Tumult: and that it would be ſafer to let ſuch things alone to Authority, than for them to meddle in. Which beſpake him to be a well adviſed Man, as well as one not affecting novelties. And another thing ſhewed his acuteneſs as well as his prudence. That it being moved in the Aſſembly, that when any went out of the Aſſembly before all roſe, he ſhould ſolemnly make his obeyſance (that the better notice, I ſuppoſe, ſhould be taken of ſuch as went out) this being even ready to paſs, our Doctor deſired, that they might not leave it upon their Records to poſterity, that this Aſſembly had need to take order for common Reverence and Civility. Upon which it was laid by, and the Order reverſed.

But his ſpiritual endowments, as he was a Miniſter and a Chriſtian, rendred him more illuſtrious, than all his natural and acquired. Theſe made him beloved of God, as the others valued and admired of Men. He took a good courſe at firſt for the better preparing himſelf for the Miniſtry. For after his departure from Cambridge having ſpent two or three years in the County, where he made an entrance into his Hebrew ſtudies, he reſolves to come up to London to take the opportunity of the Divinity Library there: thereby to furniſh himſelf with a good ſtock of Reading and Learning, proper to the holy Employment he had undertaken, before he engaged himſelf further in it. Here he lay for ſome years cloſe and private, and read over the Fathers, and many other Books tending to the furthering his Divinity ſtudies. He preached then indeed but ſeldom, or not at all, his buſineſs now being ſomething elſe. But when ſome, who had a mind to have themſelves eaſed by his labour, charged this upon him, as a crime of idleneſs; to clear himſelf of that imputation, he publiſhed his firſt Book, to let the World ſee he was not idle, though he preached not. He never cared to be accuſed of idleneſs: and his own conſcience cleared him of that (as he tells us before that Book) though he confeſſed, that he was not ſo haſty, as many be, to intrude himſelf where there is no neceſſity. But when he had taken the charge of Souls upon him, in all the parts of the Miniſterial Function, he was very diligent: A conſtant Preacher, reſorting to his Pariſh Church, which ſtood a mile diſtant, every Sunday, Winter and Summer, wet and dry, unleſs abroad, or hindred by ſickneſs. He failed not to viſit the ſick, whenſoever ſent for, compaſſionating their condition, and adminiſtring wholſom counſils and comforts to them. He was a great enemy to Schiſm and Faction, and uncharitable ſeparation from the Church; and did uſe to preſs Communion both in his Sermons and ordinary diſcourſes. And it may not be amiſs to mention the notable argument he uſed to manage in the behalf of holding Communion with the National Church: which was our Lords Example. This he often and convincingly urged in this caſe: and particularly, but ſome few months before his death, in one of his ordinary Sermons he had theſe words. Let me ask them (meaning the neglecters of the Publick Worſhip) do they think that our Saviour ever let Sabbath day paſs in all his time, while here, but he was preſent at the Publick Service, either in the Temple or in the Synagogue. Look the Goſpel through, and ſee by the current of the ſtory there, whether ever he abſented himſelf from the Publick Congregation on the Sabbath day. Read that Luke IV. 16. (To ſpare more) He came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, and, as his cuſtom was, went into the Synagogue on the Sabbath day, and ſtood up for to read. It was his cuſtom to go to the Synagogue, to the Publick Service and Congregation on the Sabbath day, and he never failed of it. And he ſtood up for to read in his own Town-Synagogue, as owning himſelf a member of that Congregation. For it is not recorded that he read in any Synagogue beſide. It was his Cuſtom to go to the Publick Congregation on the Sabbath day: it is theſe Mens cuſtom not to come there. He never abſented himſelf from the Publick Meeting, theſe Men account it Religion to abſent themſelves ever. Is our Publick Service more corrupt than theirs was then? If it be, let them ſhew it. If it be not, let them give a reaſon, why they go ſo directly contrary to our Saviours own practice. Generally his Sermons were very plain, as preached to a Country Auditory, and practical, recommending above all things piety and a good life; and if he chanced to fall upon controverſial points in the courſe of his Sermons, he would ſtrive in few words to paſs over the controverſie, and while he was upon it, to render it as uſeful and ſerviceable to pious ends, as he could. His Sermons always carried a ſweet and eaſie ſtrain with them; a Rhetorick peculiar to himſelf, notably raiſing attention, and making a quick impreſſion upon the Affections. Inſomuch as he ſeldom failed of a great Auditory: having ſcarce one in his Pariſh, that abſented from his Miniſtery. And another qualification he had of a good Clergy-man, and that was his Charity: which was free and large. His Houſe was a continual Hoſpital; none went away thence unrelieved, which was ſo well known, that he had a more than common charge at his Door. For ſuch was his compaſſionate Spirit, that all ſorts of comers, pretending need, partook of his liberality: and he would frequently bring poor people within Doors to his fire, to warm them as well as feed and cloth them. Beſides he uſed in the Winter ſeaſons to find work for the poor of his Pariſh, as ſpinning, &c. Whereby at once induſtry and labour might be encouraged, and poverty ſuccored. And his ſecret charities are ſuppoſed conſiderable. For he had 300 l. per annum; and no charge, nor viſible expence, and yet ſpent all.

Take

Take him in his more private Capacity, he was a truly pious and devout Christian towards God. This was his friend Dr. Castels character of him. I know no Man under Heaven, whose Voicinity would make my life more patiently tolerated, than to be near one, who hath in him so much of Heaven, as you have. On the Lords days abroad as well as at home, he always forbore eating or drinking till the Evening Service were over, that he might be the more intent upon his Devotions and Meditations in private, and the freer from dulness and drowsiness in publick, a thing so unbecoming the Worship of God. Whensoever he returned home from a journy, it was his manner to pass through his House, to his retirements, without saluting or speaking to any body, unless they came in his way, till he had performed his private Devotions. For his food whatsoever it was, he was always very thankful to God; never complaining of any thing at his Table; but ever expressing a thankfulness for what ever was set before him, besides his usual blessing before and after meals. He was indeed πολύχων & Ἀνὴρ, an universal Good Man, which reconciled him a reverence whereseever he came: but for some particular Virtues he deserved

------ Monstrari & dicier Hic est,

To be taken notice of and admired. I will instance only in his profound meekness and humility: a Man so learned, of such great abilities beyond most Men, and yet so void of all conceit of himself, so mean, so little, so nothing at all in his own Eyes; that one would wonder to hear the expressions that he useth of himself. In his Epistle to Christs College, you have him in this strain. Cum repeto quantum sine numero, &c. When I recollect what a number, (almost without number) of learned & eminent Men Christs College hath fostered, and brought up, I call my self Dunce and Blockhead, to come from so learned a bosom, and from among so learned a Society, so unlearned, so mean, and obscure, and still so to remain. Oh! dull creature, that I have been and am, in and after so many and so great advantages, and examples of Learning. I rejoyce and triumph, Dearest Nurse, in the multitude of thy Sons, who either have been, or now are, an honour and an ornament to thee. But I am deeply sensible, how void of Learning, how ignorant, how nothing I am: I most freely confess, and lament it; and so he goes on in an elegant strain of Rhetorick to undervalue himself: And subscribes himself Indignissimus Hominum, The most unworthy of Men. Oh! how becoming was so great Learning vailed under so much modesty. And in another Epistle to the Reader (That you may see, this was not a single transient fit of humility, but his constant tenour;) he styles himself, The least of Men and of capacities, who am nothing, and less than nothing in comparison of many thousands. And again, Heu! quam ego, cum Doctos cogito, in oculis meis non sordesco solum, sed & nihilesco. And lastly in respect of his published labours, this is the sense he had of them, and of their Author: Being most ready ever to submit to others, and to acknowledge mine own infirmities, and owning nothing in my self, but sin, weaknesses, and strong desires to serve the Publick. As he writes in the conclusion of his Epistle before the second Part of the Harmony. And this humble Spirit, methinks, I have well reserved to the conclusion of my Discourse upon our Doctor, being the very Crown of all his other Virtues and accomplishments. And in this he had outstripped his Masters Master, I mean, Mr. Hugh Broughton; a Man greatly Learned, but as greatly conceited, impatient of contradiction and apt to despise others, which qualities our Doctor never knew.

XVI.

Some Apology for our Author: and the Conclusion.

HAving said all this, I know nothing else needful to be done, but to dispel some mists that may darken his Name, and to leave Dr. Lightfoots memory as fair and unblemisht, as may be, to posterity: and so we will gently draw the curtains about his Hearse, and take our leave of the Reader and him at once. I plainly see, there are two things that some will be apt to charge upon him. The one is certain peculiar Opinions that he espoused: and the other, that he seemed to be too much carried away with the late Evil Times. I do not pretend, wholly to excuse and justifie him in these things, but only to lessen and mollifie the charge: Consider then, that he was but a Man, and so subject to humane slips and frailties as well as others: and that even such who have enjoyed the greatest fame either for Learning or Goodness, have for the most part had some abatement in their Coat of Arms. Nullum magnum ingenium sine mixtura. And those great endowments that were in him, and that eminent service he did the Church and Common-wealth of Learning, may justly merit his pardon for any faults, which either his ignorance or infirmity betrayed him into.

As for his peculiar Opinions: ſuch as the utter and everlaſting Rejection of the Jews, his different judgment about the four Monarchies, his interpretation of ſome things in the Revelations and ſome others, that may be obſerved in his Writings, and in his Diſputes in the Aſſembly of Divines; there is this that may be apologized for them, that if they were not true, yet they were innocent, ſuch as made no breach either upon the Churches Peace, or the Analogy of Faith: two things, that he was ever moſt tender of, Innocua, ut ſpero, proponens ſemper. Propounding, I hope, ſuch things as are always harmleſs. As he ſpeaks in his Epiſtle before the Horæ upon S. John. And before another, I hope it will not give offence upon this account, that if I am miſtaken I miſtake only in Hiſtorical matters, as moſt things are, that create difficulty here, (viz. The Epiſtle to the Corinthians:) where there is no fear of infringing the Analogy of Faith, or the Doctrine of the Church. And ſo long as theſe are preſerved ſafe, it ſeems allowable, eſpecially for learned Men, offering fair probabilities, to abound in their own ſenſe.

He was indeed a Member of the Aſſembly of Divines, and long after that (I think) one of thoſe, who at the beginning of the Kings joyful Return were appointed to confer with the Epiſcopal Divines at the Savoy: whereby it appears that he bended ſometime towards Puritaniſm. It was indeed his unhappineſs, as well as of many other pious well meaning Men, to live in thoſe times of Temptation; whereinto if they fell, it was becauſe they were not Politicians enough to ſee the bad conſequences of thoſe ſmooth and fair pretences. I may plead for him, that it was his credulity, not his malice, or any evil deſign that made him err. He was carried away with their Diſſimulation, (and there was an Apoſtle once was ſo) and that the more eaſily, being a Man of an innocent and unſuſpicious nature, eſpecially when ſuch goodly things as Religion and Reformation were ſo much boaſted: And I make no doubt he afterwards was convinced how he had been trepanned, and ſaw his error, as appeared ſufficiently by his ready compliance with the Laws and orders of the eſtabliſhed Church upon the happy Reſtauration: and encouraging his Sons alſo to the ſame, who were both conformable men of the Clergy. He never was a Bigot, or a buſie officious Man, always rather Paſſive than Active, unleſs in the Aſſembly. And then generally thoſe matters wherein he ſtirred were ſuch points, as in which the very Locks of the Presbyterians ſtrength lay, which he for the moſt part oppoſed. And certainly when we conſider, how he thwarted their ϖεῦπα ψεύδατα, their chief principles; arguing againſt Lay Elders, ſtanding for general admittance to the Sacrament, for Forms of Prayers, and many ſuch like, the Presbyterians could never reckon him truly theirs; and I am apt to think, they wiſhed him more than once out of their Aſſembly. Indeed he was then rather a Man at large by himſelf, that followed his own Studies, than followed any party of Men, and promoted true goodneſs, as far as in him lay. In thoſe times he particularly made theſe three or four things his main Drift, viz. To beat down Enthuſiaſm, which he plainly ſaw tended to the enervating the Authority of the Holy Scriptures; To maintain the honour of Learning and a Regular Clergy; and to ſhew the neceſſity of keeping up publick Communion with the National Church: whereby unqueſtionably he did excellent ſervice to the Church in thoſe evil days. He had an excellent faculty in reſting out of the Hands of Shiſmaticks thoſe weapons, that they moſt confided in. For this I might ſhew his way of dealing with Enthuſiaſts, Anabaptiſts, &c. But I will inſtance only in thoſe that would juſtifie their ſeparation, from the word Saints in Scripture, ſuppoſing that thereby were meant perſons truly and inwardly Holy. The ignorance of the latitude of this word was then the cauſe of many bitter contentions, and wild opinions, nay, and of no ſmall danger to all that were not Saints in their account. To this purpoſe he ſpeaks in a Latine Sermon preached at Ely, at an Epiſcopal Viſitation held there by the Right Reverend Father in God Benjamin, late Lord Biſhop of Ely: Nec periculoſius aut terribilius ſonuit olim Shibboleth Gileaditarum, &c. That the Shibboleth of the Gileadites antiently ſounded not more dangerouſly, than the Title of Saints of late. Whereas, as he ſhews in that Sermon, and uſed to urge in the late times, That by Saints is meant nothing but Chriſtians in oppoſition to Heathens or Unbelievers. And that the Apoſtle in that phraſe ſpeaks with the common notion of the Jewiſh Nation; to which בקדושה In Holineſs, ſignifies no more than Within the Profeſſion of the Jewiſh Religion, and לא בקדושה Not in Holineſs ſignifies as much as In Heatheniſm.

But it is time to make an end: though I am ſenſible all that hath been ſaid is far ſhort of what might have been, concerning a Man of his Figure in the Learned World; and what ſhould, if further accounts of him had come to hand from ſuch his Learned friends and acquaintance, as could or would have imparted them. But what hath been written is ſufficient to give a Draught of him. Which however defective it may be, it hath this advantage, that it is a true one; theſe notices being taken partly from ſuch Perſons who well knew him, or were related to him; and partly collected out of his Printed Epiſtles, but chiefly out of abundance of other Letters, looſe Papers, Note-books, and other M S S.

MSS. in my hands. Which courſe is now become the moſt faſhionable, as it is indeed the beſt way of writing Hiſtorical matters. Epiſtolaris Hiſtoria eſt optima Hiſtoria, as Cardinal Baronius uſed to ſay. I have had no temptation to write any thing favore aut odio: having no other aim in this undertaking, but to repreſent our Author fairly and truly to ſuch as ſhall be diſpoſed to read him, or know him. And I choſe to digeſt it in this method, as moſt proper for it, being a haſty Rapſody of remainders of things, worthy to be remembred concerning this excellent Man, and which were omitted in the Account of his Life. The method, I know, is not ſo correct and exact as it might have been, and as it ſhould, if more time and leiſure had been allowed. If any would know our Author better, let him have recourſe unto his Books: there he ſhall have Doctor Lightfoot ſpeaking for himſelf; and giving his own Character in every Page: there he may read and ſee Learning, Diligence, Accuracy, Candor, Humility, a love of Peace and an earneſt ſcrutiny after Truth, and a great Zeal for God and Religion, ſhining every where.

And now upon the whole, ſhall we retire from reading this long Relation without reaping any benefit thereby, further than to have heard ſome news? Then we have in effect, but loſt our time. Great Examples are great arguments to provoke to imitation. If we deſire the Eſteem he had left behind him among good Men, let us take the courſe he did, and try to arrive at his Virtue and Learning; and if we would attain to that, let uſe his tools; I mean, Induſtry, Study, Conſtancy, and eſpecially Modeſty, and a ſenſe of our own Ignorance. Without which laſt, if any one hath attained to any conſiderable degree of knowledge, thouſands have failed thereof for the want of it. This was Seneca's judgment; Puto multos potuiſſe ad Sapientiam pervenire, niſi putaſſent ſe perveniſſe: That many might have arrived to Wiſdom, had they not vainly thought that they had already done it. Finally if we are any thing our ſelves, or have any advantages communicated to us from the gifts and endowments of others, as all is ultimately to be reſolved into the grace and goodneſs of God, ſo let us not forget to give him all the Praiſe and Glory.

The Book of GENESIS.

CHAP. I.

Days of the Creation.

I. THE ALMIGHTY TRINITY [אלהים] having dwelt from all eternity in and with it ſelf, when it ſaw good to communicate it ſelf, did in the beginning of the being of things, create Heaven and Earth, the two parts of the World, of nothing in a moment, Verſe 1.

The earth newly created, lay covered all over with water, and there was darkneſs through the world in that vaſt vacuity that was between the face of that great deep which covered the earth, and the clouds or cataracts of Heaven, which were the inferior part of Heaven, and were created in the ſame inſtant with the Heavens, full of water: and the Heavens in the inſtant of their creation, were ſet a * moving by the Spirit that garniſhed them, in a conſtant and continued motion; and with their motion, the courſe of nature began, and the clock of time was ſet a going, Verſe 2. * רוח אלהים מרחפת.

Twelve hours was there univerſal darkneſs through all the world, and then was light created in this upper Horizon, and there it inlightned twelve hours more; and then flitted away, as the light of the Sun now doth to the other Hemiſphere; and thus was the meaſure and work of the firſt day, Verſe 3, 4, 5.

Days of the Creation.

II. The air ſpread out through that great ſpace that was betwixt the waters that covered the Earth, and the waters that were in the cataracts of Heaven; and as the light did remove the univerſal darkneſs, ſo doth this ſpreading out of the air, remove the emptineſs, and vacuity: and this was the work of the ſecond day; but of this days work, it is not ſaid, That God ſaw it good, as it is ſaid of the others, becauſe the partition and ſeparation of all waters is not fully perfected till the next day, Verſ. 6, 7, 8.

III. The waters that covered the Earth are brought into their channels, and the dry land appearing, is ſtored with trees and plants: on this days work, it is twice ſaid, That God ſaw it good; once for the full and intire ſeparation of the waters, and again for the fructification of the ground, Verſ. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.

IV. When the light at the cloſe of the third day was departed from this Horizon, the Moon and Stars began to appear in the Sky; and in the morning the Sun roſe in the Eaſt, and began his courſe: and ſo this viſible hoſt of Heaven was the work of the fourth day. [The inviſible hoſt of Angels was in moſt probability created in the very ſame inſtant with the Heavens themſelves.] Verſ. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19.

V. Fowle and fiſh and * Amphibia created, and the firſt bleſſing of generation pronounced upon them, Verſ. 20, 21, 22, 23.

* תנינים Crocodiles, Hippopotames, &c.

VI. With Chap. I. from Verſ. 24. to the end, read Chap. II. from Verſ. 4. to the end.

Beaſts created, and all manner of creeping things: of the clean ſorts of beaſts, there were ſeven created of every kind, three couple for breed, and the odd one for Adams ſacrifice upon his fall, which God foreſaw.

Adam created in holineſs and righteouſneſs, and high honor and happineſs; Dominion is given to him over all the creatures, which is more clearly evidenced to him, in that they are brought to him to receive their names from him; which by the great wiſdom that was in him, he giveth them even at the firſt ſight, agreeable to their natures: among them all, he ſeeth no mate meet for himſelf; but he obſerveth them all fitly mated one to another, and ſo becometh the more ſenſible of his own being mateleſs; therefore the Lord provideth a fellow meet for him, even out of his own body, having caſt Adam the mean while into a trance.

God marrieth them together, puts them in the garden, and gives them a command.

Now fell the Angels: for they ſeeing the honor and happineſs in which man was created and ſet, and the Lord giving the Angels themſelves a charge concerning him to keep him in his ways, and to be miniſtring ſpirits to him for his good; ſome of them ſpited this his honor and happineſs, and deſpiſed this their charge and ingagement, and ſo through pride againſt the command of God, and for envy at the felicity of man, they fell.

CHAP. III.

THeſe Angels that were now become Devils through ſpite at man, had no comfort at all left them in their fall, but this miſerable and miſchievous one, to bring man into the ſame condemnation with them. For the effecting of this they loſe no time, but attempt it by tempting him in his wife the weaker veſſel: ſhe not yet knowing that there were any Devils at all, but well knowing that God had allotted her and her husband the cuſtody of Angels, miſtook the Devil that ſpake in a Serpent, for a good Angel, and ſo was deceived by him, and ſinned, and drew her husband into the ſame tranſgreſſion with her; this was about high noon, the time of eating. And in this loſt condition into which Adam and Eve had now brought themſelves, did they lie comfortleſs till towards the cool of the day, or three a clock afternoon.

Then cometh God to cenſure them, but firſt promiſeth Chriſt to be a Redeemer to them, and a deſtroyer of Satan. Curſeth the earth, that they might not fix their minds on things below; doometh them to labour, miſery, and mortality, that they might look for reſt in Heaven. Adam layeth hold on the promiſe, and in faith therein, nameth his wife Eve or Life: God teacheth him the rite of ſacrifice, and with the skins of the ſacrificed beaſts cloatheth them, and expelleth them out of Eden; and ſo fell Adam on the day that he was created, and brought in death, and ſo the firſt thing that dyeth in the world is a ſacrifice or Chriſt in a figure.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1, 2, 3.

At the end of the third Chapter, in order of time and ſtory, come in the three firſt Verſes of the ſecond Chapter, and the ſtory lyeth thus.

VII Days of the Creation.

GOD having thus created all things * in ſix days, and man having thus fallen, and heard of Chriſt, and of death, and eternal life, and other like things on the ſixth day: the Lord ordaineth the ſeventh day for a Sabbath, or holy reſt, and Adam ſpendeth it in holy duties, and in meditation of holy things. The mention of the inſtitution of the Sabbath is laid in the beginning of the ſecond Chapter, though the very time and place of that ſtory be not till after the end of the third. 1. Becauſe the holy Ghoſt would diſpatch the whole ſtory of the firſt week, or ſeven days of the world together, without interpoſition of any other particular ſtory. 2. Becauſe he would ſhew that Adam ſhould have kept the Sabbath, though he had never ſinned. And therefore the mention of the Sabbath is before the mention of his ſin.

* Read ver. 2. For on the ſeventh day God had ended his work, otherwiſe there may be a doubt upon it whether God created not ſomething on the ſeventh day. This the lxx. Saw, and therefore they tranſlate it different from the Original word. And God ended his works on the ſixth day.

CHAP. IV.

THE exact times of the ſtories of the fourth Chapter are not to be determined, and therefore they muſt be left to be taken up by conjecture, in the times of the fifth as they are caſt into the following table: and ſo conjecturally alſo muſt we meaſure out the parallel and collateral times of the generations of Cain and Seth, that are either named here or hereafter to the floud. Cain and Abel born twins, yet the one the ſeed of the Serpent, and the other of the Woman. In Cain was legible the poyſon that Satan had breathed into fallen man, and in Abel the breathing of grace into the elect, and a figure of the death of Chriſt. God fireth Abels ſacrifice from heaven, but deſpiſeth Cains; yet readeth to him the firſt doctrine of repentance. That if he did well he ſhould certainly be accepted, and though he did not well, yet לפתח חטאת רובץ a ſin-offering lieth at the door: if he repented there was hope of pardon. Thus as God had read the firſt lecture of faith to Adam, in the promiſe of Chriſt, Chap. 3. 15. ſo doth he the firſt lecture of repentance to Cain under the doctrine of * a ſin-offering: But Cain deſpiſeth his own mercy, is unmerciful to his brother, and is denied mercy from the Lord. He beggeth for death, that he might be ſhut out of that ſad condition, to which God hath doomed him, והיה כל מצאי יהרגני, Now therefore let it be, that any one that findeth me may kill me; but this God denieth him, and reſerve th him to a long life, that he might reſerve him to long miſery. Lamech a branch of this root, bringeth into the world the abomination of Polygamie, or of having more wives at once than one; for which God ſmiteth him with horrour of conſcience, that he himſelf might be a witneſs againſt that ſin that he had introduced: and he cenſureth himſelf for a more deplorate and deſperate wretch than Cain. For that Cain had ſlain but one man, and had only deſtroyed his body, but he himſelf had deſtroyed both young and old by his curſed example, which was now ſo currently followed and entertained in the world, that ere long it was a ſpecial forwarder of its deſtruction, that if Cain was to be avenged ſeven-fold, Lamech deſerved ſeventy and ſeven-fold.

* חטאת very commonly taken for a ſin offering: and the ſacrifices were conſtantly brought to the Tabernacle door.

In this ſtock of Cain alſo began Idolatry, and worſhipping the creature inſtead of the Creator, bleſſed for ever; and in a mournfull feeling of this diſhonour done to God by it, Seth calls his Son that was born to him in thoſe times, Enoſh, or ſorrowfull; becauſe אז הוחל then began profaneſs in calling upon the name of the Lord. Noah in 2 Pet. 2. 5. ſeemeth to be called the eighth, in reference to theſe times, namely the eighth in ſucceſſion from Enoſh, in whoſe times the world began to be profane.

CHAP. V.

THis fifth Chapter meaſureth the time and age of the world, between the Creation and the Flood, which was 1655. years compleat: Being caſt into a Table, it will not only ſhew the currency, but the concurrency of thoſe times, or how thoſe Patriarchs whoſe times it meaſureth, lived one with another. The Reader will not need any rules for the explaining of the Table, his own Arithmetick will ſoon ſhew him what uſe to make of it.

CHAP. VI.

THE laſt Verſe of the fourth Chapter, told of profanation of Religion or Idolatry, begun in the family of Cain in the days of Enoſh: now the beginning of the ſixth Chapter telleth of corruption crept into the family of Seth, the very Church it ſelf; and this eſpecially by their following the curſed example of Lamech. The Sons of of God, or the members of the Church, and progeny of Seth marrying careleſly and promiſcuouſly, with the daughters of men, or brood of Cain: hence they alſo became fleſhly, like Cains race, they grew into a gyant-like breed as well as that; and thoſe great ones became tyrannical as well as the other: hence was the whole world over-ſpread with cruelty and rapine, and all manner of corruptions, ſo that the Lord paſſeth a decree upon it for deſtruction; but to Noah he giveth a promiſe of preſervation, and the plat-form of an Ark, in which he and his ſhould be preſerved.

The dimenſions of the Ark were ſuch, as that it had contained 450000. ſquare cubits within the walls of it, if it had riſen in an exact ſquare unto the top; but it ſloping in the roof, like the roof of an houſe, till it came to be but a cubit broad in the ridge of it, did abate ſome good parcel of that ſum, but how much is uncertain; ſhould we allow 50000. cubits in the abatement, yet will the ſpace be ſufficient enough of capacity, to receive all the creatures, and all their proviſion that were laid in there. The building was three ſtories high, but of the ſtairs that roſe from ſtory to ſtory, the Text is ſilent; in every ſtory were partitions, not ſo many, as to ſeclude one kind of creature from another, for that was needleſs, there being no enmity betwixt them, whilſt they were there, and it would have been the more troubleſom to Noah to bring their proviſions to them: but there were ſuch partitions, as to divide betwixt beaſts and their proviſions in ſtore; betwixt proviſions and proviſions, that by lying near together might receive damage. The door was in the ſide of the loweſt ſtory, and ſo it was under water all the time of the flood; but God by ſo ſpecial a providence had ſhut them in, that it leaked not. In what ſtory every kind of creature had its lodging and habitation, is a matter undeterminable; how their excrements were conveyed out of the Ark, and water conveyed in, the Text hath concealed. All the creatures were ſo cicurated and of a tamed condition for this time, that they lived together, and dieted together without diſſention: The wolf dwelt with the lamb, and the leopard lay down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion together; [as the Prophet alludeth this quietneſs in the Ark, to the tranquility and change of temper under the Goſpel,] and Noah or any of his family might come among lions, dragons, ſerpents, and they had forgot the wildneſs and cruelty of their nature, and did not meddle with him. This ſhews that the enmity ſet betwixt the ſerpent and woman, is chiefly to be underſtood in a ſpiritual reſpect.

Now for the time of the laſting of the Flood, it was betwixt Noahs going into the Ark and his coming out, a juſt and complete year of the ſun; for the better viewing and obſerving of which, it may not be amiſs to take it up in a Kalendar of the year, as it then ran.

A Kalendar of the year of the Flood, which was the year of the world, 1656.

Tiſri the firſt moneth. Part of our September and October.

THere is no particular occurrence of this Moneth mentioned in the Text: Reaſon and neceſſary collection will inform us, that the fruits of the earth being now ripe, Noah was very buſie all this moneth in gathering them into the Ark for proviſion for himſelf, and for all the cattel and creatures with him for the year to come.

Methuſelah is alive in this Moneth, as is apparent by the calculation of his age in the fifth Chapter. And by this, it appeareth how clearly the ſpirit of Prophecy foretold of things to come, when it directeth his father Enoſh almoſt a thouſand years ago to name him Methuſelah, which ſignifieth either, They dye by a dart; or, He dieth, and then is the dart; or, He dieth, and then it is ſent: And thus Adam and Methuſelah had meaſured the whole time between the Creation and the Flood, and lived above two hundred and forty years together. The long ages of theſe men near the beginning of the world [though now under ſin] do give a gueſs what a long while man ſhould have lived upon the earth before he ſhould have been tranſlated, if he had never ſinned: unleſs God ſhewed in Enoch what his time then ſhould have been: And prolonged the times of theſe men under the ſtate of ſin, the rather that the knowledge of God, which was decayed by the coming in of ſin, might be the more propagated.

Marheſhvan the ſecond moneth. Part of October and November.

NOAH beginneth to get the beaſts and fowles into the Ark. He is ſeven days about it, *Gen.*7.1,2,3,4. The ſame hand of divine providence that had brought all the beaſts to Adam at the Creation to receive their names, doth bring them now to Noah for preſervation of their lives.

NOAH entreth the Ark, *Gen.*7. 11, 13. and the Rain rains begin which continue forty days and Rain forty nights together: the ſeventeenth day Rain was none of the forty days, but the night Rain that followed it was one of the nights. The Rain Cataracts of Heaven are opened, and ſhowre Rain down terrible rains. Theſe were thoſe Rain clouds that were created full of water the Rain firſt day of the Creation, even in the very Rain ſame inſtant with the Heavens; and which Rain are alſo comprehended under the tearm Heavens, ch.1.1. The great deep is alſo let looſe from Rain below as well as thoſe rains from above, and ſo the Earth comes preſently into her firſt poſture, covered with water: as chap.1.2.

Siſleu the third moneth. Part of November and December.

Rain The violent rains, ſuch as never were be-
Rain fore nor ſince, nor ever ſhall be, do cloud
Rain the world in univerſal darkneſs, in which Rain the wicked are cloſed before they are cloſed
Rain in utter darkneſs: ſo it was the caſe of the Rain Egyptians, *Exod.*10. and of the Jews at Rain the death of our Saviour, *Matth.*27. and of Rain Sodom, *Gen.*19.11.
Rain When God after the Flood promiſeth
Rain that day and night ſhall no more ceaſe, Chap.
Rain 8. 22. it argueth that their courſe had ceaſed before. It is ordinarily ſeen in an extraordinary ſhowre or ſtorm that even night
Rain cometh upon the world at noon-day, how Rain much more would darkneſs ſeize upon it in Rain the times of theſe rains, which were beyond all parallel and compariſon?

Flood The rains had now raiſed the waters to

CHAP. VIII. From Verſe 13. to the end.

NOW is begun a new year of the world; namely the year 1657. and on the firſt day of Tiſri, the waters are clean gone from off the earth, and on the 27th day of Marheſvan, the earth is clean dry, and Noah cometh that day out of the Ark. He ſtaid a moneth and ſixteen days after the waters were quite gone, that the earth which was moiſt, ſoft, and muddy, with ſo long a flood, might be hardned and dried: and thus hath he been in the Ark a juſt complete year of the ſun.

His coming out was about the beginning of November, when winter was already come, and no proviſion then to be had for the beaſts till the next ſpring, but what they had out of the Ark. Noah inſtantly after his coming out of the Ark buildeth an Altar, and offereth the odd clean beaſts, that he had taken in of every kind for that purpoſe; and the Lord accepteth him, and promiſeth never to deſtroy the world with water again: and thus as the old world, ſo alſo this new beginneth with Sacrifice.

CHAP. IX.

AS God had bleſſed Adam and his wife at their creation, with the bleſſing of increaſe and multiplication, and of dominion over the creatures; ſo doth he Noah and his ſons at their going forth of the Ark: but with this difference in the laſt, That whereas Adam in innocency had rule over the creatures with amity and love, ſin did now put ſuch a difference, that Noah muſt have it with fear and dread. And whereas he had reſtrained Adam from eating of fleſh, and confined his diet to the fruit of the ground; he inlargeth Noah to feed upon beaſts, and alloweth them for the ſuſtentation of his life, for he had been the preſerver of theirs. This was that, that his father Lamech had foretold by the ſpirit of prophecy, when he was born; namely, That he ſhould comfort them concerning their labour and toil, which they had, when they might eat nothing but the fruits of the ground, which coſt them hard labour in the tillage and culture to get them: but Noah ſhould be a comfort, in reference to this, becauſe to him, and in him to all the world, God would give liberty to eat fleſh. But with the fleſh, God permitteth him not to eat the blood; partly for avoiding of cruelty, and partly, becauſe blood was to be atonement for ſin. And this prohibition of eating blood to Noah now, and afterward renewed to Iſrael, was, becauſe of that cuſtom which God foreſaw would grow; and which in the time of Iſrael was grown common of eating fleſh raw: as appeareth, 1 Sam. 14. 32. And by the prohibition of eating the Paſchal Lamb: ſo Exod. 12. 9. This very law of not eating the fleſh with the blood, confuteth the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, [or the eating of the very fleſh and blood of Chriſt] to all the world.

The Rain-bow, which naturally is a ſign of rain, is ſacramentally made a ſign of no more deſtruction by it.

The drunkenneſs of Noah was at ſome good ſpace after the flood, but the very time uncertain: for Canaan who was not born of ſome years after they came out of the Ark, is then active and of capacity, and is doomed to ſlavery and ſubjection: his land bequeathed to Sem, and the calling of the Gentiles prophecied of.

The death of Noah is mentioned in the end of this Chapter, becauſe Moſes would totally conclude his ſtory; but as it may be ſeen in the inſuing Table, he died not till within two years of Abrahams birth.

CHAP. X.

SEventy heads of Nations grown from the three ſons of Noah by the time of confuſion of Tongues: Theſe became not ſeventy ſeveral languages then, though they were ſo many Nations, for it is undoubted that divers Nations joyned in one language: as, Aſſur, Arphaxad, and Aram in the Chaldee; and the moſt, if not all the ſons of Canaan in one Tongue. When the moſt High divided the Nations their inheritance, when he ſeparated the ſons of Adam, he ſet the bounds of the people, according to the number of the children of Iſrael, Deut. 32. 8. With this 10 of Geneſis read 1 Chron. 1. from Verſ. 5. to Verſ. 24.

CHAP. XI.

HEatheniſm beginneth at Babel; when the Hebrew Tongue is loſt to all the world, but only to one family: in that Tongue alone was God preached, and the doctrine of ſalvation publiſhed, and when that is loſt, Religion is loſt with it, and all the earth become ſtrangers to God, and cloſed up in blindneſs and ſuperſtition: and in this eſtate did it continue for the ſpace of 2203. years, till the gift of Tongues at Sion began to recure the confuſion of Tongues at Babel: and the Heathens thereby were ſo far brought into the true Religion, that even Babel it ſelf was among thoſe that knew the Lord, Pſal. 87. 4. and a Church there elect, as well as the Jews, 1 Pet. 5. 13.

Sem in the very front of the generations of the new world, ſtandeth without mention of father or mother, beginning of days, or end of life: as *Heb.*7.3. The age of man was ſhortned at the confuſion of Babel, for Peleg and thoſe born after him live not above half the time of thoſe born before. He dieth the firſt of all this line, to ſhew Gods diſlike of that rebellion, which befell in the year of his birth. Nahor dieth the next year after him, having lived a ſhorter life then he, to ſhew the like diſpleaſure againſt the Idolatry, which was begun in that line alſo. Terah at ſeventy years old hath his ſon Haran; and Abraham is born to him when he is an hundred and thirty: this appeareth by caſting Abrams age when he departs out of Haran to go for Canaan after his fathers death. Men frame intricacies and doubts to themſelves here, where the Text is plain, if it be not wreſted. God in Ur of the Caldees calleth Abram out of his Idolatry, and out of that Idolatrous Country where he had caught it, to leave his Country and kindred, and to go for a Land, that he would ſhew him, Acts 7. 2. Abram leaveth his Idolatry and imbraceth this call, and ſo alſo doth his father Terah, [and therefore the conduct of the journy is aſcribed to him for honours ſake, *Gen.*11.31.] and they depart from Ur and go to Haran, and there they dwell, and there at laſt Terah dieth. After his death God giveth Abram another call, to leave his Countrey, kindred, and fathers houſe too now, and to follow him whither he calls him: and ſo he did, and he was ſeventy and five years old when he departs from Haran. Now taking ſeventy and five out of two hundred and five years of Terah, at which age he died, it is apparent that Abram was born to Terah when he was a hundred and thirty years old, and therefore muſt that paſſage, Verſe 26. And Terah lived ſeventy years and begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran, be underſtood that he begat one of theſe; as the like expreſſion is, Chap. 5. 32. Noah was five hundred years old, and Noah begat Sem, Ham and Japhet: Haran was Terahs eldeſt ſon, though named laſt, as Japhet was Noahs: Abram is named firſt, becauſe of his dignity, and becauſe the ſtory was to fall upon him: And ſo is it with Sem in that place.

CHAP. XII. XIII. XIV. XV.

THE PROMISE given to Abram in Haran, after his fathers death: On the 15 day of the moneth Abib or Nisan, *Exod.*12.41. He journyeth that Spring into the land of Canaan, and at or near mount Gerizim and mount Ebal, he buildeth two Altars, and taketh possession of the land by faith. Famine driveth him into Egypt, where the Blackmoor Egyptians are soon aware of the beauty of Sarai, a white woman; and she is taken into Pharaohs house, but redeemed by the Lord himself, plaguing the Egyptians: A type of things to come upon her posterity, and upon the Egyptians for their sake. Abram returning out of Egypt into Canaan again, riches suffer not Lot and him to dwell together in unity: they part asunder in the valley of Achor, and Lot separateth from Abrams family, and chooseth residence among the Sodomites, to his own danger and detriment: when he is parted, Abram hath a full promise of the land, and thereupon flits his habitation to Hebron, a place of singular eminency in time to come.

Then Abram that hitherto had the land by promise, hath it now by victory: For Kedorlaomer of Elam the eldest son of Sem, and so heir apparent to Canaan in Noahs prophecy, being now in the fourteenth year of his reign over the Country; and being provoked by the rebellion of the five Cities in the plain of Jordan, he bringeth three Kings more with him, and conquereth all the Canaanites both without and within Jordan: as, first the Rephaims under Lebanon; the Zuzims in Amon; the Emims in Moab; the Horims or Hivites, in the caves of Edom; and all the Canaanites in Hazezon Tamar, at the point of the dead Sea. Then turn they into the land within Jordan, and as they had subdued all the Countries from North to South without; so now they do the like from South to North within: but when they were come with all their spoil to the out-going of the land, upon the North border Abram over-takes them; and so their victories are become his. Sem or Melchisedech observeth this dispensation of God, and his devolving the land by so special a providence upon Abram; and therefore he meets him in his return, with bread and wine, as a King; and with a blessing as a Priest; and passeth the possession of the land, and of the blessing upon him.

Afterwards Abram hath the promise of an heir out of his own loins; God maketh a covenant with him by sacrifice; passing in the appearance of fire between the parts of the slain beasts, and consuming them: four hundred years affliction, and sojourning of his seed, are foretold.

CHAP. XVI.

ABRAM marrieth Hagar, that he might compass the promise of having a son of his own body; he being not yet informed whither by Sarai or no: Hagar through Sarai's harsh dealing is forced to return towards her own Country; but by the way, seeth the God of vision, אל ראי, and by him is instructed concerning the condition and name of the son in her womb, and is sent back to Sarai again.

There be that ſuppoſe the Chaſdim or Chaldeans took their denomination from the laſt letters of Arphaxads name, כשד: and this hath the more probability, becauſe they are ſo called Chaſdim, Gen. 15.7. before Cheſed, which otherwiſe might have ſeemed to have given them their denomination, was born, Gen. 22.22.

IN this year theſe ſeveral occurrences came to paſs: Circumciſion was inſtituted in the moneth Abib or Niſan, and inſtituted in Hebron; In which very place, and at which time of the year, John Baptiſt is born, who brought in Baptiſm in ſtead of Circumciſion. Abram and Sarai have their names changed at the inſtitution of Circumciſion; and Iſaac is named before he is conceived. Some three moneths after this, the three Perſons in the Trinity dine with Abraham, and foretel the birth of Iſaac again.

ISAAC born the ſon of the promiſe: Abraham in the ſupernatural birth of Iſaac, fore-ſaw the ſupernatural birth of Chriſt, and rejoyced. Iſaac was not ſo named Laughter, only becauſe of Abrahams joy for him, but alſo for his joy in Chriſt, John 8. 56. Your father Abraham rejoyced to ſee my day, and he ſaw it, and was glad.

ISMAEL mocketh; Hagar, and he is caſt out of Abrahams family. From hence begin the 400 years mentioned Chap. 15.13. Abimelech and Abraham make a league, &c. God had foretold Abraham of the Egyptian affliction, and his affliction beginneth firſt by an Egyptian, namely by Hagar and her ſon. There is mention of a double ſpace of his ſeeds, ſojourning in a land not theirs; viz. 400 years, Chap. 15. 13. which was from Iſmaels mocking, to their delivery out of Egypt; and 430 years, Exod. 12. 40. which was from the promiſe given to Abram, Gen. 17.1. to their delivery, Gal. 3.17. Abraham conſecrateth a grove at Beerſheba, that he might have hallowed wood for his ſacrifices, as well as holy fire; ſee Chap. 21.7. he had had fire from heaven at ſome time upon his ſacrifice, and he preſerved it.

SALAH or Shelah dieth, being 433 years old, read Gen. 11.14,15.

There is a good ſpace of time paſſed over in ſilence concerning Iſaac; for from the time of Iſmaels mocking, which was at his fifth year, till the time of his offering up in a figure, which was at his thirty third, as may be conceived; there is no mention of him: for as yet the ſtory moſt eſpecially followeth the Acts of Abraham. Now it is very likely, that as the offering up of Iſaac was ſo plain and perfect a figure of the offering up of Chriſt, in other things, ſo alſo that theſe two things, the Type and Antitype did agree in the time; and that Isaac was offered when he was two and thirty years and an half old, or three and thirty current: which was the age of our Saviour when he was crucified. And the like concurrence and circumstance of the time, may be also well conceived of Abel at his death; who murdred by his brother, typified the same thing that Isaac did, sacrificed by his father.

ISAAC probably offered up this year: The mount Moriah, Ver. 2. the third day, Ver. 4. His first bearing the wood, and then the wood bearing him, Vers. 6, 9. His being bound hand and foot, Vers. 9. do call us to remember such circumstances in the death of Christ.

CHAP. XXIII.

SARAH dieth, being 127 years old; the only woman whose age is recorded in Scripture: A burial place is the first land that Abraham hath in Canaan.

CHAP. XXIV. & XXV. to Verse 7. and 1 CHRON. 1. Vers. 32, 33.

ISAAC is married to Rebeccah: Abraham after Sarahs death marrieth Keturah, and hath divers children by her; those children when they come to age, he sendeth away into those countries beyond Jordan, and in Arabia, which Kedarlaomer and the Kings with him had conquered; and by the conquest of them, they descended to Abraham. There these sons of his grow into Nations, and become continual enemies to the seed of Israel. Though Abraham were very old at Sarahs death, being 137 years old then; yet is he not past the strength of generation, through the strength of that promise, I will multiply thee, &c. The greatest wonder of Isaacs birth was, that he was born of an old barren woman.

SEM dieth; being 600 years old, read Gen. 11. 11. the same was Melchisedech; the only man in the world greater then Abraham: For though Eber and Arphaxad, and the other Patriarchs, had this dignity above Abraham, that they were his fathers; yet he was dignified above them all in this, that he had the singular and glorious Promise made to him, which was not made to any of them but only Sem: Sem saw the two great miseries of the world, the Flood and the confusion of Tongues; but he saw comfort in Abraham and Isaac. He lived as many years after Abraham came into the land of Canaan, as Abraham was old when he came thither; namely, 75 years.

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 11. and from Ver. 19. to the end.

JACOB and Esau born; first he that was natural, and then he that was spiritual: These children strove in the womb, and Rebeccah inquired after the cause, and the Lord by an oracle, it is like by Abrahams oracle at Beersheba, resolves her of the difference of the children, and of the Nations that should descend of them. Esau is born all hairy over like a kid, a strange birth; and he is therefore named Esau, that is, Made: for he had his beard and his pubes now even from the birth, as if he had been a mature man. The story is now to fall upon the acts of Isaac and Jacob, and therefore fore in this Chapter it concludes the ſtory of Abraham and Iſmael, reckoneth up the tearm of their lives, and mentioneth their deaths by anticipation: the Reader will readily reduce the Texts that mention theſe, to their proper time; it is moſt uſual in Scripture thus to do, in reckoning up mens ages: as, Geneſis 5. and 11. &c.

ABRAHAM dieth; here read Gen. 25. verſ. 7, 8, 9, 10. Iſaac is of the very ſame age when Abraham dieth, that Abraham was when the Promiſe came to him, viz. ſeventy five years old. The Promiſe now is come upon Iſaac.

EBER dieth; read Gen. 11. 17. He was the longeſt liver born ſince the Flood; the father of the Hebrews, and denominator of the Hebrew Tongue: Religion ſtaid in his family, when all the world loſt it beſide; and he liveth to ſee it gloriouſly ſetled in the families of Abraham and Iſaac.

CHAP. XXVI.

THE time that Eſau ſold his birth-right, and that Iſaac went to Gerar, are both undated, but it ſeemeth by the Text that they were near together; and that the famine that cauſed Eſau to part with his birth-right, cauſed Iſaac to depart out of his own reſidence, to go elſewhere to ſeek for ſuſtenance. It appeareth that there was great ſcarcity of victuals, when Jacob is brought to his lentil pottage, and when Eſau, if he got not ſome of theſe pottage, is like to famiſh. Many precious things were wrapped up in the birth-right: as, the Priority, the Promiſe, the Prieſt-hood, and excellent priviledges; and Eſau for a meſs of pottage deſpiſeth them all. Compare this with Adams loſing his own and his poſterities happineſs, for a morſel of meat. Iſaac as his father had done, denyeth his wife: A Philiſtim King ſheweth here more conſcience then he; he proſpereth exceedingly in the land of the Philiſtims, to the envy of the inhabitants there.

ESAU marrieth Canaanitiſh wives; a vexation to his holy parents; for this his impious Polygamy he is called a fornicator, Heb. 12. 16. for Polygamy is called fornication or whoredom, Hoſ. 4. 11. and upon this it ſeemeth that the Holy Ghoſt giveth one of his wives the name of Adah, the wife of the firſt Polygamiſt in the world: ſee Gen. 36. 2. and Gen. 4. 19. Eſau here lay under a double offence, namely for Polygamy, and for marrying in the ſtock of curſed Canaan; Polygamy in the men of the holy generation: as, Jacob, David and Solomon, &c. was of a more tolerable nature, and of more diſpenſableneſs; becauſe they ſought to multiply the holy ſeed, which Eſau was out of capacity to do.

Was not Eſau Jacobs brother, ſaith the Lord? Yet I loved Jacob, and hated Eſau, Mal. 1. ver. 2, 3. What ſhall we ſay then? Is there unrighteouſneſs with God? God forbid. For he ſaith to Moſes, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compaſſion on whom I will have compaſſion, Rom. 9. 14, 15. Both the Prophet and the Apoſtle do rather take their example for election and reprobation in Jacob and Eſau, then in Cain and Abel, at the beginning of the old world, or in Sem and Ham in the beginning of the new; partly becauſe the free acting and diſpoſing of God is the better ſhewed, in the contrary diſpoſal of theſe two that were known to be born at one birth; and partly, becauſe in Jacob there began to be a diſtinguiſhed people from all the world, and the foundation of a diſtinct viſible Church laid: and partly ſince both were born of parents under the Promiſe, that the ſpiritual and temporal vertue of the Promiſe might be differenced.

ISMAEL dieth; 137 years old: here read Gen. 25. from verſe 12. to verſe 19. and 1 Chron. 1. verſe 28, 29, 30, 31. There may be ſome argument that he was ſaved, though once he perſecuted and mocked, and was expelled Abrahams houſe: as Abrahams prayer for him, and Gods promiſe towards him, Gen. 17. 18, 20. the reckoning of his age, and uſing the very ſame expreſſion of his death, as are uſed of Abrahams; Eſau going to marry in his ſtock, when his Canaanitiſh matches diſpleaſed his parents, &c. But howſoever it was with Iſmael himſelf in matter of piety, it is certain his poſterity grew impious, and were conſtant enemies to Iſrael: they and the reſt of the ſeed of Abraham by Keturah, lived together in Arabiah, and were brethren in evil. The Turks are held by ſome to be of the ſeed of Iſmael, and their uſing Circumciſion is uſed as an argument to confirm it: but that may ſpeak them as well, if not rather, the off-ſpring of the Jews captivated into the Northern parts of the world, by Aſſyria and Babylon, and now increaſed into theſe vaſt multitudes; and poured out toward the weſtern parts.

CHAP. XXVII, XXVIII, XXIX, XXX.

ISAAC is now come to that age at which his brother Iſmael died 14 years ago, namely 137 and it is not improbable that the thought of his death at that age, puts Iſaac in mind of his own end; and he accordingly diſpoſeth towards it by conveying of the bleſſing, and ſetling it upon one of his ſons: his ſending Eſau to hunt for veniſon, that he might eat of his ſavoury meat, and his ſoul might bleſs him, was not becauſe meat or drink would conduce for that ſpiritual purpoſe; but he puts him to this, that he might know whether he ſhould bleſs him or no; for his miſſing of veniſon before had occaſioned the loſs of his birth-right, and if he miſſed of it now, it would be a ſign to Iſaac, that God would have him alſo to loſe the bleſſing. And this Rebeccah eaſily knew to be Iſaacs mind, in ſending Eſau upon that imployment, and ſhe accordingly makes uſe of it, for the advantage of her beloved ſon Jacob; and Iſaac likewiſe paſſeth ſome bleſſing upon Eſau when he ſeeth him to have ſped of a prey, becauſe he ſaw that God would have him to have ſome bleſſing, according to the ſign that Iſaac had propoſed to himſelf, Jacob in his eldeſt brothers garments obtains the bleſſing, the garments of the Prieſt-hood which belonged to the firſt born, and ſo were now kept by Rebeccah in Jacobs right.

Jacob upon fear of Eſaus diſpleaſure, fleeth to Haran; before he goeth he hath the bleſſing which he had ſtollen from his father, now confirmed upon him by his father knowingly and purpoſely.

At Bethel in his way he hath a viſion of a ladder, a type of Chriſt incarnate, that brings Heaven and Earth together, in his two natures, and in his reconciliation; he anoints the pillar and conſecrates the place where he had lain, and voweth his tythes. The mention of Eſaus going to Iſmael, [that is, to Iſmaels family, for Iſmael was dead] and taking his daughter to wife, is ſet before the mention of the viſion at Bethel, and the actions at Haran well, though it were not ſo very ſoon; becauſe the Holy Ghoſt would take up Jacobs ſtory intire and uninterrupted, therefore he ſetteth that ſtory before.

Jacob at Haran well, ſheweth himſelf ſtronger then three men, and rolleth away a ſtone from the wells mouth, which three ſhepherds could not; he meeteth with Rachel and Laban, and indenteth for ſeven years ſervice. A man of threeſcore and ſeventeen years old is bound apprentice for a wife. That this was the year of theſe occurrences, namely the ſeventy ſeventh of Jacobs age, is to be collected backward from the ſtory following, thus; Joſeph the ſon of Jacob was thirty years old when he ſtood before Pharaoh, *Gen.*41.46. then came ſeven years plenty, ver. 47, 53. which made Joſeph thirty and ſeven years old; then paſſed two years famine ere Jacob came into Egypt, Chap. 45. 6. and now was Joſeph thirty and nine years of age; when Jacob came at the end of the two years famine, he himſelf himſelf was an hundred and thirty years old, Chap. 47. 9. Now take the thirty and nine years of Joſeph out of the hundred and thirty years of the age of Jacob, and it appeareth, that Jacob begat Joſeph at the ninety firſt year of his age. Now Joſeph was born in the laſt year of the ſecond ſeven, or in the fourteenth year of Jacobs ſervice with Laban, in the very concluſion of that year, Chap. 30. 25, 26. take therefore fourteen years out of Jacobs ninety one, when Joſeph was born, and the remainder ſeventy ſeven, was the age of Jacob when he entred upon thoſe fourteen years ſervice.

THE third year of famine.
The fourth year of famine.
The fifth year of famine.
The sixth year of famine.
The seventh year of famine.

Joseph buyeth all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh. He feedeth his father and family seventeen years before his fathers death, as his father had nourished him seventeen years before his sale. The children of Israel grow numerous and into multitudes, even before Jacobs death; he adopted Josephs two sons for tribes; he bestoweth the portion of land upon Joseph that he had first bought of the Shechemites, Chap. 33. and was after put to recover it out of the hand of the Amorite with his sword and bow; who had usurped it, and seized upon it, in his absence after his departure thence to Bethel and Hebron: He sweareth Joseph to bury him in the land of Canaan, with his fathers Abraham and Isaac. Thus is the birth-right clearly passed upon Joseph, when his two sons are taken by Jacob, as Simeon and Levi, and when the land is bestowed on him for inheritance.

CHAP. XLIX. L.

JACOB dieth, having first blessed all his sons; even every one of them. A blessing is to be found in his passages to Reuben, Simeon, and Levi, of whom he speaketh the bittrest things. His words throughout concern the future events and occurrences of the tribes, most especially, for he professeth to tell them, what shall befall them in the last days.

That Reuben should have Jether secth vejether gnaz: a remnant of dignity, and a remnant of strength: for he was to lead the field in the wars of Canaan, and was to be victorious against the Hagarens; see Jos. 4. 12. and 1 Chron. 5. 10. He was unstable as water, in affecting the Priest-hood, and refusing the land, Numb. 16. 1,2. and 32. 1. but his father adviseth him אל תותר, Al tother, let not unstability remain in him.

That the scattering of Simeon and Levi among the rest of the tribes, should be for the benefit of themselves, and of others.

That Judah should be Prince, and should be victorious; that Shiloh should descend of him; and that either the Scepter or Law-giver should continue in that tribe till his coming. That Judahs habitation should be a country of vines, so as to tie asses or colts to them, and not to be nice of spoiling them, they should be so abundant; that he should sowse his garments in wine with treading the wine-presses, &c.

That Zebulon should trade at Sea on both hands, in the Ocean, and the Sea of Galilee.

That Issachar should be burdned with two Kingdoms of Phenicia and Samaria, on either hand him; yet love of ease should make him bear and become tributary.

That Dan in Samson shall bite the heels of the Philistims house, and overthrow so many thousand riders; and that makes Jacob to look at the delivery by Christ in the like manner, who should destroy Samson-like by dying.

That Gad should be hard set with the Hagarites, but he and his friends should overcom them at last.

That Asher should abound in corn and provision; and Naphtali in venison, and in him should begin the Gospel.

That Josephs sons should grow by Jacobs well unto a Kingdom, and that his daughters should go עלי שור, even to the enemy: to repair the hostile tribe of Benjamin; which otherwise had decayed for want of wives: as Judg. 21.

That Benjamin should be ravenous and devour the prey to themselves, in the morning of their estate in the great slaughter of Gibeah,

	288	EPHRAIM at Joſephs death could not be leſs then threeſcore and

	292	have begotten children after that, at a very great age. Zabad his ſon,

The Book of EXODUS.

CHAP. I.

2391	308	ABout this time Levi dieth, having lived 137 years; *Exod.*6.16.
	309	It is like that he lived longeſt of all the tribes; and that be-
	310	cauſe only his age, and the age of Joſeph are mentioned of all
	311	the reſt: it ſeemeth that the one died the ſooneſt, and the 312	other lived longeſt of all the twelve. The children of Iſrael after the
	313	death of the twelve Patriarchs, do by degrees fall into all manner of 314	abomination: They commit Idolatry, *Joſh.*24.14. *Ezek.*20.8. They for-
	315	get and forgo Circumciſion, the Covenant of their God; and this was 316	the reproach of Egypt, *Joſh.*5.9. &c. They joyned in marriage with the
	317	Egyptians, Lev. 24. 10. Exod. 12. 38. and walked according to ſuch
	318	wretched principles as theſe: therefore the Lord caſteth them into a fur-
	319	nace of affliction; and now, as in Abrahams viſion, Gen. 15. 12. when
	320	the Sun of Religion is gone down among them, an horrid darkneſs of 321	impiety and miſery comes upon them. Yet doth the ſtrength of the
	322	Promiſe ſhew it ſelf wonderful in both the ſexes; in the men, that they
	323	are ſtrong to beget children, though overpreſſed with intolerable labour;
	324	and in the women, that they bare their children with leſs pain and tedi-
	325	ouſneſs of travel, then other women did; being lively and quick in their
	326	delivery; and were delivered before the midwives came at them. Pha-

wives, obſerving Gods wonderful hand in the womens delivery, diſobeyed the Kings command; and by a glorious confeſſion of Gods hand which they ſaw, will rather venture the Kings diſpleaſure then fight againſt God: for which their piety, God marrieth them to Iſraelites, [for they were Egyptian women] and builded up Iſraelitiſh families by them; ver. 25. Becauſe the midwives feared God he made them houſes.

PSAL. LXXXVIII. & LXXIX.

IN theſe times of bitterneſs and miſery, lived the two ſons of Zerah, or the Ezrahites, Heman and Ethan, 1 *Chron.*2.6. who had the ſpirit of the Lord upon them in the midſt of all this affliction; and they penned the eighty eight, and eighty ninth Pſalms: the former ſadly mourning for the preſent diſtreſs; and the latter cheerfully ſinging the mercies of God in the midſt of this diſtreſs, and prophecying of deliverance. And here is the proper place and order of theſe Pſalms.

The Book of JOB.

IN theſe times when it went thus ſadly with Iſrael in Egypt; there ſhone forth the glorious piety and patience of Job in the land of Uz: and here in order of time doth his book and ſtory come in. It is not poſſible to fix the time of his great trial and affliction to its proper date; but there are two or three conſiderations which do argue that it was about theſe bitter times of Iſraels ſinfulneſs and miſery.

As 1. to conſider how ſuitable it is to the providence of God, and agreeable to his diſpenſation at other times, [as in the matter of Elias and the widow of Sarepta, for one inſtance] that when Religion was utterly loſt and gone in the Church of Iſrael, where it ſhould have been; to find it in the family of Job, in a place where it might have been little ſuppoſed to have been found. 2. How Job is preferred for his piety before any man alive, and that before his patience had given it ſuch a luſtre. 3. If Eliphaz be called a Temanite, as being the immediate ſon of Teman, it helpeth to ſcantling the time exceeding much; for then was he the fourth from Eſau, as Amram was from Jacob, and ſo their times might very well be coincident.

The Book of Job ſeemeth to have been penned by Elihu one of the ſpeakers in it, as may appear by theſe two things. 1. Becauſe in Chap. 2. when Jobs friends that came to lament with him, and to comfort him, are reckoned and mentioned by name, Elihu is not named in the number; arguing, as it may well be conceived, theſe two things, 1. That he came not to Job from a place far diſtant, as the other three did, but neighboured upon him. And 2. that he himſelf was the Hiſtorian and Pen-man that made the relation; and therefore he named not himſelf when he named others. 2. Becauſe in Chap. 32. he ſpeaketh of himſelf as of the Hiſtorian, ver. 15, 16, 17. They were amazed, they anſwer no more, they left off ſpeaking. When I had waited, for they ſpake not, but ſtood ſtill and anſwered no more; I ſaid I will anſwer alſo, I alſo will ſhew my opinion.

Job was a ſon of Nahor, Abrahams brother, deſcended from him by his ſon Uz, *Gen.*22.21. and ſo Elihu and he came to live ſo near together; the one being of Uz the eldeſt ſon of Nahor, and the other of Buz the ſecond.

The order of the Book is facile and direct; the Penman in the two firſt Chapters ſheweth how Job fell into his miſery, who before was one of the richeſt and moſt proſperous men in thoſe parts. On a Sabbath day when the ſons of God preſented themſelves before the Lord, that is, when the profeſſors of the true Religion were met together in the publike aſſembly; Satan was inviſibly there among them, but the Lord ſeeth him, and upon ſome conference about Job, the Lord letteth Satan looſe upon him, in reference to his eſtate; and another Sabbath upon the like occaſion and conference, he letteth him looſe upon him in reference to his body: ſo Satan deſtroyeth all that he hath, and all his children. [Read ver. 5. of Chap. 1. not, when the days of their feaſting were gone about; but, as the days of their feaſting went about:] and ſmiteth him with an intolerable itch, that his nails will not ſerve his turn to ſcratch, but he is glad to get a potſheard to ſcrub himſelf. Then come his three friends to him from a far diſtance, and Elihu his couſen that lived near to him, and theſe in ſeveral ſpeeches to him do but aggravate his miſery, and prove miſerable comforters.

The dialogues or diſputation between him and his three friends do hold this courſe; that he anſwereth, and they reply upon him in the courſe of their age and ſeniority. Their greateſt drift is to prove him extraordinary ſinful, becauſe he was extraordinarily puniſhed; which incharitable errour when he cannot convince them of, becauſe of their prejudice, he ſtoppeth all their mouths by a confident imprecation or execration upon himſelf, if he be ſo faulty as they would make him, *Chap.*31. Then Elihu the Pen-man undertakes to moderate, but inclining to the ſame miſpriſion with the others; the Lord himſelf convinceth them all of the uprightneſs of Job, which no arguments of Job could do; and this not only by an oracle from Heaven, but alſo by Jobs revived proſperity, wherein every thing that he had loſt was reſtored double to him, but only his children; which though they died yet were not loſt. His years were doubled, for he lived an hundred and forty years after his trouble, and ſo was ſeventy years old when his trouble came and died two hundred and ten years old: the longeſt liver born ſince Terah.

CHAP. II. *to Ver.*11.

341 342 343 344 345 346 347 ISRAELS afflictions increaſe upon them; the cruel King of Egypt commanding all the Male children to be ſlain. Miriam was born not far from this time, ſhe was able to ſtand and watch Moſes when he was caſt into the river; her name ſignifieth Bitterneſs and Rebellion both: and it is not to be doubted but holy Amram when he gave her name, had regard to that ſad cauſe and effect, of which they had ſo great cauſe to be ſenſible. Miriam was a Propheteſs, *Exod.*15.20. Micah 6.4.

2431 348 349 350 AARON born; a Saint of the Lord, Pſal. 106.16. His name ſoundeth both of ſorrow and joy: as the tenor of *Pſal.*88.89. made in theſe afflictions, doth.

2433 351 1 MOSES born ſupernaturally, his mother being exceeding old at his 352 2 birth; ſhe was his fathers own Aunt, the daughter of Levi: ſo is Moſes
353 3 a Levite both by father and mother. He is preſerved in an ark like a 354 4 ſecond Noah; his mother is paid for nurſing her own child: he is adopted
355 5 by Pharaohs daughter for her own ſon, and ſo the King is his nurſing Fa-
356 6 ther, and the Queen his nurſing Mother. And in this doth Moſes ty-357 7 pifie Chriſt, that his true Father is unknown to the Egyptians, and he 358 8 reputed the ſon of Pharaoh; as the true Father of Chriſt unknown to 359 9 the Jews, and he reputed the ſon of Joſeph.
360 10 Moſes was educated and learned in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians, 361 11 Acts 7.22. Stephen ſpeaketh this from neceſſary conſequence, not having 362 12 expreſs Text for it; for it could no otherwiſe be conceived of the adopt-363 13 ed ſon of a King, and of a King of Egypt; which Nation was exceeding-364 14 ly given to learning and ſtudy. JOB is yet alive, and probably out-365 15 liveth Moſes; In the reading of his Book it may be advantagious to the 366 16 Reader to obſerve how in very many places it toucheth upon the hiſtory
367 17 that is contained in the Book of Geneſis, though that Book was not then 368 18 written. The creation is handled, *Chap.*38. The firſt Adam mentioned, 369 19 *Chap.*15.7. The fall of Angels and Man, Chap. 4. 20. & 5.2. The miſera-
370 20 ble caſe of Cain, that was hedged in that he could not die, Chap. 3.21.
371 21 The old world and the flood, *Chap.*22.6. The builders of Babel, *Chap.*3.
372 22 15. & 5.13. The fire of Sodom, Chap. 20. 23, 26. and divers ſuch refe-373 23 rences may be obſerved which are cloſely touched in the Book, which 374 24 they came to know, partly by tradition, partly by living ſo near the He-375 25 brews, and the places where theſe things were done, and partly by reve-
376 26 lation; as *Chap.*4.12. & 38.1,
377 27 The Pen-man of the Book before and after the ſpeeches of Job and his 378 28 friends, often uſeth the name Jehovah; but in all the ſpeeches never but 379 29 once, and that is in *Chap.*12.10. ſpeaking there of Gods giving the Crea-380 30 ture his being.

CHAP. II. from Ver. 11. to the end.

Moſes by faith at forty years old, Acts 7. 23. refuſeth the Court; viſiteth his brethren; ſlayeth an Egyptian; fleeth into Midian. Heb. 11. 24, 25, 26. By faith Moſes refuſeth to be called the ſon of Pharaohs daughter: chuſing rather to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon. Eſteeming the reproach of Chriſt greater riches then the treaſures of Egypt, for he had reſpect unto the recompence of the reward. In Midian he marrieth Zipporah, and hath a ſon by her whom he calleth Gerſhom, which ſignifieth a deſolate ſtranger, becauſe of his remote reſidence from his own people in a forain land.

Iſrael is not yet throughly humbled under their affliction, and therefore it is but juſt they ſhould continue under it; they refuſed the deliverer when he offered himſelf unto them, with, Who made thee a Prince and a Ruler over us? And therefore they are but anſwered according to their own dealing when their deliverance is deferred: this deferring was for forty years; and ſo when being upon the borders of Canaan, they refuſed that good land, their entrance into it is deferred forty years alſo.

Moſes paſſeth through ſhepherdy and tribulation to the government; and ſo doth David after him: A figure of the great ſhepherd of the ſheep, &c. Jether [or in Arabick pronuntiation Jethro] a ſon of Abraham, but an alien to Abrahams God, is happy in his ſon-in-law; a ſon of Abraham, and of Abrahams faith: by him he is inſtructed and taught in the way and knowledge of the true God. [In Arabia where ſojourned this firſt Prophet and Law-giver Moſes, there aroſe the falſe Prophet and deceiver Mahomet.] Moſes is now exceedingly changed in Midian from his ſtate and ſtudies, which he had whilſt he was in Egypt; there he was a high courtier, here a poor ſhepherd; there a ſtudent in Philoſophy and Egyptian wiſdom, here a ſtudent of Divinity, and of God himſelf. In this Country and deſert where he now liveth, and retireth in ſo private a condition, he muſt ere long do glorious things, and before he die deſtroy Midian: That Country had been firſt planted by Cuſh the ſon of Cham, therefore Aaron and Miriam call Moſes wife a Cuſhite, Numb. 12, 1. and Zerah the Arabian is ſo called, 2 Chron. 14. But Abraham by the conqueſt of Chedorlaomer, and the other Kings with him, had obtained that land for his own, and thither he ſent the concubines ſons.

CHAP. III. IV.

Moſes feeding his ſheep and ſtudying upon God, hath a viſion of Chriſt in a buſh, appearing in fire, as he had done when he made the Promiſe, Gen. 15. 17, 18. He giveth Moſes commiſſion for Iſraels deliverance; and the power of miracles for their ſakes that believed not. Moſes himſelf fell under this predicament of unbelief, and ſhifteth all he can to avoid the imployment, as doubting and diſtruſting the iſſue; and when he muſts needs go upon it, he dare not leave his wife and children behind him, for fear he ſhould never return to them again: but taketh his wife with him, though ſhe were but newly delivered of a child, and her infant with her, though it were not ſo much as eight days old. For this his diſtruſt, the Lord meets him by the way, and ſeeks to kill him; which danger Zipporah his wife miſconceiving to have been, becauſe her infant was not circumciſed: [it having by this time paſſed the eighth day] ſhe circumciſeth it: but Moſes conſcious of the proper cauſe, recovereth his faith, and in evidence of his faith, calleth the child Eliazer, in aſſurance of Gods help to him, and ſo the danger departeth. Moſes and Aaron meet in the wilderneſs; go together into Egypt; aſſemble the elders of Iſrael; relate their commiſſion, and are believed.

CHAP.

CHAP. V.

Moſes beginneth to execute his commiſſion: obſerve that he was with Iſrael in the wilderneſs forty years compleat; that he was eighty years old when he began to deal with Pharaoh, *Exod.*7.7. that he was a good while before he got Iſrael releaſed, and it teacheth how to date and lay the occurrences of his eightieth year.

CHAP. VI.

GOD proclaimeth himſelf JEHOVAH, The faithful one of his Promiſe: he had revealed himſelf to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, by the name of El-ſhaddai, The God almighty; and they relied upon his all-ſufficiency, being fully perſwaded that what he had promiſed, he was able to perform: as Rom. 4.21. And now he cometh to glorifie another attribute of his, namely his truth and faithfulneſs, in making good what he had promiſed.

Moſes goeth about, as if he would reckon the heads of all Iſrael, but he only nameth three tribes; and that not only becauſe in the third, namely in the tribe of Levi, his ſtory fixed upon Moſes and Aaron, the men that he looked after; but alſo, becauſe he would only name the moſt ſcandalous of all the twelve: Reuben the inceſtuous with his Fathers wife, and Simeon and Levi the murderers of Shechem; that he might ſhew their intire converſion, and magnifie Gods mercy in their pardon; and lay this in the very entry of the now building Church, for a comfortable copy for penitents to look after: as the four women are mentioned in the beginning of the Goſpel in *Mat.*1. for ſuch another purpoſe.

CHAP. VII. VIII. IX. X. *to Ver.*21.

Moſes beginneth to work miracles, and to bring plagues upon Egypt; his rod is turned into a Crocodile: the waters in which the childrens blood had been ſhed, is turned into blood. Their great deity Nilus is plagued firſt. The plague of Frogs; they go up even over all the land, and raven upon the very bodies of men: As Moſes brought real Frogs upon Egypt, ſo the Inchanters bring magical Frogs upon Goſhen. The plague of lice, at which the Magicians are at a non-plus; and blaſpheme horridly againſt Jehovah, when they ſay, This is the finger of God, [but not of Jehovah.] The plague of noyſom beaſts; Flies, Waſps, Snaks, &c. Now God ſeparateth betwixt Iſrael and Egypt; betwixt whom there had been no difference in the preceding plagues. The plague of Murrain upon Beaſts, Boils upon Men, and Hail upon the Land, and Locuſts.

CHAP. XII. *to Ver.*21.

THE beginning of the year is changed; the Paſsover is inſtituted and commanded: although the ſtory of its inſtitution be ſet after the plague of darkneſs, yet was it commanded before the plague of Darkneſs came, and it may be, before the plague of Hail or Locuſts came; for aſſoon as ever the Darkneſs is over, and any Egyptian can ſtir, Pharaoh ſendeth for Moſes, Chap. 10.24. and after ſome ſmart ſpeeches betwixt them, Moſes telleth him of the Slaughter of the firſt-born, that it ſhould be the very next night, *Chap.*11.4,8. ſo that the Darkneſs did but end on the very morning of Paſsover day; and it had been upon the Egyptians, the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth days of the month, and the Paſsover was on the fourteenth. Now the command for the Paſsover was given to Moſes before the tenth day of the month at leaſt, *Chap.*12.3. if not on the very firſt day of the month, as is more probable. The reaſon therefore why the ſtory of the inſtitution of it is laid after this plague, is becauſe the Holy Ghoſt would handle that matter of the Paſsover all at once; and though the command for it, and the obſervation of it fell at ſome days diſtance, yet hath he brought both together, and handled the ſtory of its inſtitution, at that time when fell out the ſtory of its obſervation, namely on the fourteenth day.

THE plague of Darkneſs for three days: In it the Egyptians ſaw the apparition of Devils and evil Spirits; and in the time of this Darkneſs, the Iſraelites are circumciſed. Moſes on the Paſover day morning, giveth warning to Pharaoh of the death of the firſt-born; on the fourteenth day in the morning, he giveth charge for preparation of the Paſover againſt even: which is accordingly done, and the Paſover kept. At midnight all the firſt-born of Egypt are ſlain; and Iſrael even driven out by the Egyptians.

CHAP. XIII. XIV. XV. XVI. XVII.

2514 | 81 | 1 THE command for obſerving the Paſover renewed, and a command for dedicating the firſt-born given. The cloud of glory is their conductor; their march was meaſured by theſe times: On the fifteenth day of Niſan, even while it was yet night, they began their march, and go out in the ſight of all Egypt, while they are burying their dead: this day they go from Rameſes to Succoth. The ſixteenth day they come to the edge of the wilderneſs of Etham; the Red-ſea pointeth ſo into this wilderneſs, that before they paſs through the Red-ſea, they are in the wilderneſs of Etham, and when they are paſſed through, they are in it again. The wilderneſs of Etham and Shur, are one and the ſame; ſee Numb. 33. 7,8. and compare Exod. 15. 22. On the ſeventeenth day they come to Hiroth. On the eighteenth day it is told Pharaoh that the people fled; for till their third days march, they went right for Horeb, according as they had deſired to go three days journey to ſacrifice; but when they turned out of that way toward the Red-ſea, then Pharaoh hath intelligence, that they intended to go ſome whither elſe, then whither they asked to go: thereupon, he and Egypt prepair to purſue them, for their Jewels and their Servants. On the nineteenth day they purſue: On the twentieth day towards even they overtake them, and Iſrael entereth the Sea, and by break of day are all marched through, and the Egyptians drowned.

On the one and twentieth day of the moneth in the morning betime they came out of the Sea; this was the laſt holy day of the Paſover week: they ſung for their delivery, and after three days march they come to Marah; and from thence to Elim, and there they pitch divers days.

On the fifteenth day of the month Ijar, they come to the wilderneſs of Zin, murmur for bread as they had done at Marah for water; and they have Quails ſent them and Manna. The Sabbath now firſt mentioned, but not now firſt commanded; in Egypt they had neglected the Sabbath; ſince their coming thence, they had marched on it; now a rule is given for its conſtant obſervation. The people murmur a fourth time, and it is for water, which they obtain out of the rock, but are ſcourged by Amalek for their repining: Amalek conquered by Moſes his prayer.

CHAP. XIX.

THE eighteenth Chapter that containeth the ſtory of Jethro is anticipated, and is to be taken in at the tenth of Numbers, betwixt the tenth and eleventh Verſes; and the reaſon of this diſlocation, and proof of the order, ſhall be ſhewed there. On the firſt day of Sivan, Iſrael cometh to Sinai.

On the ſecond day, Moſes called by the Lord, goeth up into the Mount, talketh with God, and when he cometh down, relateth the words of the Lord unto the people.

On the third day he goeth up, and relateth the peoples anſwer unto God.

On the fourth and fifth day he ſanctifieth the people, and boundeth the mountain.

CHAP. XX. XXI. XXII. XXIII. XXIV.

ON the ſixth day of the moneth Sivan in the morning, the Ten Commandments are given by Chriſt, with ſuch terror, that the people are not able to abide it, but deſire Moſes to be a Mediator: he drawing near to God in the thick darkneſs, receiveth ſeven and fifty Precepts, Ceremonial and Judicial; which when he cometh down from the Mount he telleth the people of, and writeth in a book.

On the next day, which was the ſeventh day of the month Sivan, in the morning, he buildeth an altar to repreſent Chriſt; and ſetteth up twelve pillars, to repreſent the twelve Tribes; and with blood beſprinkled upon both, he bringeth the people into covenant with God: after the making of which covenant, the elders of Iſrael that before might not come near the Lord, now ſee him, and eat and drink before him, and he layeth not his avenging hand on them: And from among them he calleth Moſes up into the Mount to himſelf; and he goeth up, and from hence he beginneth his forty days faſt, which upon occaſions he doubleth, yea trebleth, and concludeth his third or laſt faſt on that day which was from thence forward ordained the day of expiation.

CHAP. XXV. XXVI. XXVII. XXVIII. XXIX. XXX. XXXI.

WHile Moſes is in the Mount with God, he ſheweth him a Tabernacle pitched with all the utenſils of it, and a Prieſt arrayed in all his habiliments, and giveth him charge and inſtructions to make another according to that pattern, and appointeth Bezaleel and Aholiab for chief work-men.

CHAP. XXXII. XXXIII. XXXIV.

Moſes on the ſeventeenth day of the month Tammuz, cometh down from the Mount, and findeth a golden Calf, breaketh it, and breaketh the two Tables; for whereas God had given him the two Tables, written at the end of his firſt forty days faſt, Moſes brake thoſe Tables at the ſight of the golden Calf; to ſhew that Iſrael had made themſelves unworthy of ſo great a Jewel, and whereas the Lord had given him a pattern, and a command for the making and ſetting up of a Tabernacle, and the ſervice of it: that benefit is alſo forfeited by their calviſh Idolatry, and neither Tables reſtored, nor Tabernacle to be made, till Moſes by long and earneſt prayer had made Iſraels peace.

Moſes having deſtroyed the golden calf and ſlain the Idolaters, returns the next day to God by prayer; but is returned back the ſame day with a ſad meſſage, whereupon Iſrael is humbled; the tent of Moſes which hitherto had been in ſtead of a Tabernacle, is removed out of the unclean camp, and then the cloud of glory which had been taken away becauſe of Idolatry, is reſtored. The next day Moſes goeth up to the Mount again, and falleth into a ſecond forty days faſt; and as in his firſt forty days faſt he had ſeen the figure and pattern of a glorious Tabernacle, ſo now in this ſecond forty days faſt, he deſireth to have a ſight of the glory of God. On the thirtieth day of the month Ab, he goeth up again with the two Tables, and beginneth another forty days faſt; and ſeeth the Lord, and heareth him proclaim himſelf by moſt glorious attributes, and receiveth ſome commands from him. On the tenth day of the month Tiſri, he cometh down with the glad tydings, that all is well betwixt God and Iſrael, with the renewed Tables in his hand, and with commiſſion to ſet about making the Tabernacle.

AND ſo do Iſrael fall about that work, which by the firſt day of the month Abib, the firſt month of the next year is finiſhed, and it begun to be erected; when it is ſet up the cloud of glory filleth it, and God taketh up his ſeat upon the Ark, in figure of his dwelling amongſt men in Chriſt.

The Book of LEVITICUS.

OUT of the Tabernacle newly erected, God giveth ordinances for it; and firſt concerning Sacrifice, to repreſent Chriſts death, as the Tabernacle it ſelf did repreſent his body. The whole time of the ſtory of Leviticus is but one moneth, namely the firſt month of the ſecond year of their deliverance; and not altogether ſo much neither, for the very firſt beginning of the month was taken up in the erecting of the Tabernacle; of which the ſtory is in Exod. 40.

CHAP. I. II. III. IV. V. VI. VII.

RUles given for all manner of ſacrifices. This is the firſt Oracle given from off the Mercy-ſeat. There is the letter א in the very firſt word of the Book, ויקרא written leſs then all his fellows, and it ſeemeth by ſuch a writing to hint and intimate, that though this were a glorious Oracle, yet was it ſmall in compariſon of what was to come, when God would ſpeak to his people by his own Son, whom the Ark, Mercy-ſeat, and Oracle did repreſent. א ויקרא

CHAP. VIII. IX.

THE ſeven days of the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons, follow after the time of the ſetting up of the Tabernacle, and were not coincident or concurrent with that time, as the Jews very generally; but very groundleſly do apprehend: [as, Seder Olam; Tanchum ex R. Joſephi: Baal Turim: Ab: Ezra: R. Sol: and others,] For 1. this command for their conſecration is given out of the Tabernacle now erected; as well as the rules for ſacrifice were. And 2. they abide the ſeven days in the Tabernacle, *Chap.*8.33. and the very firſt day of the ſeven, the congregation were gathered to the door, verſ. 3, 4. which undeniably ſhew, that it was finiſhed and ſet up when theſe ſeven days of conſecration began.

CHAP. X.

THE death of Nadab and Abihu was on the very firſt day that the ſervice of the Altar began; namely, on that eighth day after the ſeven of the conſecration, when Aaron and his ſons offered ſacrifices for themſelves and the people. This appeareth plainly by comparing the third and fifteenth Verſes of the ninth Chapter with the ſixteenth Verſe of this tenth Chapter: and thus the ſervice of the Sanctuary by an accident began with Death and Judgment.

NUMBERS IX. to Ver. 15.

AFter the end of the tenth Chapter of Leviticus, in the proper order of ſtory, are the firſt fourteen Verſes of the ninth Chapter of Numbers to be taken in, which treat concerning the Paſsover. For the Tabernacle being reared on the very firſt day of the ſecond year of their coming out of Egypt, namely, on the firſt day of Niſan; theſe orders and rules concerning Sacrifices and the Prieſts conſecration were given, and the eight days of Prieſts conſecration and Sacrifices, were accompliſhed before the fourteenth day of that month came, when the Paſsover was to be kept by an old command, given the laſt year in Egypt, and by a ſecond command now given in the wilderneſs, ſo that this order and method is clear.

Now the reaſon why this ſtory of this ſecond Paſsover is not only not laid in its proper place in this Book of Leviticus, but alſo out of its proper place, in the Book of Numbers; [for the Book beginneth its ſtory with the beginning of the ſecond month, but this ſtory of the Paſsover belongeth to the firſt month:] The reaſon I ſay of this diſlocation is, becauſe Moſes his chief aim in that place, is to ſhew and relate the new diſpenſation, or command for a Paſsover in the ſecond month, which was a matter of very great moment. For the tranſlation of that feaſt a month beyond its proper time, did the rather inforce the ſignificancy of things future then of things paſt; as rather recording the death of Chriſt to come, then their delivery from Egypt, when it hit not on that very night.

This ſtory therefore of the Paſsover transferred to the ſecond month upon ſome occaſions, being the matter that Moſes chiefly aimed at, and reſpected in that relation, and hiſtory; he hath ſet it in his proper place, for ſo is that where it lies in the Book of Numbers: and intending and aiming at the mention of that, he hath alſo brought in the mention of the right Paſsover, or that of the firſt month, as it was neceſſary he ſhould, to ſhew the occaſion of the other.

LEVITICUS XI. XII. XIII. XIV. XV.

AFter the rules for things clean and fit for ſacrifice, the Lord cometh to give rules for things clean and fit to eat, and clean and fit to touch; for this was the tripartite diſtinction of clean or unclean in the Law. Every thing that was unclean to touch, was unclean to eat; but every thing that was unclean to eat, was not unclean to touch: every thing that was unclean to eat, was unclean to ſacrifice; but every thing that was unclean to ſacrifice, was not unclean to eat: for many things might be eaten, which might not be ſacrificed, and many things might be touched, which might not be eaten. And under the Law, about clean and unclean, there is exceeding much of the doctrine of ſin, and renovation touched; conſiderable in very many particulars:

1. By the Law of Moſes nothing was unclean to be touched while it was alive, but only man. A man in Leproſie unclean to be touched, Lev. 13. and a woman in her ſeparation, Lev. 12. but Dogs, Swine, Worms, &c. not unclean to be touched till they be dead, Lev. 11.31.

2. By the Law of Moſes uncleanneſs had ſeveral degrees, and Leproſie was the greateſt. There was uncleanneſs for a day, as by touching a dead beaſt: for a week, as by touching a dead man; for a month, as a woman after Child-birth; and for a year or more, as Leproſie.

3. Every Prieſt had equal priviledge and calling to judge of the Leproſie, as well as the the high Prieſt.

4. The Prieſts that were judges of Leproſie could not be tainted with it; ſee the notes at Numb. 12.

5. The Prieſts could not make any man clean, but only pronounce him clean.

6. He that was Leprous all over, and no place free, was to be pronounced clean; for it appeared that all the poyſon was come forth, and the danger of infecting others was paſt; but he that had any part that was not ſcabby over, he was unclean: he that appears before God in any of his own righteouſneſs, like the proud Phariſee, he hath his anſwer in that Parable; but that humble confeſſion of a poor ſinner that ſhews him Leprous all over, like that of the Publican, obtains the beſt anſwer.

7. The Leper that was cleanſed had not his diſeaſe healed; but the danger of the infection being over, he was reſtored to the ſociety of men again: ſo that he was not ſo much clean unto himſelf, as unto the Congregation.

THE ſolemn and myſterious Feaſt of Reconciliation, inſtituted to be on the tenth day of the month Tiſri, the day that Moſes had come down from the Mount; with tydings of reconciliation betwixt God and the People, as was ſaid before. And as the ſolemnity and carriage of the work of this day was a figure of good things to come in Chriſt, ſo the very time it ſelf, had ſome reſpect that way; for if Chriſt were not born and came into the World a Reconciler on that very day, yet was he born and baptized [nine and twenty years after] in that very month.

CHAP. XVII. XVIII. XIX. XX. XXI. XXII. XXIII. XXIV. XXV.

DIvers Laws are given, concerning Offerings, Marriages, Feſtivals, the Prieſts and other things, and the main end of them all, Piety, Sanctity, Charity, and in them a diſtinction of Iſrael from other people.

CHAP. XXVI. XXVII.

SAD denunciation of judgment upon diſobedience, and the valuation of perſons, in reference to redemption of vows. Hoſea ſpeaketh in alluſion to the rates and values mentioned here, when he ſaith, I bought her to me for fifteen ſhekels of ſilver, and for an homer of barly, and half an homer of barly, Hoſ. 3.2.

The fifteen ſhekels was the value of a man above ſixty years old, *Lev.*27.7. The homer of barly which valued fifty ſhekels, ver. 16. was the value of a man from twenty years old to ſixty, *ver.*3. And half an homer which valued five and twenty ſhekels, was for one from five years old to twenty, twenty ſhekels, ver. 5. And from a month old to five years, five ſhekels, *ver.*6.

The Book of NUMBERS.

CHAP. I.

ON the firſt day of the ſecond month, the Lord provided for the pitching of their camp, as on the firſt day of the firſt month, they had begun to erect the Tabernacle. Firſt the people are numbred from twenty years old and upwards, and their ſum amounteth to 603550. men; of all which number, only two men enter the land. The Levites are not reckoned in this ſum, nor with this reckoning; and accordingly they fall not under the ſame curſe with the others, of not entring into his reſt. Not a man impotent through old age in Iſrael.

CHAP. II.

THeir Camp is pitched, and the Sanctuary ſet juſt in the middle of it; for Religion is the heart of a State. The Levites pitch next unto it in a quadrangular body round about it, at a certain diſtance. The whole body of the army pitcheth at an other diſtance about them, in the ſame form, and 2000 cubits diſtance from the Tabernacle: every ſide of the ſquare carried its ſeveral colours; Judah, a Lion; Ephraim, a Bullock; Reuben, a Man; Dan, an Eagle. Compare the deſcription of Chriſt dwelling in the middeſt of the Chriſtian Church, Rev. 4.4. The Ark, the ſtrength of the Lord, Pitcheth before Ephraim and Benjamin, and Manaſſeh, Pſal.80.2.

CHAP. III. IV.

THE Levites taken for the firſt-born of Iſrael, and ſo intereſſed in every family among them. The firſt-born had been Prieſts till the conſecration of the Levites, now that function muſt be confined to that Tribe. The Levites ingaged to their ſervice from nine and twenty years old compleat, or thirty currant till fifty. Our Saviours age at his entrance into his Miniſtry, Luke 3.23. anſwereth to this type.

CHAP. V. VI.

A Law concerning uncleanneſs and offences, that the Camp might continue in purity, and unity, chaſtity and unchaſtity tried miraculouſly. The Law concerning Nazarites, the only votaries of the people. The Congregation to be bleſſed by the Prieſts, in the name of the Trinity.

CHAP. VII. VIII.

THE Princes offer to the Sanctuary, and more ordinances are given about it. That they offered not till they were ordered into their ſtandards, is plain by the order and method of their offering. The Levites to be five years probationers at the Sanctuary before they take their office, *Chap.*8.24. compared with *Chap.*4. 23.

CHAP. IX. *from Ver.*15. to the end. And CHAP. X. *to Ver.*11.

BEfore the reading of the fifteenth Verſe, the Reader is to ſuppoſe a Paſover to be kept the fourteenth day of this ſecond month, although the keeping of it be not expreſly mentioned, but only hinted; for on the fourteenth day of the firſt month, which was the proper day for the Paſover, ſome men becauſe they were unclean could not obſerve it, and upon their acquainting Moſes with their caſe, he preſently gives them a warrant, to keep it the fourteenth day of the next month, which they did no doubt accordingly, although it be not in plain terms related.

related. For the occurrences mentioned in the Book hitherto, came to paſs in the firſt thirteen days of the month, [ſave only the offering of the Princes, which indeed began before the fourteenth day, but continued beyond it; notwithſtanding the Holy Ghoſt would conclude the ſtory of their offering all together,] and on the fourteenth day, thoſe that had been unclean at the proper time of the Paſsover, kept the Paſsover by a new ordinance, ſo that the order of the ſtory of this new Paſsover, is moſt genuine and proper here; but Moſes could not relate the thing, but he muſt relate the occaſion, namely becauſe ſome could not keep it at the right time, therefore he giveth the ſtory of the right time here, which as we ſhewed before, lieth properly between the tenth and eleventh Chapters of Levitichs.

From the fifteenth Verſe of this Chapter to the eleventh Verſe of the tenth Chapter, there is mention of two ſpecial things; namely the dwelling of the cloud upon the Tabernacle, and the making of the ſilver Trumpets; which however they were indeed ſomewhat afore this time, [for the Cloud deſcended, and the Trumpets were made before the fourteenth day of this month,] yet are they brought in here as relating to the removal of the Army, which is mentioned in Chap. 10. verſ. 11. for then the Cloud was taken up, and the Trumpets were ſounded.

EXODUS XVIII.

BEtween the tenth and eleventh Verſes of the tenth of Numbers, as in its proper place and order, cometh in the ſtory of Jethro, contained in the eighteenth of Exodus, as may be evidenced by theſe obſervations.

Firſt, That that ſtory lieth not in its proper place in the Book of Exodus, may be concluded upon theſe two or three reaſons; firſt, becauſe there it is ſaid, Jethro took burnt-offerings and ſacrifices for God, ver. 12. Now as the ſtory lieth there, the Law for burnt-offerings and ſacrifices was not yet given. 2. It is ſaid, that Moſes ſate to judge the people, and made them know the Statutes of God, and his Laws, verſ. 13, 16. Now as the ſtory lieth there, the Statutes and Laws are not as yet given to Moſes, and he himſelf knoweth them not. 3. The chuſing of Judges and Elders, which was upon Jethro's counſel, was not till their departing from Sinai, Deut. 1. 7, 8. And now as the ſtory of Jethro lieth in the book of Exodus, they are not as yet come to Sinai; therefore that that ſtory is miſplaced as it lieth there, there is evidence ſufficient. There remaineth only to ſee why it is laid there out of its proper place and where is the proper place to lay it; the former may be reſolved upon, by looking back upon the curſe that God denounceth upon Amalek, in the 17 Chapter: I will put out the remembrance of Amalek from under Heaven: And the Lord hath ſworn, that the Lord will have war with Amalek from generation to generation, ver. 14, 16. Now that the Holy Ghoſt might ſhew that Jethro who dwelt among the Amalekites, 1 Sam. 15. 16. did not fall under this curſe, he bringeth in the ſtory of his coming into Iſrael, in the very next place after that curſe is related; not thereby to conclude ſtrictly that his coming was at that very time aſſoon as the curſe was denounced; but to ſhew that he once came, and ſo avoideth and eſcapeth that curſe.

Now that the proper place of that ſtory is this that we have mentioned, may be evidenced by theſe particulars: Firſt, that Moſes himſelf telleth, Deut. 1. 7. that their choice of Judges, which was by Jethro's counſel, inſtantly upon his coming, was ſo near their departure from Sinai, which is metioned Num. 10. ver. 11. that the warning of their departure was given him before. 2. That the murmuring of Aaron and Miriam againſt Zipporah Moſes wife, [which in all probability was upon her firſt coming among them, and their converſe with her or inſtantly after,] is ſet after their departure from Sinai. 3. That the departure of Hobab or Jethro from them at Sinai, is joyned ſo near to the place where we ſuppoſe this ſtory of his coming is to be laid, as that but a few Verſes come between; and compair that ſtory with the latter end of Exodus 18. and it will help to confirm this place to be the proper place of its order.

CHAP.

CHAP. X. from Verſ. 11. to the end.

THE Cloud is taken up on the twentieth day of the ſecond month, and the Camp removeth from Sinai to the wilderneſs of Paran; three days journy. In the 35 Verſe of this Chapter, the letter Nun is written the wrong way in the word בנסע, when the Ark ſet forward, and ſo is it alſo in the firſt Verſe of the next Chapter in the word בתאננים, they became as murtherers. In the former is hinted, as the Jews obſerve, Gods gracious turning back towards the people; in the latter the peoples ungracious turning away from God.

CHAP. XI.

AT their firſt incamping after Jethro's departure, Moſes findeth an occaſion to chuſe Judges and Elders, to help to bear the burden with him; and therefore the 24, 25, 26. Verſes of Exodus 18. are to be reputed coincident with this time. The Sanhedrin choſen by Moſes and indued with the Spirit by God; ſix of a Tribe made up the number, and two over, and theſe two were Eldad and Medad, who were written for Elders, but the lot caſt them out, that there might be but ſeventy: yet did the Lord honour them with the Spirit of Prophecy.

CHAP. XII.

ZIpporah Moſes wife called a Cuſhite, for Arabia was the land of Cuſh, for her ſake Aaron and Miriam begin to rebel againſt Moſes authority; for which Miriam is ſtruck with Leproſie, but Aaron is not, becauſe he was the Judge of Leproſie, and could not be tainted with it. Their ſin cauſeth the Cloud of glory to depart, as the ſin of the golden Calf had done before; there Aaron had a hand in the ſin alſo; Moſes vindicated by God himſelf; It is ſaid, *They removed from Hazeroth, and pitched in the wilderneſs of Paran, ver.*16. that is, they marched and pitched in that wilderneſs: ſee Chap. 10.12.

CHAP. XIII.

THEY are now come not very far from the South-point of the land of Canaan, [compare *Ver.*26. and *Deut.*1.2,19.] and Moſes at the deſire of the people, Deut. 1.22. ſendeth twelve men to ſpy the land: Sethur the man for the Tribe of Aſher, *ver.*13. his name is in number 666. and in ſignification hidden or myſtical; it is toward the end of the year Stilo veteri, when they ſearch the land; for grapes and figs are then ripe, verſ. 20.

CHAP. XIV.

THE decree and oath in Gods anger, that they ſhould not enter into his reſt, cometh forth, and beginneth to ſeize upon ſome of them; for the ten men that cauſed the people to murmur died by the plague: as they were forty days in ſearching the land, ſo the people muſt wander forty years ere they came to enjoy it; that is, eight and thirty years and an half to make up the year and half that had paſſed ſince their coming out of Egypt to be forty: and in that time muſt all the men that were numbred at Sinai, [the Levites excepted] be conſumed in the wilderneſs; and here is mans age cut ſhort again, as it had been at the Flood and building of Babel.

PSAL. XC.

UPON this ſad decree of God againſt the people, and upon his cutting ſhort mans age, Moſes maketh the nintieth Pſalm, [whoſe proper order is coincident with this ſtory,] and there ſadly ſheweth how they were conſumed by Gods anger for their impieties: that now mans age

This place was called Rithmah before, Numb. 33.18. compared with *Numb.*12. 16. & 13.26. and it may be it was ſo called from the Juniper-trees that grew there: as 1 Kings 19. 4. but now named Kadeſh, becauſe the Lord was there ſanctified upon the people, as Chap. 20.13. and Barnea, or the wandering ſon, becauſe here was the decree made of their long wandering in the wilderneſs. Here at Kadeſh they continued a good ſpace before they removed; for ſo Moſes ſaith, Ye abode in Kadeſh many days: ימים אשר ישבתם, according to the days that ye had made abode, namely at Sinai, as ver. 6. and ſo they ſpent one whole year there, for ſo they had done at Sinai: and whereas God bids them upon their murmuring to turn back to the Red-ſea, *Deut.*1.40. his meaning was, that at their next march whenſoever it was, they ſhould not go forward towards Canaan, but clean back again towards the Red-ſea from whence they came.

moſt ſweetly ſheweth their confuſedneſs. They had lain here a whole twelve-month at their being here before, but then no want of water, for the rock or the waters of Horeb had followed them hither, but how that was now departed is not expreſſed.

Moſes and Aaron are excluded Canaan for not believing the Lord, and not ſanctifying him before the people; their particular fault is diverſly gueſſed at, it ſeemeth to me that it was this; What ſay they, ye rebels, muſt we bring water out of this rock, as we did out of Horeb? Is all our hopes and expectation of getting out of the wilderneſs come to this? We never fetched you water out of a rock but once, and that was becauſe ye were to ſtay a long time in the wilderneſs, and that was to ſerve you all the while, as we have ſeen it did by experience. Now that water is gone, and muſt we now fetch you water out of another rock? O ye rebels, have you brought it to this by your murmuring, that we muſt have a new ſtay in the wilderneſs, and a new rock opened to yield you water for your long ſtay as Horeb did? Are we to begin our abode in the wilderneſs anew now when we hoped that our travel had been ended; and ſo we ſhall never get out? And ſo he ſmote the rock twice in a fume and anger. And thus they believed not the promiſe of entring the land after forty years; and thus they ſanctified not the Lord in the ſight of the people to incourage them in the Promiſe, but damped them in it; and thus they ſpake unadviſedly in their lips, and ſo they were excluded Canaan. It was a ſign that the Promiſe aimed at better things then the earthly Canaan, when the holieſt perſons in all Iſrael are debarred from coming thither from Kadeſh Barnea, they turn back toward the Red-ſea again, as they had done before, Deut. 1.40. becauſe Edom would not now give them paſſage.

Aaron dieth in Horhagidgad the firſt day of the fifth month, and is lamented all that month.

CHAP. XXI.

SOme Canaanites are overcome; here appeareth ſome glimpſe of the performance of Gods promiſe, but the people turning clean back again, they begin to murmur. Here the ſtrange word העליחונו ver. 5. and the ſcornful word הקלקל, uſed for Manna, ſheweth their ſcornfulneſs and fuming: Seraphim, Nehaſhim, fiery Serpents, or Serpents of a flame colour ſting the murmurers; and the brazen Serpent lifted up and looked at cureth them: a figure of better things to come, Joh. 3. 14. This brazen Serpent ſeemeth to have named the place Zalmonah, Num. 33. 42. that is, the place of the image; and the coming up of the Serpents upon the people, ſeemeth alſo to have named the place there about Maaleh Akrabbim, The coming up of the Scorpions: See Joſh. 15.3.

From Zalmonah they remove to Pimon, to Oboth, to Ije Aharim by the border of Moab; they are forbidden to invade Moab, Deut. 2.9. They paſs the valley Zared; and here all the generation numbred at Sinai is clean gone, Deut. 2.14. They coaſt along Moab and Ammon, and ſo to the other ſide Arnon, Deut. 2.13,18,24.

In Numb. 21. ver. 14. there is this Geographical quotation taken out of the book of the wars of the Lord which deſcribeth that part of the Country thus, Vaheb in Suphah, and the brooks of Arnon, and the ſtream of the brooks that goeth down to the dwelling of Ar, and lieth upon the border of Moab. This Book of the war of the Lord, ſeemeth to have been ſome Book of remembrances and directions written by Moſes for Joſhua's private inſtructions in the managing of the wars after him; ſee Exod. 17. 14, 16. It may be this Book was alſo called Sepher Iaſher, liber rectus, or a directory for Joſhua from Moſes, what to do and what to expect in his wars; and in it Moſes directs the ſetting up of Archery, 2 Sam. 1. 18. and warrants him to command the Sun, and to expect its obedience, Joſh. 10.13.

From thence they come to Beer, where the ſeventy Elders of the Sanhedrin by Moſes appointment, do bring forth waters by the ſtroke of their ſtaves, as he had done with the ſtroke of his Rod; this great work and wonder, and this great priviledge beſtowed upon ſo many of them, maketh all the people to ſing for joy.

Sihon and Og conquered; It is now ſix and twenty generations from the Creation, or from Adam to Moſes, and accordingly doth Pſal. 136. rehearſe the durableneſs of Gods mercy ſix and twenty times over, beginning the ſtory with the Creation, and ending it in the conqueſt of Sihon and Og: The numerals of the name Jehovah, amount to the ſum of ſix and twenty.

CHAP. XXII. XXIII. XXIV. XXV.

BAlaam cannot curſe Iſrael, but curſeth Amalek their firſt, and Rome their laſt enemy: He foretelleth that Iſrael ſhall be ſo proſperous and happy, that he wiſheth that his end might be like theirs. He returns to his own place, *Chap.*24.25. that is, ſaith Baal Turim, He went to hell, as Acts 1.25. He went not home to Syris his own Country, but he went homeward, and by the way falls in with Midian, and giveth them the curſed counſel to intangle Iſrael with their Daughters and Idolatry. Iſrael is yoked יצמד to Baal Peor, not only to the Idol, but to the women; the old generation of wicked Iſrael is utterly gone, and this new generation that muſt enter Canaan, begins after their fathers with ſuch courſes as theſe: there died for this ſin 24000 men: viz. 23000 by the plague, 1 *Cor.*10.8. and 1000 by the hand of Juſtice.

CHAP. XXVI. XXVII. XXVIII. XXIX. XXX.

THE people are numbred that muſt go into Canaan, as thoſe had been that came out of Egypt: One family of Simeon that had gone into Egypt is extinct, namely that of Ohad; a Prince of Simeon had been chief actor in the matter of Peor, *Chap.*25.14. It may be that utterly rooted out his ſtock. Divers Laws given.

CHAP. XXXI. XXXII.

MIdian deſtroyed, though Abrahams children; Reuben, Gad, and half Manaſſeh, have thereby the quieter ſetling beyond Jordan, when they ſay, We will build us Sheepfolds and Cities, Chap. 32. 6. and when the Text ſaith they did ſo *ver.*34. it is to be underſtood that they took courſe for ſuch buildings, for they themſelves went over Jordan, and were in Canaan wars ſeven years.

CHAP. XXXIII. XXXIV. XXXV. XXXVI.

ISraels two and forty ſtations from Egypt to Jordan; the borders of the Land; the Cities of the Levites; the diſpoſal of Zelophohads daughters.

The Book of DEUTERONOMY.

THE ſum of the Book of Deuteronomy, is a rehearſal and explanation made to the children, of the Law given to their fathers; the time of the Book is but two months, namely the two laſt months of their fortieth year, divided into the time of Moſes his repeating the Law, and dying, and Iſraels mourning thirty days for him. There can be little diſlocation of ſtories expected where there are ſo few ſtories at all, and therefore it will be the leſs needful to inſiſt much upon the Book, when that which we chiefly aim at in this undertaking, is already done; namely the laying of the ſtory in its proper method and order: only ſome few things it may not be impertinent nor unprofitable to obſerve.

1. Whereas Moſes is ſaid to be מול סוף, when he explains this Law, *Chap.*1.1. it is to be underſtood that he was over againſt Suph in Moab, and not near the Red-ſea; ſee *Numb.*21.14. Vaheb in Suphah.

World	Moſes	Redemption from Egypt.

2. Speaking of the excluſion of the people out of Canaan for their murmuring at Kadeſh Barnea, upon the return of the Spies, Numb. 14. he brings in the ſtory of his own excluſion, as if it had been at the ſame time, Chap. 1. 35, 36, 37. whereas it was not till eight and thirty years after: but thus cloſe and conciſely doth the Scripture ſometime uſe to ſpeak in rehearſing known ſtories; ſee Acts 7. 7.

3. He ſpeaketh to the generation then preſent, as if they had been the generation that was already periſhed and conſumed in the wilderneſs; ſee Chap. 1. ver. 26. 27, 34, 35, &c. for he puts the murmuring at Kadeſh, and the decree againſt entering into the Land upon theſe men preſent, as if they had been the men, whereas thoſe men that were properly concerned in that buſineſs, were already dead and gone. But he uſeth this manner of ſtile, 1. Becauſe they were abundance of them capable of murmuring then as well as their fathers, they being many thouſands of them indeed under twenty years, and yet not ſo much under but that they could be and could ſhew themſelves as untowardly and unlucky as they that were above twenty years of age: And by this manner of expreſſion, Moſes would bring them to be humbled, ſome for their fathers guilt, ſome for their own, and ſome for both, and to acknowledge that their being alive till now, and their liberty to enter into the Land, was a free and a great mercy; for their own and their fathers faults, might juſtly have cauſed it to have been otherwiſe with them. 2. They had imitated their fathers rebellion to the utmoſt, in their murmuring at Kadeſh, at their laſt coming up thither, and in the matter of Baal Peor; and therefore he might very well perſonate them by their fathers, when their fathers faults were ſo legible and eaſie to be ſeen in them.

4. He reckoneth not their ſecond journy to Kadeſh by name, but ſlips by it, Chap. 2. 1, 4. Nor mentions their long wanderings for ſeven and thirty years together between Kadeſh and Kadeſh; but only under this expreſſion, We compaſſed mount Seir many days, Chap. 2. 1. becauſe in that rehearſal he mainly inſiſteth but upon theſe two heads, Gods decree againſt them, that had firſt murmured at Kadeſh, and how that was made good upon them; and Gods promiſe of bringing their children into the land, and how that was made good upon them; therefore when he hath largely related both the decree and the promiſe, he haſtens to ſhew the accompliſhment of both.

5. In rehearſing the Ten Commandments; he propoſeth a reaſon of the Sabbaths ordaining, differing from that in Exodus: there it was, becauſe God reſted on the ſeventh day; here it is, becauſe of their delivery out of Egypt; and ſo here it reſpecteth the Jewiſh Sabbath more properly, there the Sabbath in its pure, morality and perpetuity. And here is a figure of what is now come to paſs in our Sabbath, celebrated in memorial of Redemption, as well as of Creation.

In the fifth Commandment, in this his rehearſal, there is an addition or two more then there is in it in Exod. 20. and the letter Teth is brought in twice, which in the twentieth of Exodus was only wanting of all the letters.

6. In Chap. 10. ver. 6. 7, 8. there is a ſtrange and remarkable tranſpoſition, and a matter that affordeth a double ſcruple. 1. In that, after the mention of the golden Calf in Chap. 9. and of the renewing of the Tables, Chap. 10. which occurred in the firſt year after their coming out of Egypt, he bringeth in their departing from Beeroth to Moſera where Aaron died, which was in the fortieth year after: now the reaſon of this is, becauſe he would ſhew Gods reconciliation to Aaron, and his reconciliation to the people; to Aaron, in that though he had deſerved death ſuddenly with the reſt of the people that died for the ſin of the golden Calf, yet the Lord had mercy on him and ſpared him, and he died not till forty years after: and to the people, becauſe, that for all that tranſgreſſion, yet the Lord brought them through that wilderneſs to a land of rivers of waters. But 2. there is yet a greater doubt lies in theſe words then this, for in Numb. 33. the peoples march is ſet down to be from Moſeroth to Bene Jahaan, ver. 31. and here it is ſaid to be from Beeroth of Bene Jaahan, to Moſeroth; there it is ſaid, Aaron died at mount Hor, but here it is ſaid, He died at Moſeroth: now there were ſeven ſeveral incampings between Moſeroth and mount Hor, Numb. 33. 31, 32, &c. Now the anſwer to this muſt ariſe from this conſideration, that in thoſe ſtations mentioned Numb. 33. From Moſeroth to Bene Jaahan, to Horhagidgad, &c. they were marching towards Kadeſh before their fortieth year, and ſo they went from Moſeroth to Bene Jaahan. But in theſe ſtations, Deut. 10.6. they are marching from Kadiſh in their fortieth year, by ſome of that way that they came thither, and ſo they muſt now go from Bene Jaahan to Moſeroth. And 2. how Moſeroth, and mount Hor, Gudgodah, and Horhagidgad, were but the * ſame place and Country, and how though Iſrael were now going back from Kadiſh, yet hit in the very ſame journies that they went in, when they were coming thither; as to Gudgodah, or Horhagidgad, to Jotbathah or Jotbath, requires a diſcourſe Geographical by it ſelf; which is the next thing that was promiſed in the Preface to the firſt part of the Harmony of the Evangeliſts; and with ſome part of that work by Gods permiſſion and his good hand upon the Work-man, ſhall come forth.

* As Horeb and Sinai were, though they be counted two ſeveral incampings of Iſrael, Exod. 17.1,6. and 19.1. compared.

7. It cannot paſs the Eye of him that readeth the Text in the Original, but he muſt obſerve it, how in Chap. 29. ver. 29. the Holy Ghoſt hath pointed one clauſe, לָנוּ וּלְבָנֵינוּ To us and to our Children belong the revealed things: after an extraordinary and unparalleld manner; to give warning againſt curioſity in prying into Gods ſecrets; and that we ſhould content our ſelves with his revealed will.

8. Moſes in bleſſing of the Tribes, Chap. 33. nameth them not according to their ſeniority, but in another order. Reuben is ſet firſt though he had loſt the birth-right, to ſhew his repentance, and that he died not * the ſecond death. Simeon is omitted becauſe of his cruelty to Sichem and Joſeph; and therefore he the fitteſt to be left out when there were twelve Tribes beſide. Judah is placed before Levi, for the Kingdoms dignity above the Prieſt-hood, Chriſt being promiſed a King of that Tribe. Benjamin is ſet before Joſeph, for the dignity of Jeruſalem above Samaria, &c.

* So the Chaldee renders, ver. 6. Let Reuben live and not die the ſecond death.

9. The laſt Chapter of the Book was written by ſome other then Moſes; for it relateth his death, and how he was buried by the Lord, that is by Michael, Jude 9. or Chriſt, who was to bury Moſes Ceremonies.

The Book of JOSHUA.

THIS Book containeth a hiſtory of the ſeventeen years of the rule of Joſhua, which though they be not expreſly named by this ſum in clear words, yet are they to be collected to be ſo many, from that groſs ſum of four hundred and eighty years from the delivery out of Egypt, to the laying of the foundation of Solomons Temple, mentioned 1 Kings 6. 1. for the Scripture hath parcelled out that ſum into theſe particulars; forty years of the people in the wilderneſs; two hundred ninety and nine years of the Judges; forty years of Eli; forty of Samuel and Saul; forty of David; and four of Solomon to the Temples founding; in all, four hundred ſixty three; and therefore the ſeventeen years that muſt make up the ſum four hundred and eighty, muſt needs be concluded to have been the time of the rule of Joſhua.

CHAP. I.

JOSHUA of Joseph succeedeth Moses, the seventh from Ephraim, 1 Chron. 7.25. and in him first appeared Josephs birth-right, 1 Chron. 5. 1. and Ephraims dignity, Gen. 48. 10, He is called Jesus by the LXX. and bythe New Testament, Acts 7.45. *Heb.*4.8. a type of him that bringeth his people into eternal rest. He is installed into the authority of Moses, both to command the people and to work miracles; and the Book of the Law put into his hand by Eleazer, as the manner was at Coronations, 2 Chron. 23. 11. He foreseeth the dividing of Jordan, and gives charge to provide to march through it.

CHAP. II.

RAhab an hostess of Jericho hath more faith then 600000 men of Israel, that had seen the wonders in Egypt, and the wilderness. Two Spies that were sent out the sixth day of Nisan come out of Jericho again that night; the seventh day they lie in the mountains, and the eighth day they return to the Camp: here are the three days just so counted as the three days of our Saviours burial.

CHAP. III. IV.

ON the ninth day, the people march along upon Jordans banks till they come over against Jericho. The Ark leads the van, for the Cloud of Glory which had been their conductor hitherto, was taken away at Moses his death. On the tenth day the Ark divided Jordan; there are 4000 cubits dry land in the midst of Jordan, between the two bodies of the armies that marched on either side of the Ark as it stood in the middest of the river: the Ark pitcheth besides Adam, *Chap.*3.16. אהל שכן באדם, *Psal.*78.60.

CHAP. V.

THERE is a general circumcision now of the people, as there had been at their coming out of Egypt; and as God then closed the Egyptians in three days darkness that they could not stir, so now he striketh the Canaanites with terrour that they dare not stir to hurt the people while they were sore. Circumcision sealed the lease of the land of Canaan, and therefore as soon as they set foot on it, they must be circumcised; the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth days of Abib or Nisan are spent about this business, and on the fourteenth day they kept the Passover, and so are sensible of both their Sacraments at once. It is now forty years to a day since they came out of Egypt; Christ appeareth weaponed, and is Lord General in the wars of Canaan.

CHAP. VI.

JEricho strangely besieged; incompassed seven days, according to the seven generations since the land was promised, counting from Abraham by Levi and Moses.

Israel marcheth on the Sabbath day by a special dispensation. The walls of Jericho brought down by trumpets and a shout, in figure of the subduing of the strong holds of Satan among the heathens by the power of the Gospel: the spoil of the Town dedicated to the Lord, as the first fruits of Canaan, Rahab received as the first fruits of the Heathen; she afterward marrieth Salmon a Prince of Judah, Matth. 1. 5. Joshua adjureth Rahabs kindred for ever building Jericho again.

2554 | 1 | Achan by one fact maketh all Israel abominable; the like thing not to be paralleld again: The valley of Achor is now the dore of diſcomfiture and diſcontent; in time to come it muſt be the dore of hope, Hoſ. 2. 15. fulfilled to the very letter, Joh. 4.

CHAP. VIII.

Ai taken, and the ſpoil given to the ſouldiers; and here they have the firſt ſeiſure and poſſeſſion of the Land, (for in the ſpoil of Jericho they had no part) And then Joſhua builded an Altar, verſ. 30. and writeth the Law upon it, and the bleſſings and the curſes are pronounced; and now it was full time, for now had the Lord by the ſweet of the ſpoil of Ai, given the people a taſte of his performance of his promiſe, to give them that land, and now it was ſeaſonable on their part to engage themſelves to him, and to the keeping of the Law.

CHAP. IX. X. XI. XII. XIII. XIV.

2 | A Great deluſion of the Church by the colour of Antiquity; the Gibeonites made Nechenims for the inferiour offices about the Sanctuary: the
3 | Sun and Moon do obeiſance to a ſon of Joſeph, as Gen. 37. 9. thereupon there
4 | is a miraculous day of three days long. In ſeven years is the land conquered;
5 | as Jericho had been ſeven days beſieged; that this was the date of Joſhua's
6 | battles, appeareth from the words of Caleb, Chap. 14. 7, 10. he was ſent one of
7 | the Spies of the land in the ſecond year of their coming out of Egypt, and had lived five and forty years ſince, viz. eight and thirty years in the wilderneſs, and ſeven in Canaan.

CHAP. XV. XVI. XVII. XVIII. XIX. XX. XXI. XXII. XXIII. XXIV.

8 | Judah the royal Tribe firſt ſeated; the taking of Hebron and Kiriath Se-
9 | pher, are mentioned here by anticipation, (for theſe occurrences came
10 | not to paſs till after Joſhua's death) becauſe the Holy Ghoſt in deſcribing of
11 | the inheritance of Judah, would take ſpecial notice of the portion of Caleb
12 | who had adhered to the Lord. Then Ephraim and Manaſſeh ſeated; the
13 | birth-right of Joſeph is ſerved next after the royalty of Judah. The Ta-
14 | bernacle ſet up in a Town of the lot of Ephraim, and the Town named Shi-
15 | loh, becauſe of the peaceableneſs of the land at this time. The Temple
16 | was afterward built at Salem, which ſignifieth Peaceable alſo; that in the lot of Benjamin, this in the lot of Joſeph, both the ſons of beloved Rachel.

The reſt of the land divided; Simeon though he were of the ſame ſtandard with Reuben and Gad, yet conſenteth not with them to reſide beyond Jordan, but is mixed in his inheritance with the Tribe of Judah, as Gen. 49. 7. The reſt of the Tribes ſeated agreeable to the prediction of Jacob and Moſes. The taking of Laiſh or Leſhem by the Danites, is related here by anticipation, (for it was not done till after Joſhua's death, Judg. 18. 29.) becauſe the Text would give account of their whole inheritance together, now it is ſpeaking of it. From this mention of an occurrence that befel after Joſhua's death, and the like about Hebron and Kiriath Sepher, it may be concluded that Joſhua wrote not this Book, but Phineas rather. Joſhua himſelf is inheritanced laſt. Three Cities of refuge appointed within Jordan, one in Judea, another in Samaria, and the third in Galilee: and three without Jordan in the three Tribes there.

Eight and forty Cities appointed for the Prieſts and Levites; as ſo many Univerſities wherein they ſtudied the Law.

World | Joſhua

It is not worth the labour to examine, becauſe it is paſt the ability to determine, whether the two Tribes and an half returned to their own homes aſſoon as ever the land had reſt from the wars, which was in the ſeventh year; or whether they ſtayed till the land was divided, and the people ſettled, which took up a long time more: howſoever it was, the two and twentieth Chapter that containeth that ſtory, is laid very properly where it lieth, becauſe it was fit that the whole ſtory which concerned the conqueſt and the poſſeſſion of the land, ſhould be handled all together, before any other particulars and emergencies ſhould interpoſe and interrupt it.

2570 | 17 JOSHUA dieth, one hundred and ten years old; the age of his old father Joſeph, Gen. 50. 26. He had divided Jordan, ſhouted down Jericho walls, ſtopt the Sun, conquered Canaan, ſet up the Tabernacle, ſettled the people, buried the bones of the Patriarchs at Sichem, the head City of the land; ingaged the people to Religion, and done gloriouſly in his generation: A type of Chriſt in the moſt of theſe things.

With thoſe Chapters of Joſhua that do treat concerning the diviſion of the land, and ſetling of the Tribes in their ſeveral poſſeſſions, it may not be unproper nor unprofitable to read thoſe Chapters in the firſt Book of Chronicles that do mention the Fathers and chief men in every Tribe, and who were planters and raiſers of families in theſe ſeveral poſſeſſions: as with Joſh. 13. that relateth the inheritance of the two Tribes and half, to read 1 Chron. 5. With Joſh. 15. that deſcribeth the poſſeſſion of Judah, to read 1 Chron. 2, 3, 4. to verſe 24. With Joſh. 16, 17. that handleth the lot of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, to read 1 Chronicles 7. from verſe 14. to verſe 30. With Joſhua 18. from verſe 11. to the end, about the poſſeſſion of Benjamin, to read 1 Chron. 7. from verſe 6. to verſe 13. and 8. all. With Joſh. 19. to verſe 10. read 1 Chron. 4. from verſe 24. to the end. With Joſh. 19. from verſe 19. to verſe 24. read 1 Chron. 7. to verſe 6. With Joſh. 19. from verſe 24. to verſe 31. read 1 Chron. 7. from verſe 30. to the end. With Joſh. 19. verſe 32. &c. 1 Chron. 7. verſe 13. With Joſh. 21. read 1 Chron. 6.

And with theſe Chapters of Joſhua as an expoſition of ſome of them, read 1 Chronicles 9. But as for the caſting the ſeveral Texts and parcels of theſe Chapters in the Book of Chronicles into their proper times, and to take in every man named there, and his ſtory into the Chronicle in the age where he lived, would not only be difficult if poſſible, but would be confuſed in this Work we have in hand. A cloſe Commentary upon the firſt Book of Chronicles, would be a matter of ſingular value, and might be conducible for this and for other very material purpoſes.

The Book of JUDGES.

THE Book of Judges containeth an hiſtory of two hundred ninety and nine years from the death of Joſhua to the death of Samſon, taken up in theſe ſums and parcels.

Othniel of Judah, 40 years, Judg. 3. 11.
Ehud of Benjamin, 80 years, Judg. 3. 15, 20.
Shamgar.
Barak of Naphtali, 40 years, Judg. 4. 6. 5. 31.
Gideon of Manaſſeh, 40 years, Judg. 6. 15. & 8. 28.
Abimelech Gideons ſon, 3 years, Judg. 9. 22.
Tola of Iſſachar, 23 years, Judg. 10. 1, 2.
Jair of Manaſſeh, 22 years, Judg. 10. 3.
Jephtah of Manaſſeh, 6 years, Judg. 11. 1. & 12. 7.
Ibſan of Judah, 7 years, Judg. 12. 8, 9.
Elon of Zebulon, 10 years, Judg. 12. 11, 12.
Abdon of Ephraim, 8 years, Judg. 12. 13, 14.
Samſon of Dan, 20 years, Judg. 13. 2. & 15. 20. & 16. 31.
The total Sum, 299.

Now beſides theſe years under theſe Rulers, there is alſo mention of one hundred and eleven under oppreſſours: as under Cuſhan Riſhathaim, 8 years, Judg. 3. 8.

Eglon of Moab, 18 years, Judg. 3. 14.
Jabin of Canaan, 20 years, Judg. 4. 3.
Midian, 7 years, Judg. 6. 1.
Ammon, 18 years, Judg. 10. 8.
Philiſtims, 40 years, Judg. 13. 1.
The total Sum, 111.

But theſe years of the oppreſſors, are to be included in the years of the Judges, and not to be reckoned as ſo many years apart by themſelves; as whereas it is ſaid, Chap. 3. Cuſhan Riſhathaim oppreſſed eight years, verſ. 8. And the land had reſt forty years, and Othniel died, ver. 11. thoſe eight years of Cuſhans oppreſſion are to be included in Othniels forty, and we are not to reckon them forty eight. And the eighteen of Eglon are to be included in Ehuds eighty, and ſo of the reſt. Paul indeed reckoneth the years of the Judges ſo, as that he counteth the years of the oppreſſions in a diſtinct ſum from them, Acts 13. 20. where he ſpeaketh of Judges for the ſpace of 450 years until Samuel; but he uttereth it with an as after a manner, or in ſome kind of reckoning, but not in exact propriety. Again whereas it is ſaid, The land had reſt forty years in the times of Othniel, Chap. 3. 11. And the land had reſt eighty years in the times of Ehud, Chap. 3. 30. It is not to be ſo underſtood, as if there were forty years or eighty years peace in the land uninterrupted; for in Othniels time Iſrael was buſling with the Canaanites, as Chap. 1. and among themſelves, as Chap. 20. and in Ehuds time they were diſquieted by Moab, Chap. 3. 14. but it is thus to be underſtood, that upon the delivery by Othniel, the land had reſt till forty years were up from the death of Joſhua. And upon the delivery by Ehud, the land had reſt till eighty years were up from the death of Othniel: and ſo of the reſt that carry that phraſe. And in the ſame ſenſe and tenour is that phraſe taken in Numb. 14. 33. Your children ſhall wander in the wilderneſs forty years, and ver. 34. After the number of the days, in which ye ſearched the land, even forty days, [each day for a year] ſhall you bear your iniquities, even forty years. Not that they were to wander in the wilderneſs full forty years from the time that this is ſpoken, but to make up full forty years from the time of their coming out of Egypt: and divers others of the ſame tenour may be obſerved in the Scripture. The firſt forty years that followed after the year of Joſhua's death, are aſcribed to the rule of Othniel, Judg. 3. 11. not that Othniel was ſole Ruler or Monarch in the land; for the Sanhedrin or great councel bare the rule in their places, and inferiour Magiſtrates in theirs: but that Othniel was a valiant and fortunate commander in the wars, and wrought ſpecial deliverance for the people.

The many occurrences that befel in his time, are not pointed out to their exact and fixed years, and therefore cannot Chronically be ſet down every thing in its very time, more then by conjecture and probability; but it will be enough for the right carrying of the Chronicle on, if we reduce what was done in his forty years to thoſe forty years in general, though we cannot particularly give every occurrence to its very year.

2571 1 ISrael being assured by Joshua before his death, that the Canaanites that were 2 yet left in the land should and must be subdued, *Josh.*23.5. they inquire by 3 Urim and Thummim who should first begin that expedition; the success of 4 which beginning would have much influence to daunt or incourage the enemy
5 according as it should prove. Judah the royal Tribe is chosen for that purpose,
6 and Caleb the son of Jephunneh is general for that Tribe, till his age and Othniels
7 prowess caused the command to devolve upon Othniel. Simeon joyneth with 8 Judah in the expedition, who was mingled with him in possession; as *Josh.*19.1.
9 Civil wars among the Canaanites have made the way the easier for Israels victo-
10 ries: for Judah conquereth seventy Kings in the conquest of Adonibesek; they bring this Tyrant before Jerusalem for the greater terrour of the Jebusites, and there kill him, and then they sack and burn that City. This story of the taking of Jerusalem lieth in its proper place here, for though the King of it had been slain in the field, *Josh.*10. yet was not the City taken, nor it nor any other City fired in Joshua's time, but only Jericho, Ai, and Hazor, *Josh.*6. 24. & 8. 26. & 11. 3. and therefore the eight Verse should be read, And the children of Judah warred against Jerusalem, and took it, and smote it, &c. and not as if it had been done before, Now the children of Israel had warred.

Hebron and Debir taken by Caleb, and by Othniel Calebs uncle, but younger then he, and so are those words אחי כלב הקטן ממנו to be understood, And Othniel the son of Kenaz, a kinsman of Calebs, younger then he took it. For Othniel and Jephunneh Calebs father, were brethren, both sons of Kenaz, see Numb. 32. 12. and 1 *Chron.*4.13,14.

Hebron and Debir had been taken by Joshua in the first or second year of his wars, Josh. 10. 36,37,38,39. and about the seventh year of his wars, he sweeps those places again of the Canaanites and Anakims that had swarmed thither again in the space between, *Josh.*11.20. And when the land begins to be divided, he allotteth Hebron unto Caleb: as *Josh.*14. Now ten or twelve years passed since that allotment, and the publick service had been acting all this while for the dividing of the land, and bringing every Tribe into its possession; so that Caleb hitherto had had little leasure because of the publick, or if he had leasure, yet left to his own strength and forces, which he can make a part and distinct from the publick; he is too weak to work his own settlement, and the Canaanites are still growing upon him, till now that the whole Tribe of Judah and Simeon ingage for him, and he their General, and then he takes Hebron and Debir, and destroyes the Anakims and Canaanites clear out, that they grow no more there.

Othniel marrieth his nephews daughtet, or his own great neece, and hath an inheritance of land with her, though she had three brethren, 1 Chron. 4. 15.

Jethro's family [called Kenites, because they dwelt in the Country called Kain, *Numb.*24.22.] had come up with Joshua and Israel into the land of Canaan, and resided about Jericho, the City of Palm-trees, among the Tribe of Judah till now; and now that Judah hath cleared his portion and begins to spread into plantations they go along and plant with them in the South, upon the coasts of the Amalekites: and so in Sauls time are mingled among them, 1 *Sam.*15.6. These Kenites were the root of the Rechabites, *Jerem.*35. 1 *Chron.*3.55.

Judah conquereth Horma for Simeon, and Azza, Askelon, Ekron for himself; but the Philistims soon recover these three last Towns again, Chap. 3. 1, 2. The several Tribes are working themselves into settlement in their several possessions, but are not careful to root out the Canaanites, but suffer them to live amongst them, and so hazzard themselves to be corrupted by them; and forget the command of God which had ingaged them utterly to destroy and not to spare them.

11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 FOR this, Chriſt himſelf cometh up from Judahs camp at Gilgal to the people aſſembled at ſome ſolemnity at Shiloh or Bethel, and telleth them plainly that he will no more conquer for them; he had offered himſelf to Joſhua to lead the field in all the wars, and ſo had done, *Joſh.*5.14. He had been with Judah and made him victorious till he alſo ſpares the Canaanites, and either for fear or neglect, lets the inhabitants of the vale inhabite there ſtill [כי לא הורישׁ: *ver.*19. it is left to conſtrue indifferently, either he would not, or could not, or durſt not drive them out. And then the Captain of the Lords hoaſt, the Angel of the Covenant, that had brought them from Egypt thitherto, departs from them, for which all the people have good cauſe to weep; and they call the place Bochim; the dimiſſion of the people by Joſhua, and his age, and death, and the death of that generation are mentioned here, that the foundation of the future ſtory may be the better laid, and the time of the peoples beginning to degenerate may be marked out.

CHAP. XVII. XVIII. XIX. XX. XXI.

25 AFter the tenth Verſe of the ſecond Chapter, is the proper place and order of theſe Chapters, for though they be laid at the end of the Book, yet were the things mentioned in them acted even in the beginning of their wickedneſs, after Joſhua's and the Elders death; for the better evidencing of which it will be pertinent to conſider, firſt the connexion of the paſſages there mentioned one to another, and then the reaſon of the diſlocation of them all.

CHAP. XVII.

IDolatry is begun in Iſrael by a woman, and in Ephraim, where afterwards Jeroboam eſtabliſhed it by Law: Micahs mother devoteth eleven hundred ſhekels to the making of an Idol, and nine hundred of them go for materials, and two hundred for workmanſhip: Micah ſetteth it up in his own houſe for his own uſe, and the uſe of the neighbour-hood round about him. The Text in the Original calleth him Micaiahu, with a part of the name Jehovah affixed to his name, till he have ſet up his image, and from thence forward, viz. from *ver.*5. it calleth him Micah.

CHAP. XVIII.

26 THE Danites take Micah's Idol from him, and ſet it up publickly in their own Tribe; there Jeroboam ſetteth up one of his calves afterward alſo. For this firſt publick Idolatry begun in the Tribe of Dan, that Tribe is not named among the ſealed of the Lord, *Rev.*7. A great grandchild of Moſes is the firſt Idolatrous Prieſt, but Moſes his name is written מנשה, Manaſſeh with the letter נ above the word; partly for the honour of Moſes in the duſt, and partly becauſe this his grandchilds actions were like Manaſſes his actions the King of Judah.

CHAP. XIX.

27 Iſrael tolerateth this Idolatry, and never ſtirreth either againſt Micah or the Danites; which toleration breedeth all iniquity, ſo that Gibeah a City of Iſrael becometh as abominable as Sodom. A whoriſh woman is kill'd with whoredom.

CHAP. XX.

ALL Iſrael goeth againſt Gibeah, and that by Gods expreſs commiſſion and command, and yet 40000 of them are ſlain by that wicked and wretched Town, and by the Tribe that took part with it. Thus did God avenge his own cauſe againſt Iſrael, becauſe Iſrael would not avenge Gods cauſe againſt Idolatry; they were ſo ſenſible of an injury done to a whore in Gibeah, but were not at all ſenſible of an injury done to God by Dan's Idolatry; when Othniel. World. God hath thus uſed Benjamin to execute his juſtice againſt Iſrael for not puniſhing Idolatry, he then uſeth Iſrael to puniſh Benjamin for not delivering Gibeah up to juſtice; Othniel it is like was chief commander in this ſervice, and Phineas was zealous in this caſe, as he had been in one of a not much different nature, *Numb.*25. Benjamin is now Benoni, a ſon of ſorrow, and Rachel hath cauſe to weep for her chidren.

CHAP. XXI.

HAdad Rimmon, *Zech.*12.11. or the ſad ſhout of Rimmon, the Prophet alludeth to the two great and general Lamentations of Iſrael, the one about the rock Rimmon, where a whole Tribe was now come to 400 men, and whereupon even the very conquerors become mourners. The other in the valley of Megiddo, for the death of Joſiah. The one in the beginning of their eſtate, the other in the latter end. Jabeſh Gilead is deſtroyed for affection to Benjamin, they were both of Joſeph, and both had pitched under one ſtandard. Benjamin raveneth like a wolf for wives, Joſephs daughters עלי שור בנות צערה, Gen. 49. 22. go to the enemy and repair the decaied Tribe, when the daughters of Shiloh in Ephraim, and of Jabeſh in Manaſſeh, ſupply Benjamin an hoſtile Tribe with wives, or elſe it had periſhed; and thus is the ſtory of theſe Chapters knit to it ſelf.

Now that the beginning of the Book of Judges is the proper time and place of theſe ſtories, may be concluded upon theſe reaſons.

1. The Danites were unſetled when the ſtories of the ſeventeenth and eighteenth Chapters came to paſs, and therefore this could not be long after Joſhua's death.

2. Phinehas was alive at the battle at Gibeah, *Chap.*20.28.

3. The wickedneſs of Gibeah is reckoned for their firſt villany, *Hoſ.*10 9.

4. Deborah ſpeaketh of the 40000 of Iſrael that periſhed by Benjamin, as if neither ſword nor ſpear had been among them, *Chap.*5.8.

5. Mahaneh Dan which was ſo named upon the march of the Danites, when they ſet up their Idolatry, Chap. 18.12. is mentioned in the ſtory of Samſon, though that ſtory be ſet before the ſtory of their march, *Chap.*15.25.

6. Dan is omitted among the ſealed of the Lord, *Rev.*7. becauſe idolatry firſt began in his Tribe, as is ſaid before.

7. Ehud may very well be ſuppoſed to have been one of the left-handed Benjamites, and one of them that eſcaped at the rock Rimmon, *Chap.*20.16. & 21.

Now the reaſon why the Holy Ghoſt hath laid theſe ſtories which came to paſs ſo ſoon, in ſo late a place, may be ſuppoſed to be this.

1. That the Reader obſerving how their ſtate-policy failed in the death of Samſon, which was a Danite, might preſently be ſhewed Gods juſtice in it, becauſe their Religion had firſt failed among the Danites.

2. That when he obſerves that eleven hundred pieces of ſilver were given by every Philiſtim Prince for the ruin of Samſon, *Chap.*16.5. he might preſently obſerve the eleven hundred pieces of ſilver that were given by Micahs mother for the making of an Idol, which ruined Religion in Samſons Tribe.

3. That the ſtory of Micah of the hill Country of Ephraim, the firſt deſtroyer of Religion; and the ſtory of Samuel of the hill Country of Ephraim, the firſt reformer of Religion, might be laid together ſomewhat near.

CHAP. II. *Ver.*11. to the end. And CHAP. III. to Ver. 11.

28 WHEN theſe ſtories are read, the ſtory returns to Chap. 2.11. and relateth the ſpreading of Idolatry over all the Tribes, as it had done over 29 that of Dan, and how mixt marriages with curſed Canaanites undo Iſrael; their 30 firſt afflicter is Cuſhan Riſhathaim a Meſopotamian: he oppreſſed them eight

35 Prophecy of Judahs being a Lions whelp, &c. and ſo the tents of Cuſhan come in-

CHAP. III. Verſe 12. to the end.

2611		1	Ehuds eighty years begin; not that he ruled ſo long without intermiſſion, or ſo long in any ſenſe at all, for eighty years was even a mans whole life: but that there were fourſcore years from the death of Othniel, and that after Ehud delivered them from Eglon, he was Judge and a Ruler over them whileſt he lived; not as a Monarch, for the Sanhedrin bare the ſway, but as a chief commander, and one ready to undertake for them if any enemies ſhould ariſe, and one ready to teach and lead them in the ways of God, as was ſaid before of Othniel. It is ſaid of Othniels time, that the land had reſt forty years, and Othniel died, by which it is apparent that the forty years are reckoned till Othniels death: ſo in Chap. 22. Ibſan judged ſeven years and died: Elon judged ten years and died: Abdon judged eight years and died, &c. Samſon judged twenty years, and theſe twenty years ended in his death, and ſo are we to conceive of theſe fourſcore of Ehud, that they ended with his death alſo; and therefore it is improper to conceive that the eight years of Cuſhans afflicting, were the laſt eight years of Othniels forty, or the eighteen years of Eglons afflicting were the laſt eighteen years of Ehuds eighty: for by this means Othniel and Ehud are made to ſtart up in the very end of theſe ſums of years, and get a victory and no more news of them; whereas it is apparent, not only by the years of the men lately cited, and by Chap. 2.19. but alſo by other paſſages, that the Judge was not only their deliverer in one fought battle or the like, but that he was their inſtructer, and helped and ſtrove to keep them to the fear of the Lord, Chap. 2.17. and when any of the Judges did not ſo, they are noted for it, as Gideon about his Ephod, Abimeleck about his brethren, and Samſon about his women: ſo that in what time of theſe fourſcore years of Ehud, to place the eighteen of Eglons afflicting, it is not certain, nor is it very much material, ſeeing it is certain that they fell out ſometime within thoſe fourſcore years. A good ſpace of time may we allot for Iſraels falling to Idolatry after Othniels death, and for Gods giving them up to their enemies power, upon their Idolatry; but whenſoever that affliction comes, it comes ſo home that a King of Moab is King of Iſrael, and hath his very Court and Palace in the Land of Canaan, in the City of Jericho. That City was inhabited by Iſraelites before Eglon, and his Moabites, Ammonites, and Amalekites, drove them out, and yet had not Joſhua's curſe ſeized on them; for that had reference only to Rahabs kindred and family, to prohibite them for ever going about to fortifie and build it for a Canaanitiſh Town again: and Hiel that went about that work in Ahabs time, was of that ſtock, and that light upon him accordingly, as will be touched there. The oppreſſours of Iſrael at this time, were the very ſame Nation that came againſt Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. 20. Namely, Moabites, Ammonites, and Meunims, or Amalekites, and Edomites that dwelt promiſcuouſly among Ammon, as ſee the Notes when we came there: and thoſe that are here ſpoken of, are generally fat men, ver. 29. as was Eglon himſelf extraordinarily. Ehud was a man of Benjamin, and probably of Gibeah, for he was of the ſame family in Benjamin, that King Saul was of afterwards; and thus the honour of Benjamin was ſomewhat reſtored in him, and as Judah in Othniel hath the firſt honour of Judge-ſhip, ſo Benjamin in Ehud had the ſecond. Eglon is deſtroyed with a two edged ſword, compare Rev. 1.16. About the latter end of Ehuds life, we may indeed ſuppoſe ſome of the paſſages of the Book of Ruth to have come to paſs, for that Book containeth the ſtory of a very long time, but the exact place in the Book of Judges, where, and the exact time in Chronicle when to lay any particular of thoſe occurrences, is not to be found nor determined.

The Book of RUTH.

TOwards the aiming and concluding upon the time of the ſtory of the Book of Ruth, theſe things may not unprofitably be taken into conſideration.

1. That Salmon who came with Joſhua into the land married Rahab, and of her begat Boaz, who married Ruth, Matth. 1.5.

2. That from Salmons coming into the land to the birth of David, were 366 years; namely, 17 of Joſhua, 299 of Judges, 40 of Eli, and 10 of Samuel: and yet was this long ſpace of time taken up by four men, viz. Salmon before he begat Boaz of Rahab; and Boaz before he begat Obed of Ruth; and Obed, before he begat Jeſſe; and Jeſſe before he begat David: ſo that you muſt allow to every one of them near upon a hundred years, before he begat his ſon.

3. That from their coming into Canaan to Ehuds death, were 137 years.

4. Now grant that Rahab lived ſixty years in Iſrael before ſhe had Boaz by Salmon; and that Boaz lived an hundred years before he was married to Ruth, both which are fair allowances, yet will this his marriage with Ruth fall but three years after Ehuds death. So that this Book of Ruth may be taken in between the third and fourth Chapters of the Book of Judges.

The Book of Ruth ſetteth out the great providence of God in bringing light out of darkneſs; Ruth a mother of Chriſt out of the inceſt of Lot: a ſpecial mark over ובקומה in the ſtory of Lots eldeſt daughter, lying with her father, *Gen.*19.34. and a ſpecial mark in a great letter in the word לינו, in the ſtory of Ruth going to Boaz his bed, Ruth 4.13. ſeem to relate one to the other, and both together to point at this providence: Boaz born of a Heathen woman, and married to a Heathen woman, but both theſe become Iſraelites and holy. After the reading of the Book of Ruth, the Reader and ſtory return to the fourth of Judges.

JUDGES. CHAP. IV. V.

2691 DEBORAH and BARAKS forty years begin: Iſraél after the death of Ehud fall to their old Idolatry again, and for that ere long, fall under oppreſſion. Shamgar got one wonderful victory for them, but wrought not a perfect deliverance: Deborah a woman of Ephraim ariſeth after him, and judgeth the people ſhe being a Propheteſs, and by the ſpirit of Prophecy ſtirreth up Barak of Nephtali to fight with Siſera whom he overcometh by an army of Galileans: but Siſera himſelf falleth by the hand of a Proſelyteſs woman; Then Deborah and Barak ſang: Here the man of Nephtali giveth goodly words: They tell the ſad caſe of Iſrael in Shamgars and Jaels times, before the victory was gotten over Siſera; that men durſt not go in the common ways, nor dwell in villages and unwalled Towns for fear of the enemy. The rich and gallant men that uſed to ride on white Aſſes, durſt not ride in thoſe times, and the rulers durſt not ſit in Judgment for fear of being ſurpriſed; and people durſt not go to the Town wells to draw water for fear of the enemies archers; but now all theſe may ſpeak of the actings of God towards the forſaken villages, and towards the forlorn places of Judicature in the gates, for they are all reſtored to their proper uſe again; That now the Lord had given the remnant of his people dominion over the great ones that ruled them before; Joſhua of Ephraim had been a root of ſuch victories againſt Amalek, Exod. 17. and Ehud lately againſt Amalek, Moab, and Ammon, and now the Lord had ſo ſtirred up the hearts of the people to fight the Lords battles, that even the men of the beſt rank, and of the moſt unmartial profeſſion were yet very ready to jeopard themſelves in ſuch a quarrel; that the Lawyers of Machir or half Gilead came, though they lay beyond Jordan, and the Scribes of Zebulon and Princes of Iſſachar. But Reuben and the other half of Gilead on the other ſide Jordan, and Dan, not very far from the place of the battle, ſtaid at home, and preferred their private imployments before the publick. That the Lord was ſeen in the battle, and by ſtorms and tempeſts from Heaven, as if the Stars themſelves fought againſt them; he forwardeth their deſtruction, as he had done for Joſhua and and Iſrael in the valley of Gibeon: that Kiſhon a river of their antiquities נחל קדומים, a water of much Idolatry among them in ancient time, had now proved their deſtroyer, and ſwept away them that vainly, impiouſly, and fooliſhly had adored it, &c. Meroz a Town of Galilee that lay very near the place of the battle, yet came not in to help, but played the baſe neuter, is bitterly curſed, but Jael bleſſed exceedingly: they of Meroz did Iſrael no good, though they were of Iſrael; ſhe a Kenite did Iſrael ſo much good, though ſhe were of another Nation.

CHAP. VI. VII. VIII.

2731 GEDEONS forty years begin; they are mentioned *Chap.*8.28. Iſrael are again ſpoiled by peace, and after the death of Deborah become Idolatrous; whereupon the Lord in time ſelleth them into the hands of the Midianites for a woful apprentiſhip of ſeven years: theſe deal more bitterly and cruelly with them, then any enemies they had felt before; old revenge that had lain boiling in the breaſt of that Nation againſt Iſrael for the great ſlaughter that had been made among them in Moſes times, Num. 31. now breaks out; and having power to execute it, grows mercileſs. Iſrael addreſſing themſelves to God, have a bitter meſſage from him by a Prophet, yet the Lord forſakes them not; Gedeon as he is threſhing wheat, is appointed to threſh Midian; he ſeeth an Angel and a miracle, and thereby is incouraged to deſtroy his fathers Idolatry: ſo un-reformed is Iſrael under their affliction, that they retain their Idols ſtill. A bullock of ſeven years fatting for Baal is mentioned, to ſhew that even through their ſeven years calamity under Midian, yet their mind and preparations were ſtill upon, and for their Idols. Gedeon ſacrificeth this bullock to God, a ſacrifice of ſtrange and various diſpenſations: it was offered by night, in a common place, by a private perſon, with the wood of an Idolatrous grove, and intended for an Idol it ſelf; yet an offering of faith, and ſo accepted. Gedeon by the deſtruction of Baal, obtaineth the name of Jerubbaal; he hath another ſign ſhewed him by the wet and dry fleece, a proper repreſentation of Iſrael, wet with the dews of divine doctrine, when all the world beſides was dry, and now dry, when all the world beſides is wet: by three hundred men that drank of the brook by the way, lifting up their head; as Pſal. 110. and carrying lights in earthen veſſels, he conquers Midian, as Jericho was conquered, only by a noiſe and by an amazement. They carried candles in jug-pots, or ſuch kind of earthen veſſels, ſo that no light was to be ſeen till they had ſet themſelves on all ſides of the army, and then they ſuddenly ſhout, break their pitchers, and make their candles appear; ſo that what with their ſudden noiſe, and what with the ſudden lights, the heart of Midian trembles, as the curtains of their tents had done in the mans dream of the barly cake: ſee *Hab.*3.7. Oreb and Zeb taken and ſlain, and 120000 men; and Zeba and Zalmunna purſued, taken, and their body of 15000 ſcattered. Gedeon of the jewels of the ſpoil maketh an Ephod, and ſetteth it in his own City, which cauſeth Idolatry in Iſrael; and the name of Jerubboſheth to himſelf, 2 Sam. 11.21.

is laid in the duſt by Abimelech. Obſerve in 1 *King.*12. that the Tribes come to Shechem to make Rhehoboam King, for now they begin to ſtand upon Joſephs priviledge and birth-right again, which Judah had carried all the time of David and Solomon; when Shechem was thus deſtroyed by Abimelech, Samaria ariſeth by Tola, a man of Iſſachar, but now a ſojourner here. It is probable that the diſtracted and low eſtate of Shechem and Ephraim through the late civil wars, did give him the better riſe; he himſelf either taking now advantage for his own promotion from their helpleſneſs, or the Lord raiſing him a neighbour of another Tribe for their relief when they could not relieve themſelves: Iſſachar is ſluggiſh and unactive at home, as *Gen.*49.14. yet thus active abroad; in Tola now, and in Baaſha in after times, 1 *King.*15.27. and both in and about the ſame place Shechem and Samaria.

JAIR, or Jairus a Gileadite judgeth two and twenty years; he was a man of great honour, having thirty ſons that were lords of thirty Cities, and that rode upon thirty Aſſes of ſtate, like Judges or men of honour, as Chap. 5.10. This is not that Jair that is mentioned by Moſes, [as if he had ſpoken of this man and theſe Towns prophetically,] but this is one of the ſame family, and of the ſame name, as Tola that went before him is of the ſame name with the firſt-born of Iſſachar, Gen. 46. 13. And whereas it is ſaid by Moſes, that Jair the ſon of Manaſſeh went and took the ſmall Towns of Gilead, and called them Havoth Jair, *Numb.*32.41. *Deut.*3. And whereas it is ſaid here that Jairs thirty ſons had thirty Cities which were called Havoth Jair; it is to be underſtood, that thirty of thoſe threeſcore Villages that old Jair had conquered and poſſeſſed in the time of the firſt plantation of the land; theſe ſons of this Jair being of this line, had repaired and brought into the form of Cities and dwelt in them; and yet they retained their old name of Havoth Jair for the honour of him that firſt wan and planted them. That old Jair was the ſon of Segub, the ſon of Prince Heſron by Machirs daughter, 1 *Chron.*2.22. and ſo by his father ſide of Judah, and by his mothers of Manaſſeh.

CHAP. X. from Verſ. 6. to the end.

JEphtah a Gileadite ariſeth a Judge after Jair; but there is ſome ſcruple firſt to be reſolved and removed concerning his time, and the oppreſſion that he was raiſed to remove. It is ſaid, *verſ.*6,7,8. that Jair died and the children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the Lord, and he ſold them into the hands of the Philiſtims, and that year they oppreſſed the children of Iſrael eighteen years. Now the queſtion is when theſe eighteen years began, and whether they are to be taken for a ſum of years apart from the years of the Judges, or to be reckoned with them; and what is meant by that expreſſion, and that year they vexed Iſrael. Anſwer, Theſe eighteen years are to be reckoned together with the laſt eighteen years of Jair; and they began with his fifth year: for though he be ſaid to have judged two and twenty years, yet it is not ſo to be ſo underſtood, as if no enemy peeped up in all that time, for we ſhall ſee the contrary cleared by the Judgeſhip of Samſon: but the meaning is, that the Lord at the firſt ſtirred him up for a deliverer, and wrought ſome great deliverance by him in the beginning of his time; and afterward he continued a Judge, and one that ſought the reformation of his people, but he could neither work that to keep them from Idolatry, nor work their total deliverance to keep their enemies under: but in his fifth year Idolatry broke out in Iſrael, and continued to a horrid increaſe; ſo in that very year that this Idolatry broke out, their oppreſſours broke in upon them, and kept them under for eighteen years, and Jair could not help it, but it continued ſo till his death: ſo that the beginning of Verſ. 6. is thus to be rendered in Chronical conſtruction. Now the children of Iſrael had done evil again, &c. This long oppreſſion at laſt forceth Iſrael to ſeek the Lord, and to forſake their Idolatry, and the Lord findeth out Jephtah for a deliverer.

World | Jephtah

2819 | 1 JEPHTAH judgeth six years; subdueth the Ammonites, sacrificeth his own
2 daughter; and destroyeth 42000 Ephraimites. He was the son of Gilead
3 by a concubine; this was not that Gilead that was Machirs immediate son but 4 one that bare the name of that old Gilead, and so we observed of Tola and 5 Jair before: Jair was the chief man in one half of Gilead, and Gilead in ano-
6 ther.

Jephtah being expelled out of his fathers family for bastardy, betaketh him to arms in the land of Tob in Syria, and prospereth, and thereupon his prowess being heard of, he is called home again and made commander in chief in Gilead. In his transactions with the King of Ammon, he mentioneth three hundred years of Israels dwelling in Heshbon and Aroer, &c. in which sum, five and thirty of the forty years in the wilderness are included; in which they were hovering upon those parts, although they dwelt not in them: it was now three hundred and five years since their coming out of Egypt.

His vow concerning his daughter may be scanned in these particulars: 1. That his vow in general was of persons, for 1. he voweth that whatsoever should come forth of the doors of his house. 2. Whatsoever should come to meet him; now it is not likely nor proper to understand this of Sheep and Bullock; for who can think of their coming out of his house, much less of their coming to meet him. 3. How poor a business was it to vow to sacrifice a Bullock or Sheep for such a victory? Therefore his vow relateth to persons, and so might it be translated, Whosoever cometh forth. 2. What would he do with his vowed person? Make him a Nazarite? He might vow the thing, but the performance lay upon the persons own hand. Dedicate him to the Sanctuary? Why he might not serve there as not being a Levite. Sequester him from the world? He might indeed imprison him, but otherwise the sequestring from the world lay upon the persons own hand still. Suppose one of his married maid-servants or man-servants or his own wife had met him first, what would he have done with any of them? Therefore I am inforced by the weighing of these and other circumstances in the Text, to hold with them, that hold he sacrificed his daughter indeed, though I have been once of another mind. And it seemeth that this was a part of the corruption of those times, and was but mutato nomine, a sacrifice to Molech, the God of the Ammonites, against whom he was now to go to fight when he maketh this vow. The Sanhedrin undoubtedly was now sitting, and there was the Priest-hood attending upon the Ark at Shiloh, and yet is Israel now so little acquainted with the Law, that neither the Sanhedrin, nor the Priests can resolve Jephtah that his vow might have been redeemed, Levit. 27. But they suffer her thus to be massacred, and only salve it with making a statute for her yearly lamentation. In some time of the Judges, the High-priesthood is translated from the line of Eleazer to the line of Ithamar, as appeareth in Eli in the beginning of the Book of Samuel. Now in all the story of the Judges, we find not any one thing so likely to be the cause of rooting out of that house from the Priest-hood, as about this matter of Jephtah, they not instructing him better, but suffering such a butchery for a sacrifice.

Jephtah hath a new quarrel with the Ephraimites, and slayeth 42000 of them, discovering them by the mis-pronouncing of a letter: he might have offered many words that had Sh double in them; as Shemesh, the Sun; Shelosha, three; Shalsheleh, a chain; but the word proposed is Shiboleh, because of the present occasion: It signifieth a stream; and the Ephraimites are put to call the stream that they desired to pass over, by the right name, and they could not name it.

CHAP. XII. Vers. 8. 9, 10.

2825 | 1 IBSAN judgeth seven years: He was a man of Bethlehem, and thereupon
2 imagined by the Jews to be Boaz without any ground or reason: for since
3 Rahab the mother of Boaz was taken into the Congregation of Israel were 270
5 years; and then guess whether Boaz be likely to be active now? Ibsan is re-
6 nowned for the number and equality of the number of his sons and daughters.

4 ſelf the Head. He was an Ephraimite of Pirathon; and ſo Joſephs glory
5 ſhineth again in Ephraim, as it had done in Joſhua before the time of the 6 Judges; and had done in Manaſſeh in the Judges times, in Gedeon, Jair, CHAP. XIV. XV. XVI.

2850 | 1 SAMSON judgeth twenty years: A man of Dan, [and ſo as Ephraim
2 and Dan had bred the firſt Idolatry, they yield the laſt Judges;] he
3 was born ſupernaturally of a barren woman, and becomes the firſt Nazarite
4 we have upon record. He killeth a lion without any weapons, findeth ho-
5 ney in the carkaſs, propoſeth a parable to thirty Philiſtim gallants, which
6 in three days they cannot unriddle: and on the ſeventh day, ſaith the Text, 7 they ſaid unto his wife, Perſwade thy husband, Chap. 14. verſ. 15. That is,
8 on the Sabbath day; their irreligiouſneſs not minding that day, and now
9 finding the fitteſt opportunity of talking with his wife alone, Samſon being 10 imployed about the Sabbath duties. He pays them with their own Country-
11 mens ſpoil: Fires the Philiſtims corn with three hundred Foxes; is deſtroy-12 ing them all his life, but deſtroys more at his death: A type of Chriſt.
13 It is obſervable that the Philiſtims are ſaid to bear rule and oppreſs Iſrael
14 all Samſons days, *Chap.*13.1. The Lord delivered Iſrael into the hands of the 15 Philiſtims forty year, and Chap. 15. 20. And Samſon judged Iſrael in the days
16 of the Philiſtims twenty years. This helpeth clearly to underſtand that the 17 years of the oppreſſours are included in the years of the Judge; and ſo
18 endeth the Chronicle of the Book of Judges in the death of Samſon, though 19 the poſture of the Book it ſelf do end in another ſtory. No Judge of all 20 the twelve had fallen into the enemies hand, and under their abuſe but only Samſon; but he ſlayeth more at his death then while he was living.

The first Book of SAMUEL.

THIS Book containeth an History of 80 years, viz. from the death of Samson, who died by his own hand gloriously, to the death of Saul, who died by his own hand wretchedly. This time was divided into two equal portions, namely, 40 years to Eli, 1 *Sam.*4.18. and 40 years to Samuel and Saul, Acts 13.21.

CHAP. I. II. III.

2870 | 1 | ELI judgeth 40 years: He was of Ithamar; For Eleazers line had lost the
2 | High Priest-hood in the times of the Judges. It had been in that family
3 | seven generations; viz. Eleazar, Phineas, Abishua, Bukki, Uzzi, Zerahiah, Me-
4 | raioth, 1 *Chron.*6.4,5,6. and there it failed, till the seventh generation after;
5 | namely, through the times of Amaziah, Ahitub, Zadok, Ahimaaz, Azaria, Jo-
6 | hanan; and then comes Azariah, and he executes this Office in the Temple
7 | that Solomon built, 1 Chron. 6.7, 8, 9, 10. observe these six that failed of the
8 | high Priest-hood left out of the Genealogy, Ezra 7.3,4. Eli was the first of
9 | the other line that obtained it, and it run through these descents, Eli, Phineas,
10 | Ahitub, Ahimelech, Abiathar, 1 *Sam.*14.3. & 22.20. & 1 *King.*2.26. SAMUEL
11 | the son of his mothers prayers, tears, and vows, was born in * Aramathea, the
12 | twentieth from Levi, of the off-spring of Korah, who was swallowed up of
13 | the ground, 1 *Chron.*6. and Numb. 26.11. He had murmured at the Priest-
14 | hood and Magistracy, and now one of his line is raised up to repair both when
15 | they are decaied. Samuel was a vowed Nazarite, and dedicated at the Sanctu-
16 | ary with a Sacrifice and a Song. The year of his birth is not determinable,
17 | no not so much as whether it were in the Judgeship of Eli, though it be un-
18 | doubted that it was in his Priest-hood. Eli's sons commit theft and adultery in
19 | the very Sanctuary; they ravin from the men that came to sacrifice, and they
20 | ravish the women that * waited on the Sanctuary, and so they cause the Ordi-
21 | nances of the Lord to be abhorred. Under such example is Samuel educated,
22 | yet falleth not under that taint. A Prophet sharply reproveth Eli, for not re-
23 | proving his sons. This Prophet the Jews held to be Elkanah himself, and say
24 | that he was one of the eight and forty Prophets that prophesied to Israel. In Chap.
25 | 2. Vers.11. it is said, that Elkanah returned to Ramoth to his own house: and yet
26 | verse 20. it is said, that Eli blessed Elkanah; which is to be understood, that
27 | he had done so from Samuels first dedication, and so did as oft as he came to
28 | Shiloh. Samuel himself becomes a Prophet, first against Elies house, and then
29 | afterward to all Israel, Chap.3.1. Impiety had exceedingly banished Prophesie
30 | in these times amongst them, but now the Lord begins to restore it for pre-
31 | diction of ruine, and then for direction of reformation. Urim and Thum-
32 | mim were ere long to be lost from the Priests, with the loss of the Ark;
33 | and God pours the Spirit of Prophesie upon a Levite to supply that
34 | want.

2909 | 40 | THE Ark first touched and taken with the hands of uncircumcised ones.
The two sons of Eli come to fatal ends at this last service of the Ark, as the two sons of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu did at the first: Eli himself dieth the very death of an unredeemed Ass; *Exod.*13.13. Shiloh laid waste, *Jer.*7.14. and the birthright lost from Joseph and Ephraim, *Psal.*78.60. &c. The Tabernacle had been at Shiloh 340 years, and somewhat more. The Idol of Dan hath now out-lived it, *Judg.*18.31. Ah poor Israel!

2910 | 1 | Here begin the forty years of Samuel and Saul, mentioned *Act.*13.20,21. He gave them Judges after a manner, four hundred and fifty years [that is, the years of the oppressors also reckoned in: the Judges, 299. the oppressors 111. and Eli 40.] until Samuel the Prophet. And afterward they desired a King, and God gave them Saul by the space of forty years: that is, to the expiration of forty years from Elies death, the last of the Judges.

CHAP. V. VI.

THE Ark is all the spring and summer of this year in the land of the Philistims. For its sake the Lord smiteth Dagon the god of their Corn, and destroyeth the harvest of their Corn as it grew on the ground with an army of Mice: He striketh the people with Emerods in their hinder parts, *Psal.*78.66.and bringeth a shameful soreness on them in a contrary part, and in a contrary nature, to the honourable soreness of Circumcision: They restore the Ark again with strange presents, with abundance of golden Mice, Et cum quinque anis vel podicibus aureis quasi ἀιμορροῦσι. Two Kine knew their owner, as *Esa.*1.3. Hophni and Phineas knew him not. The Bethshemites though Priests, yet slain by the Lord for too much boldness with the Ark.

CHAP. VII.

Vers. 1. And the first half of the second.

2 THE Ark setled in Kirjath-jearim, the City of the woods: to this the 3 Psalmist speaketh, *Psal.*132.6. We heard of it at Ephratah, or at Shiloh
4 in Ephraim: we found it in the fields of the wood; or at Kirjath-jearim: there an 5 Eleazar looketh to it, when both the line of Eleazar and Ithamar are out of 6 that service: And it came to pass while the Ark abode in Kirjath-jearim the time
7 was long, for it was twenty years: This is not to be understood for the whole
8 time that it was there, for it was above six and forty years there before David
9 David born in the tenth year of Samuel. 10 fetched it up, 2 *Sam.*6. namely, thirty nine years of Samuel and Saul, and seven
11 years of Davids reign in Hebron; but it is to be thus understood and construed, 12 that the Ark was twenty years in Kirjath-jearim, before the people of Israel
13 minded it or looked after it, but they followed and adhered to their former 14 Idolatries and corruptions, and therefore it is said by Samuel afterward, *vers.*3.
15 If you do return unto the Lord, put away the strange gods Ashteroth from among 16 you, &c. Their Idolatry and prophaneness was so deep rooted, having been so 17 long and so customary with them, that neither the loss of the Ark, nor the 18 slaughter of Israel had wrought upon them; but that twenty years together
19 they are lost to the Ark, though the Ark were not then lost to them.

CHAP. VII.

* The word וַיִּסְפְּדוּ to be translated not And, but Then, they lamented.

Vers. 2. The latter half of it: * Then all the house of Israel lamented after the Lord: and so to the end of the 7 Chapter, and Chapter 8. all.

2930 21 A Spirit of repentance and conversion cometh generally upon all the people; a matter and a time as remarkable as almost any we read of in Scripture: one only parallel to it, and that is in Acts 2. and 3. at the great conversion there. There were to that time these sums of years, four hundred ninety years from hence to the beginning of the Captivity, seventy years of the Captivity, and four hundred ninety years from the end of the Captivity thither: The seventy of the Captivity are the midst of years, Hab. 3. 2. And Samuel according to this chain is the first of the Prophets, Acts 4.24.

They drew water, and poured it before the Lord, Chap.7.6 To be understood of their washing themselves from their idols, as Gen. 35 2. Exod.19.14.

22 Israel is baptized from their Idols: Samuel, though no Priest, yet by special 23 warrant sacrificeth; by Prayer destroyeth the Philistims with thunder, *Chap.*2.
24 20. *Psal.*99.6. they were subdued in that very place where they had subdued
25 Israel, and taken the Ark, one and twenty years before. Samuel rideth in cir-
26 cuit and judgeth Israel. Judah recovereth Gath and Ekron; which they once 27 had, *Josh.*15.45,46. but lost Judg. 3.3. Peace made with Amorites; for the 28 third and fourth Generation of those haters of the Lord had had the sins of their 29 fathers visited upon them. Samuels two Sons cause the people to abhor the 30 Government, as Elies two Sons had caused them to abhor Religion. Then de-31 generation is still coming on.

SAUL seeking Asses, findeth a Kingdom: He is anointed at Ramah, which was not far from his own Town of Gibeah. Gibeah, once so abominable and abominably destroyed, Judg. 20. affordeth their first King: He prophecieth at Kirjath-jearim among a company of Prophets that attended the Ark ומי אביהם Chap. 10. 12. And he becomes one that is their Father, or chief Prophet amongst them. At Mizpeh, where the Sanhedrin sate, he is proclaimed King by Lot and by the people. He befriendeth Jabesh against Ammon; for Jabesh had been a friend to Gibeah, and suffered for it, Judg. 21. At Gilgal he is annointed again, and God in thunder and lightning telleth the people of his displeasure, for their asking a King. Their occasion of so doing was Nahash the Ammonite, his coming against Jabesh at first to besiege it Chap. 12. 12. The siege was long, and when it begun to capitulate for surrender, Nahash demands every right eye in the Town, &c.

Is Saul also among the Prophets? And one of the same place answered and said, Yes, one that is their Father. Not Et quis, but Et qui pater eorum.

In these two years he beateth the Philistims, Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, that invade the Land; and invadeth Amalek, and destroyeth it; but undoes himself by sparing Agag. Here the Lord casts him off.

2944 35 DAVID anointed in Bethlehem: And from henceforward the Spirit of the Lord resteth upon him; by the power of which he killeth a Lion and Bear; And by the direction of which he becometh musical, and penneth Psalms. This is that that makes musick by Davids hand, able to hush and master Sauls Devil.

CHAP. XVII.

36 DAVID killeth Goliah. A type of Christs victory over Satan, the chief Captain of the uncircumcised. He bringeth the Giants head to Saul, and Saul questioned, Whose Son art thou? Not that either Saul or Abner were ignorant who David was; for he went but from harping to Saul, when Saul went to this War, ver. 15. but they wonder what kind of man it was that had such Sons, as Jesse had now in the Army: And his question is not so much Filius cujus, as Filius qualis viri; or not of Davids Person, but of his Parentage. The 55 and 56 verses in their proper order should lie after verse 40. but they are put off to the place where they lie, that Sauls question which was before the Battel, and the resolution of it, which was not till after, might be laid together: and so the Story of verse 54. of Davids laying up the Giants head at Jerusalem, is laid before its time, as they were laid after; for he laid not that there till some space of time after, and what time, uncertain: But the relation of it is mentioned in this place, because he would dispatch the Story of Goliah at once.

PSALM IX.

UPON this Victory over Goliah, David penned the ninth Psalm, על מות לבן upon the death of the Champion; for Goliah is called Ish Benajim, 1 Sam. 17. 4. And so the Chaldee Paraphrast interprets it על מיתותא דגברא די נפק מביני משריתא: upon the death of the man that came out between the two Armies. That Psalm is to be taken in at this place.

World Sam. & Saul.

CHAP. XVIII.

UPON Davids discourse with Saul, and upon former acquaintance with Davids behaviour, Jonathan affects him; Saul that day retains him for a Courtier; and Jonathan puts him into a Souldiers and Courtiers garbe: And so they march from the Camp to Gibeah, where Saul dwelt. By the way the women came out, and sing so as they displease Saul; and from thenceforward he spites David, casts Spears at him to kill him; but seeing him escape, he puts him into command in the Army, that he may fall there. Thus lieth the Story to *vers.*16. and therefore the fifth verse, which speaks of his going in and out before the people, is set there as a general head, which was to be explained afterward: when David is thus set at large from Saul, to go in and out at his pleasure, then it is like he bringeth Goliahs Armor to Bethlehem, and his head to Jerusalem, laying up these trophies of his valor, victory, and success among his own Tribe, that when occasion should be, and he should need men to stand to him, he being already anointed King, these very things might have made a good party for him against that time.

37 ANother war with the Philistims. Another Spear thrown at David: His house watched that he might be slain.

PSAL. LIX.

HERE cometh in the fifty ninth Psalm, made upon this watching of his house, as the title telleth: and it is to be laid between the 12 and 13 verses of this 19 Chapter.

Samuel, and Saul, and David are met altogether, *Chap.*19. 22. 24. and Saul Prophecying naked for 24 hours, whereas it is said in *Chap.*15.35. that Samuel came no more to see Saul until the day of his death: It is to be understood as by way of homage, for he seeth him now at Ramah by Sauls coming to him, but he never after Sauls transgression in sparing Amalek, went to him to present himself or service to him, for then did the Lord cast him off, and he would own him no more as King.

CHAP. XX.

Sauls coming to Ramah putteth David to fly to Gibeah to confer with Jonathan: Sauls bloody intention being discovered, David is now forced to a perpetual exile: It beginneth now.

CHAP. XXI.

David cometh to Nob to Ahimelech, or Ahijah, *1 Sam.*14.3. In the days of Abiathar, *Mar.*2.26. our Saviour nameth him rather then Ahimelech, because he was not only one of the Priests there now, *Chap.*22.20. but he alone escaped of all Ahimelechs house from Sauls fury: and he was of special note afterward.

From Nob, David is forced to flee to Gath, the very Town of Goliah, and Goliahs sword now about him: There is he discovered who he is, and hears the very Song repeated that was sung to him when he returned from the slaughter of Goliah; being now in the middest of the Giants friends, and so in an unevitable danger, he findeth no other shift but to fain himself a natural fool, and mope, and keepeth himself speechless and dumb.

PSAL. LVI.

UPON this occurrence and occasion he composeth the fifty sixth Psalm, and titles it על יונת אלם רחוקים Gnal, Jonath, Elem, Rechokim, concerning the oppression of the dumb one among men far off, when the Philistims took him in Gath: and seemeth in *vers.*10. to refer to his present speechlesness, when he saith ביהוה אהלל דבר Through the Lord I shall praise with speech, or words: so vers. 4. he professeth, Through the Lord I will praise his Word;

of

of promise which he had made to him: so that the order of this Psalm falleth in about the twelfth verse of this one and twentieth Chapter.

PSAL. XXXIV.

AT the end of that Chapter is the proper place and order of the 34 Psalm, made by David when he changed his behaviour before Abimelech: And it is appliable to both the stories contained in this Chapter, both to Davids dissembling behaviour before Abimelech [for some time Abimelech and Abimelech was but one and the same name, as compare 2 Sam. 8. 17. with 1 Chron. 18. 16.] and to Davids changing his behaviour before Achish the Philistims King, for those Kings were commonly called by the name Abimelech, Gen. 20. and 26.

This Psalm is a most accurate Acrostick, of a most choice and exact composure, after his pretended mopishness and distraction.

CHAP. XXII. Vers. 1. first part.

DAvid departeth from Gath, and escaped to the Cave of Adullam.

PSAL. CXLII.

THERE he maketh the 142 Psalm, as appeareth by the title: And in his Prayer in it, he complains how low he was now brought: that there was none that would know him, nor any one to take care for him, that he was in this Cave as in a Prison: And if the Lord would deliver him out of this case, then would the righteous resort unto him.

CHAP. XXII. The latter part of the first verse, and vers. 2. and 1 CHRON. XII. from ver. 8. to ver. 19.

THE Lord hears his prayer, and sends his friends and kinred about him to be his Comfort, and divers others to be his Guard: Among the rest were some Gadites that came from beyond Jordan, and the Prophet Gad among them: And so hath David a Regiment of six hundred men, and a Prophet their Chaplain.

Here falls in that Story in 2 Sam. 23. vers. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. and 1 Chron. 11. vers. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. of Davids longing for the water of Bethlehem, &c. but reserved to its place in the reckoning up of Davids Worthies, for here is more especially intended to relate Davids acts, and not his Worthies.

CHAP. XXII. from Verse 3. to the end of the Chapter.

83 DAvids Father and Mother are yet alive, and seated by him in Moab. He removeth into the Forrest of Hareth, Saul slayeth 85. Priests, and destroyeth Nob: and thus is Elies house quite cut off within one man. That was Abiathar, who escapes and comes to David, and now he hath a High Priest in his Army as well as a Prophet.

PSAL. LII.

AT the end of this Chapter is the proper order and place of the fifty second Psalm, made as the title telleth, When Doeg came and told Saul, and said, David came to the house of Abimelech.

בא דויך
David came, not David is come.

CHAP. XXXIII.

DAvid beateth the Philistims, and saveth Keilah. The beginning of the first verse is to be read thus; Now they had told David, saying, &c. For Abiathars coming to David, which is related in the conclusion of the former Chapter, was not till David was at Keilah already, as appeareth by the sixth verse of this. The Ziphites discover David to Saul.

PSAL. LIV.

THereupon he maketh the fifty fourth Pſalm, as the title telleth the occaſion, and the occaſion in that title readily refers it to this place, to be taken in after the three and twentieth verſe of this Chapter.

PSAL. LXIII.

AT the end of this three and twentieth Chapter, with the Story of Davids remaining in the ſtrong holds of En-gedi, the ſixty third Pſalm falleth in, being made as the title telleth, in the wilderneſs of Judah, which about En-gedi was moſt deſart of all other places, that being upon the borders of the dead Sea.

CHAP. XXIV.

DAvid and Saul are together in a Cave.

PSAL. LVII.

THERE David poureth out his Prayer of Pſal. 57. and titles it, Al taſhchith, Deſtroy not; for though he were moved by his Souldiers to deſtroy Saul, yet he would not.

CHAP. XXV.

39 SAMUEL dieth ſome two years before Sauls death: He lived to ſee the time that Saul confeſſed David to be King, as Chap. 24.20. according to his Prediction: Nabal a drunkard, a fool, and clown dieth wretchedly.

PSAL. LVIII.

AFTER the 35 Verſe of this Chapter, ſeemeth to be the proper place and order of Pſal. 58. titled, Al taſhchith, Deſtroy not: as referring to Davids not deſtroying Nabal when he had ſo threatned, and yet at laſt rejoyced that he deſtroyed him not. He blameth in this Pſalm the venemouſneſs of Nabals Tongue, that had reviled him, and the deafneſs of his ears, that would not hearken to the voyce of his Meſſengers, ſay they their errand never ſo wiſely. He propheſieth that God would ſuddenly take him away as with a ſtorm, before the Pots, ſet on the fire for his Feaſts, ſhould feel any warmneſs from the thorns put under them to boyl them, and כמו חי כמו הרון * According as he was lively and jovial, ſo ſhould the wrath be proportioned to him when it came, ver. 9. for ſo might the latter end of that verſe be moſt properly rendred. As he lively, ſo the wrath, חי Chai, is the Epithet that David gives him when he ſends his Meſſengers to him: Thus ſhall you ſay, לחי Lechai to him that is lively: which our Engliſh hath well expreſſed, To him that liveth in proſperity: So David ſaith to Saul, ומי חיי משפחת אבי Or what is my livelihood in the family of my Father, 1 Sam. 18.18.

* כמו and כמו bear the ſame ſence as כ and כ in כמוכי כמוכך כעמי כעמך כעם כבהן and the like.

CHAP. XXVI.

DAVID hath Saul in his power again, and deſtroys him not: Saul again confeſſeth Davids Kingdom. David and he never ſee one another more.

In ſome time of the days of Saul, but the year uncertain; Reuben and Gad deſtroy the Hagarites, and dwell in their ſtead, for this read 1 Chron. 5. ver. 9, 10. and from ver. 18. to ver. 23.

CHAP. XXVII.

DAvid betaketh himſelf again to Gath, where not very long ago he was put to fain himſelf mad. Achiſh then his fear is now his friend: he was then a ſole ſingle man, and now he hath 600 men with him, a Guard to himſelf, and an help to Achiſh againſt Saul.

SAULS end is now approaching: He consulteth a witch: He had neither Priest nor Prophet to inquire after; he had despised and persecuted both: He seeth a Devil in Samuels likeness, and heareth of his own ruine.

CHAP. I.

DAVID heareth of the death of Saul, and lamenteth him: And chargeth the young men of Judah to learn the use of the Bow, that they might match the Philistims in Archery, and so be avenged on them for Sauls death; for by Archery they had slain him. The Story of the Amalekite to David, was not a lye to curry favour, or to obtain a reward, but it was a very and a real truth: Saul had fallen upon his own sword indeed [as was related in the preceding Chapter] but his Coat of mail had hindred that he had not given himself a wound so speedily deadly, but that the Philistims might come and catch him alive, and abuse him; and so he stands bleeding at that and at his other wounds leaning on his Spear, till this Amalekite came by: His Armour Bearer was dead already; and these words, When his Armour Bearer saw that Saul was dead, he fell on his sword, and died also, are to be understood in this sense, That when he saw Saul had given himself so deadly a wound, he did the like, and died indeed. But Sauls wound was not so quick of dispatch, therefore he desireth the Amalekite to kill him out; For says he אחוני שבץ My Coat of Mail hath withheld me so that my life is all this while in me. And thus Saul that had been so cruel to David, is now cruel to himself; and he that had spared the Amalekites, is now slain by one of that Nation.

CHAP. II.

2950 1 DAVID anointed King of Judah in Hebron, being 30 years old. Com-
2 pair *Gen.*41.46. *Numb.*4.3. Luke 3.23. In Hebron, Abraham had had his
3 first Land and much residence: Here lay the Patriarks Abraham, Isaac, and Ja-
4 cob, and their wives buried; and here was John Baptist born, and our Saviour
5 conceived. There is long busling between the House of David and the house of 6 Saul; Abner still striving to make a party strong enough to settle one of Sauls
7 Sons in the Kingdom. Thereupon is Ishbosheth anointed in Sauls stead: He is called Ishbaal, 1 *Chron.*8.33. for Baal was commonly called Bosheth or Shame, as Jerubbaal is called Jerubbosheth, 2 Sam. 11. 21. and Mephibosheth, 2 *Sam.*9.12. called Meribaal, 1 *Chron.*8.34. see also *Jer.*11.13.

Abners vapouring causeth a desperate duell of twelve and twelve men; and so layeth the foundation of a continual War in an equal bloodshed. לולא דברת vers.27. If thou hadst not said (saith Joab) what thou didst say in the morning, let the young men rise and play before us, surely the people had gone away every man from his brother, even in the morning, and there had been never a blow struck; but thou didst provoke it.

CHAP. III.

DAVIDS six Sons born to him in Hebron, in his seven years and six Months reign there, are here reckoned together, that that Story and matter may be dispatcht at once.

Abner upon discontent at Ishbosheth turneth to David, and confesseth that Kingdom, which hitherto he had willingly and wittingly opposed. But God will not suffer such a man, and upon such grounds, to be a promoter of Davids throne; he is slain by Joab, even in a place of Judicature, and with a wound parallel to that that he had given Asahel.

CHAP. IV.

ISHBOSHETH slain by two Benjamites, brethren in evil: They came into the midst of the house, as if they would fetch wheat, *vers.*6. that is, with a sack in their hands, to put his head in, &c. Instantly before the Text falls upon the Story of Ishbosheth, it relateth the Story of Mephibosheth, because he was now all the stock left of Sauls house, but only Rizpahs children a Concubine, and Morahs a daughter.

CHAP. V. from beginning to Ver. 11. And 1 CHRON. XI. all.

2957 8 DAVID anointed King over all Israel at Hebron, and from thence brought by all Israel to Jerusalem, to settle him there, and to make that the Royal City. He reigned in all 40 years; in Hebron seven years and an half, and at Jerusalem 32 years and an half: And this latter was exactly the time of our Saviours life upon earth.

Joab after Davids curse upon him for Abners murder, is yet made Commander in chief for his taking of Jerusalem.

The prosperity of David at Jerusalem, and his building of it, is presently set down after the Story of the taking of the City; as beginning from that time, and continuing, and going along with the times of the following Stories, and so to be carried in mind.

Then doth the Book of Chronicles give account of Davids Worthies: Which Catalogue is also mentioned by this Book of Samuel, but with this difference of place, that in the Chronicles it is set in the beginning of Davids Reign, and in Samuel in the latter end: And both very properly and much like to the placing of our Saviours Genealogy in Matthew and Luke, the one giving it at his Birth, and the other at his Baptism, and both upon singular reason. And so here the Book of Chronicles reckons up these men as those that helped David to his settlement in the Kingdom, and therefore it mentions them in the beginning of his reign, and the Book of Samuel reckons them up at the latter end of his reign, as those that had stuck to him all the time of his reign, and helped to keep him in that settlement.

In

David World

In both the Books there is firſt reckoned a Triumvirate, or three gallant men that were of a rank by themſelves, and none were equal with them, or like unto them: And theſe were

1. Joab, whoſe chief Captain-ſhip is related preſently before, upon the ſacking of Jeruſalem.

2. Adino the Eznite by name, called alſo Jaſhobeam by Office, that is, one that ſat on the ſeat among the people as Judge: the immediate Son of Zabdiel, 1 Chron. 27.2. but called a Hachmonite or the Son of Hachmoni for his former anceſtry. He lift up his ſpear againſt eight hundred men at one time, and ſlew three hundred of them. His name differs but one letter from Jeroboams, the one promoted Davids Kingdom, and the other oppoſed it. ישבעם ירבעם

3. Eliazar the Son of Dodo the Ahohite, 1 Chron. 27.4. of Bethlehem.

After theſe firſt three brave men, both the Books reckon a ſecond Triumvirate or three gallant men more, of an inferiour rank to the former three, but of a ſuperiour to all others. Theſe were

1. Abiſhai the brother of Joab, and nephew of David: he was the chief of this Triumvirate, but his ſtory is handled in the ſecond place, becauſe of the likeneſs of the ſtories of Eleazar and Shamma, the one defending a field of Barley, and the other a field of Lentiles; and for this likeneſs their ſtories are laid together.

2. Shammah, The Book of Chronicles neither uttereth his name, nor mentioneth his defending a field of Lentiles againſt the Philiſtims: but it includeth that ſtory in the ſtory of the three mens breaking through the quarters of the Philiſtims to the Well of Bethlehem: for he was one of the three, and this act of his in defending the Lentiles was in that expedition, and therefore the Book of Samuel hath given a note that that expedition was in harveſt: and the act was done in the valley of Rephaim.

3. Benaiah a Prieſt, 1 Chron. 27.5.

After theſe two brave ranks of three and three, there were thirty gallant Captains and Comanders more, but yet that attained not to the dignity of either of theſe ranks.

The Book of Chronicles reckons many more names then the Book of Samuel, for it reckoneth ſome other valiant Commanders that helped forward Davids ſettlement, but were not of the higheſt and eminenteſt places after.

1 CHRON. XII. from ver. 23. to the end.

A Catalogue of Commanders that came to David for his anointing King over Iſrael, the Galileans afford the greateſt number.

And now there lieth a matter of ſome difficulty before us, becauſe of a difference of order in the ſtories that are laid next in theſe two Books. The Book of Samuel bringeth next the ſtory of Hirams kindneſs and reſpect to David, of Davids Children, of two battels with the Philiſtims, and then it relateth the fetching up of the Ark. But the Book of Chronicles firſt relateth the fetching up of the Ark, and then thoſe ſtories of Hirams kindneſs, Davids Children, and the Philiſtims Battels: For the methodizing therefore of theſe ſtories into their proper time and order, they are to be taken up thus.

1 CHRON. XIII. Ver. 1,2,3,4.

DAVID conſulteth with the Captains of thouſands that had come to him to Hebron, and had gone with him to Jeruſalem about the fetching up of the Ark. This was but a conſultation and an agreement about the matter, but the thing is not yet done: for all Iſrael is firſt to be ſent to about it, and a time appointed when they ſhall come in. Hereupon the Companies now preſent depart to their own homes till the time appointed for that purpoſe come.

CHAP. V. From Ver. 11. to the end. 1 CHRON. XIV. All.

WHEN Iſrael was departed every one home, Hiram King of Tyre hearing of Davids Coronation, and of the ſolemnity of it, and of the taking Jeruſalem, he ſends betimes to him to enter amity with him, and preſents him with Cedar and workmen to build him an houſe: Davids Marriages and Children reckoned up, which though born in ſeveral years, yet all mentioned here together, when the Text is relating Davids ſettlement and proſperity.

In this ſpace between the peoples departing from Davids Coronation, and their meeting again to fetch up the Ark, David being now left of thoſe multitudes, and Jeruſalem not yet fully fortified, the Philiſtims come once and again to the valley of Rephaim, which lieth under Jeruſalem, to catch David, but he beats them ſore both times.

PSAL. LXVIII.

WITH the third Verſe of 1 *Sam.*6. read Pſal. 68. which though in the title it tell not the occaſion whereupon it was made, yet do the very firſt words of it ſhew that it was made upon the removal of the Ark: For thoſe words, Let God ariſe, and let his enemies be ſcattered, were the words which were conſtantly uſed when the Ark removed, Numb. 10. 35. and the contents of the Pſalm do ſpeak to the very ſame tenor.

I CHRON. XV. From beginning to Verſe 15.

THREE months was the Ark in the Houſe of Obed Edom, and by the end of that time had David provided ſome houſes for himſelf and ſervants, ſince Hiram ſent him work-men, and he had made ready a place for the Ark: with the firſt verſe of this Chapter read that part of 1 Sam. 6. 12. And it was told David, ſaying, God hath bleſſed Obed Edom, and all that he hath, becauſe of the Ark of God.

PSAL. CXXXII.

UPON this removal of the Ark this Pſalm ſeemeth to have been penned by David: wherein amongſt other things he prayeth, that the Lord will fit and ſanctifie the Prieſts for the preſent and future ſervice of the Ark, and that he will accept of the face of his anointed, ſo as that there may be no more breach amongſt them, as there was in Perez Uzza.

of the Oath of God made to him, *Eccleſ.*8.2. David ſubdueth Gath, and her Towns called Metheg Ammah, or the bridle of Ammah, becauſe there was a continual Garriſon of the Philiſtims in the Hill Ammah, 2 Sam. 2. 25. which the Philiſtims of Gath uſed as a bridle to curb thoſe parts. He killeth Moab to a third part, laying them on the ground, and meaſuring them with a cord, who ſhould be ſlain, and who ſhould live: This he calleth, The meaſuring of the Valley of Succoth, *Pſal.*60.10. He ſubdueth Hadadezer, and taketh from him 20000 men, and 1000 Chariots, and 7000 Horſemen that attended them, ſeven men to a Chariot: He ſpoils them all but 100 Chariots, and reſerves 700 Horſemen for them. Of Syria Damaſcus he deſtroies 22000 men.

PSAL. LX.

AFTER the 12 verſe of 2 Sam. 8. the ſixtieth Pſalm is to be taken in; whoſe Title telleth that it was made by David, when he ſtrove with Aram Naharaim, and with Aram Zobah, [that is with Hadadezer King of Zobah, when he went to fortifie himſelf with Aram Naharaim, as 2 Sam. 8. 3. when Joab returned and ſmote of Edom in the valley of ſalt twelve thouſand.] Now this was a different victory from that which is mentioned in the very next verſe, of Abiſhai ſlaying of Edom in the valley of ſalt eighteen thouſand. For there is not only a viſible difference between the perſons Joab and Abiſhai, and between the numbers 12000 and 18000. But the Text relateth expreſly, that before that victory of Abiſhai over Edom, David had taken ſpoil from Edom, and from Amalek, which were of Edom.

PSAL. CVIII.

AFTER the thirteenth verſe of 1 *Sam.*8. is *Pſal.*108. to be taken in being the very ſame in ſubſtance with the ſixtieth: And as that doth tell in the Title that it was made upon Joabs Victory of 12000 Edomites; ſo may it be well conceived, that this was made upon Abiſhai's victory of 18000.

CHAP. X. 1 CHRON. XIX.

HANUN baſely abuſeth Davids Meſſengers. They came to mourn with him, and comfort him; and he inſtead of rent Garments, which was the garb of mourners, cuts off their Garments to their buttocks, and cutteth off half their beards; whereas it was abomination to them to have any cutting of their hair for the dead at all, *Levit.*19.27. *Deut.*14.1.

Hanun hireth שנים ושלשים אלף רכב 1 *Chron.*19.7. Thirty two thouſand men with Chariots; for ſo ſhould it be rendred, ſince it is apparent by 2 Sam. 10.6. that 20000 of this number were Footmen.

After the foiling of this Army, David again foileth Hadadezer, and ſlayeth of his שבעת אלפים רכב 1 *Chron.*19.18. Seven thouſand men with Chariots; that is, 700 Chariots, 2 Sam. 10.18. with ten men attending every Chariot. He ſlayeth alſo 40000 Horſe-men, 2 Sam. 10.18. which in the Book of Chronicles is expreſſed 40000 footmen; that is, ſo many men, Horſe and Foot, which fought not in Chariots, or with them, but without.

26 DAVID adulterateth Uriahs wife; maketh him drunk, and slayeth him: Uriah was a proselited Canaanite, some remnant of the sons of Heth about Hebron, see *Gen.*23.2,3. Bathsheba was the daughter of Eliam, 2 *Sam.*11. 7. or Ammiel, 1 *Chron.*3.5. of Lodebar beyond Jordan, 2 *Sam.*9.5.& 17,27.

CHAP. XII. To Vers. 15. and the first Clause of that verse; And Nathan went to his own house.

NATHAN the Prophet that had been sent to tell David of good things to his house, is now sent to tell him some bad. By an exquisite parable he bringeth him to condemn himself; and by a terrible threatning to confess his sin, &c.

PSAL. LI.

DEsire of pardon of sin is the fruit of pardon of sin. David had been just now told that his sin was forgiven; and now he doth earnestly apply himself to beg the forgiveness of it. The Title of the Psalm doth plainly speak for the time and place of it: David nameth one of his sons by Bathsheba, Nathan, after the name of the Prophet, 1 *Chron.*3.5. Zach. 12. 12. And this was that son, of whom Christ descended, Luke 3.31. and thus David both shewed his belief of the promise that Nathan had told him of, when he brought him good tidings, and his repentance for that sin that Nathan checkt him for, when he brought him bad.

CHAP. XII. From *vers.*15. And the Lord strake the child, &c. to *vers.*24.

27 THE child begotten in adultery dieth uncircumcised: David had been certainly told by Nathan that he should die. Yet he beggeth for his life.

CHAP. XII. from *vers.*28. to the end. I CHRON. XX. vers. 1. And Joab smote Rabbah, and destroyed it, and vers.2,3.

JOAB taketh part of Rabbah, namely, that part where the Court lay: and David comes and takes the rest, and puts the Ammonites to exquisite tortures.

28 AMNON defloureth Tamar his own sister. Compare this incest of Davids eldest son, with that of Reuben, Jacobs eldest son, *Gen.*35.22. And this rape of Tamar, with the rape of Dinah, Gen. 34. And this Tamar incestuated by her own brother, with Tamar incestuated by her own father in Law, *Gen.*38.

Absalom calleth Amnon: Aminon scornfully, *ver.*20. אמינון אחיך Hath Aminon thy brother been with thee?

29 Absalom murdereth Amnon. Here observe the hand and proceeding of justice: As David had committed adultery, made Uriah drunk, and then murdered him; so Amnon committeth incest, is made drunk, and then murdered. And as Amnon had committed his villany at his meat, so at his meat he is met with punishment. Absalom upon the fact fled to Geshur to Talmai, who was his Grandfather. See 2 *Sam.*3.3.

CHAP. XII. vers. 24,25.

30 SALOMON born, and called Jedidiah, the Lords beloved. The Story of his birth is joyned to the Story of the child that died; that Gods reconciliation to David might be shewed instantly after the relation of his anger against him. His anger was shewed in taking away that child that was conceived in adultery: His reconciliation is shewed in the Lords delighting in a child born in wedlock of the same woman. His birth is mentioned before the taking of Rabbah, though it were long after, because the Text having Bathsheba's story
31 in hand, it would conclude it altogether. Absalom in this year in exile at Geshur. Absalom still at Geshur.

32 ABSALOM ſtill at Geſhur; but this year begged home again by Joab, and by a ſuborned woman. Her ſpeech to David is very obſcure and intricate, if not very well looked into and conſidered. She firſt propoſeth a ſtory parable wiſe, of one of her ſons murdering another, as Abſalom had done Amnon, and the danger of the ſlayer for the fact, if the King ſhould not remedy it. To this the King anſwers her, Go to thine houſe, and I will give charge concerning thee, ver.8. And the woman ſaid unto the King, The iniquity be on me, and on my fathers houſe, and the King and his throne be guiltleſs, verſ.9. Her meaning in plain terms was this, Well, thou giveſt me ſuch an anſwer and diſpatch as may poſſibly bring the blood upon thine own head, and upon thy Throne; for thou ſaiſt thou wilt give charge concerning me, to prevent the miſchief which may chance be done before thou prevent it. And the King ſaid, Whoſoever ſaith ought unto thee, bring him to me, and he ſhall not touch thee any more, ver.10. She replies to this, Let the King remember the Lord thy God, מהרבת גואל הדם becauſe of the multitude of avengers of blood to deſtroy, and let them not deſtroy my Son. That is, Let the King for the Lords ſake, conſider how many avengers of blood there are; and whileſt I am bringing one to thee, another may chance kill him in the mean ſeaſon. Then the King ſwears her ſon ſhall not die. And then ſhe comes cloſe up to her errand. And why, ſaith ſhe, haſt thou ſuch thoughts towards the people of thy Kingdom, and thinkeſt not the like towards the people of thine own family, ſo as to bring thine own baniſhed back? For we muſt indeed once die, and when we are dead there is no recalling of us any more, no more then ſpilt water can be gathered again off the ground: But whileſt the Lord doth not take away the life, he hath contrived ways and thoughts, that a baniſhed man ſhall not be baniſhed for ever from him, &c.

33 Abſalom is at Jeruſalem, but ſeeth not the Kings face. He takes upon him to be a Nazarite for the preſent, and under a vow, that he may the better pretend the paying of a vow at Hebron; yet is he forced to cut his hair before his vow
34 be paid; becauſe it was a burden to him. He brings Joab to him, as God uſeth to bring men to him by affliction, he fires his field; and then comes Joab, and brings him to the King.

PSAL. III.

WITH the thirty ſecond verſe of this chapter, even with theſe words of it, And when David came to the top of the Mount where he worſhipped God, read the third Pſalm, made, as the title telleth, by David when he fled from his ſon Abſalom, and poured out, as may well be ſuppoſed in this Prayer that he made on the top of Mount Olivet, where he worſhipped God: He complaineth ſadly in it of the multitude of his enemies that were againſt him, and of the multitude of his falſe friends, that durſt not be for him; but yet aſſures himſelf of deliverance, and of his enemies deſtruction; and propheſieth of the very manner of the end of Abſalom, and Achitophel, if you will take theſe words in the very letter, Thou haſt ſmitten mine enemies on the cheek bone, Achitophel with the knot of the rope, and Abſalom with the bough of the Oak: unleſs he allude to Samſons Victory with the jaw bone, and foreſee that by ſmall means, as that was, the Lord will bring him a great deliverance: Compare Chriſts going up to mount Olivet, and there praying in the day of his bitterneſs with this type of David.

CHAP. XVI.

DAVID gives away and diſpoſeth of Mephiboſheths Land, when he hath not power to diſpoſe of his own, Shimei flings curſes and ſtones at David, and barks like a living Dog, though Abiſhai call him a dead one. The only unjuſt act that ever David had done againſt the houſe of Saul, he had but newly done, that was, giving away Mephiboſheths Land, and here a man of the houſe of Saul is ſoon upon him.

BEtwixt the thirteenth and fourteenth Verſes of this Chapter cometh in the ſeventh Pſalm, made by David upon theſe words of Shimei, and ſung by him even in this extremity: He calleth him Cuſh by way of deriſion, as alluding to Kiſh the father of Sauls family [for Shimei was of the Family of Saul] but turning it into Cuſh upon Shimei an accurſed name, Gen. 10. and a Black-moor Nation, and of ſuch a colour were Shimeis conditions.

DAVID in his flight from Abſalom ſtays not till he come cloſe to Jordan, and there he reſts; that if there be any neceſſity or danger he is ready to get over the water and be gone: and ſo is that to be underſtood in 2 Sam. 16. 14. And the King and all the people that were with him came weary, and refreſhed themſelves there: that is, a little beyond Bahurim, which was cloſe by Jordan, and they had not ſtaid nor refreſhed themſelves till they came there. As David lies thus upon Jordan banks, he makes the forty ſecond Pſalm, and from the land of Jordan remembers the Lord, ver.6. and by the obſerving of the waters of Jordan he remembers his own miſery. There he obſerveth the waves rolling one in the neck of another, and the deep making a noiſe here and there in its channels, and in its falls: And ſo, ſaith he, all thy billows and all waves tumble over me one after another, verſ. 7. &c. The forty third Pſalm ſeemeth alſo to have been made by him about the ſame time, compare the laſt Verſes of the two Pſalms together.

PSAL. LV.

BEtwixt the one and twenty and two and twenty Verſes of this 17 Chapter of the ſecond of Samuel, upon the relation how tidings came to David of Ahitophels counſel againſt him, take in the five and fiftieth Pſalm, in which David deploreth his miſery, cauſed by one of his guides, and acquaintance, and Counſellors, ver. 13,14. and prayeth bitterly againſt him: His prayer took effect inſtantly in Ahitophels death.

CHAP. XVIII. XIX.

ABSALOM hanged by the neck in the forked bough of an Oak: His high head is now in its proper exaltation, and his proud heart is darted through: David mourneth ſadly for him, becauſe of the deſperate condition in which he died: Shimei is pardoned. He came down firſt of all the houſe of Joſeph to meet the King, *chap.*19. *verſ.*20. Here the houſe of Joſeph is uſed for all Iſrael except Judah, and ſet in oppoſition to Judah: Joſeph had been the prime family while the Ark was in Shiloh, and all Iſrael were named after it, as Pſal. 80. 1. but then God refuſed Joſeph, and choſe Judah for the chief, Pſal. 78. 68, 69. And there began and continued the difference and diſtinction betwixt Iſrael and Judah, Joſeph and Judah, Ephraim and Judah; for by all theſe names are the reſt of the Tribes ſtiled in oppoſition to the Tribe of Judah.

PSAL. IV.

WITH this Chapter also read the fourth Psalm, made as the stile of it argueth upon this rebellion of Sheba, as the third Psalm was made upon the rebellion of Absalom. He checketh the people for despising his Kingdom, and hearkning after a Kingdom that was but vanity, as first Absaloms, and now Shebas, ver.2. He adviseth Israel and Judah, not to sin in their anger, 2 *Sam.*19.43. רגזו ואל תחטאו: Be angry, but sin not, ver. 4. He professeth in *ver.*7. that since the time, that corn, and wine, and other provision increased to him from Barzillai, Shobi, and Nahash, 2 *Sam.*17.27. &c. that his heart had received comfortable confidence and assurance of his restoring again, and therefore he would still trust and depend upon that goodness and providence that had delivered him out of the other trouble and wrought those good beginnings towards him.

CHAP. XXI. to Vers. 15.

36 37 38 THree years famine lye upon the Land for the offence of Saul: He in a zeal to Israel and Judah would expel the Amorites and destroy them [and with them all Wizards and Witches] and with them he also falls upon the Gibeonites and destroyeth them, though Joshua had made a Covenant with them: That these three years famine began the next year after the year of Absaloms rebellion the Text seemeth to hint in the phrase שנה אחרי שנה in vers. 1. The year after that year: for in all the Scripture wherein mention of famine is made, it only saith, There were seven years famine, or ten years famine, &c. and that is enough, and is used constantly, to denote that there was famine so many years together, and it never telleth that there was famine so many years year after year. And therefore this expression here seemeth rather to joyn the three years of famine to the story before, then to one another: However, we shall find a passage in the story of Davids numbring the people, that directs us very well about the time of these years.

CHAP. XXI. Vers. 15. to end. I CHRON. XX. *Vers.*4. to end.

THose Battels are of an uncertain date, and therefore since there is no direction where to place them, it is the safest way to take them in the order where they lye, especially since both the Books of Samuel and the Chronicles have laid them in this place. The Book of Samuel reckons four Battels, and the Chronicles but three: for that wherein David was in danger, and could not come off with honour and safety is omitted. The Book of Chronicles conceales sometimes the dishonour of the Saints of God, as it mentioneth not the fact of David with Uriah and his wife, nor the Idolatry of Salomon, &c.

The Book of Samuel calleth Elhanan the Son of Jaare Oregim a Bethlehemite, and the Book of Chronicles calleth him the Son of Jair: Now there is mention of Elhanan a Bethlehemite the Son of Dodo, 1 *Chron.*12.26. and whether these were two men, or only one and the same may well be questioned. He is said to have slain Goliah, 2 *Sam.*21.19. that is, Lahmi Goliaths brother, as the Book of Chronicles expounds it, as by Michal is meant Michals Sister, in the same Chapter of Samuel, ver.8.

CHAP. XXII. & PSAL. XVIII.

THere are two things that may seem to argue this not to be the proper place of this Psalm and Chapter, 1. Because it was most especially composed upon Davids delivery from the hand of Saul, as the title sheweth: In the day that the Lord had delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul, that is, especially out of the hand of Saul, as *Josh.*2.1. Go view the land and Jericho, that is, Jericho chiefly. 2. Because the next Chapter in Samuel beginning thus: And these are the latter words of David: shewing, that these of Chap.22. were uttered a good while before them: But howsoever this Song of deliverance might be penned by David many years a go, upon his clear deliverance from all trouble by Saul and his Family, yet is it most properly laid here, and repeated by David at this time, when now all his enemies had spit their venom, and he was delivered from them all: and now we hear of no more more enemies of his ſtirring, but himſelf an enemy to himſelf in numbring the people. If any one will be ſo curious, he may read Pſal. 18. at the end of 2 *Sam.*4.when David is quit from the trouble of Sauls houſe: and he may read this, 2 *Sam.*22. which is the ſame thing again here.

CHAP. XXIII.

HEre are ſome words of David of a latter date: דברים אחרונים may be rendred Verba poſteriora as well as Poſtrema: The reaſon of the recital of his Worthies in this place was obſerved before.

CHAP. XXIV. & I CHRON. XXI.

39 DAVID numbreth the people, by the provoking of Satan, 1 Chron. 21.1. and by the provoking of God, 1 Sam. 24.1. the former tending to a ſin in David, the latter tending to a puniſhment of Iſrael: the Lord was diſpleaſed at them for ſo little regarding Davids Kingdom, as he had been at David for the matter of Uriah, and as he had been at Sauls houſe for the ſlaughter of the Gibeonites, and therefore he giveth up David to a covetous thought, to number the people, that he might lay a tax upon every Poll. Joab hath here more piety, at the leaſt more policy then David, and declines the buſineſs till maſter'd by Davids importunity: He is nine moneths and twenty days upon his counting, much near the counting-time of a woman with child, and at laſt he bringeth in the number; but here the account in the Book of Samuel doth differ exceedingly from the account in the Book of the Chronicles, the Chronicles ſaith, All Iſrael were eleven hundred thouſand men: and the Book of Samuel ſaith, they were only eight hundred thouſand men, here are three hundred thouſand difference: and the Book of Samuel ſaith, that the men of Judah were five hundred thouſand, but the Book of Chronicles ſaith, they were only four hundred and ſeventy thouſand. Here is thirty thouſand difference. Now for the reconciling of this great and double diverſity, it is to be obſerved, That there were four and twenty thouſand Souldiers and Officers that attended David monthly, ſo many every month, theſe make in all two hundred eighty eight thouſand, 1 *Chron.*27. Theſe were as it were a ſtanding Guard about the King every Month; and ready for any ſudden expedition: There were beſides theſe the Rulers of the Tribes, and Officers under them, and the Overſeers and Rulers of the Kings imployments, and Officers under them; but the number of theſe was not put into the account of the Chronicles of David, verſ. 24. ſo that here is the reſolution of the ſcruple, the whole number of men able to bear Arms in Iſrael, were eleven hundred thouſand, and five hundred thouſand in Judah, but of theſe there were three hundred thouſand of Iſrael, and thirty thouſand of Judah that were already liſted, and in the conſtant ſervice and imployment of the King; and theſe Joab gave not in the account becauſe their number and liſt had been known long, and becauſe the King would not lay Taxes on his own ſervants. Amongſt all this number Levi and Benjamin were not reckoned.

For before Joab came home to ſum them (for he began furtheſt off firſt) a plague began among the people; and now the Lord began to cut off them that David had begun to make his pride, and intended to make his profit: The Lord propoſeth to David three things; among the reſt whether three years famine ſhould come upon the Land, 2 *Chron.*21.12. which the Book of Samuel expreſſeth, Shall ſeven years famine come? verſ.13. that is, Shall three years famine come to make up thoſe that have been already to be ſeven? There had been already three years famine for the Gibeonites, and this year of numbering the people was almoſt out, and ſhall three years famine more come to make up ſeven? And ſo we have a very good direction and guide about the order and times of the Stories that went laſt before, concerning the three years famine, and this joyned to it; and this helpeth ſtill to confirm that Series, in which we have laid them, or indeed rather in which they lye of themſelves: Where Abraham had his knife unſheathed to ſlay his Son, but was ſtayed by command from Heaven: In the very ſame place had the deſtroying Angel his ſword drawn to ſlay Jeruſalem, but was reſtrained by the Lord; the place was a threſhing floor on Mount Moriah, that belonged to Ornan or Araunah or Auranah, for it is twice ſo written in the Text: And by theſe ſeveral names, one near another, was he called: A man that was deſcended of the Royal blood of the Jebuſites, and and that now lived with, and was the chief among other Jebusites that injoyed estates in and about Jerusalem under a Tribute. This place David purchaseth in two several parcels, and for two several sums. The very floor, and the Oxen and materials for sacrifice, he bought for 50 shekels of silver, 2 Sam. 24. 24. But the whole place of the Mount of the house, which was a very large compass, cost him six hundred shekels of gold, 1 Chron. 21.25. There David builds an Altar, and sacrificeth, and the Lord answereth him by fire from Heaven, and from Heaven doth by this token point out the place where the Temple should be built.

1 CHRON. XXII. Vers. 1. 2, 3, 4, 5.

2989 40 DAVID prepareth for the building of the Temple: He setteth Proselites, or converted Gentiles a work to get stones for it. This was a Type of the spiritual Temple, to be built up by Gentiles under the Gospel.

The first Book of KINGS.

CHAP. I. all.

DAVID in his old age is struck with a cold dead palsie, that no clothes can keep him warm, whereupon his Phisicians perswade him to marry a young fresh Damzel, which proveth to be Abishag of Shunem, in the County of Issachar. Adonijah upon the Kings age and decrepitness, stands up for the Kingdom; the Kings darling, and like Elies Sons, spoiled by his father for want of reproof; his next child to Absalom, by another woman, and like Absalom in beauty and rebellion. His aspiring to the Kingdom causeth David to anoint Solomon, to put the matter out of question. But here is a matter of some question about the time of Solomons anointing, and about the order of this Chapter.

We find three times mention of Solomons being made King, namely, twice in the Book of Chronicles, and once here; see 1 Chron. 23. 1. & 29. 22. Now the doubt lieth in this, whether he were three times made King indeed, and so all the three Texts that speak of it to be taken severally; or whether only twice, as 1 Chron. 29.22. seemeth to settle, and then this Story to be concurrent with one of those relations in the Chronicles.

That that must give light in this obscurity, is this, That this anointing of Solomon mentioned in this 1 King. 1. upon this aspiring of Adonijah, was the first time that ever David shewed, who should raign after him, see ver. 20, 27. and therefore it must needs be held concurrent or the same with that making Solomon King in 1 Chron. 23. 1. and the current of the Story will make it plain.

Only that scruple that lies yet in the way [that being supposed] is this: That David at this first unction of Solomon, should be in his chamber, and upon his bed, and exceedingly decrepit: And yet at his second anointing should be in the midst of his Princes and Commanders, and standing upon his feet, 1 Chron. 28.2. But this also will be removed, if it be but considered, that Davids present infirmity was not sickness, but coldness and benummedness, and old age; he was heart whole, and head whole; but he was old and palsick, and therefore though his most common and most commodious posture and composure was to be in his chamber, and upon his couch; yet upon such an occasion as to Crown Solomon again before all Israel, he can come forth, and stand upon his feet, and make Orations, and give advice for things to come.

1 CHRON. XXII. from vers. 6. to the end. And XXIII. vers. 1.

THE juncture of the Story here lieth plain and easie; David having caused Solomon to be anointed, because of the ambition of Adonijah, and that conspiracy being broken, he first giveth him in charge, the building of the House of the Lord, as the first thing to be looked after; And thus when David was old and full of days, he made Solomon King, as is related in 1 King. 1. and so the first verse of 1 Chron. 23. and that Story doth speak but one and the same thing.

I CHRON. XXIII. from Verſe 2. to end. And XXIV. XXV.

2989 40 DAVID having that emergent occaſion by Adonijahs Conſpiracy, to anoint Salomon haſtily and privately: When he hath ſo done it, he intendeth a more ſolemn and publick Coronation of him, and therefore he calleth together all the Heads and Rulers of the people about it. And as at the firſt platforming of the people of Iſrael into a Commonwealth in the Wilderneſs, they are numbred; the Levites appointed for Divine Service, and the Sanctuary framed; much like doth David here: The Levites are numbred, and diſtributed into their ſeveral offices and ſervices, and the Prieſts into their courſes, &c.

The Book of PSALMS.

BEſides thoſe Pſalms that we have already mentioned, and ranked as we have come along, there are about 120 more that are of an uncertain date, or of uncertain Authors, or both, and therefore not certainly to be applied to any fixed time or occaſion, and yet may not unfitly nor impertinently be taken in here at the end of the five and twentieth Chapter of the firſt of Chronicles: For when the Reader hath there ſeen how David diſpoſeth of Aſaph, Heman, and Jeduthun to be chief Singers in the Temple, and their Sons under their hand, he may very properly turn his thoughts to thoſe Pſalms that were committed to theſe men to ſing, or that were made by them to be ſung.

He will find twelve that bear the name of Aſaph, viz. Pſal. 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83. whether all or any of theſe were made by Aſaph, or committed to him being made by ſome other I will not diſpute: be it the one or the other, it is very ſeaſonable and very Chronical to take theſe Pſalms to thought, when the Text before you in the Book of Chronicles is telling you of Aſaph ſet up a chief ſinger, and his ſons under him.

There is but one Pſalm in the Book that bears the name of Heman in the front of it, and that is, Pſal. 88. But that Heman that made that Pſalm, and this Heman that was appointed by David to be a chief ſinger, were two different men, of two ſeveral Tribes, and of far diſtant times: For Heman that made the 88 Pſalm was of the Tribe of Judah, the immediate ſon of Zera, and lived in Ægypt in the time of Iſraels affliction there: ſee 1 Chron. 2. 6. but this Heman the ſinger was a Levite, living in the time of David, and was the Grand-child of Shemuel, 1 Chron. 6. 33: therefore there is not one Pſalm at all that bears the name of this Heman that we have in hand, and yet there are divers that have reference to him, and to his ſons though under another title; for this Heman was of the ſtock and line of Korah, 1 Chron. 6. 33. 37. and all thoſe Pſalms that bear the name of the ſons of Korah in their front and title refer to him and his ſons, as Pſalm 42. 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49. 84, 85, 87.

Jeduthun is named only in the title of three Pſalms, viz. 39. 62. & 77. Now beſides all theſe that have been named, both now as referring to theſe three men, and before as owning David for their Author, and holding out the occaſion whereupon they were made; there are very many Pſalms that have no title at all, and own neither Author nor occaſion, by whom and upon which they were made: and there are very many again that own David for their Author, but own not the occaſion of their making; ſince therefore it is not poſſible to reduce and fix theſe to their proper time and place in the Hiſtory and Chronology, this may be as fit a place to take them in as any other, namely, now in the concluſion of Davids Story. The Septuagint that we have, if we would take their direction, would help us both to find the Authors of many Pſalms, and the occaſion of many others, when neither the one nor the other is mentioned in the title of the Pſalm it ſelf. As Pſal. 33. 43, 91. 95. 96, 98. 99. 104. they aſcribe to David, Pſalm 137. to Jeremy. Pſalm 145, 146, 147, 148. to Haggai and Zachary. Pſal. 71. to the Sons of Jonadab and the people of the firſt Captivity. And ſo for occaſions, Pſal. 66. They title, A Pſalm of the Reſurrection. Pſal. 76. A Song

A very glorious Type of Christ, in his birth in Bethlehem, in his Shepheardry, in his victory over Goliah, in his power over Sauls Devil. In his persecutions in his Kingdom, in his victoriousnes over his Enemies, in his setling of Religion, and the service of God, &c.

The time of his reign is certainly fixed and determined in a gross sum of forty years, but for particular passages to own them particular years there is very little certainty; or if there be certainty, it is very obscure: I want not ground for the times according to which I have laid them, though to avoid prolixity, I have avoided to express and to dispute them, I shall only here name one or two things that have swayed with me, to suppose of the particular times of Davids reign, as I have laid them.

I was once of opinion, and I went not alone in it, but had abundance both of Jews and Christians that were of the same mind, that Saul reigned but three years in all, 1 *Sam.*13.1. and that the forty years mentioned at the breaking out of Absaloms rebellion, 2 *Sam.*15.7. were to be reckoned from the time of Sauls first anointing, or of Israels asking a King, and so that that rebellion fell out in the seven and thirtieth year of the reign of David. But now having a second time as seriously as I can viewed the times, and finding so many things occurring betwixt the first anointing of Saul and the days of his death, as are not imaginable to have been acted in three years, especially it being said, that David was one whole year and four months in the country of the Philistims, after all his persecutions, and before Sauls death, 1 *Sam.*27.7. and it appearing also most probable according to the order, as the Chapters themselves lye, that the three years famine for the Gibeonites were after Davids restoring to his Kingdom again after Absaloms rebellion; I cannot but upon these second thoughts retract my first, and conceive of these times according as I have laid them now, with these conceptions concerning them.

1. That Davids numbring and setling the Officers of State, and the Priests and Levites, was in his fortieth year, 1 *Chron.*26.31.

2. That this was begun presently upon the Lords designing the place of the Temple by fire from Heaven, 1 *Chron.*22.1,2. which was in Davids thirty ninth, 2 *Sam.*24.8.

3. That the year that David sinfully numbred the people, was the very next year after the three years famine, 2 *Sam.*24.13.

4. That the first of these three years famine was the year that next followed the year of Absaloms rebellion.

5. That the year of that rebellion was forty years after Davids first anointing in Bethlehem.

World / Solomon

6. That Saul reigned but three years before that anointing of David. And though he lived five years after, yet are not thoſe years reputed of his reign, for now the Lord had caſt him off, and he acted not now the part of a King but a Perſecutor.

1 KING. II. from ver. 12. to ver. 39.

2990 1 SOLOMON reigned: Adonijah ſlain for deſiring his fathers wife: Abiathar of the line of Ithamar, put from the High Prieſthood. Joabs blood ſhed at the Altar: Benaiah a Prieſt the Executioner, and made General of the Army: Shimei is confirmed. This year Solomon begetteth Rehoboam of a Lady of Ammon, ſee 1 *King.*14.21. &c.

2 CHRON. I. to *verſ.*14. 1 KING. 3. from *ver.*3. to the end.

THE Story of the death of Shimei is anticipated and joyned to the Story of his confinement, though it were three years after, that the Relation might have done with Shimei at once. So alſo is the Story of Solomons marrying Pharaohs daughter, laid ſooner then its Chronical time; for it was not before Solomons going to Gibeon, and there begging wiſdom, but it was after. But the reaſon of the placing of it before, is given by the Jews to be becauſe he married not Pharaohs daughter before he had ſlain Shimei; and therefore the Stories of them are ſo laid together: But upon viewing well the ſcope of the Stories preceeding, about the death of Joab, and the excluſion of Abiſhai from the Prieſthood, &c. the reaſon of joyning Solomons marriage with Pharaohs daughter will eaſily appear; namely, becauſe the Text would lay the politick ways of Solomon for the eſtabliſhing of his Kingdom cloſe together; and thoſe were theſe two, The taking away thoſe that might diſquiet it at home; and by making league and affinity with powerful Princes abroad: And then it cometh to tell the ſure and divine way how to make it ſure; and that it alſo expreſſeth to be two, namely, loving the Lord, and begging wiſdom of him.

At Gibeon was the greateſt Synagogue in the Land, for there ſtood the Tabernacle, and the brazen Altar that Moſes had made; being brought thither as to the chief reſidence of the ſons of Ithamar, who waited on the Sanctuary when Shiloh fell. There Solomon asketh wiſdom of the Lord, and obtaineth it: And coming to Jeruſalem, he ſheweth it in determining the doubtful caſe between the two Harlots. He was now but twelve years old.

1 KING. XI. ver. 21, 22.

THE very reading of ver. 21. doth plainly ſhew, that it is proper to take in this Story of Hadads returning to his own Country here.

CHAP. IV, V. 2 CHRON. I. verſ. 14, 15, 16, 17. And II. all.

2 THE matter of the fourth Chapter of Kings, and the concluſion of
3 1 *Chron.*1. is not of a fixed and determinate date, tied to any one year, but it runneth through the ſtory of many years; for it ſheweth the growth and continuance of Solomons ſtrength, eſtabliſhment, and proſperity in his Kingdom, and the evidencing of his wiſdom, all his time till his declining to Idolatry: And therefore as for the method and place of it, it might be laid even any where in the Story of all that time, this conſtruction being made of it whereſoever it is laid. But the Holy Ghoſt hath laid it in the beginning of his Hiſtory, that that general matter concerning his power and proſperity, might be concluded before the relation come to ſpeak of particular actions. It is no doubt but the tranſaction of buſineſs betwixt Solomon and Hiram King of Tyre, was very early in Solomons reign, becauſe he would not looſe time towards the building of the Temple. But the Text would diſpatch the other before, as a general thing, that particular Stories might be fallen upon, and receive no interruption.

Hiram or Hirom or Huram, King of Tyre, [for all theſe ways his name is written] confeſſeth God the Creator, 2 *Chron.*2.12. maketh a Covenant with Solomon; ſupplieth him with neceſſaries for his building, and ſendeth him a choice workman, Hiram. This Hirams father was of the Tribe of Naphtali, Solomon setteth one hundred fifty three thousand six hundred Proselites to frame materials for the Temple, seventy thousand to bear burdens, eighty thousand to be hewers in the mountains,and three thousand six hundred overseers, 2 Chron. 2.18. that is, three thousand three hundred overseers of the one hundred and fifty thousand Workmen, 1 *King.*5.16. and three hundred overseers of them and all.

The Princes of Solomon at home, and his chief Officers for his houshold provision reckoned, 1 *King.*4. Azariah the Son of Zadok, *ver.*2. that is, the Son of Ahimaaz the Son of Zadok, 1 *Chron.*6.8,9. is chief of the Sanhedrin. Zadok and Abiathar, are Priests ver.4. though Abiathar was expelled by Solomon from the High Priesthood, *Chap.*2.26. Yet might he exercise the Function of a Priest at Gibeon, till the Temple was built. There were twelve Officers for the twelve Months ונציב אחד אשר בארץ *vers.*19. which the Rabbins interpret, And one Officer which was in the Land for the Leap-year, or for the thirteenth Month which befel every third year. Solomon had four thousand Stables of Horses and Chariots, 2 Chron. 9. 25. that is forty thousand Stalls of Horses for his Chariots, 1 King. 4. 2. one Horse in every Stall, and ten Horses to a Chariot, and in a Stable. So seven hundred Chariots, 2 Sam. 10. 18. is rendred seven thousand, 1 *Chron.*19.18. that is, seven thousand men with seven hundred Chariots, ten to a Chariot. Solomon is said to be wiser then Heman, and Ethan, and Chalcol, and Darda, that is, in humane learning; for these men lived in Egypt in the time of Israels affliction there, and it seemeth were singularly skilled in all the wisdom of the Egyptians: Yet Solomon went beyond them in Philosophy.

CHAP. II. from vers. 39. to the end. And CHAP. III. vers. 1, 2.

ABout the latter end of Solomons third year, or beginning of his fourth, Shimei compasseth his own death, by breaking the bonds and bounds of his confinement. And as the Jews held; Solomon after that marrieth Pharaohs daughter. The time is uncertain, and the determination of it not much material. Solomon preferreth her before the rest of his wives, for they were of Nations that were his Subjects, but she the daughter of an intire King, and by this match he allieth that potent King to him, and secureth himself the better abroad; especially from Hadad his Enemy, who had married a Lady from the same Court, 1 *King.*11.19.

CHAP. VI. all. And VII. from vers. 13. to the end. 2 CHRON. III, IV.

THE foundation of the Temple laid on Mount Moriah, where Isaac had been offered: It is said, That the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid in Solomons fourth year, in the month Zif, or the second month, and in the eleventh year in the month Bul (which is the eighth month) it was finished, and so was he seven years in building it. It was exactly seven years and six months in building, but the odd six months are omitted for roundness of the sum, as the six odd months are of Davids reigning in Hebron. Compare 1 King. 2. 11 with 2 *Sam.*5.5.

Now the beginning of the seventh Chapter of 1 Kings relateth the Story of Solomons building his own house, before it come to mention the furniture of the Temple: because the Holy Ghost would mention all Solomons fabricks together: or the piles of his buildings before it come to speak of the furniture of any.

The Book of the PROVERBS.

AMong the Stories of Solomons renown in other things, may be inserted alſo and conceived his uttering of his Proverbs, three thouſand in number, as is related, 1 *King.*4.32. and the making of his Songs, one thouſand and five as is ſtoried in the ſame place. Now it is no doubt but the moſt of theſe are loſt, as alſo are his Books of Philoſophy: But theſe that are now extant in the Book of the Proverbs, and the Song of Songs, we may very properly conceive to have been penned by him in ſome of thoſe times that have been mentioned: The very exact time is uncertain, and therefore not curiouſly to be enquired after; but the time at large betwixt his Sons growing to capacity, whom he inſtructeth, and his own fall by the inticement of his Idolatrous Wives.

The Book of the Proverbs falleth under ſeveral diviſions: As

1. From the beginning of the firſt Chapter to the end of the ninth: which whole piece ſeemeth to have been compiled by him, more eſpecially for the inſtruction of his Son.

2. From the beginning of the tenth Chapter, to the latter end of the four and twentieth: wherein are leſſons framed for the inſtruction of others.

3. From the beginning of the five and twentieth Chapter to the end of the twenty ninth, are Proverbs of Solomon, found in ſome Copy of his in the time of Ezechiah, as Moſes his Copy of the Law was found in the days of Joſiah.

4. The thirtieth Chapter is a ſcript of Agur the Son of Jakeh, a man not to be certainly pointed out either who he was or when he lived, and therefore that Chapter muſt neceſſarily be taken up where it lies, becauſe it is not poſſible to find out where elſe to lay it.

5. The laſt Chapter is ſome part of it, Batſhebaes words to Solomon, and ſome part of it Solomons words in her commendation, and in commendation of all women like her: And the former part which are her words might very well be laid in her Story, and in Solomons minority, namely, after verſ. 25. of 2 Sam. 12. but yet it is very properly laid here where it is, becauſe the words of Solomon in commendation of ſuch women as ſhe, were delivered when he delivered his other Doctrines and Proverbs, and ſo the occaſion that drew out thoſe words, is fitly joyned to the time of the words themſelves.

Solomon is called Lemuel by his Mother, as alluding or tuning to Shemuel, or Samuel, a Son of his mothers vows, as Solomon is here averred by his mother to be of hers. She giveth him many excellent Leſſons in his tender years toward the making him a good man, and a good King: for which when he comes to mature years, he highly commends and extols a good woman, ſuch a one as his mother was in an Acroſtick, or Alphabetical Oration.

The Song of SOLOMON, or, The CANTICLES.

AFTER the building of the Summer Houſe in the Forreſt of Lebanon, Solomon pens the Book of the Canticles, as appeareth by theſe paſſages in it, Chap.4.8. Come with me from Lebanon my Spouſe, with me from Lebanon. And Chap. 7. 4. Thy noſe is as the tower of Lebanon, &c.

Upon his bringing up Pharaohs Daughter to the houſe that he had prepared for her, 1 King. 9.24. he ſeemeth to have made this Song. For though the beſt and the moſt proper aim of it was at higher matters then an earthly marriage, yet doth he make his marriage with Pharaohs Daughter, a type of that ſublime and ſpiritual marriage betwixt Chriſt and his Church. Pharaohs Daughter was a Heathen, and a ſtranger natively to the Church of Iſrael: and withal ſhe was a Black-moor, as being an African, as Cant. 1. 4, 5. alludeth to it: and ſo ſhe was the kindlier type of what Solomon intended in all particulars.

The Book of ECCLESIASTES.

AFTER his great fall Solomon recovereth again by repentance, and writeth this Book of Eccleſiaſtes, as his penitential dirge for that his folly. He calleth himſelf in it Koheleth, or the Gathering-Soul, either recollecting it ſelf, or by admonition gathering others that go aſtray after vanity. He ſheweth in it that all things on this ſide Heaven are but vanity, and he had found it ſo by ſad experience: and ſo the Kingdom promiſed to David, which was to be everlaſting, muſt not be expected to be of this world: as *Joh.*18.36.

THE Book of Chronicles omitteth to mention the fall of Solomon, as he had omitted the fall of David.

2 CHRON. X. all. And XI. to Verſe 5.

1 JEROBOAM of Ephraim draweth ten Tribes from the houſe of David, from the Temple that ſtood near it, and from the promiſe of Chriſt that was affixed to it. And this ſuddain rent of Solomons Kingdom, did plainly teach, that the King and Kingdom promiſed to David was not of this world, but of another: which King and Kingdom the revolting Tribes have now forſaken, and by forſaking have loſt Chriſt, have loſt Religion, and have loſt themſelves: And here is a kind of an Antichriſtian faction now riſen in the world before Chriſts appearing. The very foundation of this revolt of the Tribes was laid in the blood of Adoram: Rehoboam ſeeketh to reduce the people with a ſtrong hand, whom with a gentle he would not retain.

PSAL. II.

WITH the Story of the Apoſtacy of the ten Tribes, read the ſecond Pſalm, which was prophetically made by David, Act. 4. 25. upon this revolt and rebellion; and this is the firſt aim and intent of it, though in a ſecond and more full it hits upon the greater rebellion which this but typified, and that is Judahs deſpiſing and crucifying the Lord of life, being indeed exhibited, as Iſrael deſpiſeth him here, being promiſed. And as the Pſalmiſt had touched in the firſt Pſalm, upon the fall of Adam, who miſcarried by walking in the counſel of the ungodly, the Serpent and the ſeduced woman; and had ſhewed a way how to withſtand and eſcape ſuch counſellings, namely, by meditation and delight in the Law of the Lord. So doth he in this Pſalm touch upon the fall of the ten Tribes, and how they miſcarried by caſting away the cords of obligation, which God had tied them in to the throne of David, and he giveth admonition to them to be wiſer, and adviſeth both them and the generation that put the Lord to death, and all ages to come, To kiſs the Son by a loving and ſubmiſſive obedience, as 1 *Sam.*10.1. and ſo to eſcape the wrath to come, *Matth.*3. when the Lords anger ſhould be kindled, and deſtroy the people that had been his deſtroyers.

Rehoboams Marriages are reckoned here, where the text is ſpeaking of his eſtabliſhment and proſperity, and ſo it would conclude all the particulars of that before it fall to the ſtory of his declining; but the moſt of his Marriages were made before he came to the Kingdom, even in the life-time of his father Solomon, and he followed the humour of his father very much in deſiring many wives. His ſon Abijam reigned but three years after his ſeventeen, and yet is he the father of eight and thirty Children, which makes it more then probable that he was born before his father was King, 2 Chron. 13. 21. One of Rehoboams wives is ſaid to be Maholah בן Jeremoth the ſon of David, written בן but read בת: poſſibly Tamar the Daughter of Abſalom, ſhe called בן becauſe ſhe was left his only Child, his three Sons being dead, 2 *Sam.*14.27. & 18.18. and he called Jeremoth, partly to intimate his lifting up in pride when he rebelled againſt his father, and his lifting up in the Oak where he took his end, and partly to diſtinguiſh him from another Abſalom, whoſe daughter alſo Rehoboam married, which was called Maachah.

His mother that was named Micah or Michaiah, when she cometh to be Queen may be conceived to have her name changed, and she is named after the first Mother of a renowned family in that Tribe from whence she descended, 1 Chron. 8.29. She was of Gibeah, the City of Saul, and it is very probable of the kinred of Saul, and therefore her Father, who was properly called Absolom, is called Uriel, which hath very near affinity in signification with Ner, and Eshbaal, men of the stock and family of Saul.

Although Abijah and Judah were very wicked, yet God in this quarrel owneth them for the Kingdom of Davids sake, which he had setled, and for Religions sake, which was extant and in practice at Jerusalem, though much corruption mingled with it. Abijah recovereth Bethel of Jeroboam, 2 *Chron.*13.19. but destroyed not the Idolatry there, for which it may be God shortned his reign and days.

3050 | 2 | ASA doth uprightly in the sight of the Lord, though he were educated and brought up by his Idolatrous grandmother Maacah, and therefore she said to be his mother, 1 King. 15. *ver.*10. | Jeroboam. 21 | Nadab. 1 | NADAB reigneth in the second year of Asa, even while his Father Jeroboam is alive, 1 King. 15.25. for God smote Jeroboam with some sad diseases, that he could not rule the Kingdom, 2 *Chron.*13.20. | 21

3051 | 3 | BAASHA who began to reign this year, proved a desperate enemy to Asa; but seven years Asa was quiet from him; for Baasha coming to the Kingdom by a Conspiracy against the King, must needs have some time and pains to settle and confirm himself in it: and so his imployment at home about this business giveth Asa rest and respite a long time, The land was quiet in his days ten years, 2 *Chron.*14.1. that is, the three years of the beginning of his own Reign, before Baasha was King, and seven years of the Reign of Baasha. | 22 | 2 | Baasha. 1 | BAASHA slayeth Nadab, and reigneth in the third of Asa, 1 *King.*15.28. He destroyeth Jeroboams House: Jeroboam himself is alive this year, and if he escaped the sword of Baasha, yet died he not long before that Sword destroyed his family. | 22

Jeroboam was so broken by Abijah when he lost his five hundred thousand men, that neither he nor Nadab could recover it, to disturb Asa in the beginning of his raign; nor could Baasha do it for his imployments at home in the beginning of his.

3062 14 Asa destroyeth a million of Cushites.

3063 15 At Pentecost this fifteenth of Asa, 2 Chron. 15.10. he maketh a thorow Reformation upon the Council of Azariah a Prophet; and the people enter into a Covenant, and an Oath, to destroy those that would not leave their Idols to seek God. This Oath un-Queens the Kings Grandmother for her Idolatry past; she must dye if she do the like again. In the Story of the Reformation wrought by Asa, it is said that חעביר הקדשים 1 Kings 15.12. He took away the Sodomites; or the men that prostituted themselves to Sodomy, and the women that kept brothel houses, against a plain and express Law, Deut. 23.17. These Sodomites seem to have been some remnant of the Canaanites that were left in the Land, and that followed the Canaanitish filthiness; not any remnant of the City Sodome, but called Sodomites because they followed the abomination that City. In 2 King. 23.7. there is mention of Sodomites houses that were by the House of the Lord. Probably houses of Jebusites that stood near to the Mount of the House of the Lord; for that Mount was purchased from Ornan the King of the Jebusites, King there when David conquered Jerusalem.

Asa. 1 KING. XV. ver. 16. to ver. 23.

3065 16 17 ASA bringeth dedicate things into the Temple. This seventeenth year of Asaes reign is called the six and thirtieth year of his Kingdom, 2 Chron. 15.19. And there was no war more unto the five and thirtieth year of Asaes Kingdom. And 2 Chron. 16.1. In the six and thirtieth year of Asaes Kingdom, Baasha King of Israel came up: The Hebrew word מלכות is not to be understood of the time of Asaes reign, but the Kingdom of Asa, distinct from the Kingdom of Israel: That it cannot be understood of the time of Asaes reign appears by this, because Baasha was dead many years before the six and thirtieth year of Asaes reign came: For if Baasha began to reign in the third year of Asa, and reigned but four and twenty years, as 1 King. 15. 33. asserteth, then was Baasha dead nine full years before the six and thirtieth year of Asa came, and therefore he could not then possibly come up against Judah, for he was rotten in his grave: But it is thus to be understood, that in the six and thirtieth year of Asaes Kingdom, that is, of the Kingdom of Judah since the revolt of the ten tribes, Baasha came up against that Kingdom and warred against it, the Kingdom that God would not have to be fought against. Now as Jeroboam had made the division, which had now continued six and thirty years, viz. 17 of Rehoboam, 3 of Abijah and 16 of Asa, so doth Baasha go about now to confirm that division, for he setteth on to build and Garrison Ramah, that he might stop all entercourse betwixt Israel and Judah, and therefore the Holy Ghost reckoneth the time of this act of Baasha by a computation from the first division. And he calls it the Kingdom of Asa, the rather also, because he had lately confirmed and established it to himself, as far as it was possible for him to do, namely, by a Reformation and a Covenant: But now doth Asa exceeding ill, for he relieth upon an arm of flesh, the King of Syria, he hireth him with dedicate things which himself had dedicated but a year or two before: he bringeth

14 15 BENHADAD son of Tabrimmon now King of Syria, Baasha cometh up against Judah, and beginneth to build and to fortifie Ramah, which was a frontier upon the very skirt of Ephraim towards Benjamin and Judah.

a forraign

World | Asa | a forraign enemy in to the Land of Israel, and imprisoned the Prophet that reproved him for it. Here is the first Captivity of any Israelites, and Dan the place of the golden Calf falleth under the sword. Because Asa leaned upon the King of Syria, therefore was the King of Syria escaped out of his hand, 2 Chron. 16. 7. for the Syrian was in league with Baasha, and had Asa let him alone he had sided with Baasha, and Asa, if he had relied on God, had conquered Israel and the Syrian both, but now he had lost that victory over Syria, by seeking thereunto for help. | Baasha | Judah

2 CHRON. XVI. vers. 7. to vers. 11.

18 ASA upon this reliance upon Syria declineth exceedingly from his former goodness; for he grows not only harsh to the Prophet Hanani that reproved him, but he also began to use harshness, and to tyrannize over his Subjects; and for this his alteration he is in continual wars and troubles.

3074 26 Asa seeth an end of his great Enemy.

3075 27 Baasha, and the ruine of that family, as he had seen the ruine of the family of Jeroboam.

1 KINGS XVI. vers. 1. to vers. 23.

16 AS Hanani the Seer reproved Asa for his reliance upon Syria, so Jehu the son of Hanani reproveth Baasha for his Idolatry, and threatneth destruction to him and to his family, and the same fate is denounced to his house that had befallen the house of Jeroboam.

1 ELAH reigneth in the 26 of Asa, 1 King. 16. 8.

2 1 OMRI reigneth, having slaign Zimri, who had slain Elah. This is a year of great turbulency in the State of Israel. Elah a drunkard of Ephraim is slain by Zimri; and Baasha's house is utterly destroyed with him: Zimri reigneth at Tirzah, but Omri is made King in the Camp at Gibbethon. In that very place had Baasha gotten the Kingdom by the slaughter of Nadab five and twenty years ago, 1 King. 15. 27. a siege being there then as it is now. Omri besiegeth Zimri in Tirzah, and Zimri destroyeth himself and the Kings Pallace together. Then there is another competition and war betwixt Omri and Tibni, which continueth till the thirty first year of Asa, 1 King. 16. 23. And then Tibni is overthrown, and Omri becometh sole and intire King. Howbeit in the account that the Scripture giveth of Omri's raign, saying, That he raigned twelve years. The beginning of these years is to be taken from the death of Zimri, which was in the seven and twentieth of Asa, 1 King. 16. 15. Therefore whereas it is said in vers. 23. That in the one and thirtieth year of Asa King of Judah, began Omri to raign over Israel twelve years; it is to be understood, that his whole raign from the death of Zimri was twelve years, which expired in the eight and thirtieth of Asa, ver. 29. but that the first year of his sole and single Government, was Asa's thirty first.

2 CHRON. XVI. ver. 11, 12, 13, 14.

3076 28 ASA seeth now a third change in the Kingdom of Israel; first the family of Jeroboam, then of Baasha, now of Omri. Thus speedily doth Idolatry root Families out, and thus little stability is there with those that forsake God. Athaliah, a spawn of this last family setteth hard in time to bring in the like ruine and confusion into the royal stock of Judah, that is now in Israel, when she goeth about to destroy the Kings Seed.

Omri | 1 KINGS XVI. vers. 23. to the end.

2 FROM this second of Omri 42 years are reckoned to Ahaziah, 2 Chron. 22. 2. of which when we come there.

6 In the one and thirtieth year of Asa Tibni is conquered, and Omri is sole King: He reigneth six years in Tirzah, and then removeth to Samaria, which he had built; for Zimri had fired the Kings Palace at Tirza. Omri is more wicked then any that went before him; he maketh cursed Statutes, Mich. 6. 16.

World | Ahab | these Texts, 1 King. 22. 51. Ahaziah the Son of Ahab began to raign over Israel in Samaria in the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat King of Judah, and reigneth two years. And 2 King. 1. 17. And Ahaziah died according to the word of the Lord which Elijah had spoken, and Jehoram reigned in his stead, in the second year of Jehoram son of Jehoshaphat King of Judah. And 2 King. 3. 1. Now Jehoram the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel in Samaria, the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat King of Judah. By these Scriptures it is most plain, that both Joram the son of Jehoshaphat, and Ahaziah the son of Ahab began to reign in the seventeenth of Jehoshaphat, I shall not need to make the collection, it is so conspicuous in the Text: for who seeth not in them, that Jehoshaphats eighteenth, when Joram the son of Ahab beginneth to reign, is called, The second year of Joram the son of Jehoshaphat: Now Jehoshaphats reign was not yet expired by eight or nine years, for this was in his seventeenth year, and he reigned five and twenty, 1 *King.*22.42. Nor was Ahabs reign expired by two or three years, for this was in his twentieth year, and he reigned two and twenty, 1 King. 16.29. But the reason that both their sons came into their thrones thus in their life time, and both in this same year, was because the fathers Jehoshaphat and Ahab, were both ingaged in the war against the Syrians about Ramoth Gilead, and while they were providing for it and carrying it on, they made their sons Viceroyes, and set them to reign in their stead, while they were absent or imployed about that expedition: we shall have occasion to observe the like of Joram the son of Jehoshaphat again afterward. | Dixon.

It is somewhat observable that this murderer of Naboth, and sparer of Benhadad, is slain at a City of refuge, by Benhadads Army, and by a shot made at random. Compare Deut. 19. 4. His son Ahaziah dyes before him by a fatal fall, inquires at the Devil when he is sick, as Saul at a Witch, loseth one hundred men by fire from Heaven, and dieth childless: Here begins vengeance on Ahabs house. These people are elsewhere called מעונים Maonites, Judg. 10.12. or Mehunims, 2 Chron. 26. 7. and so should they be expressed in 1 Chron. 4.41. And these written by name came in the days of Hezekiah King of Judah, and smote their Tents, and the Maonites that were found there: The LXX renders it well there, Υἱοὶ Μαὰβ καὶ υἱοὶ Ἀμμῶν, καὶ μετ' αὐτῶν ἐκ Τῶν Μουναίων: And they are called עמונים here, and 2 Chron. 26. 8. either by inversion of the word מעונים into עמונים, which kind of thing is very common in Scripture [as Heres and Serah, Josh. 24.30. compared with Judg. 2.9. Beta, and Tibath. For as Jehoshaphat when he went with Ahab to Ramoth Gilead, made Joram then King in his stead till he came again, as was observed before; so doth he now when he goeth with Joram, Ahabs son against Moab: but Jehoshaphat doth never sit in the throne again, for observe 1. that whereas it is said, Joram reigned eight years in Jerusalem, they are reckoned from this beginning, as it appeareth by 2 King. 8. 25. where they are ended in the twelfth of Joram the son of Ahab.

World Jehoſhaphat Diviſion.

2. That Jehoſhaphat is called The King of Iſrael, 2 Chron. 21. 2. for his affinity and ſociety which Ahab and Joram the Kings of Iſrael had undone him; and when he would not take warning upon his firſt miſcarriage in that kind, 2 Chron. 19. 2. he is ſorely puniſhed upon a ſecond, for he loſeth his ſons, and he loſeth his Kingdom; and therefore is he fitly called The King of Iſrael, for he hath taken more care of that Kingdom then his own, and loſt his own by it.

3. That Joram ſlew his brethren, and the Princes of Judah, preſently after his father had left him in the Throne, and was gone away for Moab. This is to be collected from theſe particulars: 1. It is ſaid, 2 Chron. 21. 12, 13, &c. There came a writing from Elijah the Prophet unto Jehoram, ſaying, Thus ſaith the Lord, Becauſe thou haſt not walked in the ways of Jehoſhaphat, &c. but haſt ſlain thy brethren of thy fathers houſe, Behold with a great ſtroke will the Lord ſmite thy people, &c. Now it is ridiculous to hold as the Jews do, that Elijah ſent this letter out of Heaven after he was rapt up thither: But it is without all doubt that he wrote it whileſt he was here on earth, before he was taken up.

Now before Jehoſhaphat the King of Judah, and Joram the King of Iſrael, and the King of Edom come to the Battel againſt Moab, Elijah is taken up, and Eliſha is with them: for ſo it is plain, 2 King. 3. 11. And Jehoſhaphat ſaid, Is there not here a Prophet of the Lord? And one of the King of Iſraels ſervants anſwered and ſaid, Here is Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat, which poured water on the hands of Elijah. Therefore the paſſage of the whole Story is to be caſt into this order, Moab rebelling againſt the King of Iſrael, Jehoram the then King deſireth Jehoſhaphats aſſiſtance to help to ſubdue them: Jehoſhaphat conſents, raiſes his forces, ſets his ſon Joram in the throne to rule the Kingdom at home, and ſo ſets forth upon that expedition. Joram when his father was now out of the Land, riſeth up againſt his Brethren and the nobles of Judah, and ſlayeth them, and reſolveth to keep the Kingdom. Elijah being yet alive heareth of this, and though he had nothing yet to do with any of the Kings of Judah, yet ſeeing here Jezabels ſpirit in this act of Joram, he writes him a terrible letter, leaves it to be conveyed to him, and ere long is conveyed himſelf in a whirlwind to Heaven: Eliſha after his Maſters departure returns through divided Jordan to Jericho, to Bethel, to Carmel, to Samaria, and from thence goes down to the Camp in Moab: ſo that the Story of Elijahs rapture lieth in its proper place, in 2 King. 2. only the beginning of the third Chapter, that mentioneth the beginning of Jorams reign, which was before Elijahs tranſlation, is a repetition of what was ſaid before in its proper place. Chap. 1. 17. that the full Story of this Joram may be taken up together.

Eliſha when he would prophecy, he requireth ſome Muſick to play, and ſome ſongs of praiſes to be ſung, and then the Spirit of the Lord cometh upon him, he foretelleth of a great deliverance, and bringeth water miraculouſly into ditches, as Elijah had done fire. Moab is now become a waſh-pot, full of ſtrange water, and theſe waters do ſeem to Moab to be nothing but blood: The King of Moab beſieged in Kirharaſeth, with ſeven hundred men would break thorow the King of Edoms ſquadron, but cannot: Howbeit he taketh the Prince of Edom, the Kings eldeſt ſon, priſoner, brings him into Kirharaſeth again, and there offers him up on the wall for a burnt offering, &c. So burns the bones of this young King of Edom into lime, Amos 2. 1. And there was great indignation againſt Iſrael, both from Edom and other Nations about it: for Edom revolted and rebelled againſt Iſrael, 2 King. 8. 20. And the Philiſtims and Tyrians caught up Iſraelites as they could lay hold upon them, and delivered them up to Edom: גלות שלמה a peaceable Captivity, Amos 1. 6. 9. not taken by war, but by ſleight and deceit: or a perfect Captivity, not to be recovered again.

Betwixt the firſt and laſt years of Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat there are very many occurrences mentioned, which are not referred nor fixed to their proper year, and therefore they muſt be calculated in a groſs ſum, namely, conſidered as coming to paſs in ſome time of theſe years. They are the Stories contained in the fourth, fifth, ſixth and ſeventh Chapters of the ſecond Book of Kings, and in 2 Chron. 21. from Ver. 6. to Ver. 19. their proper order and time we may conjecture thus: In the firſt year of Joram Eliſha returning out of Moab into the Land of Iſrael, multiplieth the Widows Oyl, as he had produced the Armies water: he is lodged in Shunem and aſſureth the Miſtris of the houſe of a child. The ſeven years famine was then begun, and he giveth the Shunamite warning of the continuance of it. The ſecond year ſhe beareth her child in the Land of the Philiſtims, 2 Kings 8. 2. And Eliſha reſideth among the children of the Prophets at Gilgal, and healeth the deadly Pottage, and feedeth an hundred men with twenty Cakes and ſome few ears of Corn: this was in Barley Harveſt-time, in the beginning of the year. That Summer he cureth Naaman of his Leproſie [the only cure of Leproſie done till the greateſt Prophet came] and proſyliteth him, ſo that he beggeth two Mules load of Iſraelitiſh earth to make him an Altar of when he ſhould come home, and craveth pardon for his former Idolatry, Chap. 5. ver. 18. For this thing the Lord pardon thy ſervant, for that when my maſter hath gone into the houſe of Rimmon to worſhip there, and he hath leaned upon mine hand, that I alſo have bowed my ſelf in the houſe of Rimmon, for my worſhipping in the houſe of Rimmon, the Lord pardon thy ſervant for this thing: for ſo ſhould the words be rendred, as craving pardon for Idolatry paſt, and not begging leave to be Idolatrous for the time to come. Gehazies covetouſneſs brings upon him Naamans Leproſie: the Text hath divinely omitted a letter in one word, that it might the more brand him with a blot for this his villany, I will run after Naaman, ſaith he, and will take of him מומה a blot: inſtead of מאומה ſomewhat, ver. 20.

The third year Eliſha maketh Iron to ſwim, preventeth the Syrians ambuſhments, and ſtriketh thoſe with blindneſs that were ſent to catch him, and bringeth them into the middeſt of Samaria, and there feaſteth them, ולא יספו עוד Chap. 6. 23. So the bands of Syria came no more as yet into the land of Iſrael: for ſo the very next verſe teacheth that it ſhould be tranſlated, for it relateth, that after this Benhadad gathered all his Hoſt and beſieged Samaria: So is the like paſſage to be rendred, 2 King. 24. 7. ולא הוסיף עוד And the King of Ægypt came no more as yet, or at that time out of his Land, for in Jer. 37. 5. The King of Ægypt is a foot with his Army, and abroad again.

The fourth year Jehoſhaphat dieth, Edom rebelleth, and ſhaketh off Judahs yoke which David had laid upon them. Till Jorams time there was no King in Edom of abſolute power and rule, but a Deputy under the Kings of Judah was King, 1 King. 22. 47. but now Edom revolteth from under the hand of Judah, and made a King over themſelves, 2 King. 8. 20. Then Libnah revolteth alſo. Joram goeth againſt them, and by night ſmiteth their Squadrons, which were pitched about him to give him battel the next morning.

The fifth year Samaria is beſieged by Benhadad, and the famine becomes ſo great in the City that women eat their own Children, as Deut. 28. 53, 56.

28.53.56. and men, women, and children eat Doves dung: All the fault is laid upon Eliſha, and he muſt be beheaded, but he foretelleth a ſuddain and wonderful delivery, and a ſtrange and miraculous plenty, which accordingly came to paſs. An unbelieving Prince is trod to death.

The ſixth year Philiſtims and Arabians oppreſs Joram King of Judah, and captive his wives and children, leaving him only one ſon behind: Here he is met with for the murder of his own Brethren.

The ſeventh year Joram is fallen into the ſad diſeaſe of his bowels, 2 *Chron.*21.19. And it came to paſs after the end of two years his bowels fell out by reaſon of his ſickneſs, for he ſhewed no bowels to his brethren. This year the famine endeth at Harveſt; and at that Harveſt the Shunamites child dieth, and is recovered by Eliſha [his death and reviving is related inſtantly after the Story of his birth, though when he died he was able to follow the reapers, becauſe his Story might be related together] and not long after his Mother goeth to the King to beg and petition to be ſetled in her eſtate again, and there ſhe finds leprous Gehazi with him: The firſt verſe of Chapter 8. ſhould chronically be tranſlated as of the time paſt: Now Eliſha had ſpoken to the woman, &c. ver.2. And the woman had riſen and done after the ſaying of the man of God, &c. This year Eliſha is at Damaſcus, Benhadad ſick, Hazael ſtifles him with a wet cloth, and reigns in his ſtead.

AHAZIAH the ſon of Joram reigneth, and dieth this year by the ſword of Jehu, 2 *King.*8.26. In the twelfth year of Joram the ſon of Ahab, King of Iſrael, did Ahaziah the ſon of Jehoram King of Judah begin to reign. Two and twenty years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jeruſalem, and his mothers name was Athaliah, the daughter of Omri King of Iſrael. And 2 King.9.29. In the eleventh year of Joram the ſon of Ahab, began Ahaziah to raign over Judah. 2 Chron. 22.2. Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, &c. Here the Reader ſeeth two plain and viſible differences, the one about the age of Ahaziah, and the other about the time when he began to reign. The ſame Book of Kings ſaith he began to raign in the eleventh year of Joram the ſon of Ahab, and he began to raign in the twelfth year of Joram the ſon of Ahab. Now the reconciling of this difference is eaſie, when it is obſerved, that Joram the ſon of Ahab reigned one whole year in the life time of his father, and eleven years afterward. And ſo one Text calleth his laſt year his twelfth, that is, of his whole raign; and another Text calleth it his eleventh, that is, of his ſole reign after his fathers death. But the other difference is both the more viſible and the more difficult; for the Book of Kings ſaith Ahaziah was but two and twenty years old when he began to raign; and the Book of Chronicles ſaith he was two and forty; and ſo this latter reckoning maketh him two years older then his father; for his father began to raign when he was two and thirty years old, and and reigned eight years, and ſo died, being forty, 2 King. 8.17. Now for the reconciling of this ſcruple, the Original helpeth us, which in our tranſlation is not viſible. The Original meaneth thus, Ahaziah was the ſon of the two and forty years, namely, of the houſe of Omri, of whoſe ſeed he was by the mothers ſide; and he walked in the ways of that houſe, and came to ruine at the ſame time with it. This the Text directed us to look after, when it calleth his mother the daughter of Omri, which was indeed the daughter of Ahab. Now theſe forty two years are eaſily reckoned by any that will count back in the Chronicle to the ſecond of Omri. Such another reckoning there is about Jechoniah or Jehojachin, 2 King. 24.8. Jehojachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign: But 2 Chron. 36.9. Jehojachin was the ſon of the eight years: That is, his beginning of ATHALIAH deſtroyeth the reſt of the Seed Royal that were left, beſides the forty two ſlain by Jehu: ſhe her ſelf reigned ſix years: ſhe had ſons of her own by ſome other man whom ſhe deſireth to promote, 2 *Chron.*24.7.

JEHU the ſon of Jehoſhaphat, anointed for the deſtruction of Ahabs houſe, reigneth twenty eight years: He is anointed by Eliſha's ſervant at Eliſha's appointment, read Chap. 9. ver. 4. that So the young man, even the ſervant of the Prophet went, &c. He is anointed at Ramoth Gilead, where Ahab had received his death, and Jehoram his ſon lately ſome wounds: He ſlayeth Jehoram with his own hand, and cauſeth the death of Ahaziah King of Judah alſo: This man is ſometime called Jeho-achaz, with part of the name Jehovah ſet before his name, as 2 Chron. 21.17. & 25.17. ſometime Achaz-jahu, with part of that name Jehovah ſet after, as 2 *Chron.*22.2. and ſometime Azariah, 2 *Chron.*22.6. The relation of the manner of his death in the Books of Kings and Chronicles is exceeding different, and accordingly the underſtanding of it exceeding difficult, 2 King. 9. 27. it is ſaid, that when Ahaziah ſaw the death of Jehoram King of Iſrael, he fled by the way of the garden, and Jehu followed after him, and ſaid, Smite him alſo in the Chariot, in the going up to Gur, which is beſide Ibleam, and he fled to Megiddo and died there. But in 2 Chron. 22. 8, 9. it is ſaid, That when Jehu was executing Judgment upon the houſe of Ahab, and found the Princes of Judah, even the ſons of the brethren of Ahaziah that miniſtred to Ahaziah, he ſlew them. And he ſought Ahaziah, and they caught him [for he was hid in Samaria] and brought him to Jehu and ſlew him. Now the current of the Story at large is thus: Jehu ſlayeth Joram in the field of Jezreel, as Ahaziah and Joram were together: Ahaziah ſeeing this, flees, and gets into Samariah and hides himſelf there. Jehu marcheth to Jezreel, and maketh Jezabel Dogs meat: From thence he ſendeth to Samaria for the heads of Ahabs children and poſterity, which are brought him by night, and ſhewed by him to the people in the morning: Then he marcheth to Samaria, and by the way ſlayeth Ahaziahs kinſmen, forty two men; findeth Jehonadab the father of the Rechabites: Coming into Samaria, he maketh ſearch for Ahaziah, they find him hid, bring him to Jehu, he commands to carry him up towards Gur by Ibleam, and there to ſlay him; it may be his father Joram had ſlain his brethren there, as Ahab had done Naboth in Jezreel; they do ſo, ſmite him there in his Chariot, and his Charioter driveth away to Megiddo before he dies. The Story in the Book of Kings is taken up ſhort, and laid with the Story of the death of Jehoram, that the end of both the Kings may be taken up together; but the Book of Chronicles ſhews the order.

The order and time of theſe former PROPHETS.

THE Murder of Zacharias the ſon of Barachias, or Jehoiada was the firſt ruine of Judah, and the beginning of their firſt rejection. For when they ſlew that Prophet and Prieſt of the Lord in the Court of the Temple, and beſides the Altar, they plainly ſhewed how they deſpiſed and rejected the Lord and his Temple, Prieſt-hood and Propheſie. From that time did their ſtate decay, and was mouldring towards ruine, and that from thence forward fell into ſad diſeaſes as well as King Joaſh did, that commanded the Murder. This Hoſea toucheth upon as the very Apex of their wickedneſs, when they ſo brake out, as that blood toucked blood, Hoſ 4.2. the blood of the Sacrificer was mingled with the blood of the Sacrifice, as Luke 13. 1.

And the very Apex of their incorrigibleneſs, in that they proved a people that ſtrove with the Prieſt, *Hoſ.*4.4. And this wicked act of theirs our Saviour makes as the very period and Cataſtrophe of their State and Kingdom, Matth. 23. 35. How they declined from that time, both in Religion, [Joaſh and Amaziah, and the people with them becoming open Idolaters] and in the State, by the oppreſſion of Syria and of Joaſh, is ſo apparent in the Story that he that runneth may read, and he that readeth not the cauſe with theſe effects, readeth not all that may be read. But more eſpecially in theſe times that we have in hand, in the latter times of Jeroboam, the Lord ſpake indignation from Heaven in more ſenſible and more ſingular and terrible manner, in three dreadful judgments, the like to which neither they nor their fathers had ſeen nor heard, and the ſight and feeling of which, when it did not avail with them for their converſion and bettering, the Lord hath a company of Prophets that are continually telling them of worſe judgments, namely, of final ſubverſion to come upon them.

The firſt of theſe fearful judgments was an earthquake ſo terrible that it brought them to their wits ends, and put them to flee for their lives, but they knew not whether. Ye ſhall flee as they fled before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah, Zech. 14. 5. This was as the beginning of their deſolation, and the ſhaking of the earth was as a ſign unto them, that their State and Kingdom ſhould ere long be ſhaken. Amos prophecied of this two years before it came, Amos 1. 1. and that the Lord would roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jeruſalem, as did Joel alſo ſome time before, Joel 2. to 11. This earthquake was in the days of Jeroboam, as well as in the days of Uzziah, for ſo Amos ſheweth clearly; and therefore it was neither when Uzziah was made leprous, nor in the year when he died, as the Jews conjecture; but it was before.

After this came a Plague of more miſery, but of leſſer terrour, and that was of fearful and horrid Locuſts, Caterpillars, and Cankerworms, whoſe like the oldeſt men alive had never ſeen, Joel 1, 2, 3, &c. Theſe came towards harveſt time, in the beginning of the growth after mowing, Amos 7. 1. And then were the fields and trees laden with corn and fruit, but theſe laid the vines waſte, and barked the fig-trees, Joel 1. 7. And cauſeth the harveſt of the field to periſh, and the trees to wither, ſo that there was not corn and wine ſufficient for a meat Offering and drink Offering in the Houſe of the Lord, ver. 10, 11, 12. then did the Cattel groan, ver. 18. and the beaſt of the field did languiſh, Hoſ. 4. 3.

This heavy Plague of Locuſts was at laſt removed by prayer, but the ſins of the people called for another. Therefore the Lord called to contend by fire, Amos 7. 4. namely, by an extreme drought, with which were mingled fearful flaſhes of fire which fell from Heaven, as in Egypt, Eccl. 9. 23. and devoured all the paſtures of the wilderneſs, and the flame burnt up all the trees of the field, Joel 1. 19. and ſome Cities were conſumed by fire from Heaven as was Sodome, Amos 4. 11. Eſay 1. 9. And the rivers of water were dryed up, Joel 1. 2. yea even the great deep was devoured by the heat, and part of it eaten up, Amos 7. 4. and the fiſhes deſtroyed, Hoſ. 4. 3.

After all theſe judgments when they prevailed not, but the people were ſtill the ſame, God ſet a line upon his people, and decreed that the high places of Iſaac ſhould be deſolate, and the Sanctuaries of Iſrael ſhould be laid waſte, Amos 7. 9. yet did not the Lord leave himſelf without witneſs, but againſt and in theſe times of Judgment, and ſucceſſively, and continually did the Lord raiſe up a race of Prophets among them, both in Iſrael and Judah, that gave them warning, threatning, inſtruction, and exhortation, from time to time, and did not this only by word of mouth, but alſo committed the ſame to writing, and to poſterity, that all generations to come might ſee the abomination and ingratitude of that people, written as it were with a pen of Iron, and a point of a Diamond, and might read and fear, and not do the like.

The Propheſie of HOSEA.

CHAP. I, II, III, IV.

THE firſt Prophet of this race was Hoſea; and ſo he teſtifieth of himſelf chap. 1. verſ. 2. : תחלת דבר The Lord ſpake firſt by Hoſea: And thus as under an Hoſea, Iſrael did enter into the Land of Canaan, *Numb.*13.16. and under an Hoſea were captived out, 2 King. 17. So did the Lord raiſe up an Hoſea the firſt of theſe Prophets, to tax their unthankfulneſs for the one, and to foretel the fearfulneſs of the other. His Propheſie is common both to Iſrael and Judah, even as was his adulterous wife, a mate as unfit for ſo holy a Prophet, as her actions were fit to reſemble ſuch a wicked people. The date of his Propheſie tells us, that he began in the days of Uzziah, and continued till the days of Ezekiah, and ſo was a Preacher at the leaſt ſeventy years, and ſo ſaw the truth of his Propheſie fulfilled upon captived Iſrael. Of all the Sermons that he made, and threatnings, and admonitions, that he gave in ſo long a time, only this ſmall parcel is reſerved, which is contained in his little Book, the Lord reſerving only what his divine Wiſdom ſaw to be moſt pertinent for thoſe preſent times, and moſt profitable for the time to come. That being to be accounted canonical Scripture; not what every Prophet delivered in his whole time, but what the Lord ſaw good to commit to writing for poſterity.

To fit every Propheſie of this Book, whether Chapter or part of Chapter to its proper year when it was delivered, is ſo far impoſſible, as that it is not poſſible to fit them certainly to the Kings reign, and therefore the Reader can but conceive of their time in groſs, as they were delivered by him in the time of his Preaching, which was exceeding long: only theſe two or three conſiderations and conjectures may not be unprofitable towards the caſting up of ſome of the times, and towards the better underſtanding of his Propheſie in ſome particular.

1. He began to Propheſie in the days of Uzziah, and began firſt of any that were Prophets in his reign, as were Joel, Amos, and Eſaiah: [Jonah was a Prophet in theſe times, but there is no Propheſie of his left againſt Iſrael or Judah] the ſecond Verſe of the firſt Chapter cited even now, cannot be underſtood ſo properly in any ſence as this, that God now raiſing up in the days of Uzziah a generation of Prophets, that ſhould continue in a ſucceſſion till the captivity, and that ſhould leave their Propheſies behind them in writing, תחלת דבר יהוה בחושע The Lord ſpake firſt of all theſe by Hoſea: Therefore whereas it is apparenſt that Amos, by the date of his Propheſie, ver. 1. lived in thoſe days of Uzziah, which were contemporary with the days of Jeroboam, ſo alſo is it apparent by this paſſage of Hoſea, that he himſelf began in ſome time of thoſe concurrent years of Uzziah and Jeroboam, which were fifteen, and ſomewhat before the beginning of Amos.

2. His two firſt Chapters ſeem to be uttered by him in the very beginning of his Preaching: of the firſt there can be no doubt nor controverſie, and the other two may be well conceived to be of the ſame date, as appeareth by the matter. In the firſt Chapter, under the parable of his marrying an adulterous wife [which he names Gomer the daughter of Diblaim, either for that there was ſome notorious whoriſh wife in thoſe times of that name, or for the ſignificanſie of the words, for they import corruption of figs, as *Jer.*24.3. as our Saviour in a parable nameth a begger Lazarus, either becauſe there was ſome noted poor needy wretch of that name in thoſe times, or for the ſignificanſie of the word, Lazarus, ſignifying, God help me, as proper a name for a begger as could be given] under this Parable, I ſay, of his marrying an adulterous wife, and begetting children of her; he foretels firſt the ruine of the houſe of Jehu, this typified by a Son ſhe bears, called Jezrael, then the ruine of the ten Tribes, this typified by a daughter ſhe bears, which he calls Lo-ruchamah, or unpitied, for in theſe times of Jeroboam, when Hoſea began to Propheſie, the Lord had pittied Iſrael exceedingly, and eaſed them much of their trouble and oppreſſions, 2 *King.*24.26,27. but now he would do ſo no more: but Judah he would yet pitty and ſave them, not by bow and ſword, but by an Angel in the days of Ezekiah, deſtroyeth Senacheribs Army: yet ſhould Judah at laſt be alſo caſt off, and become Lo-ammi, and then the Gentiles ſhould be called in, in Iſraels and Judahs ſtead. And thus having laid the generals of his Propheſie down in the firſt Chapter, he goeth on in the ſecond to particularize upon thoſe heads, and to ſhew the reaſon and manner of the Jews rejection, and the manner and happineſs of the Gentiles calling; And thus the time of theſe two firſt Chapters is reaſonably apparent.

3. His third and fourth Chapters may be ſuppoſed to have been delivered by him at the ſame time, becauſe in *Chap.*4.3. he ſpeaketh of the Plagues of Locuſts, and that Amos and Joel had ſpoken of, fore-telling them alſo as they had done. In the third Chapter under the parable of another marriage with an adulterous wife, he fore-telleth the iniquity of the people after their return out of Babel into their own Land, and alſo their ſtate in their preſent rejection, when they neither follow Idols nor God, when neither as a wife they adhere to God, nor yet to any other god, as to another husband.

The fourth Chapter taketh the people up, as they were in their preſent poſture in the Prophets time, and ſheweth their wickedneſs, and what Judgments the Lord had in ſtore for them, and according to this tenor he goeth on through the reſt of his Book.

5. The reſt of the Book may be ſuppoſed coincident, ſome of it with the times of Ahaz, and ſome of it with the former times of Ezekiel, even to the captiving of the ten Tribes, as ſhall be obſerved when we come there.

The Propheſie of JOEL all.

IN theſe latter days of Jeroboam the ſecond, and much about the times of Amos his firſt prophecying among Iſrael, did Joel alſo appear and begin to prophecy among Judah. Some of the Hebrew Doctors have conceived him to have lived in the time of Eliſha, and that theſe threatnings of his of famine, were accompliſhed in the ſeven years famine in that time, 2 King. 8. 1. others have ſuppoſed him to have lived and propheſied in the times of Manaſſeth King of Judah, caſting his time as much too forward, as the other was too backward; but his Subject matter will declare his time: for ſeeing he ſpeaketh of the ſame Plague of Locuſts, and of drought and fire, that Amos doth, it is an argument ſufficient to conclude that Amos and he appeared about the ſame time.

He ſadly bemoaneth and deſcribeth in his two firſt Chapters, the miſerable famine, and grievous condition that the people were brought into through the Plagues of Locuſts and Drought, and painteth out the Catterpillars, and Cankerworms, and Locuſts, which he calleth the Northern Army, as if they were an Army of men indeed: They came in at the North part of the Land, from towards Syria and Hamath, and kept as it were in a body, and devoured all before them as they went along to the South part, and there as they were facing about to go off below the point of the dead Sea, the barrenneſs of that part affamiſhed them, who had affamiſhed the whole Country. The Prophet yet concludes afterwards with comfortable promiſes of Rain after the Drought, and flouriſhing Trees and times after theſe Locuſts: And upon that diſcourſe of the reſtitution of temporal bleſſings, he riſeth to ſpeak of ſpiritual bleſſings in the days of Chriſt, in the gift of Tongues; and in the wonders that ſhould attend Chriſts death, and that ſhould go before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and concludes in the third Chapter with threatnings againſt the enemies of Jeruſalem, and particularly foretelleth the deſtruction of the Army of Senacharib; againſt which the Lord cauſed his mighty ones to come down, verſ. 11. namely, his Angels, and deſtroyed them in the valley of Jehoſhaphat before Jeruſalem. This Hoſea alſo had particularly pointed at Hoſ. 1. 7.

The Book of AMOS, all.

THIS Propheſie is ſo clearly dated, that there needeth not to uſe many words to ſhew in what time to lay it. It was uttered in the days of Jeroboam, and in the days of Uzziah, that they lived together; and of this Prophets propheſying in any Kings reign further there is no mention.

Almoſt at the end of his Book he telleth us that Jeroboam was then alive, and Amaziah the Prieſt of Bethel, would have ſtirred him up againſt Amos, as againſt a Traytor, Chap. 7. 10. &c. ſo that this Book is to be taken in, in the latter times of Jeroboam, and the proper order of it falleth between the ſeven and twenty and eight and twenty verſes of 2 King. 14. And in the ſame place alſo come in the Books of Hoſea and Joel. And ſo we may obſerve the dealing of the Lord with Iſrael the plainer. For whereas they had been brought very low by their enemies, and their miſeries were become exceeding great; the Lord yet would not deſtroy them, but would try them with one kindneſs more, and ſo he gives them great eaſe and deliverance by Jeroboam: But when both Jeroboam and they continued ſtill in the Idolatry of the old Jeroboam, and in the wickedneſs of their own ways, the Lord ſendeth theſe Prophets amongſt them, to foretel their final deſtruction and overthrow.

Amos neither a Prophet nor a Prophets ſon, by education, Chap. 7. 14. that is neither Tutor nor Scholler in the Schools of the Prophets, but a Shepherd of Tekoa, and of a rude breeding, yet like the Galilean fiſhers becomes a glorious Scholler in the School of the Lord, and a glorious Teacher in the Congregation of Iſrael. He began to propheſie two years before the Earthquake, and told of it before it came, that the Lord would ſmite the Winter houſe, with the Summer houſe, Chap. 3. 15. and the Lintel of the door of the Idolatrous Temple ſhould be ſmitten, and the poſts ſhake, Chap. 9. 1. and ſo there ſhould be a rent and breach in the Idoll Temple at Bethel, when the Lord now came to viſit them, as there was at the Temple in Jeruſalem, at the death of Chriſt. It is very generally held by the Jews, that this Earthquake was at that very time when Uzziah was ſtruck Leprous, but that that cannot be we ſhall obſerve, when we come forward to the year of his death. Amos propheſieth againſt ſix Nations beſides, Iſrael, and Judah, and concludeth them all under an irreverſible decree of deſtruction, for ſo ſhould that clauſe be rendred, which in every one of the threatnings breedeth ſo much difficulty of tranſlating, לא אשיבנו I will not revoke it. For the ſenſe lieth thus, The Lord will roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jeruſalem: And thus ſaith the Lord, For three tranſgreſſions of Damaſcus, and for four, I will not revoke it. That is, I will not revoke that voyce; but Damaſcus ſhall be deſtroyed, and ſo of the reſt. For the maſculine affixe in אשיבנו cannot poſſibly be referred to any thing that went before, but only to קולו His voyce, in verſ. 2. and to ſome thing that went before it, it muſt of neceſſity be referred.

The fourth tranſgreſſion of every Nation is particularly ſpecified, for ſo is that clauſe alſo to be underſtood in every one of the threatnings. For three tranſgreſſions of Damaſcus, but eſpecially for the fourth, I will not revoke the voice that is gone out againſt it; and ſo the like phraſe is uſed, Prov. 30. 15, 18, 21.

The Propheſie of OBADIAH.

THERE is no undoubted certainty of the times of this Prophet, and there is ſome controverſie about his perſon. The Hebrew Doctors moſt generally hold, that this Obadiah was he that lived with Ahab, 1 King. 18. and that he was a proſelited Idumean: they expreſs it thus, The holy bleſſed God ſaid, Of them, and among them will I raiſe up one againſt them: there ſhall come Obadiah, who dwelt with two wicked perſons, Ahab and Jezabel, and learned not their works, and he ſhall take vengeance of Eſau, who dwelt with two righteous perſons, Iſaac and Rebecca, and learned not their works. But Aben Ezra moderately and diſcreetly refuſeth this opinion, For, ſaith he, where it is ſaid, Obadiah feared the Lord, if it had been this very Prophet, how doth he call him a fearer of the Lord, and not rather a Prophet, ſeeing that Propheſie was a degree more honourable? And withal, when Jezabel ſought to deſtroy all the Lords Prophets, how could Obadiah have eſcaped if he had been a Prophet, being always at Court in Jezabels eye? Had this Obadiah been Ahabs Courtier, it were eaſie enough to tell in what time and place to lay this Propheſie, but ſince he was not, as is apparent by theſe Arguments alledged, and might be confirmed by more, we are ſtill to ſeek who this Prophet was, and in what time he lived. It appeareth by the matter of his Propheſie, that Judah and Jeruſalem had been under great calamity and captivity, and that Edom had helped forward the miſery, ſee ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. ſtrangers had carried away captive the forces of Jeruſalem, and forreiners had entred into her gates, and caſt Lots upon her, and Edom was as one of them: Now whether this meaneth the Babiloniſh captivity, or ſome riffling of Jeruſalem ſome time before, there is the queſtion: At the ſacking of it by the Babilonians, the Edomites were buſie to help on the ruine, as it is related in Pſal. 137. 7. and they cryed, Raſe it, raſe it, even to the foundation; and if this Propheſie refer to that time, then ſhould it be laid after the Propheſie of Jeremy for time and order: But theſe two arguments do perſwade, that this Propheſie of Obadiah, and this ſpleen of Edom againſt Jeruſalem were of a timelier and ſooner date; 1. Becauſe there is no mention at all of any ſuch a Prophet at and after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, when men of the beſt note and eminency are reckoned very carefully. 2. Becauſe he mentioneth only the Captivity of Iſrael and Judah in Zarephath and Sepharad, not in France and Spain, as the words are commonly interpreted, but in Sarepta of Zidon, and in other places thereabout, or in Edom: Now if this his Propheſie had been after the Babilonian had deſtroyed Jeruſalem, it had been proper to have ſpoken of the Captivity of Iſrael in Aſſyria, and of Judah in Babilon, and not of a ſmall parcel of Captives in two ſmall Towns or Places. Therefore I cannot but conceive that Obadiah lived contemporary with theſe men, with whoſe Propheſies his is laid, Hoſea, Amos, and Jonah, and that this malicious carriage of the Edomites againſt Jeruſalem and Judah, was either when it was ſacked by Shiſhak King of Egypt, 1 King. 14.25. or by the Philiſtims and Arabians, 2 Chron. 21. 16, 17. or by Joaſh King of Iſrael, 2 Chron. 25.21. and that theſe Captives of Iſrael and Judah in Sarepta and Sepharad, were like thoſe in Amos 1, 6, 9. taken by the Sidonian, and by whoſoever inhabited Sepharad, to be delivered up to Edom.

The Book of JONAH, all.

IN Hoſea, Joel, and Amos is ſhewed the rejection and ruine of Iſrael and Judah, and in Obadiah, the deſolation of Eſau the next Kinſman, and when the ſeed of Jacob and Eſau is thus decreed to ruine and caſting off, then it was ſeaſonable to ſend Jonah out to fetch in the Gentiles: He lived in the ſame time with theſe Prophets, named in the days of Jeroboam the ſecond, and Propheſied of his Victories, and in his time or not long after he goeth to Niniveh: He at firſt declineth his Embaſſage, for love to his own people, knowing that the coming in of the Gentiles would be the caſting off of the Jews, and he was unwilling to be the forwarder and inſtrument of it. At Joppa he diverts from his errand [compare Acts 10. and the like unwillingneſs in Simon Bar Jona] taketh Ship for Tarſhiſh, a City now in the territories of Ninevehs dominion, but comes a ſhore in a Whales belly: a type of Chriſts Burial and Reſurrection before the Gentiles calling. Nineveh repented at the preaching of Jonah, denouncing deſtruction but forty days off: but about forty years after or leſs it is deſtroyed indeed, under the effeminate King Sardanapalus.

2 CHRON. XXVI. ver. 5.

Uzziah.

3216 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 UZZIAH ſeeketh God, and proſpereth, Zechariah a Prophet is as it were his houſhold Chaplain, and following his directions it goeth well with him. There is mention in Eſay 1.2. in the times of Ahaz, of one of the ſame name, Zechariah.

3223 23 Eſay beginneth to Propheſie in this three and twentieth year of Uzziah, when it was now threeſcore and five years to the captiving of the ten Tribes, for ſo ſeems that paſſage to be dated and underſtood, Eſay 8.8. within threeſcore and five years ſhall Ephraim be broken off that it be not a people: For to what other date can it be referred if it mean barely the ten Tribes captiving. Not from the time that Eſay uttered that Propheſie in the time of Ahaz; for from the firſt year of Ahaz to the breaking of Ephraim was but twenty years, nor from the beginning of Amos his Propheſying, as the Jews do caſt it, for he began in Jeroboams time, and from Jeroboams laſt to the breaking of Ephraim was above ſeventy years, but it is to be counted from the time when Eſay himſelf began to Propheſie: He began in the days of Uzziah, and had continued all the time of Jotham, and now it was the reign of Ahaz, and the Lord fixeth him this term for Ephraims Kingdom; that count from the beginning of his own propheſying, ſixty five years forward, and then the ten Tribes ſhould be captived. Now the Holy Ghoſt reckoneth from that date rather then from any other. 1. Becauſe juſt now was the middle time betwixt the revolt of the ten Tribes, and the burning of the Temple, which whole ſum and ſpace was three hundred ninety years, ſo ſummed *Ezek.*4.5. and ſo ſhall the Reader ſee by them when we come there. If any will ſtrictly have theſe ſixty five years reckoned from the time of Eſays uttering the Propheſie in the time of Ahaz, we ſhall lend them a conjecture hereafter.

The reaſon of this may be ſuppoſed to be partly ſedition, and diſturbance in the State, for when a King doth reign he is preſently ſlain 2 King. 15.10. and partly the bitterneſs of the Plagues which had begun in Jeroboams time.

ESAY II, III, IV.

Eſay the Evangeliſt is a Prophet at Jeruſalem. He foretelleth the beginning of the Goſpel in the laſt days of Jeruſalem, and the conflux of people to that light of the Lord, and to that Law that ſhould come from Sion, as a Law of old had done from Sinai: that there ſhould be no longer that quarrelling that had been by all Nations againſt the Jews becauſe of their Religion, for now Religion ſhould be imbraced by all Nations, that mens reliance upon their own righteouſneſs ſhould be aboliſhed, and the doctrine of Repentance take place. That Chriſt the Branch ſhall be glorious, and the members of the new Jeruſalem holy: but the people of the times of his Propheſying ſo abominable that he prayeth againſt them, Chap. 2. 9. [as Elias had done againſt the ten Tribes, 1 King. 19. 14.] and threatneth ſore deſtruction and judgments both upon men and women. Thus was it with the people in manners, though it were ſo proſperous with Uzziah for Victories, the Lord intended to try Judah with kindneſſes ſtill, as he had done Iſrael in the days of Jeroboam the ſecond: He fore-ſaw the iſſue, he would leave them without excuſe, and had ſomething yet to do for the glorifying of his Name, and his Ordinances, before he would deliver his people into his enemies hand.

ESAY V.

ALthough the Prophet Eſay propheſied almoſt thirty years in the time of Uzziah, yet have we no more but the five firſt Chapters left of all his Propheſies in ſo long a ſpace, and of thoſe we have not the certain years neither, but muſt take them up at conjecture. In this fifth Chapter he ſingeth a Song for Chriſt his beloved, concerning his beloveds Vineyard, as they uſed to ſing at their Vintages, but it is a doleſull ditty, concerning the unfruitfulneſs and wilde Grapes 3248 48 of the Vineyard of Iſrael, after ſo much husbandry. Some of thoſe four Grapes he reckons up under ſeveral woes after his Song. From this place Chriſt uſeth the parable of the Vineyard, and the Jews from hence do ſoon underſtand it, Matth. 21. 34, 45.

3249 49 UZZIAHS victories and 3250 50 magnificence in time make him proud.

3252 52 UZZIAH is this year ſtruck with Leproſie, and this year dieth. The Holy Ghoſt hath given a cloſe intimation, that Uzziah's Leproſie befell him in the laſt year of his reign, and not before 2 King. 15. 50. where it is ſaid that Hoſea ſlew Pekah in the twentieth year of Jotham, upon which ariſe theſe two ſcruples: 1. How Jothams twentieth year can be ſpoken of when he reigned but ſixteen, 2 King. 15. 33. this ſhall be looked after when we come thither. And 2. how can Pekahs twentieth year be called the twentieth of Jotham, when Pekah began to raign a year before him, and ſo Pekahs twentieth is but Jothams nineteenth?

Anſw. Why, here is the hint that the Holy Ghoſt giveth of the time of Uzziahs being ſtruck Leprous, namely, in the laſt year of his raign: for here by this very expreſſion is ſhewed that Jotham reigned in the laſt year of his fathers life; and the Text plainly expreſſeth the occaſion, becauſe the Lord ſmote the King with Leproſie, ſo that he was a Leper unto the day of his death, and Jotham the Kings ſon was over the Houſe, judging the people of the Land.

MICAH. I. II.

IN the reign of Jotham beginneth Micah to Propheſie, and mourneth sadly for the ten Tribes Captivity, which now drew near, and for the misery of Jerusalem which was not far off. He was a Prophet in the days of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezechiah; and it is more proper to conceive, that the subject and matter of his whole Book was the tenor of his propheſying in every one of their times; then it is easie to tell what Chapters of his Book were delivered in every one of those Kings time. The conclusion of the third Chapter is allotted to the times of Hezekiah, Jer. 26. 18. and there may the whole Chapter be laid, and all the rest that follow it, and there shall we take them in. Micah was a Prophet of Mareshah in the Tribe of Judah, bordering upon the Philistims, Josh. 15. 44. 2 Chron. 14. 19. He beginneth his Propheſie with the very same words that Michaiah had concluded his to Ahab, שמעו עמים כלם 1 King. 22. 28. in a strange Syntax and construction: Hearken ye people all of them, his Propheſie is in some places very obscure, and very terrible, and in some very plain and comfortable. He speaketh glorious things of Christ, and his Kingdom, and nameth the Town where he should be born, and useth the very words of Esay, who was now alive, to expreſs the conflux to the Kingdom of of Christ under the Gospel, and his power in it, and the peace that should be under it.

ESAY VII.

AHAZ his wickedness bringeth Rezin and Pekah against Jerusalem, but they cannot prevail against * the House of David, for the promise sake. Esay assureth Ahaz of deliverance from those two fire brands, both Kings and Kingdoms, which were now grown to be but tails, and were ready to smoak their last: He offereth Ahaz a sign which he scornfully refuseth, and despiseth to try Jehovah [his son Hezekiah is of another mind, 2 King. 20. 8.] therefore the Lord himself giveth this sign, That the Lord will not quite cast off the House of David till a Virgin have born a Son, and that Son be God in our nature, both which are great wonders indeed; yet he threatens sad days to come upon Jerusalem before.

* Observe this phrase in ver. 2. & 13.

ESAY VIII.

ESay writes a Book full of no other words but this, * Maher-shalal-hash-baz, and takes two men that were of esteem with Ahaz, Zechariah, his father in law, and Uriah the Priest, to see and witness what he had done, that so it might come to Ahaz his knowledge. He also names a child that his wife bare him by this very name, and all to confirm that Damascus and Samaria, the two enemies of Judah now in Arms against it should speedily be destroyed. He useth two several phrases of the same signification, as applying them to the two places, Samaria and Damascus; yet doth he withal threaten those of Judah that despised the house and Kingdom of David, because it was but like the waters of Shiloam, of a very small stream, in comparison of those great Kingdoms that were so potent, and therefore that desired to be under one of those great Kingdoms, and to make confederacy with it: such men he threatens, that he will bring upon them a Kingdom great enough, which should come as a mighty River, since they despised the small stream, and should over-flow Emmanuels land all over. He propheseth glorious things of Emmanuel himself, as that he should be a Sanctuary: that he should have children or Disciples, that he should give them a law and testimony, which should be Oracles to inquire at, and that whosoever should * transgress that law and testimony should be hard bestead, famished, perplexed, and at last driven to utter darkness.

THAT this darkneſs ſhall be a worſe darkneſs and affliction then that was in Galilee, in their captivity, either by Hazael or the Aſſyrian, for thoſe places ſaw light afterward, for the Goſpel began there, but the contempt of the Goſpel ſhould bring miſery irreparable: He ſpeaketh again glorious things concerning Chriſt, the Child promiſed, before Davids houſe fail, the Prince of Peace, and * Father of Eternity: A letter of note and remarkableneſs is in the word לְמַרְבֵּה Lemarbeh in *ver.*7. Mem clauſum, to ſhew the hiddenneſs and myſteriouſneſs of Chriſts Kingdom different from viſible pomp, and to hint the forty years before Jeruſalems deſtruction, when this Dominion increaſed through the world. The juncture of the firſt verſe of this Chapter, with the laſt of the preceding, and this ſubject of verſ. 9. & 11. ſhew plainly, that this Chapter is of the ſame time with thoſe two before.

* אבי עד verſ. 6.

ESAY XVII.

HERE alſo is the Reader to take in this ſeventeenth Chapter of Eſay, made upon the very ſame ſubject that theſe three laſt mentioned, the ſeventh, the eighth, and the ninth, were, namely, concerning the final ruine of Damaſcus and Ephraim. And whereas Damaſcus was deſtroyed and captived in the beginning of the time of Ahaz, and as it is eaſily argued thereupon, that this Propheſie that foretelleth the deſtruction of it, ſhould be ſet before the Story that relateth its deſtruction; ſo it may be concluded, that this Propheſie may be very properly taken in here, upon theſe conſiderations: 1. Till the time of the raign of Ahaz the Prophet, meddles not with Damaſcus and Ephraim joyned together; namely, not till they joyned together to invade Judah. 2. Step but one ſtep further in the Chronicle, then this very place where we would have this Chapter taken in, and Damaſcus is ruined. And therefore this Chapter had to deal with Damaſcus and Ephraim joyned together, it is an argument that it is to be laid no ſooner then here; and ſince it is a Propheſie of the deſtruction of Damaſcus before it come, it can be laid no further forward. Now the reaſon why it lieth in that place of the Book where it doth, is becauſe there are many Propheſies againſt many ſeveral places laid there together; and when the Lord is dealing threatnings among all the Countries and places thereabout, Damaſcus and Ephraim could not go without: And therefore as theſe three laſt named Chapters are laid where they be, as ſingle and ſingular denuntiations againſt theſe two places; ſo is this Chapter laid where it is, becauſe it ſhould there go in company with other threatnings.

ESAY XXVIII.

IN the ſame manner is the eight and twentieth Chapter of this Book, which foretelleth alſo the deſtruction of Ephraim, laid beyond its proper time, among Chapters on either ſide it, that are of a date after Ephraim was deſtroyed; but it is laid there, that threatnings againſt that place might alſo come in among the threatnings againſt other places: And ſince there is no certain notice of what date that Chapter is, it may not unfitly be taken in here, and ſo all Eſays Propheſies againſt Ephraim come together.

AND not content with that, he taketh his opportunity after he comes home; now Judah is ſo low to take in Eloth, the Sea-town in Edom, which Uzziah had recovered in the beginning of his reign; and this is the laſt victory of Syria before Aſſyria ſwallowed it up.

7 called Jothams twentieth, yet is 249 not he ſaid to raign till Ahaz his twelfth year, 2 King. 17. 1. The reaſon of this will be worth the labour a little to inquire after, for the reſolving of this matter, doth not only clear this place, but alſo gives light to one or two places more, which are of obſcurity.

HOSEA V. VI.

IN the times of Ahaz, after his ſeeking to Aſſyria for help, do theſe Chapters ſeem to have been uttered; for Chapter 5. 13. reproveth that in Ephraim and Judah both, and threatens them both with judgments. And Chapter 6. inviteth and exhorteth to repentance and promiſeth good. Ephraim is the more ſpecially named in the reproof for relying upon Aſſhur, though Judah were now under the ſame ſin, and falleth under the ſame reproof, becauſe Ephraim was firſt in that fault, 2 Kings 15. 19. and was firſt ruined by Aſſhur.

reigneth nine years from that time forward: Now ſince the time that Hoſhea had ſlain Pekah: Shalmanezer the King of Aſſyria had come up againſt him, and brought him into Vaſſalage: and now in the twelfth year of Ahaz ſets the Crown upon his head, and he and the Kingdom of Samaria become ſubjects and tributaries to the Crown of Aſſyria, for obſerve in the Text, that Hoſhea becomes Shalmanezers ſervant, and gave him tribute [this was in the twelfth of Ahaz, and from thence the nine years of his reign are dated] but afterward he is found faulty, and caught and impriſoned, and then Samaria in three years ſiege is taken: So that thoſe ſeven years that were between the death of Pekah and Ahaz his twelfth, are without the mention of any King in Samaria, becauſe Hoſhea was not yet eſtabliſhed in the Throne, but kept under by the Aſſyrian till the twelfth of Ahaz, and then he ſets him up King there. This obſervation of the vaſſalage of Samaria, before the final taking of it in the ninth of Hoſhea, helpeth firſt to underſtand that place in Hoſh. 10. 14. namely, that Shalman, or Shalmanezer [for Eſer was but an additional title to the Aſſyrian Monarchs, as Pil-eſer, Eſer-haddon, &c.] ſpoiled Beth-arbel in this his firſt voyage againſt Samaria, and ſo would he ſpoil Bethel at his ſecond.

ESAY X, XI, XII, XIII, & XIV. to ver. 28.

AND the ſame obſervation alſo helpeth to methodize theſe Chapters in Eſay, and to remove that doubt that ariſeth by comparing Eſay 10. ver. 9. 11. with Chap. 14. 28. together, for the former place ſpeaketh of the ſubduing of Samaria by the Aſſyrian [which was not till ſome years after Ahaz his death] and yet the latter ſpeaks but of the the year in which Ahaz died: yet is there no diſlocation at all in this, but that taking of Samaria, that Chap. 10. 9. ſpeaketh of was in this firſt expedition of Shalmaneſer againſt Hoſhea, before the twelfth of Ahaz, when he ſubdued Samaria and her Idols, and brought that Kingdom under tribute. In Eſay 10. he threatens to do the like to Jeruſalem, and indeed he doth it: He came up to Ajath, paſſed to Migron, laid up his Carriages at Micmaſh, lodged at Geba, Cities within Ahaz his dominion, and came over the paſſage, that had been ſtraitly kept as a Frontier between the Kingdom of Samaria and the Kingdom of Judah, &c. and indeed came up to Jeruſalem and ſubdued Ahaz: Theſe were thoſe ſtrong waters that over flowed Judah and Emanuels land in Ahaz his time, Eſay 8. 8. and the bitter days that he ſaw, the like not ſeen ſince the ten Tribes revolt, Eſay 7. 17. Of theſe days it is that Hezekiah ſpeaketh, in the very next year, or fourteenth of Ahaz, Our fathers have fallen by the ſword, and our ſons, and daughters, and wives are in captivity, 2 Chron. 29. 9. And be not ye like your fathers, and like your brethren, which treſpaſſed againſt the Lord, and the Lord gave them up to deſolation, as you ſee 2 Chron. 30. 7. This coming up of the Aſſyrian King againſt Jeruſalem, was the occaſion of Ahaz his ſpoiling the things of the Temple, his cutting off the borders and baſes, and removing the laver and ſea, and the covert for the people to ſtand under on the Sabbath, and his turning away his own entry aſide from the houſe of the Lord, 2 King. 16. verſ. 17, 18. Becauſe of the King of Aſſyria, as ſaith the Text, either to beſtow thoſe things that he thus cut off upon the King, or for fear the King ſhould ſee too much of the true Religion there, but that Ahaz might ſhew himſelf a worſhipper of ſtrange gods as well as the King. Theſe ſad times, and this expedition the Prophet ſpeaketh of in that tenth Chapter, but in the eleventh and twelfth he again comforts the house of David with the vertue of the anointing, or with the operation of the promise to the Throne of David: that his lamp should not go quite out till the Branch of the root of Jesse should bud, and a King from thence should bear rule over all Nations. And in Chap. 13. & 14. he Propheseth against the Kingdom of Babilon, which indeed was but now newly sprung: that this stock of Jesse should out-wear both Assyria and it; and that the anointing or decree that God had made concerning Davids everlasting Throne should be their ruine that strove against it.

2 KINGS XVIII. ver. 1. 2, 3.
2 CHRON. XXIX.

3281 | 14 | 1 HEZEKIAH reigneth in the third year of Hoshea, and so first it is evident that he reigned in his fathers life time; for if Hoshea began in the twelfth of Ahaz as he did, 2 King. 17. 1. and Hezekiah began in the third of Hoshea, as he did 2 King. 18. 1. then doth it follow inevitably that Hezekiah began his Reign in the fourteenth of Ahaz, and said to reign sixteen years, 2 King. 16. 2. The reason of this is also resolved out of that observation before, about Shalmanezers first expedition against Samaria, and his then expedition against Jerusalem, for he had subdued and deposed Ahaz, and made him to become as a private man, and set up Hezekiah on the Throne in his stead, whom God had reserved for the benefit of his people, and for an instrument of much glory to himself out of the bloody sacrifices of Ahaz to Molech, and out of the massacring hand of the enemy that slew some of his sons. See 2 Chron. 28. 3. 7. It is said in 2 King. 18. 7. That Hezekiah rebelled against the King of Assyria and served him not; intimating that he had been under the Assyrian homage, but he would bear it no longer, and that in time provoked Sennacherib against him. Secondly, Observe how very young Ahaz was when he begat Hezekiah: He was twenty years old when he began to reign, 2 King. 16. 2. and in the fifteenth year of his reign his son Hezekiah begins to reign, being then five and twenty years old current, 2 King. 18. 2. and so was born when Ahaz was but ten years old: the like not to be parallelled again in all the Scripture, unless it was in the very young age of Judah, when he begat his eldest son Er, Gen. 38.

Hoshea 3 HOSHEA reigneth wickedly, but not so wickedly as the Kings of Israel had done that had been before him. This is remarkable, that the last King of all that succession should be the best, and yet under him the Kingdom destroyed. | 252

2 CHRON. XXIX. XXX, XXXI.

3282 | 15 | 1 HEZEKIAHS first year properly; and so is it reckoned, 2 King. 18. 9. 10. for his fourth year is said to be Hoseas seventh, and his sixth Hoseas 9. For though the beginning of his reign was somewhat coincident with the third of Hoshea, yet was it but a little time, and that year was soon out: therefore the Holy Ghost doth tell us, when it was that he began his reign at the very first: namely in Hoseas third: yet he rather counteth the beginning of his first year, from the first day of a new year, and from his entring upon upon the work of reformation, then from the other date.

Hezekiah upon the first day of the year beginneth to cleanse the house of the Lord, and even in the life time of Ahaz casteth out those defilements that Ahaz had brought into the Temple, in eighty and eight days the Priests do cleanse the house and the Court, and by Sacrifices they make a new Dedication. In the second Month they appoint and keep the Passover, and Hezekiah and the Princes send throughout all the ten Tribes to invite them to come in to the true Religion: this overture of reconciliation to God, and to the house of David they have now before they be destroyed: some of them imbrace it, come and eat the Passover, but not purified: yet by Hezekiahs prayer all goes well with them. The people departing from this Passover go abroad through the land, and break down Idols, not only in Judah but also in divers places of the Country of the ten Tribes. Hezekiah at Jerusalem restoreth the Priests to their courses, and the Tithes to the Priests.

In this purging and cleansing of the Temple, which Hezekiah performed in the beginning of his reign it may well be supposed, that that Copy of Solomons Proverbs was found mentioned, Prov. 25. 1. and was transcribed by some of Hezekiahs servants out of the old Manuscript, which it is like was much soiled and spotted with time and neglect.

ESAY XIV. from vers. 28. to the end.

IN the year that Ahaz died Esaiah propheseth against the Philistims, that whereas Uzziah had been a Serpent to them, and had bitten them sore, as 2 Chron. 26. 6. but when he was dead they insulted over Ahaz, 2 Chron. 28. 18. that now Hezekiah should prove a Cockatrice to them, and smite them again, as it came to pass, 2 King. 18. 8. That God would first bring upon them a famine, and then Hezekiahs sword, and finally, a Northern power that should utterly dissolve them. But that the terrible Messengers of the Assyrian Nation, that should come against Jerusalem, as Rabshakeh and Rabsaris, &c. should receive this answer, That God hath founded Zion, and the poor of his people should trust in it, and the Assyrian should not prevail against it.

HOSEA VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, XII, XIII, XIV.

ABOUT this time were all these Chapters of Hosea delivered, as may be collected by these three observations. 1. The common and constant speech, that the Prophet maketh to Ephraim in them, sheweth, that these things were spoken to the ten Tribes before they were captived, whose Captivity is now within four years to come. 2. That this was spoken after Hoshea had intertained amity with Ægypt, of which there is mention, 2 Kings 17. 4. For see how Chap. 7. 11. & 12. 1. do speak of and intimate such a thing. And 3. That this was spoken after the expedition of Shalman mentioned before; in which expedition he destroyed Betharbel, Chap. 10. 14. and before his second expedition, when he should destroy Bethel.

ESAY XV, XVI.

IN theſe fifteenth and ſixteenth Chapters there is a ſad Propheſie againſt Moab, which was to have its accompliſhment within three years after it was propheſied, Chap. 16. 14. Within three years, as the years of an hireling, and the glory of Moab ſhall be contemned. Seder Olam applies theſe three years to the three years of the ſiege of Samaria, where he conceiveth the Moabites like baſe hirelings did aſſiſt the King of Aſſyria againſt Iſrael; and for theſe three years baſe ſervice, the Lord would requite her with confuſion and contempt: But the like threatning being uſed againſt Kedar, and terminated within one year, *Chap.*21.16. doth ſhew that this is to be taken in the proper ſenſe of coming to paſs within three years. Now when this ruine and miſery of Moab befel, it is not ſpecified, nor whence theſe three years are to be dated, can it be determined. But only thus much may be concluded; That the Aſſyrian Army was continually abroad and conquering up and down, both in the time of Shalmanezer, and in the time of Sennacherib; and whether Shalmaneſers Army before the taking of Samaria, or after, or Sennacheribs Army before his coming up to Jeruſalem, did deſtroy and ſubdue Moab, it is uncertain; but that one of theſe did it at ſome one of theſe times, it is more then probable; for the Prophet can hardly poſſibly be interpreted to any other date; and to which of theſe times ſoever it be referred, the order of theſe Chapters will yet appear very proper as we have laid them in the firſt thirteen years of Hezekiah.

ESAY XVIII, XIX.

A Propheſie againſt Aſſyria and Egypt, the one the ſcourge, and the other the carnal confidence of Iſrael: He calleth Aſſyria the land ſhadowing with wings, deſcanting upon his own phraſe which he had uſed in Chap. 8. 8. The ſtretching out of his wings ſhall fill thy Land O Immanuel. And foretelleth of the deſtruction of the Hoſt of Aſſyria, by the ſtroke of the Angel. He alſo propheſieth the deſtruction of Egypt, and Judahs going down to dwell there, even to the filling of five Cities with the Language of Canaan, but thoſe ſhould prove alſo Cities of Deſtruction: Yet in time Egypt and Aſſyria and Iſrael, ſhould come to the obedience of the Goſpel.

ESAY XX.

IN the year that Tarton took Aſhdod, Eſay hath another Propheſie againſt Egypt, and one againſt Ethiopia: Tartan was an Aſſyrian chief Commander under Sennacherib, 2 Kings 18. 17. and it is very probable that he died among the 185000 men that were ſlain by the Angel, 2 Kings 19. ver. 35. 2 Chron. 32. 21. And ſo his taking of Aſhdod muſt fall out before that time; And this conſideration doth help very well to know the time and method of this Chapter. Eſay was now in ſackcloth, mourning belike for the ten Tribes captiving: And the Aſſyrian Army is now abroad taking in Cities and places as faſt as it can; and the Lord in this Chapter threatens the two moſt potent Kingdoms then extant, Egypt and Cuſh, that they ſhall both be captived and ſhamefully uſed by Aſſyriah. Tarhakah King of Cuſh faceth Sennacherib, 2 King. 19. 9. and is foiled by him, as appeareth, *Chap.*43.3.

ESAY XXI.

ABout the ſame time hath the Prophet a ſad viſion againſt Babylon now riſing, and againſt Dumah and Kedar, Countries of Arabia, ſee Gen. 25. 13, 14. and foretelleth of Kedars ruine within one year, which directeth us to the order and time of this Propheſie; namely, that it was in theſe conquering times of the Aſſyrian, before he received his ſad blow by the Angel.

He foretelleth of Babylon, הבוגד בוגר והשודד שודד ver. 2. That there ſhould be a cozener of Babylon the cozener, and a ſpoiler of that ſpoiler, and that all ſighing through Babylonian preſſures ſhould ceaſe: That Belſhazzers night of pleaſure and banqueting ſhould be turned into fear, verſ. 4. That while they were furniſhing Tables, and ſetting Centinels to watch while they eat and drank, the alarm ſhould be given, and they ſhould cry Ariſe ye Princes and anoint the ſhield, ver. 5.

By a couple of Horſe-men and two Chariots of different draughts he characſtreth Cyrus, and Darius, and the Median and Perſian Nation, *verſ.*7. and proclaimeth the ruine of Babylon by them.

Of Dumah he telleth, that in Seir or Idumea it would be queſtioned, what was the iſſue of that night when Babylon was deſtroyed, Watchmen, what of that night? And the iſſue and the anſwer ſhould be, that firſt a morning or ſome dawning from Babylons bondage was ſprung, but afterward a ſad night of ſorrow ſhould come on Dumah alſo, as it had done on Babylon. That Arabias tents ſhould be ſo ſpoiled that they ſhould be forced to lodge in the open forreſt, &c.

ESAY XXII.

THIS Chapter containeth a ſad Propheſie againſt Judea, which he calleth, The valley of viſion, becauſe of Gods revealing himſelf there to his Prophets: He foretelleth in it the heavy times that were coming upon that people of Judea, by the Aſſyrian Army, before it was miraculouſly deſtroyed. That the ſlain thereof ſhould not only be ſlain with the ſword, nor dead only by battel, but dead with famine, verſ. 2. for the invaſion of that Army ſhould cauſe husbandry to be neglected, ſo that Briars and Thorns ſhould come upon the land through this neglect, and there ſhould be this trouble for many days and years together, and lamenting for the pleaſant Fields and the fruitful Vine, as *Chap.*32. 10. 12, 13. Elam and Kir, Perſia and Aſſyria ſhould be combined in this invaſion, and ſhould fill the Country with Charets and Horſmen: that by this miſery the Lord ſhould diſcover the covering, or uncloak the hypocriſie and pretences tences of Judah, for now they would ſhew their carnal confidence, ver. 9. 10, 11. and their carnal ſecurity, verſ. 12. 13. He propheſieth of the diſplacing of Shebna from being over the houſhold, and placing of Eliakim in his room: which was accompliſhed, and was come to paſs when Rabſhakeh lay before Jeruſalem, Eſay 36. 22.

ESAY XXIV, XXV, XXVI, XXVII, XXIX.

AS in the two and twentieth Chapter the Prophet had foretold the miſery and perplexity of Judea by Sennacheribs army before the Angel deſtroyed it, ſo in the firſt and laſt of theſe Chapters he declareth the final deſolation of it by Nebuchadnezzar, as he doth the deſolation of Tyrus by him, Chap. 23. and the final deſolation of Ephraim by Salmaneſer, *Chap.*28. He mingleth many ſweet and gracious promiſes and comforts among his threatnings, &c. He calleth the Altar Ariel, and Jeruſalem Ariel, or the Lion of God, the one for devouring ſacrifices, the other for devouring men by ſlaughter: And he threatneth that God would diſtreſs Ariel the City, and it ſhould be as Ariel the Altar, with abundance of ſlain about it, *Chap.*29.2.

ESAY XXX. XXXI.

THE oppreſſion and terrour of the Aſſyrian Army made perplexed Judea look after an arm of fleſh, the reed of Egypt, as *Chap.*36.9. This carnal confidence the Prophet taxeth ſmartly in theſe two Chapters: yet for his promiſe ſake aſſureth of deliverance, and foretelleth the Divine vengeance upon the Aſſyrian. The miſery and oppreſſion by this Army, what under Shalmaneſer, and what under Sennacherib had been long, and had been grievous; ſo that they had eaten the bread of adverſity, and drunken the water of affliction, and their teachers had been removed into corners, &c. Chap. 30. 20. But as the ſtream of the Aſſyrian power had overflowed and rought up even to the neck, as Chap. 8. 8. ſo ſhould the Lords anger do now to him, Chap. 30. 28. And they of Jeruſalem ſhould have joy in the night, ver. 29. Compare Chap. 37. 36. for the Aſſyrian ſhould be beaten down with the voice of the Lord, ver. 31. In the valley of Hinnom or Tophet, ver. 33. And ſhould fall, not by the ſword either of great, or mean man, but of the mighty God, Chap. 31. 8. Theſe and other particulars do plainly clear the method of theſe Chapters, and ſhew they lye here in their proper time.

ESAY XXXII, XXXIII, XXXIV, XXXV.

UNTO the ſame times are we to refer theſe Chapters alſo, ſpeaking amongſt other things of the ſad times that Judah ſuffered while the Aſſyrian Army was ranging and deſtroying up and down, before the Lord deſtroyed him: That he ſhould ſpoil the Vintage and Husbandry, Chap. 32. 10. 12. and that he made the Highways waſte, and cared not to keep any Covenant that he made, *Chap.*33.8. but he ſhould be deſtroyed, and ſo ſhould the other enemies of the Church, particularly Edom, who was a conſtant adverſary, *Chap.*34. and good and comfortable things ſhould accrew to Sion, *Chap.*35.

MICAH III, IV, V, VI, VII.

THE laſt verſe of the third of Micah is owned by the men of Jeremiahs time, to have been uttered in the time of Hezekiah, *Jer.*26.18. and here may both that whole Chapter, and all the Chapters that follow it be very well placed, as Propheſied in ſome time of Hezekiahs firſt thirteen years, before Sennacherib beſieged Jeruſalem; for in *Chap.*5.1. he ſeemeth to ſpeak of that ſiege, and of Sennacheribs blaſphemy both againſt God and Hezekiah, ſmiting the Judge of Iſrael as with a rod upon the cheek; and he fore-telleth that Chriſt ſhould be the peoples peace in the Aſſyrians invaſion; and that though the proud enemy thought to triumph and tread down the chief City of all the Nation, Jeruſalem, yet ſhould that be ſo far from being inſulted over by him, that Bethlehem a poor Town ſhould yield and produce one that ſhould tread both the Aſſyrian and all other the Churches enemies under foot. And ſo as the birth of Chriſt of a Virgin was a ſign to Ahaz, ſo is his birth in Bethlehem a ſign in the days of Hezekiah.

The Propheſie of NAHUM, all.

IN theſe days of Hezekiah alſo lived Nahum the Prophet, and was one of the comforters of Jeruſalem, Eſay 40. 1. againſt the burden and terrours of Aſſyria. He is generally held to have propheſied in the days of Manaſſeh with Habakkuk, which he might very well do, beginning in the reign of Hezekiah, and continuing in Manaſſeh. He mentioneth the evil counſel of Sennacherib againſt the Lord, and fore-telleth his death in his Idol Temple, Chap. 1. 11. 14. and denounceth deſtruction to Niniveh, the chief City of Aſſyria, &c.

ESAY XXXVI. & XXXVII.

3295 | 266 | 14 SENNACHERIB the King of Aſſyria, having invaded Judah, Hezekiah ſends a ſubmiſſion to him at Lachiſh; who cheatingly gets three hundred and thirty Talents from him, and then departs not away from him for all that year. The Aſſyrian firſt ſends ſome of his ſervants with a Meſſage to Jeruſalem, to have perſwaded the people out of their own defence; but when that would not prevail, he ſendeth a great force againſt the City; where Rabſhakah in the head of them revileth Hezekiah, and the Lord, &c. But Hezekiah praying and ſending to Iſaiah hath a comfortable anſwer; and a comfortable ſign; A comfortable anſwer, that the King of Aſſyria ſhould be bridled and muzled, and this very thing ſhould be a comfortable ſign for the future, that God would prevent the famine which they had great cauſe to fear; and that God would eſtabliſh them for the time to come. The Aſſyrian Army had ſpoiled all their tillage thorow the Country for a long time, as Chap. 32. 9, 10, 12, 13. &c. and what ſhall they do now for meat and ſuſtenance, if they ſcape that Army? Why eat this year what groweth of it ſelf, and what may be found up and down on the Trees and the ground. But what muſt they do the next year? Which was a year of releaſe and reſt, as every ſeventh year was, and they might not till the ground? Why, Providebit Deus, God will alſo then provide for them of what grows of it ſelf again, and then the third year ſow and reap, and return to your old peace and proſperity.

ESAY XXXVIII.

2 KING. XX. to ver. 12. & 2 CHRON. XXXII. ver. 24.

HEZEKIAHS ſickneſs of the Plague ſeemeth to have been in the very time while the Aſſyrian Army lay about Jeruſalem; for though the deſtruction of that Army, by the Angel, be related before the Story of his ſickneſs, yet that his ſickneſs was while that Army was alive may be conjectured upon theſe two collections.

Firſt, It is paſt all doubt that his ſickneſs was this very ſame year that the Aſſyrian Army was deſtroyed by the Angel, for if he reigned nine and twenty years, as 2 King. 18. 2. and that ſtroke of the Angel upon that Army was in his fourteenth year, as verſ. 13. of that Chapter; and he lived fifteen years after his ſickneſs, as 2 King. 20. 6. then it makes that matter paſt controverting.

Secondly, The Lord in his ſickneſs doth not only promiſe him recovery from his diſeaſe, but alſo that he will deliver him and that City out of the hand of the King of Aſſyria; which ſhews there was then danger to him and Jeruſalem from that King; And this may be conceived one cauſe that made Hezekiah to weep ſo bitterly when the meſſage of death was denounced unto him; becauſe he was to leave Jeruſalem and Judea under the preſſure and danger of the Aſſyrian Tyrant, and muſt not ſee the delivery of it.

Therefore

World	Division	Hezekiah
			Therefore though the whole ſtory of Sennacherib be laid together as was fit; yet can I not but in my thoughts inſert this ſtory of Hezekiahs ſickneſs, before the deſtruction of his Army; as no doubt it came to paſs before Sennacheribs death; and yet is that ſtoryed before it, for the concluding of his Hiſtory all at once.
			To Hezekiah alone is it given to know the term of his life; and the Sun in the Firmament knoweth not his going down, that Hezekiah may know his.

MErodach, or Berodach-Baladan, the King of Babel, viſiteth Hezekiah by his Embaſſadors, to congratulate his recovery, and to inquire after the miracle of the Sun turning back. The Lord left Hezekiah to try what was in his heart, and it ſhewed folly. The Lord foretels by the Prophet the captivity into Babel, which City and Kingdom is now ſmall, and under the power of the Aſſyrian, before it riſe to be the golden head. For obſerve in 2 Chron. 33. 11. that Babel is in the hand of the King of Aſſyria, The Captains of the hoſt of the King of Aſſyria carried Manaſſeth unto Babel.

It might very well be that Eſer-haddon who ſucceeded Sennacherib in the Aſſyrian Monarchy, took offence at Merodach-Baladan, for his intimacy and familiarity with Hezekiah, and thereupon ſet upon Babel, and took it out of his hands. Babel had been tributary to the Crown of Aſſyria hitherto, the Aſſyrian having built it for ſome of his ſervants that traded upon Euphrates in Ships, and made it a fair City; but now Eſer-haddon ſubdued it, and defaced it, Eſay 23. 13.

ESAY XXIII. & ESAY XL, XLI, &c. to the end of the Book.

THE propheſying of Eſay is concluded by the Title of his Book in the times of Hezekiah [though the Hebrews of old have held, that he lived and died in the days of Manaſſeh, and was ſawn aſunder by him. The Epiſtle to the Hebrews may ſeem to ſpeak to that, *Heb.*11.37.] therefore according to the Chronology of the title of the Book in the firſt verſe of it, theſe Chapters that are ſet after the Story of Hezekiahs fourteenth year, or after the Story of the deſtruction of the Aſſyrians, and Hezekiahs recovery, are all to be allotted to the fifteen years of his prolonged life, ſince there is no direction to lay all of them, or any of them in any time elſe, &c.

The three and twentieth Chapter alſo falleth under the ſame time, even towards the latter end of Hezekiahs reign, when the King of Aſſyria had now taken Babel. This is apparent by *ver.*13. ſpoken of a little before; for there the Lord threatneth Tyrus by the example of Babel; that City had been founded by the Aſſyrian * for his Ships and Ship-men to traffick upon Euphrates, as Tyrus was built on the Sea for the like purpoſe, but now the Aſſyrian had brought that to ruine, and ſo ſhould the caſe of Tyrus be by the Babilonians. Nebuchad-nezzar deſtroyed Tyrus, *Ezek.*29.18.

* For Ships and for men of the Deſert, thereupon Babel is called, The deſert of the Sea, Eſay 21.1.

Now the reaſon why this Chapter, that fell ſo late in Hezekiahs time, is yet laid in that place where it is, is this: becauſe the Propheſies againſt thoſe Countries which lay ſo together, might lye alſo together, and threatnings and denunciations of Judgments might come as it were all in one body: For it may be obſerved, that very much of this Book that lieth before the Story of Sennacherib is threatning and terrour, and the moſt of the Book that lieth after is comfort and promiſes. Only upon mention and promiſe of Cyrus, Chap. 44. & 45. there is a grievous threatning of Babylon, which ere long grew great, Chap. 46. & 47. for Cyrus was to deſtroy it.

2 KING. XVII. from verſ. 24. to end.

In his time the Kings of Aſſyria planted Samaria with a mongrel people from divers Countries: Eſar-haddon was the man, Ezr. 4. 2. who ſeemeth alſo to be called Aſnapper, *verſ.*10. unleſs the Commander in chief in that expedition bare that name. Theſe Samaritans newly ſetled are devoured with Lions, as the Prophet that came from Samaria was, 1 King. 13. for doing contrary to the Lord. In after times they grow conſtant enemies, and bitter againſt the Jews: yet cometh Joſiah in the next generation and deſtroyeth the relicks of Idolatry in the very midſt of them. To this Plantation of the Country and Cities of Samaria, with ſuch Forreiners may that Propheſie refer in Eſay 7. verſ. 8. if we will count the time from the very delivery of the Propheſie, Within threeſcore and five years ſhall Ephraim be broken that it be not a people: Which Propheſie being delivered about the third or fourth year of Ahaz, if we count thoſe ſixty five years forward, the end of them will fall about the four or five and twentieth year of Manaſſeh: And the matter ſo taken may be underſtood in this ſence, That the Prophet there denounceth ſuch a ruine to Ephraim [and Damaſcus is alſo included in the ſame Propheſie, and was concluded alſo under the ſame Plantation] that it ſhould no more be a People or Country of that name, but the very name now changed, gone, and rooted out. The Propheſie of HABAKKUK, all.

IN theſe wicked times of Manaſſeh lived Habakkuk, and Propheſied againſt his wickedneſs, and of him and Nahum may very well be underſtood that paſſage in 2 King. 21.10. The Lord ſpake by his ſervants the Prophets, ſaying, Becauſe Manaſſeh the King of Judah had done theſe abominations, &c. therefore I am bringing evil upon Jeruſalem and Judah, that whoſoever heareth of it, both his ears ſhall tingle: which in a manner is the very ſame with that in Hab. 1. 5. Behold, ye, and regard, and wonder marvelouſly, for I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe though it be told you: For loe, I raiſe up the Chaldeans, &c.

This Judgment upon Judea by the Caldeans was yet to come after ſome ſpace of time, as Chap. 2.3. and this Prophet fore-armeth againſt it by that golden Doctrine, The juſt ſhall live by faith: and by fore-telling the Judgements upon Babel it ſelf. He prayeth for the preſervation of Propheſie in the captivity in a forrain Land, and calleth the captivity, The midſt of years, viz. 'twixt Samuel and Chriſt: He taketh out his own leſſon that he readeth to others of living by faith, and profeſſeth in the greateſt extremities and improbabilities of good, yet to rejoyce in the Lord, and to joy in the God of his ſalvation.

307	26		THE wickedneſs of Manaſſeh doth in time bring him into chains in
308	27		Babel, they bring him to be humbled for his wickedneſs, and that
309	28		brings him into his throne again: Both his mind and his eſtate received a
310	29		great change and alteration; in what time of his reign he was carried to
311	30		Babel, and how long he continued there is undeterminable; but upon his
312	31		return to Jeruſalem again he maketh a great reformation, and builded di-

314	33		And now ſince the Aſſyrian Monarchy is ready to fall in the next Gene-

316	35		and upon the Syrian Kingdom which it hath a good while ago ſwallowed
317	36		up. Damaſcus the head of Syria, Eſay 7.8. was extant in the days of Abraham,
318	37		Gen. 15.2. but not mentioned of any great victoriouſneſs till the days of
319	38		David, nor then the head of Syria neither; for then was Syria divided in-
320	39		to ſeveral Kingdoms, as Aram Zobah, Aram beth-Rehob, Aram Naharaim,
321	40		and Aram Damaſcus, 2 Sam. 8.3. & 10.8. The chief King among them in
322	41		thoſe times was Hadadezer, the ſon of Rehob King of Zobah, and who
323	42		had now joyned Rehob and Zobah into one Kingdom, and had alſo
324	43		brought Aram Naharaim, or ſome good part of it into the ſame Monar-

327	46		11.23. then that City began to peep up, and ere long to be head of all
328	47		Syria; and theſe Kings reigned there, Benhadad the ſon of Tabrimmon,
329	48		the ſon of Hezion, in the days of Aſa, 1 King. 15. 18. Then Benhadad

			Ammon reigneth two years; and is at laſt ſlain by his own ſervants, but his death avenged on thoſe ſervants by the people of the Land. Whileſt the Kingdom of Syria was in its power, the Aſſyrian Kingdom
3366	337	1	was obſcure, and therefore very improperly made by ſome the firſt of the 3367	338	2	four Monarchies. No King of it mentioned in Scripture, till Pull in the time of Menahem King of Iſrael. Famous in Heathen Stories is Sardanapalus, the laſt King of that Kingdom, whileſt it was obſcure, and with whom it fell. Before his time it was that Jonah went to Niniveh, and propheſied againſt it, ſome thirty or forty years before its fall. In new hands that City and Kingdom began to be great and victorious: The firſt of the Kings of the new race was Pull, ſo potent that he pull'd a thouſand Talents by way of tribute from the King of Iſrael, 2 King. 15. 19. After him came Tiglath-Pileſer into the Aſſyrian Throne and conquered Syria, and added it to Aſſyria, 2 Kings 16. 9, 10. Next after him reigned Shalmanezer who captivated the ten Tribes, 2 King. 17. 3, &c. and after him Sennacherib the blaſphemous, called alſo Sargon, as it is probable, Eſay 20. 1. Eſar-haddon ſucceeded Sennacherib, and he is the laſt Aſſyrian King mentioned, if Aſnapper were not one, on that Throne, different from him. Then did Babylon ſwallow up Niniveh, and Nebuchad-nezzar ſubdued it, and brought it under the ſubjection of Babylon, whereas Babel had been lately under the ſubjection of it.

3380	351	13	JEREMY beginneth to Propheſie in the thirteenth of Joſiah, and by Propheſying to help forward the reformation begun, which went on exceeding ſlowly, not through any negligence of Joſiah himſelf, whoſe heart was very upright with the Lord; but through the ſlackneſs and remiſneſs of the Princes and people, and through the rootedneſs of Idolatry in them. And hence it is that Jeremy propheſieth ſo terrible things, and ſo certain deſtruction in the very time of reformation. Joſiah in the twelfth year of his reign had begun to deſtroy Idolatry, and yet how much filth of it was remaining in his eighteenth year is almoſt incredible, 2 King. 23.

Jeremy a young Prieſt and Prophet for the young King; was, Moſes like, a Prophet to Iſrael forty years, viz. 18 of Joſiah, 11 of Jehoiakim, and 11 of Zedekiah; and as Moſes was ſo long with the people a Teacher in the Wilderneſs till they entred into their own Land, ſo was Jeremy ſo long in their own Land a Teacher before they went into

			to the wilderneſs of the Heathen. The Holy Ghoſt ſetteth a ſpecial mark upon theſe forty years of his Propheſying, Ezek. 4. 6. where when the Lord ſummeth up the years that were betwixt the falling away of the ten Tribes, and the burning of the Temple, three hundred and ninety in all; and counteth them by the Prophets lying ſo many days upon his left ſide; he bids him to lye forty days upon his right ſide, and bear the iniquity of the Houſe of Judah forty days, a day for a year: Not to ſignifie that it was forty years above three hundred and ninety, betwixt the revolting of the ten Tribes, and the captivity of Judah, for it was but three hundred and ninety exactly in all; but becauſe he would ſet and mark out Judahs ſingular iniquity by a ſingular mark; for that they had forty years ſo pregnant inſtructions and admonitions by ſo eminent a Prophet, yet were impenitent to their own deſtruction.
			The Propheſies of Jeremy are either utterly undated, and ſo not eaſily, if at all, to be referred to their proper time, or thoſe that are dated, are almoſt generally diſlocated, and not eaſie to give the reaſon of their diſlocation. The firſt Chapter at verſ. 2. and the third Chapter at verſ. 6. do only bear the date of Joſiahs reign, and no more mention of any other Propheſie delivered in his time expreſly made, and yet there is no doubt that very much of the beginning of his Propheſie was in his time.

JEREMY I.

THIS Chapter dateth it ſelf by the thirteenth year of Joſiah, and that was the time, and this was the ſubject of the Prophets firſt Miniſtery; for here is laid down the general head upon which his whole Propheſie doth chiefly run, A rod and evil to come upon Jeruſalem from the North. God ſheweth him a plain dried withered rod, to ſignifie the rod and ſtroke that God was about to bring upon the people; and when he asked Jeremy what he ſaw, he not only ſaith he ſaw a rod, but he can readily name the wood of which it was made, though it was withered and dry, and no ready token on it to diſcern of what wood it was, I ſee, ſaith he, Makal ſhaked, a rod of Almond: thou haſt well ſeen, ſaith God, for Ani ſhokedh, I haſten my word to perform it. The Lord deſcanteth upon the word Shakedh in the Prophets anſwer: And ſince Jeremy had ſpoken ſo fully, as to tell that he not only ſaw a rod, but a rod of Shakedh, or of Almond, the Lord anſwers as fully, that he is not only about to bring a rod upon the Land, but alſo Shakedh, he doth haſten to perform it.

352	14		Joſiah goeth on in piety and in reforming, yet is not the wrath of the Lord removed, partly becauſe of the ſins of Manaſſeh, 2 King. 23. 26. and partly becauſe the peoples reformation was but fained, Jer. 3. 10. and partly becauſe in moſt of them there was no reformation at all.

2 CHRON. XXXIV. from verſ. 8. to end, and XXXV. to verſ. 20.

3385	356	18	THE copy of the Law written with Moſes own hand is found this year in the Temple, Joſiah conſulteth Huldah a Propheteſs about it. Jeremy was not now at Jeruſalem but at Anathoth the Town of his birth, he propheſied there till his Towns-men were about to kill him, Chap. 11. 22. and then he goeth up to Jeruſalem, and the Lord before hand tells him, that he muſt expect rougher dealing at Jeruſalem then at home: For, if foot-men had wearied him, how could he run with horſemen, &c. Chap. 12. 5. If he had been thus tired with his own equals at Anathoth, what would he do with the great ones at Jeruſalem? And if in his native Town, the place of his peace, he had found ſo much trouble, what would he do in Jeruſalems tumults? For even thy brethren and thy fathers houſe have dealt treacherouſly with thee, &c. verſ. 6.

The Prophet was very young when he began to Propheſie, and ſpent ſome of his junior years in preaching to his own Country-men, but they deſpiſed his youth; and therefore as Chriſt being refuſed by his own Towns-men of Nazareth, goeth then about all Galilee, preaching the Goſpel, Luke 4. So Jeremy rejected and indangered by his Towns-men of Anathoth, goeth then abroad to propheſie at Jeruſalem; where it is more then probable he was not when Joſiah inquired of Huldah a woman about Moſes Copy. Zephany had not yet appeared a Prophet at all, as ſhall be obſerved by and by.

			Joſiah humbled and afraid upon the reading of the Law, bringeth the people into a Covenant, ſetteth on to deſtroy Idolatry, and keepeth a ſolemn Paſover.

JEREMY II, III, IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, XII.

357	19		JEREMY in theſe latter years of Joſiah, doth propheſie very ſad and heavy things againſt Judah and Jeruſalem, and telleth plainly, that Jeruſalem ſhould become like Shiloh, &c. For the time and order of theſe Chapters, the Reader may take notice of theſe few things:
358	20
359	21
361	23
362	24		1. That whereas his Chapters from the twentieth forward, are of very much and very viſible diſlocation, theſe to the twentieth do not own any ſuch thing in ſo viſible and evident a manner as thoſe do, nor indeed by any cloſer intimation to conclude any whit certainly upon, and therefore it is not ſafe nor ſolid to tranſpoſe them at all, but to take them up as they lye. Nor do I ſee any thing to the contrary, but that they lye very direct and methodically all along.
363	25
364	26
365	27
366	28
			2. The thirteenth Chapter, and all that follow to the one and twentieth I conceive to have been delivered in the time of Jehoiakim, and not in the time of Joſiah, and that upon this ground, becauſe in Chap. 13. verſ. 18. The Prophet calls to the King and Queen, Humble your ſelves, and ſit down, for your Principality ſhall come down even the Crown of your glory: which was moſt fully accompliſhed upon Jehoiakim and his wife, Jer. 22. 19. with 2 King. 24. 12. and not at all upon Joſiah and his Queen; at the leaſt not upon his Queen for ought we read of.
			3. There is one particular very remarkable, that runneth along through the moſt of theſe Chapters, from the beginning of the third to the fourteenth, and that is, the mention of a great drought or want of rain, as Chap. 3. 3. & 5. 24, 25. & 8. 13. 20. & 9. 10. 12. & 12. 4. & 14. 1, 2, 3, 4. Now if this drought were in the time of Joſiah [as it is mentioned inſtantly before the dating of a Propheſie in Joſiahs time, Chap. 3. 3. 6.] and in the time of Jehoiakim [as there is mention of it preſently after a Propheſie againſt Jehoiakim, Chap. 13. 18. & 14. 1, 2.] then it appeareth that this ſad reſtraint of rain fell out in the laſt years of Joſiah, and continued ſome of Jehoiakims time, and ſo theſe Chapters of Jeremy do moſt properly fall in with the latter years of Joſiahs reign. In Chap. 11. 2. he ſeemeth to ſpeak concerning the Covenant that Joſiah had cauſed the people to enter into, upon the finding and reading of Moſes copy, and he doth earneſtly exhort the people to keep it. And it may be that phraſe in Chap. 2. 31. O generation behold, or ſee the Word of the Lord, may have reference to that copy of Moſes alſo; I am ſure it may be more properly interpreted, as if he pointed to that; then it is interpreted by ſome Jews, as if he ſhewed them the Pot of Manna. There is only ſome Chronical doubt ariſeth upon the eighteenth verſe of the ſecond Chapter, and that is, whether Judah had any league and reliance with and upon Egypt in Joſiahs time; which, as there is no Scripture to aſſert; ſo alſo is there none neither to contradict. And it may very well be held affirmatively, and more probable then otherways, all circumſtances well conſidered: And what if Joſiahs death by the King of Egypt were a temporal puniſhment, for his reliance upon Egypt?

The Propheſie of ZEPHANIAH, all.

IN theſe latter times of Joſiah did Zephaniah alſo ariſe, and appear a Prophet, the great Grand-child of King Hezekiah if ſome gueſs aright. The times of his Propheſying may be ſetled the better by this, that as the firſt verſe of his Book doth date his Propheſie by the reign of Joſiah, ſo the eight verſe of the ſame Chapter doth Propheſie againſt the Kings Children, Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, and Zedekiah, for their new-faſhions and new-fangled apparrel. Now the eldeſt of theſe three was but twelve years old at Joſiahs eighteenth, and the ſecond but ten. It is true indeed that it nameth not theſe three men by name, but why it ſhould not be underſtood in the litteral and proper ſence, and mean theſe three men, I yet ſee no ground to the contrary. The Jews indeed appear to be of another mind, for they make * Jeremy to be Zephanies Scholler; and ſo Expoſiters are of another mind, for they underſtand the Kings Children largely, for the Noble-mens Sons, or Courtiers, but conſidering the wickedneſs of theſe ſons of Joſiah after their fathers death, I have no reaſon to think them much otherwiſe in their fathers life-time, and I ſee not why they may not go in the firſt place with any that deſerved reproof, and on whom it lighted under the name of the Kings Children.

He is called Shallum, 1 Chron. 3. 15. Jer. 22. 11. He reigned but three months, and is depoſed by Pharaoh Necho. His three months reign is to be reckoned in the laſt year of Joſiah: as Jeremy maketh the account plain, Jer. 25.3. And therefore I muſt here retract [and I retract it with wonder how it ever was ſo miſtaken] what is ſaid in Prolegon; to harmony of Evang: That ſome years of trouble paſſed between tha death of Joſiah, and the reign of Jehoiakim.

371 | 2 JEHOIAKIM reigneth eleven years; ſet up by Pharaoh Necho, and named Jehoiakim by him inſtead of Eliakim. In which change of name, Pharaoh ſhewed rather his power then any thing elſe, unleſs he would not indure the word Jehovah in Jehoiakims name, for Jehoiakim and Eliakim is but one and the ſame in ſignification.

JEHOIAKIM doth wickedly, like as his wicked predeceſſors had done: *And his eyes and his heart are not but for covetouſneſs, and for to ſhed innocent blood, and for oppreſſion, and for violence to do it, Jer.*22.17. Amongſt other of his wickedneſſes this was not the leaſt, committed in the beginning of his raign, that he ſlew Urijah the Prophet. Read here, Jer.26. ver. 20, 21, 22, 23.

JEREMY XIII,XIV,XV,XVI,XVII,XVIII,XIX,XX,& XXII. to *ver.*24.

IT was obſerved before, that Chapter 11. was moſt properly to be referred to Joſiahs times, as pointing to the Covenant that he cauſed the people to enter into, and that the twelfth Chapter joyned to it, viz. verſ. 5, 6. of Chap. 12. to verſ. 21, 22, 23. of Chap. 11. And ſo with the end of the twelfth Chapter, are ended the Propheſies of Jeremy of Joſiahs time. And it was alſo obſerved before, that ver. 18. of *Chap.*13. pointed at the time of Jehoiakim; and ſo doth alſo the 18. verſ. of Chap. 22. And therefore ſince we have no date nor direction for any of the Chapters between, to fix them to any other time, we may very well take in all theſe Chapters of Jeremy from the beginning of the thirteenth to the 24 verſe of the two and twentieth, in the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim. The one and twentieth Chapter only is to be ſet out, for it is plainly dated by the time of Zedekiah. Now the reaſon of ſetting this Chapter ſo forward, as among thoſe that were in the beginning of Jehoiakims time, whereas it was in Zedekiahs, which was many years after, may be conjectured to be becauſe of the correſpondency of ſomething in the twentieth Chapter and it. In the twentieth a Paſhur in the time of Jehoiakim, ſets Jeremy in the ſtocks for foretelling deſtruction to Jeruſalem by the Babylonian. And in the one and twentieth a Paſhur in the time of Zedekiah, ſeeks to Jeremy for remedy againſt the Babylonian, who had made good Jeremies Propheſie ſo far as that he had beſieged Jeruſalem: This was a thing remarkable, that one Paſhur ſhould thus oppoſe Jeremies propheſying, and another Paſhur ſhould thus aſſert it; And for the better marking of this, the two Chapters that contain the two ſtories are laid together.

The two and twentieth to *ver.*24. doth ſhew that it was delivered in Jehoiakims time, when Shallum or Jehoahaz was not long before captivated: It biddeth, Weep not for the dead, Joſiah, but weep ſorely for Shallum that was gone, for he ſhould return no more, verſ.10. See 2 Kings 23.34.

JEREMY XXVI. all, and XXVII. to verſ. 12.

THE beginning of theſe two Chapters bear the date of the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, which in this Prophets language is not preciſely the firſt year of his reign [the firſt, ſecond, or third year ſingly he nameth not] but it is taken in a larger ſence and conſtruction, as there is an evidence from the like expreſſion uſed concerning another King, and expounded, Chap. 27. 1. In the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, in the fourth year: Here Zedekiah is in the fourth year of his reign, and yet it is called, The beginning of his reign; and the reaſon of the Phraſe is, becauſe of the double condition and change that either of theſe Kings underwent in the time of their reign; Jehoiakim for above two years reigned by the deputation of Pharaoh Necho: but the reſt of his time by the deputation of Nebuchad-nezzar; and Zedekiah for four years at the leaſt reigned under the ſubjection of the King of Babel, Jer. 51. 59. but the reſt of his time he reigned as rebelling, and caſting off the yoke of the Babylonian, 2 King. 24. 20. therefore the time of either of theſe Kings before this change and alteration befel them, is called, The beginning of their reign.

Now as for the order and method of theſe two Chapters under hand, let us a little look back to the portion where we left before, and that was at the three and twentieth verſe of the two and twentieth Chapter; for from thence to this 26 Chapter, all that comes between is diſlocated and laid there by anticipation. The four and twentieth verſe of Chapter twenty two beareth the date of the raign of Jehoiachin or Coniah, which was not till Jehoiakim had reigned eleven years; whereas divers Propheſies which were uttered in thoſe eleven years of Jehoiakim, are ſet after, as Chap. 25. & 26. & 27. and very many more. Now the reaſon of this method is this, that the threatnings againſt the father Jehoiakim, and the ſon Jehoiachin might be laid together; and the rather becauſe the time of Jehoachins reign was but very ſhort, namely, three months; and therefore the prediction of his captivity, is fitly joyned to the prediction of his fathers, since his reign is reputed as nothing, *Chap.*36.30.

And when the Text is fallen upon, upon this occasion, from vers. 24. of Chap. 22. to the end, all the Prophesies that refer to his time, and concern his person, are also brought up together, viz. Chap. 23. and 24. that the matters concerning him might be laid together in one place.

The 25 Chapter is dated by Jehoiakims fourth year yet laid before Chap. 26. & 27. that bear the date of the beginning of his reign, because it pointeth out the term and space of the Babylonian Captivity, which was indeed the main subject of Jeremies Prophesie, and therefore when in the preceding Chapters he had fore-told the captivity, both to, and of Jehoiakim, and Jehoiachin, and in the five and twentieth he sets himself to fore-tel and measure out the space of the Captivity, therefore these Chapters that handle that main and general head of his Prophesie are laid thus forward and together, and then particular matters are laid after. So that these 26 & 27 Chap. to ver. 12. do joyn in proper current of time and Chronicle, to vers. 23. of Chap. 22. and the reason of the interposition of the other Chapters may be conceived of as hath been said. In Chap. 26. Jeremy is in danger of his life by the Priests and false Prophets, but acquitted by the Elders: They alledge two contrary examples, one of Hezekiah, who piously submitted to Micahs Prophesie, and troubled him not for it; and the other of Jehoiakim who cursedly slew Urijah for Prophesying the truth: the former they propose as a Copy to be followed, and the other as a caution, not to shed more Prophets blood in murdring Jeremy, for too much was lately shed already in the murder of Urijah.

In Chap. 27. to vers. 12. Jeremy is injoyned to make yokes and bonds, to denote servitude and subjection to Babel, but in the entry of the Chapter there is a visible difficulty; for in the beginning of Jehoiakims reign, Jeremy is commanded to make bonds and yokes, and to send them to certain Kings, by the messengers that came to Zedekiah King of Judah; now how can Zedekiah be called King of Judah in the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, since Jehoiakim reigned eleven years, and Jehoiachin three months before Zedekiah came to reign? Answ. These things are to be understood to be spoken Prophetically concerning Zedekiah, as well as concerning Nebuchad-nezzars sons; for the Lord by the Prophet fore-tels that Nebuchad-nezzar should reign, and his son and Grand-child after him, and therefore must the Prophet presently make yokes and bonds, and put them of his own neck in token of Judahs subjection, which indeed begun in the very next year. And he fore-tels withal that Zedekiah should reign, and that divers Kings should send Messengers to him, and by them should Jeremy send those yokes to those Kings, &c.

3401 | 372 | 3 The latter part of this third year of Jehoiakim, is the beginning of Nebuchad-nezzars first year, for his first year took up part of Jehoiakims third, and part of his fourth; this is apparent, by comparing Dan. 1. 1. with Jerem. 25. 1. The fourth of Jehoiakim is indeed most commonly reckoned as Nebuchad-nezzars first, but we shall observe hereafter, that there are intimations sometimes in Scripture, to teach us to understand that reckoning according to this account.

DANIEL I. to verſ. 8. And 2 KING. XXIV. verſ. 1. 2 CHRON. XXXVI. verſ. 6, 7.

IN this third year of Jehoiakim, Nebuchad-nezzar beſiegeth and taketh Jeruſalem, and Jehoiakim; he putteth him in fetters to carry him to Babel, but reſtoreth him again to the Throne as a tributary to the crown of Babel, and ſo Jehoiakim becomes his ſervant three years.

Here begins the ſeventy years Captivity, and the ſeventy years of the rule of Babel, Jer. 25. 11, 12. & 29. 10.

In this captivity were carried away Daniel, Hananiah, Miſhael, and Azariah, and now is that ſad Prediction to Hezekiah fulfilled, 2 King. 20. 18. and that of Zephany, Zeph. 1. 8.

DAN. I. from verſ. 8. to 18.

3402 | 373 | 1 | 4 DANIEL and his three fellow Nobles now in Babel, réfuſe the Court diet, and betake themſelves to an auſterity of diet, but once more to be paralleld in all the Scripture, and that was in John the Babtiſt; yet they come on and grow freſh and fat, to ſhew that man liveth not by bread only, &c.

JEREMY XXV.

IN this fourth year of Jehoiakim, which was the firſt year of Nebuchad-nezzar, verſ. 1. Jeremy prepareth a cup of indignation for Jeruſalem, and for all the Nations round about it, and at laſt for Sheſhach or Babylon it ſelf.

JEREMY XLVI. & XLVIII. & XLIX. to verſ. 34.

JEREMY propheſieth againſt Pharaoh Necho and Egypt, foretelling the overthrow of his Army at Carchemiſh, which accordingly came to paſs this year; and then the Lord avengeth the death of good Joſiah, as verſ. 10. This Chapter, though it fell under the time of Jehoiakim, yet is it laid ſo far in the Book, as after the ſtory of Judahs going into captivity, and into Egypt; for a reaſon, which ſhall be touched preſently, and ſo ſhall the method of Chap. 48. & 49. be taken into conſideration.

JEREMY XXXVI. to verſ. 9.

BARUCH writeth the Propheſie of Jeremy in a Book, and readeth it in the Lords Houſe on the ſolemn Faſt day [the tenth of Tizri probably] in the fourth of Jehoiakim, verſ. 1. This Chapter lieth after many Propheſies of the times of Zedekiah, becauſe he would lay the relation of hiſtorical things, and particularly, of Jeremies ſufferings, together. In Chap. 36. is told that he was impriſoned in Jehoiakims time, verſ. 5. and his Book burnt by that wicked King. In Chap. 37. is told that he was impriſoned in Zedekiahs time, verſ. 15. and in Chap. 38. how he is put into the dungeon.

JEREMY XLV.

A Meſſage comes to Baruch from God, upon his writing out of Jeremies Propheſie in the fourth of Jehoiakim.

The looking back upon Chap. 43. & 44. and conſidering the tenour of them, will give light and a reaſon for the placing of this Chapter, and the next following ſo far in the Book, though they are of ſo early a date in the reign of Jehoiakim. Upon Johanans carrying the people into Egypt, contrary to the expreſs Word of God,

Jeremy

World	Diviſion	Years of Captivity	Jehoiakim
				Jeremy, denounceth ſad things to the Jews now in Egypt, and ſure deſtruction to Egypt it ſelf; this in Chap. 43. from verſ. 9. &c. and in Chap. 44. thorow out. Then is laid the relation of the comfort and incouragment that Jeremy gave Baruch many years before the time of the other Propheſies; Then Baruchs ſafety in Ægypt, and in her miſeries, might be thence intimated and obſerved: For thither had Johanan brought Baruch, Chap. 43. 6. And the like juncture of Stories was obſerved at *Exod.*18. where Jethroes coming to Iſraels Camp is ſtoried inſtantly after the ſtory of the curſe paſſed upon Amalek, to ſhew that he fell not under that curſe, though he lived in that Nation.
				After the intertexture of this 42 Chapter, which was a comfortable word for Baruch in Egypt, in the threatnings of Egypt; the 46 Chapter which was alſo delivered in this fourth of Jehoiakim, is laid next, that all the threatnings againſt Egypt, though at ſeveral times delivered, yet might come together; and that the accompliſhment of this Propheſie delivered in Jehoiakims time, and fulfilled upon Pharaoh Nechos Army, might be a confirmation, that Iſrael in Egypt muſt expect the like truth of the Propheſies againſt it, delivered to them there, of miſery to come upon it by Nebuchadnezzar.
				Of the ſame date with the 46 Chapter we may well ſuppoſe the 48 & 49 Chapters to be alſo, becauſe the ſecond verſe of Chapter 46. doth uſe a comprehenſive expreſſion, The Word of the Lord againſt the Gentiles, as concluding all theſe Sermons and Propheſies againſt theſe ſeveral Nations under one date and head; only Chap.47. and verſ. 34. of Chap.49. are of ſeveral ſpecified dates; of which, when we come to them.
				JEREMY XXXVI. from verſ. 9. to end.
3403	374	2	5	IN the fifth year of Jehoiakim, in the ninth month, Jehoiakim cuts in pieces and burns Jeremies Propheſie, a wickedneſs not to be paralleld: Let the Reader weigh whether Baruchs reading the Book in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, on the Faſt day, verſ. 6. and his reading it now in the fifth year of Jehoiakim, at an extraordinary Faſt in the ninth month, be above the ſpace of two months aſunder. It is very well worth the pondering. I cannot but conclude affirmatively, and I believe upon very good ground; and this obſerved and concluded doth help to count the ſeventy years captivity the more exactly: if it do not alſo teach us to begin the year from the time of the firſt captivity, from its antient date in Tiſri, till Redemption altered the date, and brought it to Abib, which I believe Captivity hath now altered again. The preceding Chapter and this, and divers forward are Hiſtorical, and therefore they are laid together after thoſe that are more fully Prophetical: we ſhall obſerve the like in the Book of Daniel ere it be long.
	375	3	6	There is no particular occurrence mentioned this ſixth year of Jehoiakim.
				2 KING. XXIV. the latter end of verſ. 1. and verſ. 2, 3, 4.
				JEHOIAKIM rebelleth againſt the King of Babel, for which he is miſerably invaded, and Judah ſpoiled; and this miſery continueth all his time.

JEREMY XXXV.

THE Story and matter of Jeremies ſetting wine before the Rechabites, &c. is ſaid to be in the days of Jehoiakim, but in what year is not mentioned; only this may be collected out of the Text, that it was after Jehoiakims rebelling againſt Nebuchad-nezzar, for they ſay in verſ. 1. that they fled to Jeruſalem for fear of the Army of the Chaldeans, and the Army of the Syrians: which are the Army mentioned to have come againſt him upon his rebelling, 2 King. 24. 2. This Story therefore fell out in theſe latter years of Jehoiakim. Now it is laid ſo far in the Book, as after divers Propheſies dated by the times of Zedekiah, partly becauſe it is Hiſtorical, and ſo is ſet after Prophetical things, and partly becauſe this Story of the Rechabites doth ſet off the impiety of the Jews, mentioned in the preceding Chapter, the more, for there he ſheweth how falſe the people were to their Covenant with God, in recalling their freed ſervants, and here how faithful the Rechabites were to an ingagement of their father.

JER. LII. verſ. 28.

NEBUCHAD-NEZZAR captiveth three thouſand and twenty three Jews. This is to be underſtood of the captivity of Jehoiakim; it is called the ſeventh year of Nebuchadnezzar, becauſe his ſiege againſt Jeruſalem began in his ſeventh, and he took the City in the beginning of his eight; and partly to diſtinguiſh this from the captivity of Jehoiakin, which was in his eight, when he carried away many thouſands, 2 King. 24. 12, 14, 16.

2 KING. XXIV. verſ. 8. 9.

2 CHRON. XXXVI. verſ. 9.

JEHOIACHIN the ſon of Jehoiakim reigneth three months: He is called alſo Jeconiah, and Coniah: the name Jeho, or Jah [a contraction of Jehovah] being ſometime ſet before his name, and ſometime after, and the firſt ſyllable of his name ſometime cut off; and he called Coniah.

That his three months are to be taken in, in Jehoiakims laſt year, there is evidence ſufficient in 2 King. 25. 2, 8. where the eleventh year of Zedekiah, and the nineteenth of Nebuchad-nezzar are coincident, or fall in together: And in 2 Chron. 36. 10. where it is ſaid, that when the year was expired the King of Babel captived him thither.

There is one main doubt and ſcruple ariſeth, in comparing his Story in the Book of Kings and Chronicles together, for the Book of Chronicles ſaith, he was eight years old when he began to reign, and the Book of Kings ſaith, he was eighteen: Now in expreſſions that are ſo different, propriety is not to be expected in both; but the one to be taken properly, and that is, that he was eighteen years old when he began to reign; and the other, that he was the Son of the eighth year, or fell in the lot of the eighth year, after any Captivity of Judah had begun: for the beginning of his reign was in the eighth year of Nebuchad-nezzar, 2 King. 24. 12. and in the eighth year of the ſeventy of captivity: And ſo the Holy Ghoſt dealeth here as he doth about Ahaziah, JEREMY XXII. from verſ. 24. to the end.

JEHOIACHIN, or Jeconiah, is no ſooner upon the Throne, but Jeremy denounceth his captivity, and the failing of Solomons houſe in him: And this doth but as it were take at that Propheſiy which he uttered before againſt Jehoiakim his father, Chap. 36. 30. He ſhall have none to ſit upon the throne of David; When the ending of Solomons Houſe is to be denounced, he calleth the Earth, Earth, Earth, to hear the word of the Lord, that the earthly Kingdom was now to decay, and therefore a Kingdom of another nature was to be looked after.

JEREMY XXIII. all.

THIS King and Kingdom is deſcribed in this Chapter; and when he had denounced the failing of Solomons houſe, and the ruine of the earthly Kingdom of the houſe of David, in the Chapter before, he now telleth of the everlaſting King and Kingdom of David, verſ. 5. 6. and denounceth woe againſt thoſe curſed Shepherds and Paſtours that had helped Solomons houſe forward unto ruine.

2 KING. XXIV. from verſ. 10. to verſ. 17.

2 CHRON. XXXVI. verſ. 10.

And ſo was Ezekiel alſo, and therefore he dateth his times from this date, Ezek. 1. 2. and calleth it, Our captivity, Chap. 40. 1.

JEREMY had been commanded thirteen years ago to make yokes and bands, and to put them upon his own neck, in token of Judahs ſubjection to Nebuchad-nezzar: which in the very next year after, namely, in the third year of Jehoiachin came to paſs: and he is alſo then commanded by way of prediction, that when ſuch and ſuch Kings Embaſſadors ſhould come to Jeruſalem to Zedekiah, he ſhould ſend the yokes away by thoſe Meſſengers to their Kings.

That cometh to paſs in this fourth year of Zedekiah, as the firſt verſe of Chapter 28. doth plainly date it.

JEREMY XXVIII. all.

HANANIAH at Jeruſalem; foretelling falſely the reſtoring of the captivity within two years, is himſelf ſtruck with death within two months, for teaching rebellion againſt the Lord.

JEREMY XXIX, XXX, XXXI, XLIX. from verſ. 34. to end. And LI. all.

THIS fourth year of his reign, Zedekiah either went himſelf, or ſent Meſſengers to Babel, or both, for ſo is that verſ. 59. of Chap. 51. diverſly read, when Seraiah went with Zedekiah, or when he went for or in behalf of Zedekiah into Babylon. Now by the men that went thither, either with him or for him, Jeremy ſendeth Letters to the children of the captivity, one to perſwade them to frame their hearts, and to compoſe themſelves for ſeventy years captivity: This, two Prophets in Babel, ſuch others as Hananiah at Jeruſalem, gain-ſay, and would perſwade the people to the contrary. And a third writes to Jeruſalem to have Jeremy puniſhed; therefore he threatneth bitter judgments againſt all three. This in Chap. 29.

And being upon a Propheſie of the captivities return in that Chapter, verſ. 10, 11, &c. he falleth in Chap. 30. & 31. largely to foretel the calling home of the two Tribes, and of the ten Tribes to Chriſt. Now though it be doubtful whither he ſent the Propheſie of theſe two Chapters to Babel, yet is it doubtleſs, that their order is very proper in this place, where he is foretelling of the peoples return.

He alſo ſendeth another Letter to Babylon concerning the ruine and deſtruction of Babylon it ſelf, in Chap. 50. & 51. which Chapters are laid as the period of his Propheſie, that then concluſion of them all might be the foretelling of the ruine of Babel. And under the ſame date may we alſo take the laſt part of Chap. 49. from verſ. 34. to end; a Propheſie againſt Elam that joyned with Babel againſt Judea, Iſa. 22. 6. and is joyned here with Babel in threatnings. The beginning of the reign of Zedekiah in verſe 34. may be taken as it is Chap. 28. 1. for his fourth year.

EZEKIEL I, II, III, IV, V, VI, VII.

3414	385	13	5	IN the fifth year from Jehoiachins captivity, the Lord raiſeth up Ezekiel for a Prophet to the people in Babylon, as Jeremy was in Jeruſalem.

He dateth his Propheſie from the 30 year, of the finding of Moſes his Copy in the 18 of Joſias, [as is commonly conceived, but] as it may very well be ſuppoſed, from the 30 year of his own age, he being a Prieſt, and that being the time at which the Prieſts entred their function. Num. 4. 3. at that time the ſpirit of Propheſie came upon him, and by a river in Babylon, he ſeeth the Heavens opened, as Chriſt at the ſame age had the Heavens opened to him by a river in Judea, Luke 3. 21, 22, 23.

Now that the people of Iſrael, the Church, are to be planted in another Country for a long time, the Lord ſheweth a glory in the midſt of them, as he had done at their firſt conſtituting into a Church in the Wilderneſs; and out of a cloud and fire, as he had done there, he ſheweth himſelf, and from between living creatures, as from between the Cherubims, he giveth his Oracles to the Prophet.

He cauſeth him to eat a roll, to lay a viſionary ſiege to a pictured Jeruſalem, to lye on his ſide three hundred and ninety days, ſuitable to the time of the peoples rebellion from Jeroboams revolt to the Cities deſtruction; and forty days more in anſwer to the forty years tranſgreſſion of Judah, under the miniſtry of Jeremy, as was ſaid before.

fore. To eat the bread of affliction and pollution, to ſhew the want of victuals at Jeruſalem, and the peoples eating of polluted things in Babel. To ſhave off his hair, and to part it into ſeveral fatal ſignifications, &c. And now that the deſtruction of the City is near at hand, but five or ſix years off, he foretelleth it in ſad expreſſions, and bemoaneth it with doleful lamentations.

2 CHRON. XXXVI. verſ. 11, 12, 13, 14. 15, 16.

BEcauſe the fourth year of Zedekiah is called the beginning of his raign, Jer. 28. 1. which ſheweth his condition yet unchanged, as we obſerved before: And becauſe Ezekiel in the next year ſpeaketh of his revolt from his oath made to the King of Babel, Ezek. 17. 15. Therefore may we conclude that he rebelled againſt Babel in this fifth year of his raign.

ALL theſe Chapters fall in, in the ſixth year after Jeconiahs captivity, or in the ſixth of Zedekiah, as appeareth by the date of the eighth Chapter, verſ. 1. and by the date of the twentieth Chapter, verſ. 1. compared together.

In Chapter eight the Lord ſheweth a juſt cauſe why he is about to remove his glory from the Temple, viz. becauſe it was defiled with all manner of Idolatry.

1. There was סמל הקנאה An image of provocation, or a provoking image, verſ. 3. 5. in the entry into the Temple.

2. The very whole Sanhedrin, and Jaazaniah their chief, committed all manner of Idolatry, verſ. 10. 11.

3. The woman weeping for Adonis, verſ. 14. And

4. The twenty four heads of the courſes of the Prieſt-hood, and the High Prieſt, that ſhould have been ſerving God at the Altar, turning their backs upon it, and adoring the Sun, משתחויתם לשמש verſ. 16. a very ſtrange framed word to expreſs their ſtrange abominableneſs.

In Chap. 9. God marketh his own before deſtruction cometh. Compare Rev. 7. Jeremy, Baruch, Ebedmelech, and whoſoever elſe feared the Lord are here marked out for deliverance.

Chap. 10. Ezekiel ſeeth the glory of God in the Temple, which he had ſeen at Chebar, but now it is fleeting off, and removed as far as the Eaſt Gate. And in Chap. 11. it is flitted clean off the City to mount Olivet.

Chap. 12. When God had thus flitted away his own Glory he ſetteth the Prophet to flit away his ſtuff, and this doth he that he might the more throughly ſet on the impreſſion of captivity. And from thence forward the Prophet falleth upon the people, the falſe Prophets, and Propheteſſes with ſharp reproofs, &c.

In Chap. 17. there is a terrible denuntiation of Judgment againſt Zedekiah, for violating his Oath and fealty to the King of Babel, and ſeeking to Ægypt for help and ſtrength that he might rebel againſt him; This the Book of Chronicles brandeth him for, that he rebelled againſt King Nebuchad-nezzar, who had made him ſwear by God, 2 Chron. 36. 13. It appeareth that at this time he had revolted and began to rebel, and ſo was now brewing his own and Judahs deſtruction, and therefore the Prophet throughout all theſe Chapters doth lay on the more load of threatning and terror.

EZEKIEL XXIX. to verſ. 17.

IN this tenth year, the tenth month and twelfth day of the month the Word of the Lord cometh to Ezekiel againſt Ægypt, &c. And here is a viſible diſlocation, for Chap. 26. is dated by the eleventh year, and Chap. 30. verſ. 20. and Chap. 31. are dated by the eleventh year; yet this Chapter that comes between is dated by the tenth. Now the reaſon of this miſplacing is eaſie to be apprehended, and that is this:

1. The Propheſie againſt Egypt was in the tenth year, as moſt properly meeting with Egypt, in the very height of its pride, and of Jeruſalems carnal confidence in it: For now it was a foot with all its force to raiſe the ſiege at Jeruſalem, and Jeruſalem with all its hope did relye upon it; and therefore in that very time the Lord denounceth deſtruction to it, and fruſtration to the Jews hopes in it. Now;

2. The reaſon of ſetting this Propheſie, that fore-telleth ſo much after the Propheſie againſt Tyrus, which was in the eleventh year, is, becauſe Tyrus was firſt to be deſtroyed, and Egypt was to be the wages of Nebuchad-nezzar for deſtroying Tyrus, Chap. 29. 18, 19. and therefore that this might be obſerved the better, the threatning of the deſtruction of Tyrus which was given after, yet is ſet before the threatning of the deſtruction of Egypt, which was given before.

EZEKIEL XXVI. XXVII, XXVIII.

3420 | 19 | 11 THIS eleventh year of Zedekiah, and nineteenth of Nebuchad-nezzar was the fatal year of Jeruſalems deſtruction; and now are Ezekiels three hundred and ninety years up, Ezek. 4. 5. we counted the very year of the diviſion of the Tribes the firſt of them, or elſe the very laſt of them would have fallen here; on the very firſt day of this year hath Ezekiel the ſad prediction concerning the ruine of Tyrus and Sidon.

EZEKIEL XXX. from verſ. 20. to the end.

ON the ſeventh day of this firſt month Ezekiel Propheſieth of the weakning and fall of Egypt, whom Nebuchad-nezzar had now beaten off, and was returned to Jeruſalems ſiege again.

EZEKIEL XXXI.

ON the firſt day of the third month of this year, Ezekiel hath another Propheſie againſt Egypt.

JEREMY XXXVIII.

IN theſe gaſping times of the City, when all the proviſion in it was even ſpent, verſ. 9. Jeremy (by curſed ſuggeſtion to the King) is caſt into the Dungeon, but delivered thence by the good care of Ebed-melech a Cuſhite, &c.

JEREMY XXXIX. verſ. 15, 16, 17, 18.

JEREMY thus delivered by the means of Ebed-melech from the Dungeon, Propheſieth deliverance to Ebed-melech. Now this paſſage is laid after the Story of the taking of the City; though Jeremy propheſied it before; becauſe when the Holy Ghoſt hath ſhewed the ſafety of Jeremy in the deſtruction, he would alſo ſhew the ſafety of Ebed-melech, according to Jeremies Propheſie.

2 KING. XXV. verſ. 2. to verſ. 20.

2 CHRON. XXXVI. verſ. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21.

JEREMY XXXIX. verſ. 2. to verſ. 15.

And LII. verſ. 5. to verſ. 28.

IN the fourth month of this eleventh year of Zedekiah, which was the month Tammuz on the ninth day of the moneth, [much about our Mid-ſummer day] there is no more proviſion left, and the City is broken up. Zedekiah and the men of war get away by night; but Zedekiah is overtaken near Jericho, ere he could reach the foords of Jordan, and brought to Nebuchad-nezzar, and judgment paſſed upon him, &c. And he that would never ſee the danger, now ſeeth the Judgment, and his eyes are put out.

In the fifth moneth, the ſeventh day of the month, Nebuzaradan fireth the Temple and Jeruſalem, about the 23 of our July, captiveth the remnant of the people, leaving only ſome for husbandry, over whom he maketh Gedaliah Governor, and carrieth away all the Veſſels of the Houſe of the Lord, and the two brazen pillars that ſtood before it.

In reckoning the height of the two Pillars Jachin and Boaz, there is ſome difference and difficulty; for in 2 Kings 25. 17. It is ſaid, The height of one Pillar was eighteen cubits. And ſo 2 King. 7. 15. and Jer. 52. 21. But in 2 Chron. 3.15. it is ſaid, He made two Pillars thirty five cubits high.

And in that very verſe it is ſaid, the Chapiter that was on the top of each of them, was five cubits: And ſo 2 King. 7. 16. and Jer. 52. 22. But in 2 *King.*25.17. it is ſaid, The height of the Chapiter was three cubits.

Solution. 1. Of the difference in the former reckoning; the reaſon is this, becauſe the Book of Kings, and Jer. 52. 21. reckon the height of each Pillar diſtinct, and ſay plainly, they were eighteen cubits high a piece; But the Book of Chronicles reckoneth the meaſure of them both joyntly together, and ſaith, they were five and thirty cubits long; that is, both together were ſo long, and ſeverally they were ſeventeen cubits and an half a piece. Now the half cubit that is reckoned above [when it is ſaid they were eighteen cubits high a piece] was taken up within the Chapiter, for the Chapiter being a long maſſey piece of braſs, ſet upon the head of the Pillar, the Pillar muſt needs be let in ſomething into it, as a tenon into a morteiſe to make it faſt, and ſo it was half a cubit; ſo that the Pillar was eighteen cubits high, but it was only ſeventeen cubits and an half appearing.

2. The difference of the ſecond accounting [viz. of the height of the Chapiter, one Text ſaying it was three cubits high, and the other five] ariſeth from this, That the Chapiters themſelves were five cubits high a piece, but there was net work wrought about them at their bottom, which ſtood as a Crown about them on the top of the Pillars, that only three cubits of the plain Chapiter could be ſeen.

In this captivity was Seraiah the father of Ezra taken and ſlain, 2 *King.*25.18. *Ezr.*7. 1. he was the High Prieſt, and he and Zephaniah the ſecond Prieſt or Sagan, came to an end as fatal, as Hophni and Phinehas had done at the ruine of Shiloh.

Were Ezra never ſo young now, yea were he now in his mothers womb, yet muſt he needs be very aged when he cometh up to Jeruſalem ſo long after the captivity, Ezr. 7. we ſhall judge of this by then we come there.

The Book of the LAMENTATIONS.

UPON this ſad miſery befallen Jeruſalem, Jeremy compoſeth the ſad ditty of his Lamentations, bewailing its caſe moſt dolefully, but withal moſt elegantly. For all the Chapters in this Elegiack Book, the fifth or laſt excepted, are alphabetical, or every verſe beginning in order with the Letters of the Alphabet, and the third Chapter doing it three times over: Only in all the Alphabets, but that of the firſt Chapter, there is a diſlocation of the two letters ע and פ Ain and Pe: For whereas Ain ſhould properly be ſet before, according to the conſtant method of the Hebrew Alphabet, it is not ſo here, but Pe ſet before, and Ain after. The Prophet by this alteration of the letter ע Ain, which in numbers denoteth ſeventy, aiming, as it may be well ſuppoſed, to hint the ſeventy years that this deſolation of Jeruſalem, to which it was now come, ſhould laſt.

JEREMY XL. to verſ. 9.

NEBUZARADAN bringeth all his captives to Ramah [then was a ſad voice heard there of lamentation, weeping and mourning, as Chap. 31. 15. Matth. 2. 18.] and from thence he inlargeth Jeremy from his Manicles [not which he had put on him but which the Jews had put on him in the Court of the Priſon], and diſmiſſeth him to go to Gedaliah, or elſe whither, as he pleaſed. Then the Word of the Lord cometh to him, and directeth him to go to Gedaliah.

2 KING. XXV. verſ. 20. 21. And JEREMY LII. verſ. 26,27,28,29.

THE continuance and connection of the Story here is to be conceived thus: That Nebuzaradan when he fired the Temple, and captived the City, in his return towards his Maſter maketh a Rendez-vouz at Ramah, as in the Sections preceding, and there diſpoſeth of ſome of his Priſoners, particularly of Jeremy for inlargement, and then he goeth forward to his Maſter to Riblah; whither when he bringeth his Captives, Nebuchad-nezzar ſlayeth ſeventy two of them. This number is conſiderable by reflexion upon the ſeventy two that were firſt choſen, Numb. 11. 26, 27. And becauſe we may the rather obſerve this, there is a difference of the account of the Book of Kings from Jeremy. The Book of Kings ſaith that Nebuzaradan took away from Jeruſalem, Seraiah, Zephaniah, three Porters, a chief Officer over the Army, and the chief Secretary of the Army; five men that were near the King, and ſixty men of the Land; that is, five out of the Temple, two out of the City, five out of the Court, and ſixty out of the Country, and brought them to Riblah, and there the King of Babel ſlew them. Now Jeremy agrees exactly in all the account but this, that he ſaith, he took away ſeven men that were near the King; which he did indeed, but ſlew but five of them, for the other two Jeremy and Ebedmelech were delivered: Now of their Story the Penman hath given you account before, and therefore when he ſaith here, that all theſe were taken at Jeruſalem, and ſlain at Riblah, he himſelf had been the interpreter there how to underſtand it ſuitable to the relation in the Book of Kings.

Jeremy in verſ. 28. 29. reckoning the men that Nebuchad-nezzar carried away captive, ſaith in his ſeventh year, they were three thouſand and twenty three Jews, and in his eighteenth three thouſand and thirty two from Jeruſalem; in which if the Reader ruminate well upon the matter, he will find a great deal of difficulty: For,

1. He never mentioneth in this reckoning either the Captivity in the fourth of Jehoiakim, which was the firſt Captivity, not the Captivity of Jechoniah, in which the moſt people were carried away: And.

2. There is no mention elſe-where of Nebuchad-nezzars carrying away into captivity from Jeruſalem either in his ſeventh year, or in his eighteenth; but of his doing ſo in his eighth there is mention, 2 King. 24. 12. and in his nineteenth, Jer. 25. 12.

Now

Now for anſwer; 1. To the Firſt, The Prophet doth not here ſpeak ſimply of the perſons that were captived, but of perſons that were captived and put to death, for that was the very tenour of his ſpeech in the verſe immediately before: And for the confirming of this, it is obſervable, that in theſe two verſes he mentioneth only the Captives that were cauſed by an open Rebellion, Jehoiakims and Zedekiahs, and upon thoſe followed ſlaughter upon cold blood: but in the fourth of Jehoiakim, when Daniel and his fellows were captived, and when Jechoniah was captived with 18000 more, there was no ſuch ſlaughter becauſe there was no ſuch rebellion: And by this very conſideration we may learn what was the end of Jehoiakim, againſt whom Jeremy threatned the burial of an Aſs, although the Scripture hath not clearly expreſſed it elſe-where.

To the ſecond we have given ſome piece of an anſwer before, more fully now: Nebuchad-nezzars firſt year was properly in Jehoiakims third, for then is the firſt news you hear of him, *Dan.*1.1. but withal, his firſt year is counted with Jehoiakims fourth, in which the ſeventy years Captivity began, for then he had captived Jeruſalem, and according to theſe two reckonings the Scripture reckons; ſometime by the firſt, as Nebuchad-nezzars firſt year properly: ſome-time by the ſecond, as being his firſt year over Iſrael, and of the ſeventy of Captivity, after which matter the Scripture looketh with ſpecial notice.

Now Jehoiakims Captivity was in Nebuchad-nezzars eighth according to the firſt date, but it is ſaid to be in his ſeventh according to the ſecond, and the rather becauſe Jechoniah was captived the ſame year, and ſo the one is diſtinguiſhed from the other. And ſo Zedeliahs captivity was in Nebuchad-nezzars nineteenth, according to the firſt date and propriety, but ſaid here to be in the eighteenth, according to the ſecond; and the rather to include in the number of the captived, and ſlain, thoſe whom Nebuchad-nezzar caught of the Jews when he marched away from the ſiege of Jeruſalem the year before, when the King of Egypt raiſed it; for then it is not imaginable but he caught ſome, and how he would deal with them they being in open rebellion we may well ſuppoſe.

JEREMY XL. from verſ. 7. to the end. And XLI. all.

2 KING. XXV. verſ. 22, 23, 24, 25.

THE diſperſed Captains and Companies that had fled for their ſafety up and down for fear of the Chaldean Army, do ralley and come together to Gedaliah the Governour for protection. Jeremy amongſt theſe reckoneth Jonathan, and the Sons of Ephai the Netophathite, which the Book of Kings omitteth; either for that theſe were ſlain with Gedaliah by Iſmael, as Jer. 41. 3. and never came to Egypt; whither the Book of Kings and Jeremy bringeth thoſe rallied Captives and People after Gedaliahs death: Or that Jonathan came as an inferiour to Johanan his brother, and that theſe ſons of Ephai the Netophathite came under the colours of Seraiah the Netophathite, and ſo the Book of Kings reckons only the Colonels or chief Commanders.

In the ſeventh Month, Iſmael, ſome younger brother of the Royal blood, and ten Nobles of the Court, envying Gedaliahs promotion, do traiterouſly murder him. This was a very ſolemn month in it ſelf; for the Feaſt of Trumpets expiation and Tabernacles that ſhould have been in it; and in this month of old had Salomon kept the dedication of the Temple, and ſent the people home with joyful hearts afterwards, but how is the matter altered now?

Iſmael alſo killeth ſeventy Samaritan Proſelites, ſuch as were coming to the Feaſt of Tabernacles, and caſteth them into a trench that Aſa had made to be a ſtop betwixt the Samaritans and himſelf; then made to keep off Samaritans, enemies to their Religion, now filled with Samaritans, friends to it. The little dealing that the Jews had with the Samaritans, and the flying about of the Chaldean Troopers, had made ſuch interception of intelligence, that theſe poor men knew not of the firing of the Temple, though it were in the fifth month, till they be upon the way towards it, and then underſtanding of it, they rent their clothes, &c.

World Captivity

JEREMY XLII. & XLIII. And 2 KING. XXV. verſ. 26.

THE Captains and people upon the death of Gedaliah go into Egypt, though they had promiſed to be ruled by the voice of the Lord; and though the Lord had flatly forbidden them to go thither, and ſo had done of old, that they ſhould never return to Egypt. Poor Jeremy is carried along with them; and when he comes there, he propheſieth both againſt Egypt and them.

3421 20 The Jews are now ſetled in Egypt, and in time they fall to a common and open Idolatry, for which Jeremy reproveth them, and threatneth them very ſore. In verſ. 9. he ſeemeth to give a cloſe touch upon the Idolatry of Salomons wives, the firſt original of Idolatry to the Kings of Judah. ואת רעות נשיו. The wickedneſſes of the Kings of Judah, and the wickedneſſes of his wives; which indeed may be well conſtrued of every one of their wives: But the quaintneſs of the phraſe ſeemeth to hint ſome ſuch a particular thing; and it may the rather be ſo underſtood, becauſe he is here taxing the preſent Idolatry of the Jews wives in Egypt, and ripping up the ſore to the very head, which indeed was firſt thoſe wives of Solomon.

Obſerve in verſ. 25. how the Hebrew Syntax ſeemeth to twit theſe mens baſe uxorioufneſs, ותרבדנה & תקימנה & ונשוכם אתם תעשונה uſing the Verb in the feminine Gender, though he ſpeak to the men.

Now in the 45 Chap. of this Book of Jeremy, verſ. 1. It is ſaid, that Baruch had written theſe words in a Book at the mouth of Jeremy, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, what theſe very laſt words mentioned before. But this is very unlikely, for theſe laſt ſpeeches appear to be uttered upon emergency; the meaning of it therefore is, that Jeremy in the fourth of Jehoiakim had uttered Propheſies to this purpoſe, that Jeruſalem ſhould be deſtroyed, and the Land left deſolate, and the people captived, and miſchief and miſery following them: which is cleered to be accompliſhed in the ſtory of theſe Chapters, and therefore this 45 Chapter is laid here though the ſtory of it was nineteen or twenty years ago, to ſhew, and to record the truth of thoſe things which that wretched King Jehoiakim would not believe, but burnt the Book in the fire: And theſe are the ſubject of the other Copy that Baruch wrote when the firſt was burnt.

EZEKIEL XXXIII.

THIS twentieth year of Nebuchad-nezzar, and of the firſt Captivity, was the twelfth year of Ezekiels Captivity with Jeconiah: And on the tenth month of this year, and on the fifth day of that month Ezekiel hath intelligence that Jeruſalem was fired, verſ. 21. Temple and all: It is almoſt a year and an half ſince the thing was done, and yet intelligence comes but now: The evening before theſe tidings came to him, his mouth is opened again to Propheſie to his own people, which he had not done ſince the day that Nebuchad-nezzar firſt laid ſiege to Jeruſalem three years ago, whereof one year and a half was taken up in that ſiege, and one year and ſomewhat above an half, ſince the City was taken. Compare Chap. 24. verſ. 1. & 26, 27. In this ſpace of time though Ezekiel were dumb to Iſrael; yet was he not to other Nations, for he Propheſieth many ſad things againſt other Countries, as is apparent by the Chapters taken up before.

EZEKIEL XXXII.

IN the ſame year, viz. the twelfth of Ezekiels and Jechonias Captivity, he hath a Propheſie againſt Egypt in the laſt month of the year, on the firſt day of the month, and another on the fifteenth day of the ſame month, verſ. 27. Now the diſlocation of this Chapter is eaſily ſeen, for the three and thirtieth Chapter that followeth it, is dated in the tenth month of this twelfth year, and this, in the twelfth month: But the reaſon of this tranſpoſition is almoſt as eaſily ſeen; namely, becauſe there are divers Propheſies againſt Egypt, and other Countries before, and this is alſo brought thither to them that it may lye with them.

EZEKIEL XXXIV, XXXV, XXXVI, XXXVII, XXXVIII, XXXIX.

21 22 ALL theſe Chapters of Ezekiel fall not under any expreſſed or determinate date; the fortieth Chapter does under the date of the five and twentieth year of Jechoniahs captivity; therefore we are to conceive at large of the time of theſe Chapters, that they were delivered between the twelfth year of that Captivity, by which the three and thirtieth Chapter is dated, and the five and twentieth, by which the fortieth.

JEREMY LII. verſ. 30.

3424 23 IN the three and twentieth year of Nebuchad-nezzar, or the three and twentieth of the firſt Captivity, for theſe run parallel, Nebuzaradan Captain of the Guard carried away captive of the Jews ſeven hundred and forty five perſons; it may be this was in revenge of the baſe uſage of Gedaliah, and the Chaldeans that were with him: And here is the laſt blow of the Jews given by the Babylonian, and now is Judea and Jeruſalem in full and compleat Captivity.

PSAL. CXXXVII.

AND here it may not be impertinent to take in the 137 Pſalm, which deſcribeth the poſture and ſorrow, and ſcorn of theſe captived ones, as they ſate in Babel.

1 CHRON. II, III, IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, IX.

24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31 32 NOR may it be unproper in this place to read and view again theſe Chapters of the firſt of Chronicles: It is true indeed, that they and their Texts broken in pieces might be laid to be read in other places, as was ſaid before, as thoſe Genealogies and Stories that are recited elſe-where in Scripture, to be laid with thoſe places where they are mentioned; and thoſe that are not mentioned again in Scripture to be laid with the Stories of ſuch times as the beſt evidence or probability will tell when they came to paſs, or were in being: Thoſe Texts that tell of Plantations of Cities or Countries, to be laid in that place in the Book of Joſhua that relateth the dividing of the Land, as was done there: Thoſe that draw long Pedegrees to conclude in ſome famous man, as the Pedegree of Korah to Samuel, Chap. 6. theſe to be brought in at the Story of that famous man. Thus might theſe Genealogies and Chapters be taken up: But ſince, Chap. 9. 1. telleth that theſe Genealogies were written in the Book of the Kings of Iſrael and Judah that were captived; and ſince divers places in theſe Chapters ſpeak of the Captivity, and of theſe latter times; and ſince the reading of theſe Chapters after the Story of Jeruſalems Captivity, is as it were a ſhort review of the planting, and ſetling, and growing of that Nation in that Country, out of which the Story of the Captivity hath told the Reader they were now removed; it may be very methodical and proper upon theſe conſiderations, and very profitable to take in theſe Chapters, and to read them here again.

EZEK. XL, XLI, XLII, XLIII, XLIV, XLV, XLVI, XLVII, XLVIII.

3434 33 34 THIS thirty third year of the firſt Captivity, and of Nebuchad-nezzar, was the five and twentieth of the Captivity of Jechoniah and Ezekiel. And now the Lord ſheweth the Prophet a new Temple, bigger then all the old Jeruſalem, and a new Jeruſalem bigger then all the Land of Canaan; by theſe very dimenſions ſhewing that theſe things cannot literally, but muſt ſpiritually be underſtood.

EZEKIEL XXIX. from verſ. 17. to the end. And XXX. to verſ. 20.

3436 | 35 THIS ſeven and twentieth year of his Captivity Ezekiel hath another Propheſie againſt Egypt, and this is the laſt we have of this Prophet; and it is laid here, though it ſhould have been laſt in the Book, that all the Propheſies againſt Egypt might come together. Nebuchad-nezzar had lately taken Tyrus, and it had coſt him very dear; and this year he taketh Egypt, as the pay of his Souldiers for that ſervice: And now is Babylon intire Monarch of all the World, and Nebuchad-nezzar become the golden head; Egypt the only Kingdom that oppoſed him being ſubdued.

DANIEL II, III, IV.

3437 | 36 NEBUCHAD-NEZZAR now come to his height, hath a dream of the four Monarchies, of the tree cut down, &c. grows proud, and will be worſhipped for a God. The three Princes of Judah live in the fire; they were now at the leaſt 40 years old, and therefore improperly, but commonly called the three children.

This year is called the ſecond year of the Kingdom of Nebuchad-nezzar, Dan. 2. 1. not of his firſt being King, but of his intire Monarchy, when Egypt, the only potent Prince and Nation that ſtood againſt him, was now ſubdued. So the firſt year of Cyrus is to be underſtood, Ezr. 1. 1. not the firſt year of his being King, but the firſt year of his univerſal Monarchy, as the very next verſe explaineth it, The Lord God hath given me all the Kingdoms of the Earth.

Some part of this year is Nebuchad-nezzar mad.

37 Nebuchad-nezzar mad.
38 Nebuchad-nezzar mad.
39 Nebuchad-nezzar mad.
40 Nebuchad-nezzar mad.

43 Nebuchad-nezzar reſtored to his wits and Kingdom again.

2 KINGS XXV. verſ. 27, 28, 29, 30.

JEREMY LII. verſ. 31, 32, 33, 34.

3446 NEbuchad-nezzar dieth, and Evil-merodach reigneth. This is the thirty 46 ſeventh year of the Captivity of Jechoniah. On the five and twenti-47 eth day of the twelfth moneth Evil-merodach bringeth him out of 48 priſon, and on the ſeven and twentieth day he promoteth him above all the 49 Kings of Babel, and feedeth him all his life; it may be Nebuchad-nezzars ſeven
50 years madneſs and miſery had wrought ſome humility and gentleneſs upon 51 this his Son. Jechoniah was now fifty five years old, and had indured ſeven
52 and thirty years impriſonment, and now the Lord releaſeth him, and he na-
53 meth Salathiel as his next heir to Davids Throne and Principality, for Jecho-
54 niah had no heir of his own: The time of the three Babylonian Kings, that 55 took up the whole ſpace of that Monarchy, are eaſily to be collected by the 56 Scripture; namely, Nebuchad-nezzar to have reigned five and forty years cur-57 rent, Evil-merodach three and twenty current, and Belſhazzar three. The 58 firſt is plain by this, that the ſeven and thirtieth of Jechoniah is called Evil-
59 merodachs firſt. The laſt will be made plain by and by, and the apparency of 60 the ſecond will reſult from both theſe. Evil-merodach by the Septuagint in 61 Jer. 52. is called Ulamadachar; but he is called far nearer to his own name by 62 them in 2 King. 25. Joſephus calleth him Abilamaridochus Antiq. lib. 10. cap. 12.
63 There is a general ſilence in Scripture of any thing done in his time, beſides
64 his inlarging of Jechoniah; whereas there are very wondrous and remarkable 65 matters mentioned and recorded to have been done in Babylon in the time of 66 Nebuchad-nezzar his father and of Belſhazzar his Son.

3468 | 67 Belſhazzar reigneth three years.

World	Captivity	Belſhazzar

DANIEL VII.

IN this firſt of Belſhazzar Daniel ſeeth the Viſion of the four Kingdoms that troubled the World, but eſpecially the Church, from the firſt riſing of Nebuchad-nezzar, till the coming of the everlaſting Kingdom of Chriſt in the Goſpel, viz. Babylonian, Mede-Perſian, Grecian, and Syrogrecian; All the time of the Kingdoms before the Babylonian is not medled withal, becauſe handled before along in the Bible, and all the times of the Roman State, after the coming of Chriſt is not medled withal neither, but left to be treated of by a beloved Diſciple, as theſe are by a beloved Prophet, viz. in the Revelation.

The diſlocation of this Chapter will eaſily be ſpied by any eye that looketh but upon the two Chapters next before it; for the fifth ſpeaks of Belſhazzars end of reign, and this of his beginning; and the ſixth ſpeaks of matters done in Darius his time, which was after Belſhazzars death, and this of matters done in the firſt of Belſhazzers reign; but the reaſon of this diſlocation is almoſt as conſpicuous as the diſlocation it ſelf; and that is, becauſe the Hiſtorical things of this Book are ſet by themſelves firſt, and the viſionary or prophetical things afterward.

68 | 2 In this ſecond of Belſhazzar there is no particular occurrence mentioned.

DANIEL V.

3470 | 69 | 3 BABYLONS Sins are now come to the full, Belſhazzar toppeth them up, by abuſe of the Veſſels of the Houſe of God at a drunken and Idolatrous Feaſt, to the deſpite and ſcorn of him that owed them, and to the grief of thoſe that had concernment in them.

Hereupon that Divine hand that had written the two Tables for a Law to his people, writeth the doom of Babel and Belſhazzar upon the wall, viz. the ruine of theſe his enemies: This turneth the night of the Kings pleaſure into fear unto him, as Eſay had Propheſied of him long ago, Eſay 21. 4. and Jeremy, Jer. 50. 43. The Wiſe Men of Babylon are become fools, and cannot read this writing though it were in their own Language; Daniel readeth and interpreteth it, and that both in an Hebrew and a Chaldee conſtruction, for the words were both Languages, Mene, Mene, He hath numbred and finiſhed; Tekel, in Chald. He hath weighed. In Heb. Thou art too light; Parſin, in Heb. The Perſians; Pareſin, in Chald. Dividing: and Daniel interprets it according to the extent of the words in both Tongues, for both Hebrews and Chaldeans were concerned though differently in the iſſue of the matter.

Preſently the enemy that lay about the Town began to ſtorm, and the Centinels and Watch-men in the Watch Towres give the Alarme; Ariſe ye Princes, and anoint the Shield, ſee Eſay 21. 5. And one Poſt runs to meet another, to ſhew the King of Babylon that his City is taken at one end, Jer. 51. 31. and that night is Belſhazzar ſlain. And Darius the Median took the Kingdom, being ſixty two years old; and ſo it appears he was born in the year of Jehoiakims and Jehoiachins captivity; and thus did the Lord provide, that in that very year when the Babylonian was moſt buſie to captive and deſtroy, the captiver and deſtroyer of Babylon ſhould be born. The Reader will here obſerve in the Chronicle in the Margin, that the third of Belſhazzar proves but the ſixty ninth year of the Captivity, and not the ſeventy. But if he do but withal obſerve, that part of Jehoiakims third was properly the beginning of thoſe ſeventy years, he will alſo ſee that part of Belſhazzars third was in the like reckoning ſome of the ſeventieth year, and the reſt of that year was taken up in Cyrus and Darius ſetling the Monarchy before the Decree for building Jeruſalem come forth.

Cyrus the Perſian was joyned with Darius the Median in the expedition againſt Babel, and ſo in the rule of the Monarchy when they had obtained it; and therefore the Prophet Eſay deſcribeth the enemies of Babel, by a Chariot with a couple of Horſe-men, a Chariot of Aſſes, and a Chariot of Camels, Eſay 21. 7. 9. and Daniel interprets the hand-writing on the wall, that the Babylonian Monarchy ſhould be divided betwixt the Median and the Perſian: But Darius only carrieth the name here, becauſe he was far the older man, and becauſe indeed he was Cyrus his Grand-father: If we may conjecture any thing from the Heathen Writers. They ſpeak of Aſtyages the Median King, who had one only Daughter called Mandane, and ſhe the Mother of Cyrus by Cambyſes the King of Perſia, vid. Xenoph. Herod. Juſtin. Now this being the general conſent of all the Writers of the beſt repute among the Heathen, that there was no King of Media at that time but only Aſtyages, Cyrus his Grand-father; we may very well conclude that this Darius and their Aſtyages were all one, and that Darius becauſe of his Grand-fatherſhip did bear the name of the Royalty, though Cyrus in this conqueſt had equal ſhare with him, and was for other victories a Conqueror beyond him. Not to inſiſt upon thoſe mixtures of fabulouſneſs that the Heathens have invented for the inhancing of the credit of Cyrus, as they were uſed to do about men that were the firſt raiſers of a Kingdom; as that his Grand-father Aſtyages delivered him to Harpagus a Noble Man, as ſoon as he was born to be made away: that Harpagus afraid of ſuch a Fact, delivered him to the Kings chief Shepherd for ſuch a purpoſe; that he laid and left the infant in a wood: that it was there nouriſht by a Bitch: that the Shepherds wife took it home and nurſt it, and expoſed an infant of her own inſtead of it, &c. To omit theſe things which were invented only for the honour of the beginning of the Perſian Empire; we may ſafely take up that relation which is unanimouſly given by all their Hiſtorians, and in which there can be no flattery at all ſuſpected, and that is of the Pedigree and deſcent of Cyrus, and the names and qualities of his Parents, and ſo they give him for the ſon of Cambyſes the King of Perſia, and of Mandane the Daughter and only child of Aſtyages King of Media, and ſo was he heir to both the Kingdoms.

Now upon the conqueſt of Babylon, Darius, or Aſtyages plat-forms the Government of that Monarchy under one hundred and twenty Governours, in the one hundred and twenty Provinces that belonged to it: And above theſe he ſet a Triumvirate, or three Princes to be ſuperviſors to them, and to take their accounts both of Tribute and Affairs. Daniels knownneſs in Babylon, which was newly taken for his divine and wonderful wiſdom and ſpirit, bringeth him to be one of theſe three: and that promotion and his ſingular carriage in it bringeth him into envy, and that into the Lions Den, &c. This occurrence may be conceived to have been preſently after the conqueſt of Babel, even in the compaſs of that year upon theſe grounds.

1. Becauſe Darius it is like would form the Government of his Monarchy as ſoon as he had it, and Daniel would not be long unenvied when promoted.

2. It is very probable that Darius reigned but a little beyond this year.

3. The writing of this Chapter in the Chaldee Tongue, may be ſome argument that this occurrence befel Daniel while he was in Chaldea.

DANIEL VIII.

THE firſt and ſecond Verſes of this Chapter plainly ſhew, that Belſhazzar reigned but three years, for it telleth that in the third year of Belſhazzar, Daniel was in Shuſhan, the royal City of Perſia: It cannot be imagined that he was there in Belſhazzars life time, for his preferment and reſidence was in Babylon till Babylon fell; but his coming thither was by the tranſporting of him thither by the Perſian Monarch after he had conquered Babylon, who as it appeareth by verſ. 27. had preferred him there, and intereſſed him in the Kings imployment.

This is called the third year of Belſhazzar, purpoſely that we might learn to give the firſt year of Cyrus its proper date. Belſhazzar was dead and gone, and Darius had faſhioned the Babylonian Monarchy into another Government: Daniel had been caſt into the Lions Den in Babylon, and was now removed to the Court of Perſia: Cyrus and Darius had ruled all for a certain space, and yet is this Chapter and the occurrences in it dated by this, that it was the third year of Belshazzar; partly that we might learn to reckon the first of Cyrus and Darius, not the very year that Babylon fell, but the year after; and partly, that we might observe how in the very year that the Medes and Persians destroy Babel, the Lord revealeth to Daniel the destruction of the Medes and Persians, and the two Monarchies after them.

All the Chapters in Daniel, from Chap. 2. vers. 4. to the beginning of this Chapter are written in the Chaldee Tongue, and from the beginning of this Chapter to the end of the Book he writeth in Hebrew; for the affairs that fell under the Chaldean Monarchy he hath registred in the Chaldean Tongue; but now that Kingdom is destroyed, he will have no more to do with that Language, but thence forward he applies himself to write his own native Tongue the Hebrew, seeing that God would not have the Persicke, under which Language he now was, to be the original of any part of Scripture.

DANIEL IX.

DANIEL knowing from Jeremies Propheſie, that the ſeventy years of Captivity were now fully expired, addreſſeth himſelf to God by prayer for their return: He receiveth not only a gracious anſwer to his deſire, but a Prediction of what times ſhould paſs over his people till the death of Chriſt; namely, ſeventy weeks, or ſeventy times ſeven years, or four hundred and ninety. This ſpace of time the Angel divideth into three unequal parts.

1. Seven ſevens, or forty nine years, to the finiſhing of Jeruſalems Walls.

2. Sixty two ſevens, or four hundred thirty four years, from that time till the laſt ſeven.

3. The laſt ſeven in the latter half of which Chriſt Preacheth, viz. three years and an half, and then dieth, &c.

The twenty ſeventh Verſe therefore is to be read thus: He ſhall confirm the Covenant with many in the one week, and in half that week he ſhall cauſe Sacrifice and Oblation to ceaſe, &c. So that from this year to the death of Chriſt are four hundred ninety years; and there is no cauſe, becauſe of doubtful Records among the Heathen, to make a doubt of the fixedneſs of this time, which an Angel of the Lord hath pointed out with ſo much exactneſs.

EZRA. CHAP. I.

And 2 CHRON. XXXVI. verſ. 22. 23.

CYRUS publiſhed a Decree for the Jews returning to their own Land again; This Decree was ſigned at the very inſtant of Daniels prayer, Dan. 9. 23.

Darius was yet alive and reigning, as appears by comparing Dan. 9. 1. but the Decree and Proclamation is the Act of Cyrus, not only in regard of a Propheſie that went before concerning him, Eſay 44. 28. but alſo becauſe he was the greater Conqueror, and the greater Prince. For 1. He was not only ſharer with Darius in the Conqueſt of Babylon, but was alſo ſharer with him in the Kingdom of Media, as being ſole heir to it; but Darius had no claim with him in the Kingdom of Perſia. 2. Beroſus, not that of Annius, but cited by Joſephus, Lib. 1. cont. Apion ſaith, that Cyrus had conquered even all Aſia, before he came to beſiege Babel; κρατησαμενος τῶν λοιπην Ασίαν ἤρμοσεν ὅπη τῆς Βαβυλωνίας. Cyrus delivered out to Zerubabel, who by the Chaldeans was called Shesbazzar, all the Veſſels of the Temple that Nebuchad-nezzar had captived. In the ſumming of them there is ſome obſcurity, for there is a particular given only of two thouſand four hundred ninety nine, and yet the Text ſummeth up five thouſand four hundred, for it particulareth only thoſe that were of a greater ſize, but ſummeth up both the great and little; for 2 Chron. 36. 18. it is ſaid, that the King of Babel brought all the Veſſels of the Houſe of God, both great and ſmall to Babel, vid. Joſeph. Antiq. 11. 1.

EZRA II.

THIS Chapter reckoneth the number of the Jews that returned out of Captivity, it firſt nameth the chief Conductors and Princes among the people, and then the ſeveral Families and number of Perſons; the ſeventh Chapter of Nehemiah hath this Catalogue over again, but with abundance of difference, ſome reaſon whereof ſhall be given there.

The Commanders and Rulers in chief were twelve:

1. Zerubabel the Prince of Judah.
2. Jeſus the ſon of Jozedek the High Prieſt.
3. Nehemiah, the builder and repairer of Jeruſalem afterward.
4. Seraiah, or Azariah as he is called, Neh. 7. 7. probably Ezra, who is called Seraiah after the name of his father.
5. Realiah, called Raamiah, Neh. 7. the difference of the name agreeing in the ſence, for Realiah ſignifieth, The Lords terrour, and Raamiah the Lords thunder.
6. Mordecay, the Uncle of Eſther, and over-thrower of Haman.
7. Nachamani, he is mentioned in the Book of Nehemiah, but omitted here: For he came not up now, but at ſome other time before Nehemiah taketh his Catalogue.
8. Bilſhan.
9. Miſpar, or Miſpeſeth.
10. Bigudi.
11. Rehum, or Nehum.
12. Baanah.

The number of the people was 42360 their ſervants and maids proſelyted, 7337.

EZRA III.

IN the ſeventh month the returned Jews meet at Jeruſalem, build up the Altar, keep the Feaſt of Tabernacles, offer Sacrifices, but yet have no Temple.

3472 | 2 In the ſecond year of Cyrus, and of the peoples return, in the ſecond month of the year or Ijar, the foundation of the Temple is laid: Divers are preſent at it that had ſeen the former Temple, for it was but fifty three years ſince it was deſtroyed; and they mourn as faſt to ſee how ſhort that building was like to come of that Temple they had ſeen, as the others rejoyce to ſee a Temple toward that had ſeen none before.

EZRA IV.

3473 | 3 ARTAXERXES reigneth in the third year of Cyrus, and here let us take up the conſideration of the Perſian Kings and theſe times a little, ſince there is not a little obſcurity and difficulty about the reckoning and computing of them.

1. At the conqueſt of Babylon Cyrus and Darius were Partners, as was obſerved before; Darius only named in the Scripture at that expedition becauſe the elder, and Cyrus only named in Heathen Authors becauſe the founder of the Perſian Monarchy. Theſe two reigned together two years, ſaith Metaſthenes, if we may believe that Author; but whether they did ſo or no, it is paſt all doubt that their years, were they two, or more, or leſs, were reckoned together; for the firſt year of Darius, when the Decree of the building Jeruſalem came out, Dan. 9. 1. 23. was the firſt of Cyrus alſo, Ezra 1. 1.

2. Cyrus is generally held by Heathen Writers to have reigned about thirty years

Herodot. Triginta annis. Juſt. &c. Now the queſtion as to the matter we have now in hand, is not how long Cyrus reigned in all, but how long he reigned after the Perſian Monarchy began in him, or after that year that the Scripture calls his firſt year, namely, when the Lord had given him all the Kingdoms of the Earth, and when he reſtored the Jews to their own home again. Here prophane Writers the moſt of them ſay nothing towards a reſolution, and thoſe that go about it ſpeak, ſome one thing, ſome another.

The Scripture hath given us this ſatisfaction in this matter, that either Cyrus reigned but three years after, or if he lived longer, yet that his ingagement in his wars abroad cauſed him to leave his ſon Artaxerxes Vice-roy at home, to rule what he had got, whileſt he was buſie to conquer more. Either of theſe two ſuppoſed doth ſerve our purpoſe, to lead on the times that we have in hand.

Now for the concluding of the one of theſe the Scripture giveth us this argument: It is ſaid in Ezra 4. verſ. 5. that the enemies of the Jews hired counſellors againſt them all the days of Cyrus, even until the reign of Darius King of Perſia, to fruſtrate their purpoſe of building the Temple, and at laſt compaſſed their deſire and deſign by information to Artaxerxes: Cyrus all his days did not plainly or openly revoke, nor croſs his own Decree, and if he connived at the croſſing of it by his Son, his fatal end by Tomyris was but of juſt reward; but in the beginning of the reign of his ſon Artaxerxes the enemy had his deſire, and the building ceaſed. Now this was in the third year of Cyrus, Cyrus being either now dead [as Daniels viſion in Perſia, is ſaid to be in the third year of Belſhazzar, Dan. 8. Belſhazzar being dead a while before, as was obſerved there] as Artaxerxes governing as Vice-Roy, and the time now reckoned by him, as it is in other places of Scripture the like. For in the third year of Cyrus, Daniel mourned three weeks together, nor did he eat any pleaſant bread, nor fleſh or wine came into his mouth, nor did he annoint himſelf at all, Dan. 10. 2, 3. And what was the reaſon? Becauſe of the hindrance of the building of the Temple, for according to Daniels faſting and mourning one and twenty days the Angel ſaith, That the Prince of the Kingdom of Perſia had withſtood him one and twenty; not that an earthly King hath any power over an Angel, but that this new King of Perſia by hindring the Temple had hindred thoſe good tidings which otherwiſe he ſhould have brought; and that the miſery of Daniels people was the cauſe of his affliction, is apparent by verſ. 15. becauſe that when the Angel had told him, that the viſion concerning his people was for many days, he is dumb for ſorrow, and his ſpirit faints within him: ſo that the ſtoppage of the Temples building by Artaxerxes was in Cyrus his third year, in ſome part of that year, and continued ſo till the ſecond year of Darius.

3. Now how long this ſpace was is more obſcure then the matter before, and that upon theſe two difficulties. 1. Becauſe we cannot readily determine what number of Kings came between: And 2. When we have done that, then are we utterly to ſeek how long a time thoſe Kings reigned: But for anſwer to theſe two doubts, to adhere to Scripture, and not to intricate our ſelves with the various and perplexed relations of the Heathen Writers about the Perſian Kings, we ſhall obſerve two or three particulars as we go along, and as we have occaſion to take them up, and for the preſent this: That as he that ſet the building of the Temple afoot again after its long ſtop, is called both Darius and Artaxerxes, verſ. 14, 15. ſo that he that cauſed that ſtop is called both Ahaſhuerus, and Artaxerxes, Ezra 4. verſ. 6, 7. for Artaxerxes was a common name of the Kings of Perſia, as Pharaoh was of the Kings of Egypt.

DANIEL X, XI, XII.

DANIEL mourning for the hindrance of the Temple, ſeeth Chriſt as John did in Patmos: And hath a Revelation of the condition of his own people, under their powerful Enemies, till the madneſs of Antiochus Epiphanes was over: He ſhould violate the Sanctuary, and cauſe Religion and Moſes Law to lie in the dirt for a time, two Times, and half a time, or three years and an half, or one thouſand two hundred and ninety days; But he that waiteth and liveth to ſee five and forty days more, or till thoſe one thouſand two hundred and ninety days be made up one thouſand three hundred and thirty five days, he ſhould ſee an end of Antiochus.

Artaxerxes Ahaſhuerus.

3474 | 1 | The building of the Temple lieth forgot and forlorn by the command of Artaxerxes Ahaſhueroſh the preſent King of Perſia: Hereupon divers of the Jews that had gone up to Jeruſalem in the firſt of Cyrus, return back again in this Kings reign, to their old reſidence in Babylonia or in Perſia again.

2 | The building of the Temple lieth ſtill quite forlorn.

3476 | 3 ARTAXERXES, who was alſo called Ahaſhueroſh, after his great Grandfather of the Median blood, Dan. 9. 1. is a greater Potentate and Prince by ſeven Provinces then Cyrus and Darius were; compare verſ. 1. with Dan. 6. 1. To ſhew and to ſee his own glory and pomp, he maketh a Feaſt half a year together to his Nobles, and ſeven days more to all Suſan, and when all this glory of his great command hath been ſhewed, he cannot command his own wife, &c.

4 THREE whole years and above is Ahaſhuerus without a Queen:

11 Mordecai diſdaineth to homage or to ſhew reverence to an Amalekite; for ſo Haman was, of the Seed of Agag, whom Samuel hewed to pieces in Gilgal.

3485 | 12 Haman would buy all the Jews in the Perſian Monarchy for ten thouſand Talents of ſilver, but they are given him for nothing: He goes not about the deſtruction of them, but firſt uſeth direction by Magical Lots: what day fitteſt to ſpeed of his requeſt, and the Devil allots him the thirteenth of the firſt month, and what month fitteſt for the execution, and the Devils Lot telleth him the month Adar.

On the thirteenth day of the firſt month, Letters are diſpatched through all the Provinces of the Monarchy, for the deſtruction of the Jews at ſuch a time.

ESTHER IV, V.

ALL the Provinces perplexed at the tidings, the Jews in Shuſhan keep a Faſt of three days and three nights long: this time is meaſured exactly, as the three days and three nights of our Saviours death; for on the third day Eſther puts on the Kingdom מלכות, and obtains the Kings favour.

ESTHER VI, VII.

HAMAN prepares a Gallows for himſelf, and beſpeaks Honours for Mordecai; his Wife and friends knew the curſe upon Amaleck becauſe of the Jews, and read his fall.

ON the twenty third day of the month Sivan, Mordecai and Eſther obtain Letters to revoke Hamans bloody purpoſe; and that the Jews ſhould ſtand in their own defence againſt their enemies, which they do at the time appointed for their deſtruction, and ſlay 75810 men. The feaſt of Purim inſtituted.

ESTHER X.

13 AFTER this great and wonderful deliverance, and proſperity of the 14 Jews, Artaxerxes, or Ahaſhueroſh, layeth a Tax upon the whole Empire, but in what year of his reign is uncertain, and how long he reigned after this, is not eaſily determinable: For the Scripture is utterly ſilent to expreſs the number of the years of his reign, or any of the Kings of of Perſia that come after him, in clear expreſſions. Of this King it ſaith no more at all, of the next it mentioneth his ſecond year, Ezra 4. 24. his fourth year, Zech. 7. 1. his ſixth year, Ezra 6. 15. his ſeventh, Ezra 27.8. his twentieth, Neh. 1. 1. his thirty ſecond, Neh. 13.6. but how long he reigned further there is no account at all neither.

By collection from other places and paſſages it may be concluded, and upon very good ground, that this King Artaxerxes Ahaſhueroſh reigned but fourteen years in all, the ground is this: Becauſe Zechariah in the ſecond year of Darius, doth then but reckon the time of ſome captivity ſeventy years. The Angel of the Lord anſwered, and ſaid, O Lord of Hoſts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jeruſalem, and on the Cities of Judah, againſt which thou haſt had indignation theſe ſeventy years, Zech. 1. 12. And in Chap. 4. there are ſome people ſent from Babel to Jeruſalem, and they have this quære among the reſt of the buſineſs they came about to ſpeak to the Prieſts, which were in the houſe of the Lord of Hoſts, and to ask, Should I weep in the fifth month, as I have done theſe ſeventy years. Compare ver. 3. & 5. Now from the beginning of the ſeventy years, or the fourth of Jehoiakim, to the ſecond of Darius, were many years above ſeventy; namely, the three years of Cyrus, all the years of Ahaſhueroſh, which were twelve, mentioned in Scripture before his taxing the Empire, and two of Darius himſelf: eighty ſeven in all by this account, from the time that the ſeventy years captivity beginneth to be counted: therefore theſe ſeventy years mentioned in Zechary muſt be counted from ſome other date, or elſe there will be exceeding much hardneſs and impropriety in the ſpeech. Now this date is, from the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and firing of the Temple in the nineteenth year of Nebuchad-nezzar, to Darius his ſecond, namely, fifty one years of the ſeventy of Babell, three of Cyrus, fourteen as we ſuppoſe of Ahaſhueroſh, and two of Darius.

For let the Reader but impartially and unbiaſſed expound thoſe two places in Zechary alledged, and how can he poſſibly interpret the ſeventy years there mentioned, of the ſeventy years mentioned Jeremy 25. 11, 12. & 29. 10. which were expired ſeventeen years ago, by plain account of Scripture. Eſpecially let him but weigh well the ſcope and purpoſe of the ſeventh Chapter of Zechary, and it will make the date and account that we give of thoſe ſeventy years to be proper and approveable. In the ſecond year of Darius the Temple, after a long hinderance of the building of it, is begun upon to be built again, and it goes happily forward; thereupon the Church at Babell ſends to Jeruſalem to inquire of the Prieſts. Now that the Temple is built again ſhall I faſt, and keep ſolemn days of humiliation, miliation, as I have done theſe ſeventy years ſince the Temple was deſtroyed. If they had faſted but the ſeventy years of the captivity, then had they laid down their faſts at the leaſt ſeventeen years, to the ſecond of Darius, nineteen to the fourth, as Zech. 7. 1. And if they had laid them down ſo long, while the work and building of the Temple lay forlorn, why ſhould they think of taking them up again, now it went well with that work and building? And if they had continued them all the time of the captivity, and all the time ſince, why is it called but ſeventy years, whereas it was at the leaſt eighty ſeven? Therefore to me it is paſt all peradventure, that the ſeventy years there ſpoken of are counted from the firing of the Temple to the re-building of it, in the ſecond of Darius, and that this very account doth neceſſarily allot fourteen years reign to Artaxerxes Ahaſhueroſh, that hindered it, to make up this ſum: As we obſerved the like neceſſary allowing of ſeventeen years to Joſhua, upon the reſult of a groſs ſum, where all the reſt of the ſum is cleared by particulars but only thoſe ſeventeen: And with this computation that we have given, how pregnantly and properly doth agree that reckoning of the Angel Gabriel, of ſeven times ſeven years, or forty nine years from Cyrus his decree of building Jeruſalem, to the finiſhing of it; as we ſhall obſerve at the thirty ſecond year of Darius? But the Reader will there ſee it readily enough of himſelf, without any notice.

3491 4 IN the fourth year of Darius, in the ninth month which is Chiſleu, on the fourth day of the month, וישלח בית־אל, The Congregation in Babel ſent to Jeruſalem to inquire concerning their Faſts, whether they ſhould continue them, now the Temple was begun, and was ſo forward in building, or lay them down.

They uſed theſe ſeveral Faſts:

Firſt, In the fourth month, becauſe then the City broken up, Jerem. 52. 6.

Secondly, In the fifth month, becauſe in that month the Temple was fired, 2 King. 25. 8.

Thirdly, In the ſeventh month, becauſe in that Gedaliah was ſlain, and all the Jews with him ſcattered, Jer. 41. 1.

So that by the intent and occaſion of all thoſe ſolemn Faſts, which referred all of them to the laſt and final ſtroke and ruine of Jeruſalem by the Babilonian, and nothing at all to the firſt Captivity of Jehoiakim, or Jechoniah, it is apparent that the ſeventy years mentioned to have been the length of theſe ſolemn days and duties are to be underſtood and reckoned from the very ſame time and occaſion, as was obſerved before.

On the fourteenth day the Paſsover is ſolemnly kept at Jeruſalem.

Ezra cometh to Jeruſalem on the firſt day of the fifth month, or the month Ab, and on the fourth day delivereth out upon weight all the Gold and Silver that he had brought with him for an Offering, from the King, from his Princes, and from Iſrael in Babel.

Ezra was Uncle to Joſhua that was now High Prieſt, Chap. 7. 1. with 1 Chron. 6. 14. His father Seraiah was ſlain at the ſacking of Jeruſalem, 2 King. 25. 18. ſeventy five years ago. Ezra was then very young, if ſo be he were then born.

EZRA IX, X.

REST and proſperity, which the returned Jews have a little injoyed, hath bred corruption amongſt them, by making mixt Marriages with the Nations amongſt whom they lived. This, Ezra reformeth, and cauſeth them to put away their Wives; which were a great multitude; only four men oppoſed the buſineſs, two Levites, and two others: and to ſuch a ſence is verſ. 15. of Chap. 10. to be read; Onely Jonathan the ſon of Aſahel, and Jahaziah the ſon of Tiknah, ſtood againſt this matter עמדו על זאת and Meſhullan and Shabbethai helped them, weigh verſ. 16. and it inforceth this tranſlation.

The meeting about this matter was on the twentieth day of the ninth month, and then they choſe Elders to ſee the work carried on: they begin to ſit upon it the firſt day of the tenth month, and have finiſhed the buſineſs by the firſt day of the firſt month, Chap. 10. 14, 16, 17.

This matter was done in the ſeventh year of Darius, or Artaxerxes, the ſame year that Ezra came to Jeruſalem, as the Text ſeemeth to carry it on, unleſs by the ſtrange writing of the word לחריוש verſ. 16. the Holy Ghoſt would hint Darius his tenth. לחרש העשירי לדדיוש הדבר: Let the learned judge.

ZECHARY

World | Artax. Darius

ZECHARY IX, X, XI, XII, XIII, XIV.

8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 FROM this action of Ezra, of reforming their mixt Marriages, which moſt likely was in Darius his ſeventh, there is a ſilence of any thing done till Darius his twentieth, and then Nehemiah begins to ſtir. In this time therefore, which was the ſpace of twelve years, we may very well conceive that Zachary was propheſying among the people, and helping forward the Reformation: and ſince there is no date to direct us otherwiſe we may very well take up his 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. Chapters, in which he Propheſieth very plainly and fully of many things concerning Chriſt, and the time of his coming: as of the Converſion of Paul, and the Goſpel beginning at Hadrach and Damaſcus, and of Antioch in Hamath, intertaining the Goſpel of Chriſt riding into Jeruſalem upon an Aſs, Chap. 9. 1, 9. of his confounding the three Shepherds the Phariſees, Saduces, and Eſſeans: his being ſold for thirty pieces of Silver, Chap. 11. 8. 12. his Diſciples ſcattered, Chap. 13. 7. divers of Jeruſalem mourning over him whom they peirced, Chap. 12. and the reſt, and their City and Temple periſhing through unbelief, Chap. 11. 1. &c.

NEHEMIAH all the Book,

Chap. 13. verſ. 7.

3507 20 IN the twentieth year of Artaxerxes Darius, in the month Chiſleu, Nehemiah underſtandeth the miſerable caſe of Jeruſalem, and in the month Niſan following he obtaineth leave of the King to go to Jeruſalem, and a Commiſſion and a Convoy. Here obſerve, that Chiſleu the ninth month, and Niſan following which was the firſt month, are both in the twentieth year of Darius, Chap. 1. 1. and Chap. 2. 1.

21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31 Nehemiah is twelve years governour of Judea, before he return again to Perſia to the King, in that time he builds the wall of Jeruſalem, fills it, and ſettles it with Inhabitants; brings the people into order, and into a Covenant, and Jeruſalem into habitableneſs in ſafety: And having finiſhed all that was needful for the conſtituting of the City, and the people in peace and piety, he returneth at the end of twelve years, or in the two and thirtieth year of the King, according as he had appointed, Chap. 13. 6. and from that year if we count backward to the firſt of Cyrus, you have the ſum of ſeven times ſeven, or forty nine years, the term that the Angel had pointed out for the building of Jeruſalem, City and wall, Dan. 9. 25. viz. of Cyrus three years, of Ahaſhueroſh fourteen years, and of this Darius thirty two. And thus far goeth the Old Teſtament in telling the years of the Story as it goeth along; and further then this thirty two of Darius it counteth not by named ſums. And this very conſideration doth confirm me in this reckoning of the years of theſe Perſian Kings; for I cannot but conclude, that the Holy Ghoſt naming the ſeveral years of theſe Kings hitherto, intendeth to continue the Chronicle till this time of Jeruſalems compleating, and there to end the Annals.

In the ſeventh Chapter of this Book, which giveth account of the number, and the families of the people that planted Judea after the Captivity, you will find exceeding much difference from the Catalogue in Ezra 2. though this is ſaid by the Text to be the ſame: for the fifth verſe ſaith thus, I found a Book of the Genealogy of them that came up at the firſt, and found written therein, &c. but the matter is to be conceived and apprehended thus:

thus: That Nehemiah found that Liſt and Catalogue of thoſe that came up in the firſt of Cyrus, as it was taken then; and that he called over the names of the Families as they lay in order there: He obſerved the order of that Liſt in calling and liſting them, but he took the number of them as they were now when he numbred them: Some Families were now more in number then they were when that firſt Liſt was made, and ſome were leſs, and ſome that were in that Liſt were not to be found now; for ſome had more of the ſame Stock come out of Babel ſince the firſt numbering, and ſome that had come up at firſt and were then numbred were now gone back, and ſo he obſerveth by comparing that Liſt, and the preſent number, how the Plantation in Judea had gone forward or backward, increaſed or decayed ſince the firſt return.

3519 | 32 Nehemiah returneth to the King again, Chap. 13. 6. and here the Chronicle of the Old Teſtament ends.

NEHEM. XIII. from verſ. 7. to the end.

NEHEMIAH, after his abſence from Jeruſalem [which how long it was is uncertain] when he returneth thither again, findeth things exceedingly out of order, which he ſeeketh to reform: He lived after this to the times of Darius the laſt King of Perſia, for he ſpeaks of him, Chap. 12. 22. and of Jaddua the High Prieſt, who met Alexander the Great when he came to Jeruſalem, and to whom Alexander ſhewed ſo great reſpect as Joſephus reporteth, Antiq. Lib. 11. Caput. ult.

Ezra liveth alſo near towards the times of Jaddua, for he wrote the Book of Chronicles in the time of Johanan, Jaddua's father, Nehem. 12.23. and ſo he lived well towards the expiration of the Perſian Monarchy: He was born at the leaſt fifty years before Cyrus firſt; and from thence to Darius his thirty ſecond, were forty nine years, an hundred in all within one: And after that he weareth out the time of one High Prieſt, namely, Joiada, and writeth in the time of Johanan or Jonathan, the next High Prieſt after him: This conſideration alſo helpeth to confirm that account of the times and Kings that we have given from Cyrus hither.

The Propheſie of MALACHI.

MALACHI the laſt of the Prophets of the Old Teſtament is held by ſome to have been Ezra; but that matter is not much material, and it is little certain: And ſomething uncertain are his his times, if we ſhould go about to be curious in determining of them; but only this we may conclude of him, that he lived in the times of corruption, the beginning of which are mentioned by Nehemiah. He propheſieth againſt the ſtrange marriage mentioned there, Nehem. 13. 23, 28. Mal. 2. 11. And againſt the detention of Tithes mentioned there, Neh. 13. 10, 11. Mal. 3. 8. And againſt other prophanneſſes, Neh. 13. 15. &c. Mal. 1. 13. & 2. 8. &c. He concludeth with turning them to the ſtudy of Moſes and the Old Teſtament, and to the expectation of Elias Baptiſt, the beginning of the new. Becauſe after his departure out of the world, the ſpirit of Propheſie alſo departed, and was a ſtranger among the Jews till the dawning of the Goſpel. The Apochrypha Books that were written in the time between, wanted the dictating of that ſpirit, for it was now departed.

And thus endeth the Old Teſtament, in a prediction of the Baptiſt to come; and in a threatning of a curſe upon the unbelieving Jews.

TO THE READER.

I Shall not trouble the Reader with any long Diſcourſe to ſhew how the Scripture abounds with tranſpoſition of ſtories; how the Holy Ghoſt doth eminently hereby ſhew, the Majeſty of his ſtyle and Divine Wiſdom; how this is equally uſed in both Teſtaments; what need the ſtudent of Scripture hath, carefully to obſerve thoſe diſlocations; and what profit he may reap, by reducing them to their proper time and order. I Shall only in brief give account of what I have done in the enſuing Treatiſe, which refers to that way of ſtudy of the New Teſtament.

Some years ago I publiſhed The Harmony, Chronicle and Order of the Old Teſtament, obſerving what tranſpoſitions may be obſerved there, the reaſon of their diſlocating, and where, in Chronical account, is their proper time and place: and accordingly manifeſting the genuine Order of the Books, Chapters, Stories and Propheſies through the whole Book. The New Teſtament being Written and Compoſed after the very ſame manner of texture, requireth the like obſervation, and having made the Aſſay upon the one, I could not but do the like by the other. I have therefore firſt obſerved the proper Time and Order of the Texts of the Evangeliſts, and how all the four may be reduced into the current of one Story, and thereby evidences taken out of them themſelves. I could willingly have publiſhed the Text it ſelf in that Order, for ſo I have tranſcribed it from end to end, and ſo I offered it to the Preſs, but found its paſſage difficult: So that I have been forced to give directions for the ſo reading of it only by naming Chapters and verſes. It would have been both more eaſie and more pleaſant to the Reader, had the Text of the four been laid before him in ſeveral Columes, but his examining and ordering it in his own Bible by the intimations given, will coſt more labour indeed, but will better confirm memory and underſtanding.

The Acts of the Apoſtles, do not much ſcruple the Reader with diſlocations, but the taking up of the times of the Stories, is not of little difficulty, and yet in ſome particulars, of ſome neceſſity: Theſe are obſerved where moſt material, according to what light and evidence may be had for them, either in the Text it ſelf there, or elſwhere. Eſpecially I have indeavoured to obſerve the times of the writing of The Epiſtles, both thoſe that fall in, in thoſe times that the Story of The Acts of the Apoſtles handleth, and thoſe that were written afterward. For the fixing of ſome there is ſo plain ground from the Text that the time is determined certainly; for others, we are put to probability and conjecture, yet ſuch ground to build conjecture on, that I hope there hath not been much roving from the mark. I muſt ſtand at the Readers cenſure.

I was unwilling to have medled with The Revelation, partly becauſe I have no mind to be bold in things of that nature (I ſee too much daring with that Book already) and partly, becauſe I could not go along with the common ſtating of the times, and matters there: yet being neceſſitated by the nature of the task, that I had undertaken, I could not but deal with the Times and Order of things ſpoken of in that Book: and that could not be done neither, without ſome ſpeaking to the things themſelves: which I have conjectured at (referring all to better Judgments) by the beſt propriety of the Language and Dialect uſed, I could obſerve: where literally, and where alluſively to be underſtood.

Now becauſe it would have been but a tedious task for the Reader, only to ſtudy upon the meer diſlocations, and the ordering of them, or only to be pondering how to lay all in their right current, I have not only gone the way before him, but have ſtewed his way all along with variety of obſervations; as not obvious (for ſuch would have but added one tediouſneſs to another) ſo I hope not unprofitable, nor without his delight.

I have not ſet my ſelf to Comment, but in a tranſient way to hint the clearing of ſome of the moſt conſpicuous difficulties, and that partly from the Text it ſelf, and partly from Talmudical collections. Of which later I have alleadged very many, and the moſt of them I hope not impertinently, but for uſefull illuſtration. For though it is true indeed that there are no greater enemies to Chriſt, nor greater deniers of the Doctrine of the Goſpel, then the Hebrew Writers; yet as Corah's Cenſers, and the ſpoils of David's enemies, were dedicated to the Sanctuary ſervice, ſo may the Records, to be met with in theſe men, be of moſt excellent uſe and improvement to the explication of a world of paſſages in the New Teſtament: Nay multitudes of paſſages not poſſibly to be explained, but from theſe Records. For ſince the ſcene of the moſt actings in it, was among the Jews, the ſpeeches of Chriſt and his Apoſtles were to the Jews, and they Jews by birth and education that wrote the Goſpels and Epiſtles, it is no wonder if it ſpeak the Jews Dialect throughout; and glanceth at their Traditions, Opinions and Cuſtoms at every ſtep. What Author in the World but he is beſt to be underſtood from the Writers and Dialect of his own Nation? What one Roman Writer can a man underſtandingly read, unleſs he be well acquainted with their Hiſtory, Cuſtoms, Propriety of phraſes and common ſpeech? So doth the New Teſtament, loquitur cum vulgo: Though it be penned in Greek, it ſpeaks in the phraſe of the Jewiſh Nation among whom it was penned all along, and there are multitudes of expreſſions in it which are not to be found but there and in the Jews Writings in all the world. They are very much deceived that think the New Teſtament ſo very eaſie to be underſtood, becauſe of the familiar doctrine it containeth, Faith and Repentance. It is true indeed, it is plainer as to the matter it handleth, then the Old, becauſe it is an unfolding of the Old: but for the attaining of the underſtanding of the expreſſions that it uſeth in theſe explications, you muſt go two ſteps further then you do about the Old, namely to obſerve where and how it uſeth the Septuagints Greek, as it doth very commonly, and when it uſeth the Jews Idiome, or reference thereunto, which indeed it doth continually: A Student well verſed in their Language and Writings would find it no great difficulty to tranſlate the the New Teſtament into Talmudick language, almoſt from verſe to verſe, ſo cloſe doth it ſpeak all along to their common ſpeech. The allegations that I have produced of this nature in this preſent Tract, I have done but curſorily, as not writing a Comment, but a running Survey of the Times, Order and Hiſtory of the whole New Teſtament: So that it may be many of them may not ſpeak to every Reader that full intent for which they are produced, and which, would I have ſpent time to have been their Interpreter (but I was willing to avoid prolixity) I could have made them to have ſpoken plainly. What I might have done in this kind I ſhall ſhew but by one inſtance (which let not the Reader think tedious here, ſince I have avoided tediouſneſs in this kind all along hereafter) and this is by a Comment in the way we have been ſpeaking of but upon one verſe, and that is the 22d. verſe of the 5th. Chapter of Matthew, which I have picked out the rather, to make an exercitation upon, becauſe it is generally held by all Expoſitors, that in it there is a plain reference to ſomething in the Jewiſh Cuſtoms, which is the thing we have been mentioning.

Whoſoever is angry with his Brother without a cauſe, ſhall be in danger of Judgment, &c.

The ſenſe which is ordinarily given of this verſe in the conſtruction of many Expoſitors, is made to refer unto the three ſorts of Judicatories among the Jews: the loweſt conſiſting of three Judges, the middle of twenty three, and the ſupream of ſeventy one. With which alluſion and explication I cannot cloſe, upon theſe three Reaſons: 1. Becauſe the loweſt Judicatory to which they apply the word The Judgement, had nothing to do in capital matters: and ſo the concluſion of the verſe before cannot be underſtood in this verſe, The murderer ſhall be in danger of being judged by the Judicatory of three, for they judged no ſuch thing; and anſwerably the firſt clauſe in this verſe, where the ſame word The Judgment is reſerved, cannot have the ſame application. 2. The word Συνέδριον is uſed only in the ſecond clauſe, and it will be hard to give a reaſon why the middle Sanhedrin ſhould only be ſo called (as that interpretation makes it to be) when all the three, and moſt eminently the higheſt did bear that name. 3. To apply Gehenna ignis to penalty inflicted by the higheſt Sanhedrins, as divers do, doth cauſe ſo hard ſtraining (as may be obſerved in the ſeveral alluſions that are framed of it) that it is very far from an eaſily digeſted and current ſenſe. I deny not indeed that Chriſt in the verſe alluded to ſomething of the Jews practiſes, in ſome point of Judicature, but unto what, I ſhall defer to conjecture, till its courſe come, in the method, in which it ſeemeth moſt genuine to take the unfolding of the verſe up, and that is 1. To conſider of three words in it; which alſo are to be met in other places, and ſo carry a more general concernment with them, then to be confined unto this verſe, and thoſe are, Brother, and Ἐνοχος, and Gehenna. 2. To conſider of the three degrees of offences that are ſpoken of, namely cauſeleſs anger, ſaying Raka, and calling Thou fool. And 3. to conſider of the three penalties denounced upon theſe offences, viz., Judgment, The Council, and Hell fire.

1. The word Brother, which doth ſo conſtantly wrap up all profeſſors of the Name of Chriſt, in the ſignification of it, in the New Teſtament, may not unfitly be looked upon, by reflection upon the ſenſe of the word Neighbour in the Old Teſtament, as that was commonly interpreted and underſtood by the Jews: By uſing the word Neighbour (ſaith Rabbi Nathan) he excludeth all the Heathen, Aruch. in בן בריה. And let this paſſage of Maymony be well weighed: It is all one (ſaith he) to ſlay an Iſraelite and to ſlay a Cananite ſervant: he that doth either muſt be put to death for it: An Iſraelite that ſlayeth a ſtranger ſojourner is not put to death by the Sanhedrin for it, becauſe it is ſaid, if a man come preſumptuouſly upon his Neighbour (*Exod.*21.14.) and it is needleſs to ſay, he is not to be put to death for a Heathen. And it is all one for a man to kill another mans ſervant, or to kill his own ſervant, for he muſt die for either, becauſe a ſervant hath taken upon him the Commandments, and is added to the poſſeſſion of the Lord. In Rotſeahh, &c. per. 2. By which it is apparent that they accounted all of their own Religion, and them only, to come under the title Neighbour; to which opinion how our Saviour ſpeaketh you may obſerve in Luke 10. 29, 30, &c. So that in the Jewiſh Church there were thoſe that went under the notion of Brethren, that is, Iſraelites, who were all of one blood; and thoſe that went under the name of Neighbours, and thoſe were they that came in from other Nations to their Religion: They ſhall no more teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, Jer. 31. 34, &c. Now under the Goſpel, where there is no diſtinction of Tribes and kindreds, the word Brother is ordinarily uſed to ſignifie in the ſame latitude that Neighbour had done: namely all that come into the profeſſion of the Goſpel, and it is ſo taken alſo, as that had been, in contradiſtinction to a Heathen: Any man that is called a Brother, 1 *Cor.*5.11. If thy brother offend thee, &c. Let him be as a Heathen, Matth. 18. 15, 17.

2. Ἔνοχος, which our Engliſh rendereth, Is in danger of, tranſlates the word חייב and מחויב, which are as ordinarily uſed among the Jewiſh Writers, as any words whatſoever: as חייב מיתה Guilty of death. חייב כרת Guilty of cutting off, &c. Every page almoſt in either Talmud will give you examples of this nature.

3. Gehenna: It is well known that this expreſſion is taken from גיא הנום The valley of Hinnom, of which, and of the filthineſs and abominableneſs of which place, there is ſo much ſpoken in Scripture. There was the horrid Idol Molech to which they burnt their children in the fire: And thither, as D. Kimchi ſaith, was caſt out all the filth and unburied carcaſes, and there was a continual fire to burn the filth and the bones In Pſal. 27.

From hence the Jews borrowed the word, and uſed it in their ordinary language, to betoken Hell: And the Text from which they eſpecially tranſlated the conſtruction, ſeemeth to have been the laſt verſe of the Propheſie of Iſaiah, which by ſome of them is gloſſed thus, And they ſhall go forth out of Jeruſalem into the valley of Hinnom, and there they ſhall ſee the carcaſes of thoſe that rebelled againſt me, &c. Vid. Kimch. & Ab. Ezr. in loc.

It were endleſs to ſhew the frequency of the word in their Writers: let theſe few examples ſuffice. Chald. Paraph. in Iſa. 26. 15. Lord thou wilt drive all the wicked to Gehinnom. And on Iſa. 33. 14. The wicked ſhall be judged and delivered to Gehinnom the everlaſting burning. And on ver. 17. Thou ſhalt ſee thoſe that go down to the Land of Gehinnom. R. Sol. on Iſa. 24. 22. They ſhall be gathered together, as priſoners are gathered in the pit, and ſhall be ſhut up in priſon מחויבי גיהנום לגיהנום ἔνοχοι εἰς γεενναν εἰς γεενναν, They that guilty of Gehinnom into Gehinnom. Targ. in Ruth 2. 12. Be thou delivered from the Judgment of Gehinnom. Midras Miſhle fol. 69. Do you think to be delivered from the Judgment of Gehinnom? Baal Tur. in Gen. 1. 1. Becauſe of the Law, they are delivered from the Judgement of Gehennah, &c. See the phraſe, Matth. 23.33.

And

And now we have done with words, let us come to ſentences, and conſider the offences that are prohibited, which are eaſily acknowledged to be gradual, or one above another. About the firſt, viz. Cauſeleſs anger, there needeth no explanation, the words and matter are plain enough.

The ſecond is, Whoſoever ſhall ſay to his brother Racha. A nickname or ſcornful title uſual which they diſdainfully put one upon another, and very commonly: and therefore our Saviour hath ſpecified in this word, the rather becauſe it was of ſo common uſe among them, and they made no bones at it. Take theſe few examples, A certain man ſought to betake himſelf to repentance (and reſtitution.) His wife ſaid to him Rekah if thou make reſtitution, even thy girdle about thee is not thine own, &c. Tanchum fol. 5. Rabbi Jochanan was teaching concerning the building of Jeruſalem with Saphires and Diamonds, &c. One of his ſcholars laughed him to ſcorn. But afterward being convinced of the truth of the thing, he ſaith to him, Rabbi, Do thou expound, for it is fit for thee to expound: as thou ſaideſt ſo have I ſeen it: He ſaith to him Rekah, Hadſt thou not ſeen thou wouldeſt not have believed, &c. Midras Tillin. fol. 38. col. 4. To what is the thing like? To a King of fleſh and blood who took to wife a Kings daughter: he ſaith to her, Wait and fill me a cup, but ſhe would not: whereupon he was angry and put her away: She went and was married to a foordid fellow: and he ſaith to her, Wait and fill me a cup: She ſaid unto him, Rekah, I am a Kings daughter, &c. Idem in Pſal. 137. A Gentile ſaith to an Iſraelite, I have a dainty diſh, for thee to eat of. He ſaith What is it? He anſwers Swines fleſh. He ſaith to him, Rekah, even what you kill of clean beaſts is forbidden us, much more this. Tanch. fol. 18. col. 4.

The third offence is to ſay to a brother, Thou fool, which how to diſtinguiſh from Racha, which ſignifies an empty fellow, were ſome difficulty, but that Solomon is a good Dictionary here for us, who takes the term continually for a wicked wretch and reprobate, and in oppoſition to ſpiritual wiſdom: So that in the firſt clauſe is condemned cauſeleſs anger; in the ſecond, ſcornful taunting and reproaching of a brother: and in the laſt, calling him a reprobate and wicked, or uncharitably cenſuring his ſpiritual and eternal eſtate. And this laſt doth more eſpecially hit the Scribes and Phariſees, who arrogated to themſelves only to be called חכמים Wiſemen, but of all others had this ſcornful and uncharitable opinion, This people that knoweth not the Law is curſed, Joh. 7. 49.

And now for the penalties denounced upon theſe offences, let us look upon them, taking notice of theſe two traditions of the Jews, which our Saviour ſeemeth to face and to contradict.

1. That they accounted the command Thou ſhalt not kill, to aim only at actual murder. So in their collecting of the ſix hundred and thirteen precepts out of the Law, they underſtand that command to mean but this, That one ſhould not kill an Iſraelite: Vid. trip. Targ. ibid. Sepher Chinnuch ibid. Maym. in Rotſeah: per. 1. And accordingly they allotted this only violation of it to judgement. Againſt this wild gloſs and practiſe he ſpeaketh in the firſt clauſe: Ye have heard it ſaid, Thou ſhalt not not kill, and he that killeth or committeth actual murder, is liable to judgment, and ye extend the violation of that command no further; but I ſay to you, that cauſeleſs anger againſt thy brother is a violation of that Command, and even that maketh a man liable to judgment.

2. They allotted only that murder to be judged by the Council or Sanhedrin, that was committed by a man in propria perſona. Let them ſpeak their own ſenſe: A murderer is he that kills his neighbour with a Stone, or with Iron: or that thruſts him into water or fire out of which it is not poſſible to get out again, if the man die he is guilty, חי"ב (ἐνοχος.) But if he thruſt him into fire or water, out of which it is poſſible to get out again, though he die, yet he is quit. He ſets on him a Dog or a Serpent, he is quit: He intended to kill a ſtranger and kills an Iſraelite; To kill a little one, and kills one of ſtature: To hit him on the loins, and ſuch a blow on the loins could not kill him, but it miſſes the loins and hits him on the heart and kills him: he is quit. He intended to hit him on the heart, and ſuch a blow on the heart was enough to kill him, but it lights on the loins, and ſuch a blow on the loins was not enough to kill him, yet he dies: he is quit. He intended to ſtrike one of ſtature, and the blow was not enough to have killed one of ſtature, but it lites on a little one, and there was enough in the blow to have killed a little one, and he dies, yet he is quit. He intended to hit a little one, and there was enough in the blow to kill a little one, but it lights on one of ſtature, and there was not enough in the blow to kill one of ſtature, yet he dies: he is quit. R. Simeon ſaith, Though he intended to kill one, and kills another, he is quit, &c. Talm. in Sanhedr. per. 9.

Any one that kills his neighbour with his hand, as if he ſtrike him with a ſword, or with a ſtone that kills him, or ſtrangles him till he die, or burns him in the fire, ſeeing that he kills him any how in his own perſon, lo ſuch a one muſt be put to death by the Sanhedrin: But he that hires another to kill his neighbour, or that ſends his ſervants and they kill him, or that violently thruſts him before a Lion, or the like, and the beaſt kills him: Any one of theſe is a ſhedder of blood, and the guilt of ſhedding of blood is upon him, and he is liable to death by the hand of Heaven, but he is not to be put to death by the Sanhedrin. And whence is the proof that it muſt be thus? Becauſe it is ſaid, He that ſheds mans blood, by man ſhall his blood be ſhed. This is he that ſlays a man himſelf, and not by the hand of another. Your blood of your lives will I require: This is he that ſlays himſelf. At the hand of every beaſt will I require it: This is he that delivers up his neighbour before a beaſt to be rent in pieces. At the hand of man, even at the hand of every mans brother will I require the life of man: This is he that hires others to kill his neighbour: In this interpretation requiring is ſpoken of all the three, behold their judgment is delivered over to Heaven (or God.) And all theſe manſlayers and the like, who are not liable to death by the Sanhedrin; if the King of Iſrael will ſlay them by the Judgment of the Kingdom and the Law of Nations, he may, &c. Maym. ubi ſupr. per. 2.

You

You may obſerve in theſe wretched traditions a twofold killing, and a twofold judgment: a mans killing another in his own perſon and with his own hand, and ſuch a one liable to the judgment of the Sanhedrin, to be put to death by them as a murderer: And a man that killed another by proxy; not with his own hand, but hiring another to kill him, or turning a beaſt or ſerpent upon him to kill him. This man not to be judged and executed by the Sanhedrin, but referred and reſerved only to the judgment of God. So that from hence we ſee plainly, in what ſenſe the word Judgment is uſed in the latter end of the preceding verſe, and the firſt clauſe of this, namely not for the Judgment of any of the Sanhedrins, as it is commonly underſtood, but for the Judgment of God. In the former verſe Chriſt ſpeaks their ſenſe, and in the firſt clauſe of this, his own, in application to it. Ye have heard it ſaid, that any man that kills is liable to the Judgment of God; But I ſay to you that he that is but angry with his brother without a cauſe, is liable to the Judgment of God. You have heard it ſaid, That he only that commits murder with his own hand, is to be judged by the Council or Sanhedrin as a murderer; But I ſay to you, that he that but calls his brother Racha as common a word as ye make it, and a thing of nothing, he is liable to be judged by the Sanhedrin.

Laſtly, He that ſaith to his brother, Thou fool, wicked one, or caſtaway, ſhall be in danger of Hell fire. Ἔνοχος εἰς γέενναν πυρός. There are two obſervable things in the words. The firſt is the change of caſe from what was before: there it was ſaid, τῇ κρίσει, τῷ συνεδρίῳ, but here εἰς γέενναν. And hereupon S. Petit in his variæ Lectiones lib. 1. cap. 1. profeſſeth that he cannot wonder enough, that Expoſitors ſhould not obſerve this variation: and what he himſelf maketh of the obſervation of it I ſhall not inſiſt upon, but refer the Reader to his own words. Surely he little minds the Greek Text that ſees not this in it, and there needs not any far fetched Expoſition to ſatisfie about it: It is but an Emphatical raiſing of the ſenſe, to make it the more feeling and to ſpeak home: He that ſaith to his brother Raka ſhall be in danger of the Council, but he that ſays Thou fool, he ſhall be in danger of a penalty even to Hell fire. And thus our Saviour doth equal the ſin and penalty in a very juſt parallel. Injuſt anger, with Gods juſt anger and judgment: Publick reproach, with publick correction by the Council: And cenſuring for a child of Hell, to the fire of Hell. 2. It is not ſaid εἰς πῦρ γεέννης, To the fire of Hell, but εἰς γέενναν πυρός, To a Hell of fire: in which expreſſion he doth ſtill ſet the Emphaſis higher: And beſides the reference to the valley of Hinnom, he ſeemeth to refer to that penalty uſed by the Sanhedrin, of burning: the moſt bitter death that they uſed to put men unto: the manner of which was thus: They ſet the malefactor in a dunghil up to the knees: and they put a towel about his neck, and one pul'd one way, and another another, till by thus ſtrangling him they forced him to open his mouth. Then did they pour ſcalding lead into his mouth, which went down into his belly and ſo burnt his bowels. Talm. in Sanhed. per. 7. Now having ſpoken in the clauſe before of being judged by the Sanhedrin, whoſe terribleſt penalty was this burning, he doth in this clauſe raiſe the penalty higher, namely of burning, but in Hell: not a little ſcalding lead, but even with a Hell of fire, &c.

The greateſt part of the New Teſtament might be obſerved to ſpeak in ſuch reference to ſomething or other commonly known, or uſed or ſpoken among the Jews, and even the difficulteſt paſſages in it might be brought to far more facility then they be, if theſe references were well obſerved. There are divers places where Commentators, not able to clear the ſenſe for want of this, have been bold to ſay the Text is corrupt, and to frame a Text of their own heads; whereas the matter skilfully handled in this way, might have been made plain: As we have given experiment in this kind in ſome as we have gone along, and divers others might have been inſtanced, but our work was not now to write a Comment.

The HARMONY and ORDER OF THE FOUR EVANGELISTS.

SECTION I.

LUKE Chap. I. Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4.

LUKE'S Preface. His warrant to write his Gospel.

IN compiling the four Evangelists into one continued Current and Story, this Preface that Luke prefixeth to his Gospel, may very fitly be set before them all, as a general Proem to the whole.

If he wrote his Gospel, near about that time, when he wrote his Acts of the Apostles, it was not till Paul had now worn out his two years imprisonment in Rome, or thereabout, Acts 28. 30. which was twenty seven years after Christs Ascention: by which time the Gospel had been carried by the Apostles who were Eye-witnesses of Christs Actions, and by the Disciples, who were Ministers of the Word, through the most parts of the World.

From these mens Sermons and Relations, many undertook to write Gospels, partly for their own use, and partly for the benefit of others,: which thing, though they did lawfully and with a good intent, yet becaus they did it not by Inspiration, nor by Divine Warrant; albeit, what they had written were according to Truth, yet was the Authority of their Writings but humane, and not to be admitted into the Divine Canon. But Luke had his intelligence and instructions from above, Ἄνωθεν, ver. 3.

SECTION II.

JOHN Chap. I. from the beginning to Ver. 15.

CHRISTS Divinity shewed: and the fitness of him, the Word, to be incarnate.

AFter the Preface, this portion doth justly challenge to be ranked first: for it not only treateth of Christs Divinity, which is first to be looked after in his story, but it also sheweth, how proper it was for him the Second Person in the Trinity to be incarnate, rather than either of the other Perſons: 1. He being the Word by whom the world was created, and therefore fitteſt by whom it ſhould be redeemed. 2. The Word in whom the Promiſe of Life was given, ver. 4. and ſo moſt fit by whom life ſhould be brought. 3. The ſubſtance of that word of Promiſe, that ſhone as a light throughout all the Old Teſtament, in the darkneſs of the Types, Figures, Propheſies and Myſteries there, and the darkneſs of thoſe obſcure diſpenſations comprehended it not, but that it gave light and ſhone in that obſcurity: and they could not comprehend it, it being a light to break out in a far greater luſtre than they afforded.

SECTION III.

LUKE Chap. I. from Ver. 5. to Ver. 57.

Year of World.	Year of Rome.	AUGUSTUS.	HEROD
3927.	753.	30.	34.

The Birth of John the Baptiſt, and the Birth of our Saviour foretold by the Angel Gabriel.

The Method and Order of this Section, will not need much proof or clearing. The preceding gave an intimation of Chriſts fore-runner, Joh. 1. 6. and this begins to tell his ſtory to the full.

HEROD the Great, by deſcent an Edomite, and placed by the Romans King of Judea [compare Gen. 27. 40.] among divers other paſſages, in his uneven, and rugged Reign, had ſlain the Sanhedrin, Joſeph. Ant. l. 14. c. 17. and to plaſter the buſineſs again, by the Counſel of Bava ben Bota repaired the Temple, and made it incomparably more ſumptuous than it was before, Jucas fol. 19. He began this Work in the 18*th* Year of his Reign, and it coſt him eight years to finiſh it, Joſ. Ant. lib. 15. c. 14. So that this new Fabrick was but eight or nine years old at this year that we are upon.

In this Temple Zacharias, a Prieſt of the courſe of Abia, was offering Incenſe in the Holy Place, as was uſed daily; and hath tidings brought him of a Son, that ſhould be fore-runner to the Meſſias. Although Zacharias be ſaid to have been of the courſe of Abia, yet can it hardly be thought that he was of his Seed and Poſterity: for we find mention but of four of the Courſes that returned out of Babylon, and Abias was none of them, Ezra 2. 36, 37, 38, 39. But the whole number of thoſe Prieſts that did return of thoſe four Courſes, being about 4290, were caſt by lot into 24 Courſes, according to the Primitive Inſtitution, and Zacharias was of the eighth, as Abias Courſe had been before the Captivity, and which yet bare his Name, as the other did their Names, who had denominated the Courſes from their firſt original. Of this ordering of the Courſes after the Captivity, both Talmuds ſpeak largely, in the Treatiſe Taanith cap. 4.

Whether Zacharias were of the Seed of Abia or no, it is apparent by his ſerving in Abias Courſe, that he was not High-Prieſt, but one of the ordinary Prieſts, that ſerved by courſe as their turn came, and that had their particular imployment in the ſervice by lot. The manner of their lottery for this purpoſe, is mentioned at large in Tamid cap. 3. in Joma cap. 2.

The Angel Gabriel, who about 456 years ago had given account to Daniel of the time of Meſſias his ſufferings, doth now when that time is drawing near, firſt bring tidings of his fore-runners birth, and then of his own.

The Jeruſalem Gemara in Joma fol. 42. col. 3. relates a ſtory very parallel to this of Zachary, both of his ſeeing an Angel in the Temple, and of his ſtay there longer than was uſed at offering Incenſe. Simeon the Juſt, ſay they, ſerved Iſrael in the High-Prieſthood forty years: And on the laſt year he ſaith unto them, This year I muſt die. They ſay to him, How knoweſt thou that? He anſwered. Every year hitherto, when I went into the moſt Holy Place, [on the day of expiation] one like an old man cloathed in white, and vailed in white, went in with me, and came out with me. Now this year he went in with me, but came not out with me. And inſtantly after, The High-Prieſt might not ſtay praying in the moſt Holy Place long, leſt he ſhould put the people into a fear. One once ſtaid long, and they were about to go in after him. Some ſay it was Simeon the Juſt. They ſaid to him, Why didſt thou ſtay ſo long? He anſwered, I was praying for the Sanctuary of your God, that it ſhould not be deſtroyed. They ſay to him, Though thou dideſt ſo, yet ſhouldeſt not thou have ſtayed ſo long.

If this Relation carry any truth with it, it might be looked upon as the expiring of Viſion (as Propheſie had alſo ceaſed not long before that time:) for Simeon the Juſt is ſaid to be משירי אנשי הכנסת הגדולה of the remnant of the men of Ezra's great Synagogue. Aboth R. Nathan cap. 4. and upon the death of Zachary and Malachy, who were of that Synagogue, the ſpirit of Propheſie departed: And here Viſion and Propheſie is dawning again.

Zacharias

Zacharias for not believing the words of the Angel is ſtruck חרש Deaf and Dumb: and doth fore-ſignifie the ſilencing of the Levitical Prieſthood e're long to be. In the Jews Canons חרש is one of the five ſorts of Perſons that they commonly exclude from all imployments and matters of honour, truſt or import; and it means שאינו לא שומע ולאמרבר one that can neither hear nor ſpeak, Jeruſ. in chagigah. fol. 75. col. 4.

His Wife Elizabeth conceiving with child, retires as a recluſe for five months ſpace, that ſhe might keep her ſelf from all defilement, ſhe carrying as choice a Nazarite in her Womb as ſhe did, ver. 15.

Five months were not the whole time of her retiring, for that that urged her to keep cloſe ſo long, had the ſame tie upon her all the time ſhe went with child; but five months are only named, by way of introduction to the ſtory, and occurrence in the ſixth month mentioned inſtantly after.

In the ſixth month the ſame Angel appeareth to the Virgin Mary, and telleth her of the Birth of the Meſſias, to be of her: which ſhe believing, though by the courſe of Nature ſo impoſſible, ſhe preſently goeth to her Couſin Elizabeth into the Hill-countrey of Judea [to Hebron, ſee Joſh. 21. 11.] not only to viſit her and to rejoyce with her, nor only to ſee the proof of thoſe things that the Angel had told of her, but very probably, acted by the Holy Ghoſt, that ſhe might conceive the Meſſias in Hebron, where ſo many choice and eminent Types of him, and references to him had been in ancient time.

Theſe Tidings come to the Virgin at the very latter end of the year that we are upon, or the beginning of the next, and her Journey to Hebron is in the middle of Winter.

SECTION IV.

MATTHEW Chap. I. All the Chapter.

CHRIST'S Genealogy by the Line of Solomon, and by his ſuppoſed Father Joſeph. His Mother in danger to be divorced upon falſe ſuſpition of Adultery.

WHether it were that Mary conceived with child at the inſtant of the Angels telling her of her Conception, as hath been held moſt generally, or at the inſtant that ſhe came to her Couſin Elizabeth in Hebron, by the time that ſhe had ſtayed with her three months, ſhe might eaſily be diſcovered to be with child, as Tamar was after the ſame ſpace of time, Gen. 38. 24. Whoſe caſe and danger of death in that ſtory, compare with the Virgins caſe and danger of divorce in this. The Talmudick Decretals do allot three months for ſuch a diſcovery. Every woman (ſay they) that is divorced or become a widow, behold ſhe may not be married, nor eſpouſed, till ſhe have ſtayed 90 days, that it may be known whether ſhe be with child or no; and that there may be diſtinguiſhing betwixt the Seed of the firſt Husband, and the Seed of the ſecond. Likewiſe a ſtranger and his Wife which are Proſelytes, they keep them aſunder 90 days, that there may be a diſcerning between the Seed ſown in holineſs [that is when they are come into the true Religion out of Heatheniſm. Compare 1 Cor. 7. 14.] and the Seed not ſown in holineſs. Talm. in Jebamoth cap. 4. & in Chetuboth cap. 5. Maym. in Geruſhin cap. 11.

This ſpace of time conſidered, in the preſent ſtory, it ſheweth how fitly the laſt Verſe of the preceding Section, viz. Luke 1. 56. and the 18*th* Verſe of this, do joyn together. The Genealogy interpoſed doth not interrupt, but illuſtrate the ſtory intended: And it is not only properly, but even neceſſarily, ſet in the Front of the Evangelical Hiſtory, that ſatisfaction might be given by it, in that main Point concerning Chriſt, which the Scriptures do ſo often inculcate, and which the Jews would firſt of all look after, namely to prove Jeſus of Nazareth, how ever ſo meanly born, yet to be The Son of David. There were two remarkable Maxims among the Jewiſh Nation. 1. That there was to be no King of Iſrael, but of the Houſe of David and Line of Solomon. Talm. in Sanhedr. cap. 10. And conſequently they looked for King Meſſias from that Line. 2. That the Family of the Mother is not called a Family. Juchaſin. fol 55. Hereupon hath Matthew moſt pertinently brought this Pedigree through the Houſe of Solomon, and ended it in Joſeph a Male, whom the Jews looked upon as the Father of Jeſus.

The laſt Verſe of this Chapter, as it referreth to the demeanour of Joſeph and Mary in their mutual ſociety till the Birth of Chriſt, lyeth properly in the Harmonizing of the Evangeliſts, in the place where it doth: But as it referreth to the Birth of Chriſt, it is coincident with Luke 2. 7. The Reader in his thoughts will place it as he ſeeth cauſe in theſe ſeveral Relations.

SECTION

SECTION V.

LUKE Chap. I. from Ver. 57. to the end.

John Baptiſt born.

WHen Maries three months ſtay with her Couſin Elizabeth was expired, it is eaſily gueſſed, that if Elizabeth by that time were not delivered of her child, yet ſhe was very near it: and that conſideration doth clear the ſubſequence of this Section to the preceding.

John Baptiſt born in Hebron, the place of the reſidence of Abraham, and of the firſt Royalty of David. Here Circumciſion was firſt ordained, and here is he born that was to bring in Baptiſm inſtead of Circumciſion. The Prieſts at the Temple, as they looked for break of day, uſed oft to ſay, The face of all the Skie is bright even unto Hebron. Talm. in Joma. cap. 3. &. in Tamid. cap. 3. Compare the dawning of the Goſpel now riſing there, in the Birth of the Baptiſt: and compare the words of Zacharias a Prieſt, ver. 78.

The time of the Baptiſts Birth will be found [by ſetting that Clock from our Saviours] to have been in the Spring, much about the time of the Paſſeover, about which time of the year Iſaac was born.

SECTION VI.

LUKE Chap. II. from Ver. 1. to Ver. 40.

World.	Rome.	Auguſtus.	Herod.	CHRIST Born.
3928.	754.	31.	35.

LUKE maketh the coherence clear, when he interpoſeth nothing betwixt the Birth of the Baptiſt and the Birth of Chriſt: and indeed there is nothing to be found in any of the Evangeliſts that can interpoſe.

The four Monarchies which Daniel had told ſhould be, and ſhould expire, before the coming of Chriſt, have now run their courſe, and a fifth is riſen far more potent and fully as cruel as all the four put together, and therefore it is pictured with the badges of all the four, Rev. 13. 2. compared with Dan. 7. 4, 5, &c.

A Decree of Auguſtus given out at Rome, becomes an occaſion of accompliſhing a Decree of the Lords, namely of the Birth of the Meſſias at Bethlehem. He is born under a Roman taxation, and now that Propheſie of Chittim or Italy afflicting Heber, Numb. 24. 24. beginneth livelily to take place.

The time of his Birth was in the Month Tiſri [which anſwereth to part of our September] and about the Feaſt of Tabernacles, as may be concluded upon by obſerving that he lived juſt two and thirty years old and an half, and died at Eaſter. That Month was remarkable for very many things. In it the World was created, the Tabernacle begun, and the Temple conſecrated: and as the Jeruſalem Gemariſts well obſerve, In it were the Fathers [before the Flood] born: In Roſh haſhanah fol. 56. cap. col. 4.

His Birth was in the night, and attended with the Song of a whole Quire of Angels, [as Heb. 1. 6. and compare Job 38. 7.] and with a glorious Light about Bethlehem Shepherds, to whom this great Shepherd is firſt revealed.

At eight days old he is Circumciſed, and made a Member of the Church of Iſrael: At forty days old, he is preſented in the Temple in the Eaſt Gate of the Court of Iſrael, called the Gate of Nicanor; and Maries poverty is ſhewed by her Offering, (compare ver. 24. with Lev. 12. 6, 8.) yet her Child is owned as the conſolation and expectation of Iſrael.

The firſt year of his Age and Infancy Chriſt ſpent at Bethlehem: for whereas the Lord by the Prophet had appointed his Birth there, Mich. 5. 2. his Parents had no warrant for his Education in any place but there, till the Lord ſhould give them an expreſs for it, which he did by an Angel, Mat. 2. 22. Therefore how the words of Luke in chap. 2. ver. 39. are to be underſtood, we ſhall obſerve upon the next Section.

SECTION VII.

MATTH. Chap. II. All the Chapter.

CHRIST II. CHRIST homaged by the Wiſe Men, Perſecuted by Herod, flies into Egypt.

THE order of this Section and Story is cleared by ver. 7. and ver. 16. by which it appeareth that Chriſt was two years old when the Wiſe Men came to him: For Herod had enquired diligently of them the time when the Star appeared, and according to the time that they had told him, he ſlew the Male Children from two years old and under. From two years old, becauſe they had told him it was ſo long ſince the Star appeared; And under two years old, becauſe he would make ſure work, as to that ſcruple that might ariſe, namely, whether the Star were a fore-runner, or a concomitant of the Birth of that King of the Jews that they ſpake of.

Now that the Star appeared at the inſtant of his Birth, cannot but be concluded upon this conſideration, if there were no more; That otherwiſe it left the Wiſe Men ſo uncertain of the time when he ſhould be born, as that they could not tell whether he were born or no, no not when they were come to Jeruſalem.

The appearance of the Star therefore was on the night when he was born, and they having told Herod how long it was ſince it appeared, he accordingly ſlayeth all the Children of two years old; for ſo old according to their information did he account the Child to be for whom he ſought, and yet withal he ſlew all the Children under that age, that he might be ſure to hit and not fail of his deſign. This conſidered, it ſheweth that Chriſt was in his ſecond year at the Wiſe Mens coming, and withal it proveth the order of this Section to be proper, and that this Story is to be laid after the Story of Maries Purification and not before, as many have laid it.

It may be objected indeed, that Luke having given the Story of his preſenting in the Temple, concludeth, When they had performed all things according to the Law, they returned into Galilee: Now if they returned into Galilee when Chriſt was 40 days old, how was he found at Bethlehem at two years old? Anſw. Luke is to be underſtood in that paſſage according to the current of his own Story. He had nothing to ſay about this matter of the Wiſe Men, nor of Chriſts Journey into Egypt [becauſe Matthew had handled that to the full before,] and the next thing that he hath to relate, is his coming out of Galilee to Jeruſalem, to one of the Feſtivals: having nothing therefore to inſert between his preſenting in the Temple at forty days old, and his coming again to the Temple at twelve years old, he maketh this brief tranſition between when they had performed all things according to the Law they returned into Galilee, that he might thereby bring Chriſt to Galilee, from whence he came when he ſhewed his wiſdom at twelve years old.

Μάγοι in Scripture is always taken in the worſt ſenſe for men practiſing Magical and unlawful Arts; and if it be to be underſtood ſo in this place, it magnifieth the power and grace of Chriſt the more, when men that had been of ſuch a profeſſion become the firſt Profeſſors of Chriſt, of any among the Gentiles: They ſeeing a new and uncouth Star in the Heavens, [it may be the light that ſhone about Bethlehem-Shepherds ſeemed to them at diſtance a new ſtrange Star hanging over Judæa] are informed by God two years after what it ſignified; and are wrought upon by his Spirit to come and homage Chriſt whom it pointed out.

Herod at the report of the King of the Jews born, and that with the attendance of ſuch a glorious Star, looks upon him as the Meſſiah, yet endeavours to murder him. He is ſent by the direction of an Angel with his Mother into Egypt, where there was at this time an infinite number of the Jewiſh Nation. Succah cap. 5. At Alexandria there was a great Cathedral, double cloiſtered, and ſometime there were there double the number of Iſrael, that came out of Egypt, and there were 71 Golden Chairs, according to the 71 Elders of the great Sanhedrin; And there was a Pulpit of wood in the middle, where the Miniſter of the Congregation ſtood, &c. The Babylon Talmud ſaith, Alexander the Great ſlew theſe multitudes, but the Jeruſalem ſaith Trajanus did. And the Author of Juchaſin will ſhew you a truth in both. For, In the days of Simeon the Juſt (ſaith he) Alexandria which was Amon Min No, was full of Iſraelites, double the number of thoſe that came out of Egypt, &c. But they were all ſlain by Alexander. But after this it was re-peopled again from the time of Onias, who built there a great Temple, and an Altar, and all the men of Egypt went thither, &c. And there was a great Congregation there, double to the number of thoſe that came out of Egypt. Fol. 14. Of this Temple built by Onias in Egypt, Joſephus maketh mention, Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 6. And the Talmud in Menachoth, cap. 13. So that Chriſt being ſent into Egypt was ſent among his own Nation, who had filled that Country.

The

The time that he was in Egypt was not above three or four months, ſo ſoon the Lord ſmote Herod for his butchery of the Innocent Children, and murtherous intent againſt the Lord of Life. Joſeph and Mary being called out of Egypt after Herods death, intend for Judæa again, thinking to go to Bethlehem; but the fear of Archelaus, and the warning of an Angel directs them into Galilee; They knew not but that Chriſt was to be educated in Bethlehem as he was to be born there; therefore they kept him there till he was two years old, and durſt not take him thence, till fear and the warrant of an Angel diſmiſſeth them into Egypt; And when they come again from thence, they can think of no other place but Bethlehem again, till the like fear and warrant ſend them into Galilee.

There is none of the Evangeliſts that recordeth any thing concerning Chriſt, from the time of his return out of Egypt, till he come to be twelve years old, which was for the ſpace of theſe years; For the better underſtanding of which times let us take up ſome few paſſages in Joſephus.

Antiq. lib. 17. cap. 10. Herod (ſaith he) reigned 34 years, from the time that Antigonus was taken away, and 37 years from the time that he was firſt declared King by the Romans.

And again in the ſame Book cap. 15. In the tenth year of the reign of Archelaus, the People not enduring his cruelty and tyranny, they accuſed Archelaus to Cæſar, and he baniſhed him to Vienna: And a little after Cyrenius was ſent by Cæſar to tax Syria, and to confiſcate Archelaus his Goods.

And lib. 18. cap. 1. Coponius was alſo ſent with Cyrenius to be Governour of Judea.

And ibid. cap. 5. Coponius returning to Rome, Marcus Ambibuchus becometh his Succeſſor in that Government. And after him ſucceeded Annius Rufus, in whoſe time died Cæſar Auguſtus the ſecond Emperor of the Romans.

Now when Auguſtus died Chriſt was fourteen years old, as appeareth from this, that he was 29 years old compleat, and beginning to be thirty, in the fifteenth year of Tiberius the Emperor next ſucceeding, Luke 3. 1, 2. Reckon then theſe times that Joſephus hath mentioned between the death of Herod and the death of Auguſtus, namely, the ten years of Archelaus, and after them the Government of Coponius, and after him Ambibuchus, and after him Rufus, and it will neceſſarily follow that when Herod ſlew Bethlehem Children, Chriſt being then two years old, it was the very laſt year of his Reign.

CHRIST at twelve years old ſheweth his Wiſdom among the Doctors: At the ſame Age had Solomon ſhewed his Wiſdom in deciding the Controverſie between the two Harlots. Ignat. Martyr. in Epiſt. ad Magnoſ.

IT is very eaſie to ſee the ſubſequence of this Section to that preceeding: ſince there is nothing recorded by any of the Evangeliſts concerning Chriſt from his infancy till he began to be thirty years old, but only this Story of his ſhewing his Wiſdom at twelve years old among the Doctors of ſome of the three Sanhedrins that ſate at the Temple; for there ſate one of 23 Judges in the Eaſt Gate of the Mountain of the Houſe called the Gate Shuſhan; Another of 23 in the Gate of Nicanor, or the Eaſt Gate of the Court of Iſrael. And the great Sanhedrin of 71 Judges, that ſate in the Room Gazith, not far from the Altar.

Though Herod had ſlain the Sanhedrin, as is related by Joſephus and divers others, yet was not that Court, nor the judiciary thereof utterly extinguiſht, but revived again, and continued till many years after the deſtruction of the City.

His Story about this matter is briefly thus given by the Babylon Talmud, in Bava Bathra fol. 3. facie 2. Herod was a ſervant of the Aſmonean Family; he ſet his Eyes upon a Girl of it. One day the man heard a voice from Heaven [Bath Kol] which ſaid, Any ſervant that rebelleth this year ſhall proſper. He riſeth up, and ſlayeth all his Maſters: but left that Girl, &c. And whereas it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt ſet a King over thee from among thy brethren, [which as the gloſs there tells us, their Rabbies underſtood, of the chiefeſt of thy brethren] he roſe up and ſlew all the great ones, only he left Baba ben Bota to take counſel of him. The gloſs upon this again tells us, That he ſlew not utterly all the great ones, for he left Hillel and the Sons of Betirah remaining; and Joſephus relateth alſo, that he ſpared Shammai: to which Abraham Zacuth addeth, that Menahem and 80 gallant Men of the chief of the Nation were gone over to his ſervice and to attend upon him. So that theſe of themſelves, and by ordination of others, did ſoon repair that breach that his Sword had made in the

Sanhedrin,

Sanhedrin, he not reſiſting its erection again, when he had now taken away the Men of his diſpleaſure.

Hillel was Preſident, and ſat ſo forty years, and died [by the Jews computation applied to the Chriſtian account] much about this twelfth year of Chriſt. For they ſay that he lived an hundred and twenty years, the laſt forty of which he ſpent in the Preſidency of the Sanhedrin, entring upon that dignity an hundred years before the deſtruction of the City.

Menahem was at firſt Vicepreſident with him, but upon his going away to Herods ſervice, Shammai came in his room: and now two as eminent and learned men ſat in thoſe two Chairs, as ever had done ſince the firſt birth of traditions. Hillel himſelf was ſo deſerving a man, that whereas in the vacancy of the Preſidentſhip, by the death of Shemaiah and Abtalion, R. Judah and R. Jeſhua the Sons of Betirah might have taken the Chairs, they preferred Hillel as the worthier perſon, Talm. Jeruſ. in Peſſachim. fol. 33. col. 1. He bred many eminent Scholars, to the number of fourſcore, the moſt renowned of which by name were, Jonathan ben Uzziel the Chaldee Paraphraſt, and Rabban Jocanan ben Zaccai: both probably alive at this year of Chriſt, and a good while after. The latter was undoubtedly ſo, for he lived to ſee the deſtruction of the City and Temple, and ſat Preſident in the Sanhedrin at Jabneh afterwards. And till that time alſo lived the Sons of Betirah mentioned before.

Shammai was little inferior to Hillel in learning or in breeding learned men: and their equal learning and Schools bred differences between them in point of learning, and determination about ſome things in their traditions. The two Maſters controverting about a few Articles, but their Scholars about very many, and their differences very high.

This contention of the Scholars grew ſo very high even in the Maſters time, that it is recorded that the Scholars of Shammai affronted and bandied againſt Hillel himſelf, in the Temple Court. Jeruſ. in Jom. Tobh. fol. 61. col. 3. And the quarrelings of theſe Schools were ſo bitter, that as the ſame Talmud relateth, it came to effuſion of blood and murdering one another, Shabb. fol. 3. col. 3. Theſe are ſome of the Traditions that were made or ſetled in the Chamber of Hananiah the Son of Ezekia, the Son of Garon. The perſons were numbred, and the Scholars of Shammai were more than the Scholars of Hillel. That day was a grievous day to Iſrael, as was the day of the making of the Golden Calf. The Scholars of Shammai ſtood below and ſlew the Scholars of Hillel. Nor did theſe animoſities ceaſe, but they were ever croſſing and jarring, till at the laſt the Schools of Hillel carried it, by the determination of a Divine Voice from Heaven, as was pretended [for to ſuch fictions they were glad to betake themſelves.]

Till the Divine Voice [Bath Kol] came forth, it was lawful for any one to practiſe according to the weighty or light things of the School of Shammai, or according to the weighty or light things of the School of Hillel. There came forth a Divine Voice at Jabneh, and ſaid, The words of the one and of the other are the words of the Living God, but the certain determination of the thing is according to the School of Hillel. And whoſoever tranſgreſſeth againſt the words of the School of Hillel, deſerveth death. Ibid. in Beracoth fol. 3. col. 2.

At theſe times then that we are upon, their School-Learning was come to the very height, Hillel and Shammai having promoted it to a pitch incomparably tranſcendent above what it had been before; and accordingly now began the Titles of Rabban and Rabbi; Rabban Simeon the Son of Hillel being the firſt Preſident of the Sanhedrin that bare a Title, for till theſe times their great and Learned Men had been called only by their bare proper names. So that now in a double ſeaſonableneſs doth Chriſt the Divine Wiſdom of God appear and ſet in among them, at twelve years old beginning, and all the time of his Miniſtry after, going on to ſhew them their wiſdom folly, and his own Word and Doctrine the Divine Oracles of Wiſdom. In a double ſeaſonableneſs I ſay, when their Learning was now come to the height, and when their Traditions had to the utmoſt made the Word of God of no effect.

This twelfth year of Chriſt was the laſt year of the Reign of Archelaus the Son of Herod, of whom is mention, Matth. 2. 22. He is accuſed to Auguſtus for Male-adminiſtration, and thereupon baniſhed by him to Vienna, as was mentioned before. And Coponius comes Governour of Judæa in his ſtead.

CHRIST. XIII. XIV. AUGUSTUS Cæſar dieth this fourteenth year of Chriſt, on the nineteenth day of Auguſt: duobus Sextis, Pompeio & Apuleio. Coſſ. Suet. in Auguſto cap. 10. He was 75 years, 10 months and 26 days old, having been Monarch ſince his victory at Actium 44 years, wanting 13 days. Dion. Caſſ. lib. 56. TIBERIUS Cæſar reigneth in his ſtead.

CHRIST. XV. XVI. XVII. XVIII. XIX. XX. XXI. XXII. XXIII. XXIV. XXV. XXVI. XXVII. XXVIII.

All this ſpace of Chriſts Life, from his twelfth year of age, to his twenty ninth, is paſſed over by all the Evangeliſts in ſilence, becauſe they were not ſo much to treat of his private life and imployment, as of his publick Miniſtry. And here they follow the ſame courſe that the Angel Gabriel had done, in his foretelling of the time of his appearing, *Dan.*9.24,25, &c. where ſpeaking of the years that ſhould paſs, from his own time unto Meſſiah the Prince, he beginneth the Story of Meſſiah, from the time of his Miniſtry only, or from the latter half of the laſt ſeven years there mentioned, the time when he ſhould confirm the Covenant with the many, &c.

Theſe years he ſpent with his Parents at Nazareth, Luk. 2.51. following his Fathers Trade of Carpentry, Matth. 13. 55. with Mark 6. 3. And theſe two things were they eſpecially that did ſo mainly cloud him from the eyes of the Jews, that they could not own him for the Meſſias, namely, becauſe he was of ſo poor condition and education, and they looked for the Meſſias in a pompous garb, and becauſe his firſt appearing in his Miniſtry was out from Nazareth: his Birth at Bethlehem ſo many years ago, either having been not at all taken notice of when it was, or if it were, by this time worn out of notice and remembrance.

LUKE Chap. III. from the beginning to Ver. 18. MATTH. Chap. III. from the beginning to Ver. 13. MARK Chap. I. from the beginning to Ver. 9.

CHRIST. XXIX. The Goſpel began in JOHNS Miniſtry and Baptiſm.

THe order of this Section is confirmed by all the three. Mark hath made this the beginning of his Goſpel, becauſe the preceding occurrences of Chriſts Birth and Minority, were committed by the Holy Ghoſt who held his pen, to the pens of others: He calls the Miniſtry and Baptiſm of John, the beginning of the Goſpel, and that deſervedly, both in regard of Johns preaching and proclaiming Chriſts appearing to be ſo near, as alſo in regard of the great change that his Miniſtry introduced, both in doctrine and practiſe: He preaching and adminiſtring the baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins, whereas baptiſm till that time had been uſed and taken up as an obligation to the performance of the Law: And he baptizing Jews into another Religion than their own, whereas till then, baptizing had been uſed, to admit Heathens into the Religion of the Jews.

Here is the ſtandard of time that the Holy Ghoſt hath ſet up in the New Teſtament; unto which, as unto the fullneſs of time, he hath drawn up a chronical Chain from the Creation: and from which as from a ſtanding mark, we are to meaſure all the times of the New Teſtament if we would fix them to a certain date.

There are two main ſtories that Luke layeth down in his third Chapter; the one is Johns baptizing, and the other is, Chriſt baptized by him, and he hath dated the former in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæſar, and how to date the latter we are taught and helped by theſe Collections. 1. He intimateth to us that Chriſt when he was baptized by John, was but entring on his Thirtieth year, as the words that he hath uſed do plainly evidence Ἀρχόμενος ὡν ὡσὶ, He was beginning to be about thirty years of age, or after a manner, and in ſuch a way of reckoning, as the Scripture ordinarily uſeth, accounting the very firſt day of a year, as that year. יום אחד חשנה חשוב כשנה: One day of the year is reputed that year. Tal. Bab. Roſh haſhanah fol. 2. 2. John baptized half a year before Jeſus came to be baptized of him, for he was half a year younger than John, Luk. 1. 26. and as Chriſt was baptized and entred his Miniſtry, juſt when he was beginning to enter upon his thirtieth year, ſo John had begun his Miniſtry at the ſame age, and both according to the Law, Numb. 4. 3. Chriſt was baptized in September, at what time of the year he had been born: For the phraſe of Luke mentioned before, doth plainly confirm, that his Baptiſm was cloſe to that time of the year, that had been the time of his Birth. 4. For the ſynchronizing therefore of the year of Chriſt with the year of Tiberius, we muſt lay Tiberius his fifteenth collateral in Annal, accounting with Chriſts nine and twentieth; whether you reckon Tiberius his year from the very time of the year that he began to reign, which was the 20*th* of Auguſt, [and then in September when Chriſt was baptized, his ſixteenth year was begun, and Chriſts thirtieth] or whether you reckon according to the common accounting of the Roman Faſti, from January to January, and then though Chriſt indeed ſpent three months of his thirtieth year in Tiberius his fifteenth ſo accounted, yet he ſpent three times three months of it in his ſixteenth.

The

The fifteenth year of Tiberius then, and the nine and twentieth of our Saviour, was the great year of the beginning of the Gospel, in the preaching and baptizing of John, who began this work about Passeover time, or in the month Abib, otherwise called Nisan. The time of the year that Abraham had received the Promise, Isaac was born, Israel was redeemed out of Egypt, and the Tabernacle was erected in the Wilderness. The Jews speak more than they are aware of, when they say, that As in Nisan there had been redemption, so in Nisan there should be redemption. Tal. Bab. ubi supr. fol. 11. The Gospel began, and Christ died in that month.

Now whereas it may seem strange, that upon Johns beginning to baptize, he introducing so strange a practise and doctrine among them, yet the People should flock to him in so great multitudes, as the Evangelists shew they did, and receive his Baptism with so much readiness: [besides that general satisfaction that may be given to this, from the consideration of Gods special hand and work, providing entertainment for his Gospel, now setting forth,] these four things also may be pertinently observed.

1. This was the time that the Nation expected that the Messia should appear: See Luke 19. 11. Gabriels seventy in Dan. 9. had so plainly and exactly pointed to this very time, that not only the pious and the studious among the Nation, could not but observe it, but it had even raised an expectation through a great part of the World, of some great Potency to arise among the Jewish Nation about these times, which should subdue and be Ruler of all the World. Percrebuerat oriente toto vetus & constans opinio, esse in fatis ut eo tempore Judæa profecti rerum potirentur. Sueton. in Vesp. cap. 4. An old and a constant opinion had grown through the whole East, that some coming out of the East should be Master of all.

Nay so evident was the time and truth in Daniel, that the Jerusalem Gemarists that could be well content to deny that Messias was already come, as the rest of their Nation do, yet they cannot but confess it in Beracoth. fol. 1. col. 1. in this Story. Our Doctors say, the Name of King Messias is David: R. Joshua ben Levi saith, His Name is The branch. [Zech. 3. 8.] R. Judah the Son of R. Ibhu saith, His Name is Menahem, [the Comforter.] And this helps to prove that which R. Judah saith, namely this example of a certain Jew: who as he was plowing, his Ox lowed: A certain Arabian passing by and observing his Ox low, said, O Jew, O Jew, loose thine Oxen, and lay by this Plow, for behold your Sanctuary is destroyed. The Ox lowed a second time. He saith to him again, O Jew, O Jew, yoke thine Oxen, and tie on thy Plow, for behold King Messias is born. He saith to him, What is his Name? the other answered Menahem [the Comforter:] And what is his Fathers Name? He answered, Hezekiah [the strong God.] He saith to him, Whence is he? He answered, from the Royal Palace of Bethlehem Judah. He went and sold his Oxen, and sold his Plow and Gears, and went about from City to City selling swadling-cloaths for babes. When he came to that City, all the Women bought of him, but the Mother of Menahem bought not. He heard the voice of the Women saying, O Mother of Menahem, thou Mother of Menahem, Bring some things sold here to thy Child. She answered, Now I pray, that all Israels enemies may be hanged, for on the day that he was born the house of the Sanctuary was destroyed. He saith to her, We hope as it is destroyed at his feet, so it will be built at his feet. She saith to him, I have no money. And why, saith he, doth he suffer for that? If thou have no money now, I will come again after two days and receive it. After the days he came to the City, and saith to her, How does the Child? She answered him, Since the time that thou sawest me, there came winds and storms and took him out of my hands. A clear confession of Christs being already come, and of the poverty of his Mother.

2. They expected a great change of things when Messias should come: That Promise in the Prophet of new Heavens and a new Earth, to be created, raised this expectation. Hence have they this saying, אלף שנים עתיד הקב"ה לחדש את עולמו The holy blessed God will renew the World for a thousand years. Aruch in צדק [John speaks their own Language, when he speaks of reigning with Christ a thousand years, Rev. 20. 4. which is no more to be understood of the time yet to come, then Messias is yet to be expected as not come.] Hereupon they call the days of the Messias בריחחדשה A new Creation, as 2 Cor. 5. 17. In Midras Tillin. fol. 4. col. 3. R. Houne speaketh of three Ages, and the last that he mentioneth is דורו של משיח the age of the Messias: And when that comes, saith he, the holy blessed God saith, Now it lies upon me to Create a new Creation. They likewise call that time עולם הבא the World to come, because of the change of things that they expected then, as if a new World were created. Tanchum. fol. 77. col. 3. In the world to come I will send my messenger speedily, and he shall prepare the way before me. Paul taketh the world to come in this sense, Heb. 2. 5.

3. Baptism had been in long and common use among them many generations before John Baptist came, they using this for admission of Proselytes into the Church, and baptizing Men, Women and Children for that end:

Talm. in Jebamoth cap. 4. and Maym. in Iſſure biah, cap. 13. A perſon is not a Proſelyte till he be both circumciſed and baptized.

Id. in Chettuboth cap. 1. קטן מטבילין אותו על דעת בית דין. A little one they baptize, by the appointment of the Conſiſtory. And Maym. in Avadim. cap. 8. An Iſraelite that takes a little Heathen Child, or that finds an Heathen Infant, and baptizeth him for a Proſelyte, behold he is a Proſelyte.

Hence a ready reaſon may be given, why there is ſo little mention of baptizing Infants in the New Teſtament, that there is neither plain Precept nor Example for it, as ſome ordinarily plead: The reaſon is, becauſe there needed no ſuch mention, baptizing of Infants having been as ordinarily uſed in the Church of the Jews as ever it hath been in the Chriſtian Church: It was enough to mention that Chriſt eſtabliſht Baptiſm for an Ordinance under the Goſpel; and then, who ſhould be baptized, was well enough known, by the uſe of this Ordinance of old. Therefore it is good plea, Becauſe there is no clear forbidding of the baptizing of Infants in the Goſpel, ergo, they are to be baptized: for that having been in common uſe among the Jews, that Infants ſhould be baptized as well as Men and Women, our Saviour would have given ſome ſpecial prohibition if he intended that they ſhould have been excluded: ſo that ſilence in this caſe doth neceſſarily conclude approbation to have the practiſe continued which had been uſed of old before.

Johns Baptiſm differed from that before, only in this; that whereas that admitted Proſelytes to the Jewiſh Religion, this admitted and tranſlated Jews into the Goſpel Religion: that was a Baptiſm binding them over to the performance of the Law, as their Circumciſion did, but this was a Baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins, as was obſerved before.

4. Though ſome of the Nation expected that the Meſſias would come and redeem them, though they were impenitent, as ſome of the Gentiles plead in Talm. Bab. Sanhedr. cap. 10. & R. Samuel in articulis fidei Judaicæ: yet was it more generally held, and with good reaſon, that the Meſſias would look for a repenting Generation: and thereupon others of the Gemariſts in the place alleadged ſay: If Iſrael repent but one day, preſently the Meſſias cometh.

Upon the conſideration of theſe things, it will appear the leſs ſtrange, that the People flowed in to Johns Baptiſm in ſo great a conflux, this being the time about which the Nation expected the appearing of Meſſias, Baptiſm being a thing moſt commonly known and uſed among them, and this Baptiſm of repentance adminiſtred preparatively toward the entertainment of Chriſt now ready to come, being ſutable to their own apprehenſions of the neceſſity of repentance, againſt his coming.

Baptiſm was [beſides other tendencies of it] as a badge whereby thoſe that received it and ſtuck to it, were marked out for ſafety and preſervation againſt that deſtruction that was to come upon the Nation for unbelief. Therefore John conſtrues their coming to be baptized, their fleeing from the wrath to come: and Peter in the ſame ſenſe, doth ſay, that Baptiſm doth now ſave, 1 Pet. 3. 21. as the Ark had done in the deſtruction of the old World, ſo this from the deſtruction now coming. And Acts 2. 40. to his admonition to Repent and be baptized, he addeth, Save your ſelves from this untoward Generation.

MATTH. Chap. III. from Ver. 13. to the end. | MARK Chap I. Ver. 9, 10. 11. | LUKE Chap. III. Ver. 21, 22.

[CHRIST XXX.] CHRIST is baptized being thirty years old initiant. Joſephs Age at his appearing before Pharaoh, Gen. 41. 46. The Prieſts, at their entrance into their Office, Numb. 4. and Davids when he began to reign, 2 Sam. 5. 4.

He hath now three years and a half to live, and to be a publick Miniſter of the Goſpel, as the Angel Gabriel had told, Dan. 9. 27. that in half of the laſt ſeven of the years there named, he ſhould confirm the Covenant: R. Jochanan ſaith, Three years and an half the Divine Glory ſtood upon the Mount of Olives and cried, Seek the Lord while he may be found. Midr. Till. fol. 10. col. 4.

This ſpace of time had been renowned before, by Elias his ſhutting up Heaven, Luke 4. 25. James 5. 17. and now Heaven is opened; by the perſecution of Antiochus when all Religion was deſtroyed, Dan. 12. 7, 11. and now redemption and reſtoring is come.

Chriſt therefore living three years and an half, and dying at Eaſter, it follows that he was baptized in Tizri, about the Feaſt of Tabernacles, at which time of the year he had been born: and was now, when he was baptized, nine and twenty years old compleat, and juſt entring upon his thirtieth: to which add his three years and an half after his Baptiſm, and it reſulteth, that he died, being two and thirty years old and an half: the exact time of of Davids reign in Jeruſalem, 1 Kings 2. 11. The days that David reigned over Iſrael, were forty years; ſeven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty and three years reigned he in Jeruſalem: that is, in Hebron ſeven years and an half, 2 Sam. 5. 5. and in Jeruſalem two and thirty years and an half: ſo the Jeruſ. Talm. counteth well, in Roſh haſhanah, fol. 1. col. 2.

As Chriſt by Circumciſion was admitted a Member of the Church of the Jews, ſo is he by Baptiſm of the Church of the Goſpel: being withal inſtalled into his Miniſterial Function by Baptiſm, and Unction of the Holy Ghoſt, as the Prieſts were into theirs, by waſhing and anointing.

SECTION X.

LUKE Chap. III. from Ver. 23. to the end of the Chapter.

CHRIST'S Genealogy by his Mothers ſide.

MATTHEWS Genealogy, and this, as they run by a different Line, ſo they are brought in upon different ends. Matthew intends to ſhew, that Jeſus Chriſt was the Son promiſed to David. Luke ſhews him the ſeed of the woman promiſed to Adam, Gen. 3. 15. who in the next following Section begins to break the head of the Serpent. Therefore when that promiſe to Adam beginneth to take place in Chriſts entring upon his Miniſtry, and in his being ſealed for the Meſſias by the Holy Ghoſt, this Genealogy is divinely woven in.

Matthew derives his Line by the Pedigree of Joſeph his ſuppoſed Father, and draws it from Solomon: Luke by the Pedigree of Mary his Mother, and draws it from Nathan: For as the Jews looked on him as the Son of David, they would regard the Maſculine Line and the Line Royal, therefore Matthew giveth it at his birth. But looked on, as the ſeed promiſed to Adam, the ſeed of the woman, he was to be looked after by the Line of his Mother. And whereas this ſeed of the woman was to deſtroy the power of Satan by the word of truth, as Satan had deſtroyed men by words of falſhood, Luke doth properly draw up his Line to Adam, now when he is to begin to preach the Word.

The Line on this ſide the Captivity, for which there is no record elſewhere in Scripture, Matthew and Luke took from ſome known Records then extant among the Nation. R. Levi ſaith, There was found a Book of Genealogies at Jeruſalem, in which it was written, Hillel was of the Family of David. Ben Jatſaph of the Family of Aſap, &c. Tal. Jeruſ. in Taanith, fol 68. col. 1. They kept the Records of Pedigrees, and of all other they would be ſure to keep thoſe of the Family of David, becauſe of the expectation of the Meſſiah from it.

SECTION XI.

MATTH. Chap. 4. from the beginning to Ver. 12.

MARK Chap. I. Ver. 12, 13.

LUKE Chap. IV from the beginning to Ver. 14.

The Seed of the Woman and the Serpent combating.

MARK and LUKE by theſe words, immediately the Spirit driveth him, and Jeſus returned from Jordan, do make the order neceſſary: ſo that as for the ſubſequence of this to what preceded there can be no ſcruple. Only there is ſome difference 'twixt Matthew and Luke in relating the order of the temptations: which Matthew having laid down in their proper rank [as appeareth by theſe particles then, ver. 15. and again ver. 8.] Luke in the rehearſing of them, is not ſo much obſervant of the order [that being fixed by Matthew before,] as he is careful to give the full ſtory, and ſo to give it, as might redound to the fulleſt information.

As our Mother Eve was tempted by Satan to the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life, as 1 Joh. 2. 15. [for ſhe ſaw it was good for food, that it was pleaſant to the eyes, and to be deſired to make one wiſe, Gen. 3. 6.] ſo by theſe, had it been poſſible, would the ſame tempter have overthrown the ſeed of the woman: For he tempted him to turn ſtones into bread, as to ſatisfie the longing of the fleſh; to fall down and worſhip him upon the ſight of a bewitching object to his eyes, and to fly in the air in pride, and to get glory among men. Luke for our better obſerving of this parallel, hath laid the order of theſe temptations anſwerable to the order of thoſe.

Jeſus being baptized about the Feaſt of Tabernacles, toward the latter end of our September, is preſently carried into the Wilderneſs of Judea, by the acting of the Holy Spirit, to enter that combate with the Serpent which was deſigned, Gen. 3. 15. Forty days and forty nights [He being all the while in watching, faſting and ſolitude, and among the wild wild beasts, but sate as Adam among them in innocency] the Devil tempteth him invisibly as he doth other men, namely, striving to inject sinful suggestions into him, but he could find nothing in him to work upon, as Joh. 14. 30. therefore at forty days end he taketh another course, and appeareth to him visibly in the shape of an Angel of Light [and so had Eve been deceived by him, mistaking him for a good Angel] and trieth him by perswasion, by Scripture, and by power, but in all is foiled, mastered and banished by a word.

SECTION XII.

CHRIST is pointed out by John, and followed by some Disciples.

COnceive the continuance of the Story thus: Christ newly baptized, goeth immediately into the Wilderness, and leaveth John at Jordan on Judea side: In the time of the forty days temptation, John having now gathered his Harvest of Disciples on that side the River, goeth over into the Country beyond Jordan, and baptizeth in Bethabara. Thither came some Pharisees by commission of the Sanhedrin, to question him about the Authority whereby he baptized, making no strangeness at baptizing, which had been so long in use among them, but questioning his Authority to baptize in that tenor that he did.

The next day after their questioning of him, Christ cometh into sight, is pointed out by John, and followed by some of his Disciples.

For half a year John had baptized in the Name of Christ, and knew him not, ver. 31, 33. Only as all the Nation expected the Messias to come in time, and John had it revealed to him that he was now ready to appear, so John baptized, and the People came to him upon this account: He professed to all that came to him to be baptized, and so he did to the Jews Commissioners now, that he baptized only in the Name of him that was to come after him, whose shoos latchet he was not worthy to unloose, ver. 27. Let a passage in Tosaphtoth comment upon these words: אי זה היא חזקת עבדים נעל לו סנדלן והיחיר לו סנדלן וחוליך אחריו כלים למרחץ. What is the token of a Servant? He ties his Masters shoos, or looses his shoos, and bears his things after him to the bath, In Kiddushin cap. 1. And the like saith Maymony in Mekerah cap. 2. A Canaanite Servant is like Land as to buying: and he is bought by Money, or by Script, or by service in way of earnest: And what is the earnest in buying Servants? Namely that a man use them as they use Servants before a Master. As to loose his shooe, or to tie his shooe, or to carry his things after him to the bath, &c.

So that those that were baptized in this time, of whom there was a very great number, knew not of Jesus of Nazareth his being the Christ, nor knew they more of Christ than they had known before, but only that he was ready to come: only they were baptized into faith in him, and to repentance.

But when Christ himself came to be baptized, John had discovery of him, and so is able now upon the sight of him to point him out to his Disciples: whereupon Peter [and probably John] and Andrew, and Philip, and Nathanael follow him.

JOHN Chap. II. All the Chapter.

Water turned into Wine.

CHRISTS first Passeover after his Baptism.

THe words The third day in ver. 1. mean either the third day from Christs coming into Galilee, Joh. 1. 43. or the third day from his conference with Nathanael, or the third day from the Disciples first following him, they give demonstration enough of the series, and connexion of this Chapter to the former.

It was about the middle of our November when Christ came out of the Wilderness to John at Bethabara, and then there were about four months to the Passeover, which time he spent in going up and down Galilee, and at last comes to his own home at Capernaum. Those two passages being laid together, The day following Jesus would go forth into Galilee, Joh. 1. 43. And After this he went down to Capernaum, and continued there not many days, and the Jews Passeover was at hand, Joh. 2. 12. do make it evident that Jesus had now a perambulation of Galilee, which took up a good space of time. So that this first Miracle of turning Water into Wine, was about the middle of our November, or little further.

The

The Jews marriages were fixed to certain days of the week: For a Virgin was to be married on the fourth day of the week, and a widow on the fifth, Talm. in chetub. cap. 1. [The reason why, is not pertinent to produce here.] Now if this marriage at Cana, were of a Virgin, and on the fourth day of the week, or our Wedneſday, then Chriſts firſt ſhewing himſelf to John and his Diſciples at Jordan, was on the firſt day of the week, afterward the Chriſtian Sabbath.

Theſe Marriage Feaſts they held to be commanded, and thereupon they have this Maxime, It is not fit for the Scholars of the wiſe to eat at Feaſts, but only at the Feaſts commanded, as thoſe of eſpouſals and of marriages, Maym. in Deah. cap. 5.

At the Paſſeover, it is half a year ſince Chriſt was baptized; and thenceforward he hath three years to live, which John reckoneth by three Paſſeovers more, viz. Joh. 5. 1. & 6. 4. & 18. 28. In this firſt half year he had gone through his forty days temptation, had gathered ſome diſciples, and had perambulated Galilee.

At Jeruſalem at the Paſſeover, in the face of all the People, he acted in the evidence of the great Prophet, and purgeth his own Temple, as Mal. 3. 1, 3. doth many Miracles, knoweth the falſe hearts of many, and truſteth not himſelf with them.

He found in the Temple thoſe that ſold Oxen and Sheep, ver. 14. For ſome illuſtration to this paſſage, take a Story in Tal. Jeruſ. in Jom. tobh. fol. 61. col. 3. One day Baba ben Bota came into the Temple Court and found it ſolitary or deſtitute [that is, not having any beaſts there for ſacrifice.] He ſaith, Deſolate be their houſes who have deſolated the houſe of our God. What did he? He ſent and fetched in three thouſand ſheep of the ſheep of Kedar, and ſearched them whether they were without blemiſh, and brought them into the mountain of the houſe, [or the utmoſt Court, the place where Chriſt found Sheep and Oxen at this time] and ſaith, My brethren, the houſe of Iſrael, whoſoever will bring a burnt-offering let him bring it, whoſoever will bring a peace-offering let him bring it.

Among other things that Jeſus did for the purging of his Temple, it is ſaid, He poured out the changers money, and overthrew the Tables, Κολλυβιστῶν ἐξέχεε τὸ κέρμα, and ſo again, Matth. 21. 12. Maym. in Shekalim. cap. 1. It is an affirmative Precept of the Law, that every Iſraelite pay yearly half a ſheckel; yea even the poor, that lives on alms, is bound to this, either begging ſo much money that he may give it, or ſelling his coat to get ſo much.

Talm. in Shekalim. cap. 1, &c. On the firſt day of the month Adar, proclamation was made about this half ſhekel, that they ſhould get it ready. On the fifteenth day of that month, the Collectors ſat in every City for the receiving of it; and as yet they forced none to pay. But on the five and twentieth day they began to ſit in the Temple, [this was ſome eighteen or nineteen days before the Paſſeover] and then they forced men to pay, and if any refuſed they diſtrained. They ſat with two Cheſts before them, into the one of which they put the money of the preſent year, and into the other the money that ſhould have been paid the year before. Every one muſt have half a ſhekel to pay for himſelf. Therefore when he brought a ſhekel to change for two half ſhekels, he was to pay קולבון לשולחני Κόλλυβον τῷ τραπεζίτῃ, ſome profit to the changer. And when a ſhekel was brought for two, there was a double profit to be paid for the change.

JOHN Chap. III. All the Chapter.

Nicodemus. The Diſciples baptize in the Name of Jeſus.

BEfore our Saviours departure from Jeruſalem, Nicodemus one of the Judges of the great Sanhedrin cometh to him, and becometh his Diſciple: for we cannot ſo properly look for a Member of that great Council in any place as at Jeruſalem. He had obſerved in his Miracles, the dawning of the days of Meſſias, or the Kingdom of Heaven, but having but groſs and erronious apprehenſions concerning the Kingdom of Heaven, or of the ſtate of thoſe days [as was the general miſtake of the Nation,] he is rectified about that matter, and is taught the great Doctrines of regeneration and believing in Chriſt: Chriſt teaching regeneration by the Spirit and Water, exalteth Baptiſm, and cloſely calleth to Nicodemus to be baptized. The Talmudick Records make mention of a Nicodemus in theſe times, who had to do about waters, to provide ſufficient for the People to drink at the Feſtivals.

He is taught, [againſt the great miſpriſion of the Nation] that Meſſias ſhould be a redeemer of the Gentiles as well as the Jews. The Jews in their common language, did title the Gentiles אומות העולם, The Nations of the World. The Earth they divided into חוצה לארץ וארץ ישראל, The Land of Iſrael, and out of the Land: and the People they parted into ישראל and אומות עולם Iſrael and the Nations of the World: The New Teſtament which follows their common Language exceeding much, uſeth both theſe expreſſions very often, whereby to ſignifie the Gentiles: ſometimes calling them thoſe that are without, and ſometimes the world. Nicodemus very readily underſtood the word in this common ſenſe, when Chriſt ſays, God ſo loved the world, that he gave his Son. And he very well perceived that Chriſt contradicted in theſe his words, their common and uncharitable error, which held, that the Meſſias ſhould be a redeemer only to Iſrael [and thoſe Gentiles only, that ſhould be proſelyted to their Judaiſme,] but as for the reſt of the Heathen he ſhould confound and deſtroy them: Examples of this their proud and uncharitableneſs might be produced by multitudes: let theſe two or three ſuffice. The Jeruſ. Talm. in Taanith fol. 64. col. 1. ſpeaking of the coming of Meſſias ſaith, and produceth theſe words, Iſa. 21. 12. The morning cometh and alſo the night, It ſhall be the morning to Iſrael, but night to the Nations of the world. Midr. Till. on Pſal. 2. The threſking is come, the ſtraw they caſt into the fire, the chaff into the wind, but preſerve the wheat in the floor; and every one that ſees it, takes it and kiſſes it: כן אומות העולם So the Nations of the world ſay, the world was made for our ſakes, but Iſrael ſay to them, Is it not written, But the people ſhall be as the burning of the Lime-kilne, but Iſrael in the time to come [לעתיד לבוא an expreſſion whereby they commonly mean the times of the Meſſias] ſhall be left only, as it is ſaid, The Lord ſhall lead him alone, and there ſhall be with him no ſtrange god. Baal turim on Num 24. 8. on thoſe words, He ſhall eat up the Nations his enemies, and ſhall break their bones, obſerveth the letter ע in one of the words to have a ſpecial mark upon it, ſignifying, ſaith he, that he ſhould root out the ſeven Nations [of the Canaanites] and in time to come [לעתיד לבוא] the other ſixty three Nations, that is all the ſeventy Nations of the world. No, ſaith our Saviour, God loved the world or the Gentiles, and God ſent not his Son Meſſias to condemn the world or the Gentiles, but that the world through him ſhould be ſaved.

After this tranſaction with Nicodemus, Jeſus departeth from Jeruſalem into Judea, and there he ſetteth his Diſciples to baptize in his Name: that whereas John had only baptized in the name of Chriſt, and his baptized ones did not know who Chriſt was, now the Diſciples baptize in the name of Jeſus of Nazareth, to evidence him to be the Chriſt into whoſe Name John had baptized.

John himſelf was baptizing ſtill in Ænon in Galilee, having traverſed Judea upon the coaſts of Jordan; and Peræa or beyond Jordan, and now come thither where preſently his ſun is to ſet.

This Chapter contains the ſtory of half a year and ſomewhat more, namely from the Paſſover [if the conference with Nichodemus were at that time] till after the feaſt of Tabarnacles: at which time it was a whole year ſince Chriſt was baptized, and a year and an half ſince John began to baptize.

LUKE Chap. III. Ver. 18, 19, 20.

JOHN Impriſoned.

FRom the laſt verſe of the preceeding Section and forward, we hear no more of John in any of the four Evangeliſts, till you find him in priſon. Therefore this portion in Luke, which giveth the ſtory of his impriſonment, is very fitly and properly to be ſubjoyned to what preceedeth: obſerve how aptly the firſt verſe of this and the laſt of that do joyn together. Luke indeed hath uſed an anticipation here, laying down the ſtory of Johns impriſonment, before the ſtory of Chriſts being baptized, becauſe he would ſhew the effects of Johns doctrine altogether. With Phariſees, Sadducees, Publicans, Souldiers, and the reſt of the people, he found entertainment of his doctrine when he told them their faults, and taught them their duty; but when he reproved Herod, he would not be ſo compliant, but impriſoned him. The time of his commitment may be gueſſed, by what time it was that Chriſt ſlipped aſide for his own ſafety upon the hearing how the caſe went with John, which will appear to be about the middle of our November, and John had begun to preach and baptize at ſpring was twelvemonth before, about ſome eighteen or nineteen months ago.

CHRIST. XXXI. | JOHN Chap. IV. All the Chapter. MATTH. Chap. IV. Ver. 12.

CHRIST at Jacobs well Converteth Samaritans: Healeth a ſick perſon, &c.

CHRIST was in Judea when John was apprehended by Herod in Galilee. His pretended quarrel was the multitude of Johns diſciples, as dangerous for innovation: but the very true cauſe indeed was, his and Herodias ſpleen for Johns plainneſs with them about their inceſt. The Phariſees at Jeruſalem would ſoon hear what was become of John their eye-ſore, and what Herod laid to his charge, namely the dangerouſneſs of his gathering ſo many diſciples. Now our Saviour underſtanding that they looked upon him, as one that had more Diſciples then John, and ſo was in equal danger from them upon that account, he getteth out of Judea out of their reach and goeth to Galilee. But was not Galilee within their reach too?

From ver. 35. may be computed the time of this journey into Galilee, namely when it was now four months to harveſt; that is, to the Paſsover, for from the ſecond day in the Paſs-over week their Harveſt began, *Lev.*23.11,&c. And from this, there may be ſome reaſonable conjecture concerning the time when John was caſt into priſon. Chriſt was in Sychar field about the latter end of our November, when it was now four months to the Paſsover, and he took that journey as ſoon as he underſtood of Johns impriſonment, *Matth.*4.12. He was now entred upon his one and thirtieth year of age.

When he cometh up into Galilee, he avoideth his own City Nazareth, ver. 44. becauſe he knew he ſhould find no reſpect there in regard of the mean education that he had among them: but he goeth to Cana where he had done his firſt miracle; and from thence with a word of his mouth he healeth one ſick at Capernaum. It was the ſon Βασιλικοῦ τινος, of one of the Kings party, namely of old Herods, to whom divers of the eminent and learned of the Jews had gone to be his ſervants, to the diſtaſt of others, and probably in a reluctancy to their own principles, but overcome with court intereſts, *Juchaſin fol.*19.

SECTION XVII.

LUKE Chap. IV. from Ver. 14. to Ver. 31. | MARK Chap. I. Ver. 14.

CHRIST Preaching in Nazaret Synagogue is in danger of his life.

THus is CHRIST come up to Galilee again from Jeruſalem, and out of Judea where he had ſtaid a good ſpace. The Reader may obſerve here what a chaſma [if I may ſo call it] there is in the ſtory of Luke, who hath ſtepped from the ſtory of Chriſts temptation in the wilderneſs, to this his coming to Galilee, and hath laid nothing between, whereas there was a whole years hiſtory intercurrent; and ſo we obſerved ſuch another *Chap.*2.39.

At his firſt coming up into Galilee in this voyage, he avoideth his own Town Nazareth, becauſe he knew a Prophet hath no honour in his own Country, but now having gon up and down the country ſome ſpace, and a renown being gone of him all over thoſe parts, he cometh at laſt to ſee what entertainment he can find in his own Town. There he is admitted [as a member of that Synagogue] to be Maphtir, or publick reader of the ſecond Leſſon in the Prophets for that day. But preaching upon what he had read, and hinting the calling of the Gentiles, from the dealing of Elias and Eliſha with ſome Heathens, and withall pinching cloſe upon the wickedneſs of Nazaret by that compariſon, he is in danger of his life, but delivers himſelf in ſome miraculous manner.

He preacheth thus in the Synagogue, in the authority and demonſtration of a Prophet, and as he evidenced that authority elſewhere by his miracles, ſo doth he here in Nazaret, by reading of the Leſſon in the Prophet, which being to be red in the original Hebrew, which Language was now loſt among them and only attained to by ſtudy, he ſheweth his Prophetical ſpirit in this skill in the language, having had no education to ſuch a purpoſe. The reader in the Law and Prophets both, had an Interpreter, that rendred what was read out of the Hebrew text into the vulgar language, and the Interpreter ſometime took liberty to paraphraſe upon the Text [as the Caldee Paraphraſt had done, eſpecially upon the Prophets,] and kept not always verbatim to it. The Jeruſalem Gemariſts give an inſtance of ſuch a thing, in Sanhedr. fol. 20.col. 3. Joſeph the Maonite interpreted in the Synagogue in Tiberias theſe words, Hear ye this all ye people, Why do not ye labour in the Law? have not I given the Sanhedrin to you for a gift? And hearken O houſe of Iſrael.

Why do you not give the Sanhedrin the gift I appointed you at Sinai? And hearken O houſe of the King, for the judgment is to you; I ſpeak it to you, but the judgment is to the Prieſts: I will come and ſit with them in judgment, and end and deſtroy them out of this world. So Chriſt in reading the Leſſon out of the Prophet, becomes his own Interpreter and Paraphraſt both.

MATTH. Chap. IV. Ver. 13,14,15,16,17. MARK Chap. I. Ver. 14,15.

CHRIST at Capernaum in the coaſts of Zebulon and Nepthali, &c.

WHereas Matthew in the beginning of this Section, telleth that Chriſt left Nazareth, Luke in the end of the preceeding, ſhews the reaſon why, namely becauſe he was in hazard of his life there, and ſo the connexion is made plain.

In the coaſts of Zebulon and Napthali captivity had firſt begun, 2 King. 15. 29. and there Chriſt firſt beginneth, more publickly and evidently to preach the near approach of the Kingdom of Heaven and redemption. In the firſt plantation of the Land after the captivity, Galilee eſcaped from being Samaritan, and was reſerved for this happy priviledge, of being the firſt ſcene of Chriſts preaching the Goſpel. And as that country was inhabited by a good part of the ten Tribes before their captivity, ſo upon the return out of Babel in the ten tribes of Zorobabel and Ezra, it may well be held to have been planted with ſome of the ten Tribes again. For 1. Obſerve in Ezra 1. that there is a Proclamation from Cyrus, that any of the blood of the Jews whereſoever within his dominions, ſhould have liberty to go up to Jeruſalem, ver. 3,4,5, Now undoubtedly the ten Tribes were then reſiding within his dominions, and it is harſh to conceive that they had all ſo far utterly forgot God and their country, as none of them to deſire to go to their own Land again when permitted. 2. There is a ſumma totalis in Ezra 2. of fourty two hundred and threeſcore, ver. 64. that returned out of captivity upon that Proclamation, and there are the number of ſeveral families reckoned, as making up that ſum: whereas if the total of theſe particulars be ſummed up, it reacheth not, by ſixteen thouſand or thereabout, to that number of forty two thouſand, three hundred and threeſcore. Where then muſt we find thoſe ſixteen thouſand, ſince they ariſe not in the number of the families there named? The families there named are of Juda and Benjamin and then certainly thoſe ſixteen thouſand can hardly be imagined any other then of the ten Tribes. And 3. Whereas it is apparent that the returned of Judea and Benjamin, planted Judea, whom can we imagin, but ſome of the ten Tribes to have planted Galilee? And hence their difference in language from the Jews of Judea, and in ſeveral cuſtoms. And hence the reducing of ſome after the captivity, to the line of ſome of the ten Tribes: as Hannah to the Tribe of Aſher, Luk. 2. 36. Ben Cobiſin of the line of Ahab. Talm. Jeruſ. in Taanith fol. 68. col. 1.

And here is the firſt returning of the ten Tribes, to be ſuppoſed, and it carrieth fair probability, that the moſt of the twelve Apoſtles, and many of the reſt of the Diſciples that were of Chriſts moſt conſtant retinue, were of the progeny of ſome of the ten Tribes returned.

SECTION XIX.

LUKE Chap. V from the beginning to Ver. 12. MATTH. Chap. IV. Ver. 18,19,20,21,22. MARK Chap. I. Ver. 16,17,18,19,20.

Peter and Andrew, &c. called to be fiſhers of men.

THe method and ſeries is confirmed by the tranſition of Matthew and Mark: but in the order of Luke there is ſome difficulty. 1. He relateth the calling of theſe Diſciples differently from the relation given by the other: for they ſay Chriſt called Peter and Andrew as he walked by the ſea ſide, but he ſtorieth their call when Chriſt was with them in the ſhip: they ſay he called James and John at ſome diſtance beyond Peter and Andrew, but he carrieth it as if he called them all together. But this is not contrariety, but for the more illuſtration; they all ſpeak the ſame truth, but one helps to explain another. The ſtory at full in them all is thus: As Jeſus walked by the ſea of Genezareth, he ſaw two ſhips ſtanding there, the one whereof belonged to Peter and Andrew, and the other to James and John. All theſe men, being partners, had been fiſhing all night, but had caught nothing, and were now ſtepped down out of their ſhips to waſh their nets. Chriſt preſſed with multitude on the ſhore, entreth into Peters ſhip and thence teacheth the people people. And thence putting off a little into the main, he helpeth Peter to a miraculous draught of fishes, which was so unwieldy that he was glad to becken up James and John from the shore to come and help them. The draught of fishes was got up and boated, and then James and John return to the shore again, and fall to mending their net which was rent at the helping at so great a draught. Peter seeing what was done, adoreth Christ, and he and Andrew being yet at sea, are called by him for fishers of men, and bringing their ship to shore, they leave all and follow him. Christ and they coasting a little further along the shore, came to James and John, and he calleth them. And thus lieth the story at the full.

2. A second scruple in the order of Luke is this, that he hath laid the two miracles of casting out a Devil in Capernaum Synagogue, and the healing of Peters mother in law, before the calling of these Disciples, which apparently by this Evangelist were after. But the reason hereof may be conceived to be, especially this. In Chap. 4. ver. 30, 31. he had related that Jesus escaping from Nazaret, came down to Capernaum, and being now in the mention of his being there, he recordeth these two miracles that he did there [though not at that very time he hath brought them in] having an eye in that his relation, rather to the place then to the time. And so we shall observe elsewhere, that the very mention of a place, doth sometimes occasion these holy penmen, to produce stories out of their proper time, to affix them to that their proper place.

These Disciples hitherto, were only as private men, following Christ, and here is the first time that they are but mentioned to the Ministerial function, to be fishers of men: How then did they baptize before? John 3. 22. with John 4. 2. And the starting of this question, calleth to remembrance that saying of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 1. 17. Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel: Is baptism administrable by private men, and is there any inconsistency betwixt baptizing and preaching? Answ. As baptism was in use among the Jews for admission of proselytes under the Law, these two things were required to it, 1. צריך לטבלו בפני שלשה He that was baptized must be baptized before three: 2. הדבר היה צריך בית דין The thing required a concessus, or to be done by the allowing of some eldership. And because it required this [saith Maymony, whose words the former are also] therefore they baptized not on the Sabbath, nor on the holy days, nor in the night. A man that baptized himself, and proselyted himself, although it were before two witnesses; or that came and said I was proselyted in such a mans concessus and they baptized me, he is not permitted to come into the Congregation, till he bring witness. Maym, in Issure.biah. per. 13. The reason of this strictness was, because of their strict niceness about conversing or matching with a Heathen, till they were sure he was fully Israelited.

Christ and the Apostles in the administration of baptism, followed or forsook their custom as they saw cause. In the case alledged, he follows it, he preacheth and calleth in Disciples, and they are baptized by these Disciples, but Christ chief in the action: and therefore one text tells us that he baptized, though we are taught by another text, that he baptized not. Now the Disciples are not to be looked upon as private men, since they were men of such privacy with the Messias, and not only converted by him, but called to be with him, and intended by him to be solemnly inducted into the ministerial function when he should see time.

And answerably in that saying of the Apostle, I came not to baptize, but to preach, he setteth not an inconsistency between these two, which were joyned by Christ in Pauls and all Ministers Commission, Matth. 28. 19. but he speaketh according to this custome that we have mentioned, which the Apostles followed when disciples came in to be baptized, by multitudes, they themselves preaching and bringing in disciples to be baptized, and others baptizing them, and they not private men neither, but fellow-labourers with them in the Gospel, and Ministers of it.

Fishers of men] Maym. in Talm. Torah. per 7. speaks of דייגי תורה Fishers of the Law.

SECTION XX.

MARK Chap. I. from Ver. 21. to Ver. 40.

LUKE Chap. IV. from Ver. 31. to the end of the Chapter.

MATTH. Chap. VIII. Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17.

A Devil cast out in Capernaum Synagogue. Peters wives Mother and divers more healed.

IF the transition of Mark from the preceding story to this, be observed, it cleareth the order: For having declared there how Christ had called his Disciples; And they, saith he, that is Christ and his new called Disciples went into Capernaum; his own City.

There on the Sabbath day he casteth out a devil, in the Synagogue, who by confessing Christ for the Messias, would have terrified the people with the dread of him, that they might not dare to entertain him. From the Synagouge they go to dinner to Peters house, and there he raiſeth his wives Mother in law from a Fever: And after Sun-ſet when the Sabbath was done; many more are brought to him and are healed. They began their Sabbath from Sun-ſet, and at the ſame time of the day they ended it. Talm. Hieroſolm. in Sheviith. fol. 33.col. 1. And their manner of obſerving it, briefly was thus: for the conſideration of ſuch a thing may be of ſome uſe, in ſome places of the Goſpel as we go along, ſince there is ſo frequent mention there about their Sabbath.

The Eve of the Sabbath, or the day before, was called the day of the preparation for the Sabbath, Luk. 23. 54. and from the time of the evening ſacrifice and forward, they began to fit themſelves for the Sabbath, and to ceaſe from their works, ſo as not to go to the barber, not to ſit in Judgement, &c. nay not to eat thenceforward till the Sabbath came in. Nay thenceforward they would not ſet things on working, which being ſet a work would compleat their buſineſs of themſelves, unleſs it would be compleated before the Sabbath came. As, they would not put Galls and Coperas to ſteep to make Ink, unleſs they would be ſteeped while it was yet day, before the evening of the Sabbath was entred. Nor put wooll to dying, unleſs it would take colour whilſt it was yet day: Nor put Flax into the oven, unleſs it would be dried whilſt it was yet day, &c. Talm. in Sab. per. 1.

They waſhed there face, and hands, and feet in warm water, to make them neat againſt they met the Sabbath, and the ancient wiſe men uſed to gather their ſcholers together and to ſay, Come let us go meet King Sabbath, Maym. in Sab. per. 36.

Towards Sun-ſetting, when the Sabbath was now approaching, they lighted up their Sabbath candle. Men and Women were bound to have a candle lighted up in their Houſes on the Sabbath, though they were never ſo poor, nay though they were forced to go a begging for Oyl for this purpoſe: and the lighting up of this candle was a part of making the Sabbath a delight: and women were eſpecially commanded to look to this buſineſs, &c. Ibid.

They accounted it a matter of ſpecial import and command, to hallow the Sabbath with ſome words; becauſe it is ſaid, Remember the Sabbath day to hallow it: and accordingly they uſed a two-fold action to this purpoſe, namely a ſolemn form of words in the way of hallowing it at its coming in, and this they called קידוש Kidduſh, and another ſolemn form of words in way of parting with it at its going forth, and this they called הבדלה Habdala.

The ſolemnity accompanying the hallowing of it at its coming in was thus. They ſpred and furniſhed the table with proviſion, and had the Sabbath candle burning by; and the maſter of the houſe took a cup of wine, and firſt rehearſed that portion of Scripture in *Gen.*2.ver. 1,2,3. and then bleſſed over the wine, and then pronounced the hallowing bleſſing of the Sabbath, and ſo drank off the wine, and the reſt of the company drank after him, and ſo they waſhed their hands and fell to eat. This helps to underſtand thoſe verſes of Perſius in Satyr. 5.

> ---------- At cum
> Herodis venere dies, unctaque feneſtris
> Diſpoſitæ pinguem nebulam vomuere lucernæ
> Portantes violas, rubrumque amplexa catinum
> Cauda natat thynni, tumet alba fidelia vino:
> Labra moves tacitus recutitaque Sabbata palles.

They uſed to eat their meals on the Sabbath, and thought they were bound to it in honour of the day, the firſt of which was this that they ate at the very entrance of it over night. Yea the poor that lived of alms were to eat three meals that day: and thoſe that were of ability were to get choice proviſion, and always better, at the leaſt not the ſame that they uſed on the week days.

The morning being come, and up, they went to morning prayer in the Synagogue, and when they had done there, they went home and ate their ſecond meal: and when they had done that, they went to ſome Beth Midraſh, or Divinity Lecture, and there ſpent the time till the afternoon was well come on; and then went home and ate their third meal, and ſo continued eating and drinking till the Sabbath went out.

At the going out of the Sabbath, which was about Sun-ſetting, the maſter of the family again gave thanks over a cup of wine; then over his candle [for he ſet up a parting candle too,] and then over ſome ſpices which they uſed for the refreſhing or reviving of any perſon that ſhould faint for ſorrow to part with the Sabbath [this is the reaſon they give themſelves;] And then he pronounced the הבדלה ſeparation bleſſing, by way of ſeperating between the Sabbath that was now going out, and the working day that was coming in. And ſo he and the company drank off a cup of wine and fell to their victuals again.

But to return again to our Evangeliſts. The retrogade courſe of Lukes method at this place, appeareth more conſpicuous then before. For in the beginning of the fifth Chapter ter he giveth the relation of the Disciples calling, and in the latter end of the fourth, this story of casting out the Devil in Capernaum Synagogue, which was after their calling. Which he hath so placed, the rather [besides what was said upon this matter before] because in the last verse of that fourth Chapter, he speaketh of Christs preaching all about in their Synagogues, and therefore beginneth the fifth Chapter with the story of the calling of the Disciples, that he might shew how Christ went attended with them in that perambulation. And in the same manner Matthew hath laid their call and that voyage close together for the very same intimation. Matth. 4.22,23. although other occurrences came between which he hath laid a great way off: As the story of Peters wives mother, which is brought in in this Section. He had said Matth. 4. 23. That Jesus went about all the Synagogues of Galilee, teaching in their Synagogues and preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness. He therefore beginneth first with his Doctrine, and layeth down the Sermon in the Mount, and then beginneth to speak of his Miracles at *Chap.*8. and first giveth the story of healing a Leper, which was the first Miracle he wrought in that perambulation: and then the healing of the Centurions servant, which was the first Miracle he wrought after the Sermon in the Mount: and there being come into mention of one Miracle done in Capernaum, he also bringeth in another [though not done at the same time, but before] that he might dispatch the works done in that place together. And thus the scope of his method is plain: and here again we see an example of what was said before, namely that the mention of a place doth oftentimes occasion these holy Pen-men, to speak of stories out of their proper time, because they would take up the whole story of that place all at once or together.

SECTION XXI.

MATTH. Chap. IV. Ver. 23, 24, 25.

A third perambulation of Galilee.

THE beginning of this Section, and the conclusion of the preceding, being laid together, the order appeareth plain and direct.

CHRIST had perambulated Galilee twice before, since he was baptized, but either altogether without, or else with very little retinue, but now attended with his Disciples and with great multitudes: and his fame is now spread throughout all Syria. Syria was exceeding numerously inhabited by Jews, and in divers things it is set in equal privilegial pace and equipage with the Land of Canaan. Insomuch that there is a controversie amongst our wise men [saith R. Menahem on *Deut.*11.] whether Syria which was subdued by David were of the Land of Israel or no.

In three things, say they, Syria was equal with the Land of Israel, and in three things it was equal with heathen Countries: The dust defiles, as heathen Countries dust doth, and he that brings a Bill of Divorce out of Syria, is as if he brought it out of a heathen Land; and he that sells his servant into Syria, is as he that sold him into a heathen Country: In three things it is equal to the Land of Israel: for he that buyes Land in Syria, is as if he bought it in the suburbs of Jerusalem, and it is liable to Tithes, to the year of release, and if he can go to it in cleanness, it is clean. Tosaphta in Kelim per.

MARK Chap. I. from Ver. 40. to the end of the Chapter.	LUKE Chap. V. Ver. 12. 13, 14, 15, 16.	MATTH. Chap. VIII. Ver. 2, 3, 4.

A Leper healed.

MARK and Luke do assure the order: the reason why Matthew hath placed this story, as he hath done, hath been observed instantly before: which some not having taken notice of, have supposed the story in Matthew, and in the other two Evangelists not to have been the same, but conceive they speak of two several Lepers healed at two several times: whereas the words of the Leper, and the words and action of Christ in all the three, do assert it plainly for one story; and had the reason of Matthews dislocation of it been observed, it would never have been apprehended otherwise.

Lepers in Israel might not come into the Cities, till the Priests had pronounced them clean, and so restored them again to the Congregation: for the Priests could not heal, but only judge of the malady: and whom they pronounced clean, were not healed wholly of the disease, but were enlarged only from their separation: The Leprosie continued still, though they were absolved from their uncleanness by the Priest [a very pregnant pregnant emblem of original ſin,] but the danger of infection was over, and ſo they were reſtored again to humane ſociety. If this Leper had not yet been under the Prieſts abſolution, his faith, or his earneſt deſire of his recovery, or both, enforceth him to break thoſe bounds that were ſet him, and he ſtraineth courteſie to come to Chriſt in a City, Luke 5. 12. If he were abſolved by the Prieſts already from his uncleanneſs, yet ſeeketh he to Chriſt to make him clean from his diſeaſe, which the Prieſts could only pronounce him clean from: the Prieſts could only pronounce him clean to the Congregation; Chriſt makes him clean to himſelf.

SECTION XXIII.

MARK Chap. II. from the beginning to Ver. 15. LUKE Chap. V. from Ver. 17. to Ver. 29. MATTH. Chap. IX. from Ver. 2. to Ver. 10.

CHRIST healeth a palſie man: forgiveth ſins: calleth MATTHEW.

MARK and Luke do again confirm the order: but Matthews diſlocation of the ſame ſtory, doth breed ſome ſcruple. For the clearing of which, let us firſt begin at the very concluſion of this Section, and make good the order there in the end, and that will illuſtrate the propriety of it here in the beginning: We have parted the ſtory of the calling of Levi, from the ſtory of the feaſt that he made for Chriſt after his call, although all the Evangeliſts that handle his ſtory have laid them cloſe together: The warrant upon which we have parted them, although they be ſo nearly joyned in the Text, is from theſe two things: 1. From undoubted evidence, by the current of the hiſtory, and the progreſs of the Evangeliſts hitherto, which makes it plain, that Levies calling was at that time that we are now upon, or as it is laid in the end of this Section. 2. From this evidence, that his feaſt was not of a good while after his call, in that Matthew ſaith, while he was ſpeaking, namely about faſting, and putting new cloth into an old garment, &c. [which ſpeech both the other Evangeliſts place at Levies feaſt or preſently upon it:] Jairus came unto him. See Matth. 9. 18. Mark 2. 15, 18, 19. Luke 5. 29, 33, &c. Now it is plain by the proceſs of the hiſtory of Mark and Luke, that very many things, and a good ſpace of time intercurred between the calling of Matthew or Levi, and the coming of Jairus: for Levies call is in Mark 2. 14. and Luke 5. 27. and the ſtory of Jairus his coming is not till Matth. 5. 22. and Luke 8. 41. Now in that theſe words that Chriſt was in ſpeaking when Jairus came to him, Matth. 9. 18. were ſpoken at Levies feaſt, Luke 5. 29, 33. it is apparent that his feaſt was a good ſpace of time after his call: and hence have we warrant for the putting of thoſe ſtories in the harmonizing of the Evangeliſts. The three indeed that ſpeak of theſe ſtories do handle them together, becauſe they would diſpatch Levies ſtory at once: and Mark and Luke do mention what occurred at his feaſt, but when they have done that, they return to the ſtory and time, that properly followed in order after his calling.

Here therefore is the reaſon of Matthews ſo far diſlocating the ſtory of the palſie man that is before us as he hath done: namely becauſe in that ninth Chapter he pitcheth upon the time of Levies feaſt, and from that time goes on forward with the ſtory ſucceeding it: And ſo having pitched upon the time of his feaſt, he alſo brings in the ſtory of his call, becauſe he would take up his whole ſtory in one place, as the other Evangeliſts have alſo done: and with the ſtory of his call, he hath likewiſe brought in the ſtory of the palſie man becauſe it occurred at the ſame time.

Matthew is not aſhamed to proclaim the baſeneſs of his own profeſſion before he was called, that that grace might be magnified that had called him. He was a Publican [and as it ſeemeth] at the Cuſtom-houſe of Capernaum, to gather cuſtom and tribute of thoſe that paſſed over the water, or that had to deal on that Sea of Galilee. The Jeruſ. Talm. hath this Canon. Demai. fol. 23. col. 1. חבר שנעשה גבי רוחין אותו מחבורתו: A Phariſee [or one of the religion] that turns Publican, they turn him out of his order, but doth he leave his Publicaniſm? They reſtore him to his order again: ſo unconſiſtent did they repute this profeſſion and religion. Maym. in Gezelah. per. 5. Men of whom it may be preſumed that they are robbers, and of whom it may be preſumed that all their wealth is gotten of rapine, becauſe their trade is a trade of robbers, as Publicans and theeves, it is unlawful to uſe their wealth, &c. He becomes an Apoſtle and a Penman of the Goſpel: He wrote his Goſpel firſt of all the four; and wrote it in Greek, though he wrote it more particularly for Hebrews: for the Hebrew Tongue was ſo loſt, that it was not ordinarily to be underſtood; and the Greek Bible was the readieſt in the hands of the unlearned, to examine the quotations from the Old Teſtament, that he or any other of the divine Penmen ſhould alledge: The Prophets had been but very lately before Matthews time turned into the Chaldee Tongue by Jonathan ben Uzziel, and the Law by Onkeles a little after; and the Jeruſalem Talmud tells of a Targum or tranſlation of Job, which Gamaliel Pauls Maſter had. *Shabb. fol.*15. *col.*3. and all this becauſe the original Hebrew was not commonly underſtood. And in the reading of the Law and Prophets in the Synagogues, they had Interpreters that rendred it into the Syriack, as was ſaid a little before, becauſe they underſtood not the Original; therefore it were unreaſonable that Matthew ſhould write in Hebrew, a Language then to the moſt unknown.

SECTION XIV.

An infirm man healed at Bethesda.

FOR the juſtifying and clearing of the order in this place, theſe things are to be taken into conſideration. 1. That the firſt thing that the two Evangeliſts Mark and Luke, who are moſt exact for order, have placed after the calling of Levi, is, the Diſciples plucking the ears of Corn. They have indeed interſerted Levies feaſt, and Johns Diſciples queſtioning about faſting, but that was more for the diſpatching of Levies ſtory altogether, then for the propriety of their ſubſequence each to other, as hath been ſhewed already. 2. In that the ſtory of the Diſciples plucking the ears of Corn, is joyned by them next, we are to look for a Paſsover between, for till the Paſsover was over, and the firſtfruits ſheaf offered the ſecond day after, it was not lawful to meddle with any Corn, to uſe, or to eat it, *Lev.*23.14. 3. Chriſt had ſaid in the field of Sichem, that it was then four months to harveſt, Joh. 4. 35. that is, to the Paſsover, at what time their Barley harveſt began, *Lev.*23.11. &c. Now, caſting up the time from that place and ſpeech, taken up in the current of the ſtory from thence hither, we cannot but conclude the four months to be now up, and this to be the Paſsover, then thought upon in thoſe words. And we may conceive that the Evangeliſt hath the rather omitted to call it by its proper name, or to ſpeak it expreſly, that this feaſt was the Paſsover, becauſe in that ſpeech he had given fair intimation, how to underſtand the next feaſt of the Jews that he ſhould ſpeak of. He mentioneth indeed a Paſsover in Chap. 6.4. but we ſhall find by the progreſs of the ſtory in the other Evangeliſts, that that was yet ſo far yet to come, that it cannot in the leaſt wiſe be ſuppoſed to be that which was to come within four months after Chriſts being in the field of Sichem. The feaſt of the Jews therefore that he ſpeaketh of in the firſt verſe of this Chapter, muſt needs be that Paſsover referred to Joh. 4. 35. and this conſidered doth clear the order.

At this Paſsover a man is healed at Bethesda, who had been diſeaſed from ſeven years before Chriſt was born. This was a pool firſt laid up by Solomon, as may be conjectured from Joſephus de Bel. lib. 5. cap. 13. compared with *Nehem.*3. and at firſt called Solomons Pool, but now Bethesda, or the place of mercy from its beneficial virtue. It was ſupplied with water from the fountain Siloam, which repreſented Davids and Chriſts Kingdom, *Iſa.*8.6.

The five porches about it, and the man, when healed, carrying his bed out of one of them, calls to mind the מבואות Mevuoth or Entries that are ſo much ſpoken of in the Treatiſe Erubbin, the carrying of any thing out of which into the ſtreet on the Sabbath day, was to carry מרשות יחיד לרשות רבים out of a private place into a publick, and was prohibited.

He is hereupon convented before the Sanhedrin, and there he doth moſt openly confeſs and prove himſelf to be the Meſſias: And he aſſerteth that all Power and Judgment is put into his hand, and that he hath the ſame authority for the diſpenſing of the affairs of the New Teſtament, that the Father had for the old. And this he doth ſo plainly, that he leaveth their unbelief henceforward without excuſe.

The Jews ſpeak of divers ominous things that occurred fourty years before the deſtruction of the City; As, It is a tradition that fourty years before the Sanctuary was deſtroyed the Weſtern Lamp went out, and the ſcarlet liſt kept its redneſs, and the Lords lot came up on the left hand. And they locked up the Temple doors at even, yet when they roſe in the morning they found them open. Jeruſ. in Joma fol.43. col.3. And, Sanhedr. fol.18. col.1. Fourty years before the Temple was deſtroyed, power of judging in capital matters was taken away from Iſrael: Now there are ſome that reckon but thirty eight years between the death of Chriſt and the deſtruction of the City; and if that be ſo, then theſe ominous preſages occurred this year that we are upon. It being juſt fourty years, by that account, from this Paſsover at which Chriſt healeth the diſeaſed man at Bethesda, to the time of Titus his pitching his Camp and ſiege about Jeruſalem, which was at a Paſsover. But of this let the Reader judge.

LUKE Chap. IV. from the beginning to Ver. 12. MARK Chap. II. from Ver. 23, to the end: and Chap. III. from the beginning to Ver. 7. MARK Chap. XII. from the beginning to Ver. 15.

The Disciples plucking ears of Corn: A withered hand healed on the Sabbath.

THE words Σάββατον δευτεροπρῶτον which Luke hath used ver. 1. being rightly understood, will help to clear the order of this Section, and to confirm the order of the preceding.

The Law enjoyned that the next morrow after the eating of the Passover, should be kept holy like a Sabbath, Exod. 12. 16. and accordingly it is called a Sabbath, Lev. 23. 7, 11. And there the Law also enjoyns that the next day after that Sabbatical day, they shall offer the sheaf of first fruits to the Lord: and from that day they should count seven Sabbaths to Pentecost, which was their solemn festival, and thanksgiving for that half harvest, viz. Barley harvest which they had then inned, Lev. 23. 15, 16, 17. That day therefore that they offered their first Barley sheaf, and from which they were to count the seven Sabbaths or weeks forward, being the second day in the Passover week, the Sabbaths that followed, did carry a memorial of that day in their name till the seven were run out: as the first was called Σάββατον δευτεροπρῶτον, the first second-day Sabbath; The next Σάββατον δευτεροδεύτερον, the second second-day Sabbath: the next Σάββατον δευτερότριτον, the third second-day Sabbath, and so the rest of all the seven through. Now let it be observed, 1. That no Corn, no not ears of Corn might be eaten till the first-fruits sheaf was offered and waved before the Lord, Lev. 23. 14. 2. That it was waved the second day of the Passover week. 3. That this was the first Sabbath after that second day, when the Disciples pluckt the ears of Corn, and it will plainly evince that we must look for a Passover before this story, and so it will shew the warranty and justness of taking in the fifth of John next before it.

But the order of Matthew may breed some scruple, and that the rather, because that though he hath placed this story after divers occurrences that are yet to come, yet he hath prefaced it with this circumstance, At that time: Now this expression doth not always center stories in the same point of time, but sometimes it hath made a transition betwixt two stories, whose times were at a good distance asunder: as Gen. 38. 1. Deut. 10. 8. and so likewise the phrase, In these days, Matth. 3. 1.

The latter story about healing the man with the withered hand, is so unanimously ordered by all the three, after the other, that there is no doubt of the method of it.

It was a special part of religion which the Jews used on the Sabbath, to eat good meat, and better then they did on the week days: yea they thought themselves bound to eat three meals on that day [as was said before,] and for this they alledge, Isa. 58. 13. Vid. Kimch. ibid. & Tanch. fol. 1. Talm. & Maym. in Shab. &c. compare Phil. 3. 19.

Observe how far the Disciples are from such an observance, and from such provision, when a few ears of Barley [for that was the Corn plucked] must make a dinner.

The plucking of ears of Corn on the Sabbath was forbidden by their Canons verbatim. Talm. in Shab. per. 7. & Maymon. Shab. per. 7, & 8. He that reapeth Corn on the Sabbath, to the quantity of a fig, is guilty. And plucking Corn is as reaping: And whosoever plucketh up any thing from it growing, is guilty, under the notion of reaping.

Christ before his healing the withered hand, is questioned by them; Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath day? Their decretals allowed it in some cases. Tanch. fol. 9. col. 2. our Doctors teach the danger of life dispenseth with the Sabbath. And so doth Circumcision and the healing of that. But this is a rule saith Rabbi Akibah, that that which may be done on the eve of the Sabbath, dispenseth not with the Sabbath. Talm. in Shabb. per. 19. Such was this case. Compare Luke 13. 14. They accounted that this might have been done any other day.

Great multitudes follow Christ: who healeth all that come to him.

THE connexion that both these Evangelists have at this story, doth abundantly assert the order. The Pharisees took counsel to destroy him, but when Jesus knew it, he departed, &c. The Herodians joyn with them in their plotting, which seem to have been these learned and great men of the Nation who had gone into the service of Herod the Great, and now of his son mentioned before.

LUKE Chap. VI. from Ver. 12. to Ver. 20. MARK Chap. III. from Ver. 13. to the middle of Ver. 19. MATTH. Chap. V. Ver. 1.

The twelve Apostles chosen.

LUKE and Mark do methodize and fix the time of the Sermon in the Mount; which Matthew hath laid very early in his Gospel, because he would first treat of Christs Doctrine, and then of his Miracles.

In a mount neer Capernaum, he ordaineth a Ministry for the Church of the Gospel, and delivereth the doctrine of the Gospel, as Moses at Sinai had done the like for the Law. The number of the present Ministers appointed, whom he calleth Apostles, was twelve, agreeable to the twelve Tribes of Israel: that as they were the beginning of the Church of the Jews, so are these of the Gentiles: and to both these numbers of twelve joyned together, the number of the four and twenty Elders, the representative of the whole Church, Rev. 4. & 5, &c hath relation, Rev. 21.12,14.

The Text allotteth these ends of their appointment: 1. That they might be with Christ, to see his glory, Joh. 1.14. and to be witnesses of all things that he did, Acts 10.39,41. Luk. 24.48. 2. That he might send them forth to preach. 3. To heal diseases and cast out Devils.

Before they were completed in all their divine endowments, they grew on by degrees; They were auditors a good while, and learning the doctrine of the Gospel, that they were to preach, before they set upon that work: for though Christ chose them now, yet it is well towards a twelvemonth, before he sends them abroad a preaching, as will appear in the process of the story. So that besides the time that they had spent before this their choosing, they also spent that in hearing and learning from the mouth of their Master, what they were to teach when he should employ them: So that even the Apostles themselves at the first setting forth into the Ministry, did not preach by the Spirit, but what they had learned and gotten by hearing, study, conference and meditation.

As the Lord under the Law, and from the first founding of that Church, did set apart a peculiar order and function of men for the service of the Sanctuary, so did he under the Gospel, a peculiar order and function for the Ministry of the Gospel; and this no more to be usurped upon, then that: Now as under the Law there were several sorts of men within that function, as High-Priests, Chief-Priests, ordinary Priests and Levites, but all paled in with that peculiarity that no other might meddle with their function: so likewise at the first rising of the Gospel, there were Apostles, Evangelists, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, according to the necessity of those present times, but all hedged in with a distinctive ministerial calling that none other might nor may break in upon. All the Titles and names that Ministers are called by throughout the new Testament, are such as denote peculiarity and distinctiveness of order; as, Wise men and Scribes, Mat. 23.34. Now the Jews knew not, nor ever had heard of Wise men and Scribes, חכמים וסופרים, but the learned of their Nation distinguisht for others, by peculiarity of order and ordination: And if they understood not Christ in such a sense, namely men of a distinct order, they understood these Titles Wise men and Scribes, in a sense that they had never known nor heard of before: Ministers in the new Testament are called Elders, Bishops, Angels of the Churches, Pastors, Teachers: now all these were Synagogue terms, and every one of them denoted peculiarity of order, as might be shewed abundantly from their Synagogue antiquities: The Jews knew no Elders but men by their order and function distinguisht from other men. A Bishop translates the word חזן Chazan, An Angel of the Congregation translates the title שליח צבור Sheliach tsibbor, A Pastor translates the word פרנס

Parnas, And a Teacher tranſlates מורה במורש the Divinity Reader: Now theſe terms had never been known by any to ſignifie otherwaies then men of a peculiar function and diſtinct order.

SECTION XXVIII.

MATTH. Chap. V. and VI, and VII.

LUKE Chap. VI. from Ver. 20. to the end of the Chapter.

The Sermon in the Mount.

THe proof of the order doth not need to be inſiſted upon; Luke doth manifeſtly aſſert it. It had been foretold by the Prophet, All thy children ſhall be taught of God, Iſa. 54. 13. which if applied to the Gentiles, they had been taught by the Devil, his Oracles and Idols: If applied to the Jews, they indeed had been taught by the Lord in his Prophets, but theſe were but men like themſelves, but this Prophecy foretells the preaching of Chriſt who was God himſelf, he teaching and converſing amongſt them, he then the great teacher of the world, Iſa. 2. 2. and 51. 4. doth from the mount neer Capernaum, deliver his Evangelical Law, not for the aboliſhing of the Law and Prophets, but for their cleering and fulfilling.

He firſt beginneth with pronouncing bleſſings, as the moſt proper and comfortable tenour of the Goſpel: and hereby he calls us to remember Gerizim and Ebal, Deut. 27. For though Iſrael be enjoyned there to pronounce both bleſſings and curſes upon thoſe mountains, yet are the curſes only ſpecified by name and number, for the curſe came by the Law, but he that was to bleſs was to come: which thing taketh place very comfortably and harmoniouſly here. Luke addeth that he alſo denounced woes; as, Bleſſed be the poor: Bleſſed are ye that hunger now, &c. But wo unto you that are rich: Woe unto you that are full, &c. according to which form the Jews conceive, the bleſſings and curſes were pronounced by Iſrael from thoſe two mountains mentioned, Talm. in Sotah. per 7. & Toſapht. ibi. per. 8. How did Iſrael pronounce the bleſſings and the curſes? Six tribes went up to the top of mount Gerizim, and ſix to the top of mount Ebal: the Prieſts, and the Levites, and the Ark ſtood below in the middeſt between; They turned their faces towards mount Gerizim, and began with bleſſing; Bleſſed is the man that maketh not any graven or molten Image an abomination to the Lord, &c. And both parties anſwered and ſaid Amen. Then turned they their faces towards mount Ebal, and began with curſing; Curſed be the man that maketh any graven or molten Image an abomination to the Lord, &c. and both parties anſwered Amen: And ſo of the reſt.

2. He proceedeth laying out of the latitude of the Law, according to its full extent and intention, and ſheweth the wretchedneſs of their traditional gloſſes, that had made the Law of no effect. They underſtood the Law, Thou ſhalt not kill, only of actual murder, and that committed by a mans own hand; for if he hired another to kill him, or turned a wild beaſt upon him, which ſlew him, this they accounted not murder for which to be queſtioned by the Sanhedrin, though it deſerved the judgment of God, Talm. in Sanhedr. per 9. Maym. in Retſea per 2. but he ſhews that the command extends to the prohibiting of cauſleſs anger, and that that deſerves the judgment of God, that the uncharitable ſcornings of a brother, under their uſual word Raka, deſerved the judgment of the Sanhedrin, and eſpecially the calling him fool [in Solomons ſenſe,] or cenſuring raſhly his ſpiritual eſtate, deſerved hell fire. They conſtrued the command, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery. barely of the act of adultery, and that with another mans wife. Trip. targ. in marg. ad Exod. 20. but he tells, that it prohibits, luſtful thoughts and looks, and that looking upon a woman to luſt after her, is adultery in heart. Rabban Simeon delighted to look upon fair women, that he might take occaſion by the ſight of their beauty, to bleſs God. [A fair excuſe.] Tal. Jeruſ. in Beracoth. fol. 12. col. 3.

The Law had permitted divorces, only in caſe of fornication, Deut. 24. 1. but they had extended it to any cauſe, and to ſo looſe an extent, that R. Ahiba ſaid, A man may put away his wife, if he ſee another woman that pleaſeth him better than ſhe. Gittin per. 9. The Law had forbidden forſwearing, or ſwearing falſly, thereupon they had made bold to take liberty of vain ſwearing at pleaſure, ſo that, what they ſwore were not falſe; as ſee Tal. & Maym. in Shevuoh.

Theſe curſed conſtructions of theirs by which they had made the Law of no effect, he divinely damneth, and ſtateth the proper and true intent of the Law in theſe caſes.

3. He preſcribeth Chriſtian duties, and eſpecially rules of piety, charity and ſincerity, and condemneth the hypocritical vainglory of the Phariſees about theſe things. They uſed when they gave almes in the Synagogue, to have it openly proclaimed and publiſhed what they gave, as if a Trumpet had been ſounded for every one to take notice of their charity, Jeruſ. in Demai, fol. 23. *col.*2. And they had an open proclaiming in the ſtreets, for the calling of the poor to gather the corner of the field that they had left them, Id. Peah. per. 4, &c. They loved to be ſeen praying in the ſtreets, eſpecially in their Phylactery prayers morning and evening, beſides other occaſional Oraiſons, Id. Beraçoth. per. 1, & 2. They uſed to pray thoſe prayers often, and often other prayers, in the Synagogue, apart and diſtinct from the prayers or ſervice that the Synagogue was then upon, and ſo their particular devotion was the more ſubject to be obſerved, Ib. fol. 8. col. 3, &c. They uſed on their faſting days to uſe ſuch a carriage and demeanour in face and garb, that all might obſerve that it was faſting day with them, *Piske. Toſaph. in Taanith. per.*1, &c. And in all their devotions and demeanour they hunted after the praiſe of men; which he condemneth, and urgeth for ſincerity and care to approve the heart to God.

their

Throughout all this Sermon, this great oracle of divine truth, doth not only ſhew and hold out the ſacred doctrines of faith, manners, duty and eternal life, but he evidenceth throughout, that he was throughly acquainted with all the learning, doctrines and traditions of thoſe times. And to the explication of this divine Sermon, is required quick and ready verſedneſs in the Jews Records, for Chriſt hath an eye and reference to their language, doctrines, cuſtoms, traditions and opinions almoſt in every line.

SECTION XXIX.

LUKE Chap. VII. from the beginning to Ver.11. MATTH. Chap. VIII. Ver. 1. and then Ver. 5, to Ver. 14.

A Centurion ſervant healed.

LUKES tranſition, When he had ended all his ſayings, doth prove the order. The four verſes that ſpeak about the Leper in Matthew, were taken up before, and their order ſpoken to then.

A proſelyte Captain that had ſo far affected the Jews religion that he had built a Synagogue in Capernaum, having ſeen and heard the works and words of Chriſt, believeth him for the Meſſias, and beggeth of him the healing of his ſervant. Which that Chriſt could do, he concludeth from a compariſon of the power of his own word and command among his ſouldiers: for ſince they were ready to come, and go, or run at his command, much more doth he conclude, was the word of Chriſt of power to command away the diſeaſe of his ſervant if he pleaſed. Chriſt had often in his Sermon on the Mount, aſſerted the authority of his own word, againſt and above the words of their traditionaries, and equalized it with that word that gave the Law. And here is a very high and ſeaſonable confeſſion of the authority of that word, made by this Centurion, and an evidence of the power of it by the healing of his ſervant at diſtance. The mans faith is juſtly extolled though he were a Gentile, and the caſting off the Jews is clearly foretold, which Chriſt had not ſo plainly ſpoken out hitherto.

SECTION XXX.

LUKE Chap. VII. Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17.

The Widows Son of Naim raiſed.

AS Chriſt yeſterday recovered a young man from the point of death, ſo doth he another to day from death it ſelf. The words ἐν τῇ ἑξῆς ver. 11. do confirm the order. The day after, &c.

*Joſeph. Antiq. lib.*20. cap. 5. ſpeaks of the Village Nais, as being upon the edge of Samaria, in the way as the Galileans paſſed to Jeruſalem. And it is not improbable that Chriſt was going thitherward at this time to one of the Feſtivals; moſt like to Pentecoſt.

As he comes to Naim he meets with a dead man carried out [מתמושל in Talmudick Language] for they might not bury within their Cities, no nor at the Levites Cities, within the compaſs of that ground without the City that was allotted for its ſuburbs, *Maym. in Shemitah veiobel per.*13. [If Jeruſalem went parallel with the Levites Cities in this, as it did in other things, Chriſts Sepulchre will not prove ſo near the City as it hath been commonly reputed.] He raiſeth this dead man openly, and in the ſight of all the company there preſent, which was very great, and yet when afterward he raiſeth Jairus daughter, he chargeth that thoſe that had ſeen him do the miracle which were but five perſons, that they ſhould tell no man what was done, *Luk.*8.56. which prohibition was given rather in regard of the place where it was done, then in any other reſpect, it being in Capernaum againſt which City he had denounced a curſe before.

SECTION XXXI.

LUKE Chap. VII. from verſ. 18. to ver. 36. MATTH. Chap. XI. from ver. 2. to ver. 20.

JOHNS Meſſage to Chriſt: Chriſts teſtimony of John.

THE Tranſition of Luke from the Stories before, about the raiſing of the dead man and healing the Centurions Servant, And the Diſciples of John ſhewed him of all theſe things, doth confirm the order.

JOHN from Macherus Caſtle where he lay Priſoner, ſendeth two of his Diſciples to Chriſt to enquire of him, Whether he were he that ſhould come; Not that John was ignorant who he was, having had ſo many demonſtrations of him as he had had, and having given ſo ample teſtimony of him as he had done, *Joh.*1.34,36. & 3.29,30. Nor that Johns Diſciples were ſo wilfully ignorant of him as not to be perſwaded by their Maſter that he was he, but his meſſage to him ſeems to this purpoſe; John and his Diſciples had heard of the great and many miracles that Chriſt had done, healing the ſick, and raiſing the dead, &c. and it may be, they thought it ſtrange that Chriſt amongſt all his miraculous workings, would not work Johns liberty out of thraldom, who lay a priſoner for him, and for the Goſpel he preached before him: And this, may be, was the bottom of their queſtion, Art thou he that ſhall come, or look we for another? As expecting ſomewhat more from the Meſſias, then they had yet obtained. They received a full anſwer to their queſtion by the miracles they ſaw wrought, which abundantly proved that he was he that was to come. But as to their expectation of his miraculous enlargement of John, his anſwer was, that his work was to preach the Goſpel, and that it was a bleſſed thing not to take any offence at him, but to yield and ſubmit to his wiſe diſpenſations. And accordingly when the meſſengers of John were returned, he giveth a glorious teſtimony concerning him to the people, but yet ſheweth how far one truly and fully acquainted and ſtated in the Kingdom of Heaven, went beyond him in judging of it, who looked for temporal redemption by it.

The Method of Matthew is ſomewhat difficult here, but he ſeemeth purpoſely to have joyned the miſſion of Chriſts Diſciples and Johns Diſciples together. I ſuppoſe Chriſt was at Jeruſalem when Johns meſſengers came to him: and if it were at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, John had then been ſeven or eight months in priſon.

SECTION XXXII.

MATTH. Chap. XI. from Ver. 20. to the end of the Chapter.

Chorazin and Bethſaida upbraided.

BEſides Matthews continuing this portion to that that went before, the upbraiding of theſe Cities is ſo anſwerable to the matter contained in the end of the former Section, that it eaſily ſhews it to be ſpoken at the ſame time: See Ver. 17, 18, 19. of this Chapter.

When Chriſt ſaith, that if the things done in theſe Cities, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, and Sodom, and Gomorrha, they would have repented, and would have remained till now; he underſtandeth not ſaving grace and ſaving repentance in them, but ſuch an external humiliation as would have preſerved them from ruine: As the caſe was with Nineveh, they repented and were delivered from the threatned deſtruction: their repentance was not to ſalvation of the perſons, but to the preſervation of their City: as Ahabs humbling prevented the preſent judgment, and not his final condemnation.

SECTION XXXIII.

Mary Magdalen weepeth at Chriſts feet, and waſheth them with tears, &c.

THE continuation of this portion in Luke to that in *Sect.*31. will plead for its order: and the reader will eaſily obſerve, that the interpoſition of the preceding Section in Matthew, is ſo far from interrupting the ſtory, that it is neceſſarily to be taken in there, and is an illuſtration of it. The actings of the two ſeveral parties in this Section, the Phariſee that invited Chriſt to eat with him, and the woman ſinner that comes and weeps at his feet for mercy, may ſeem to have had ſome riſe from, or ſome occaſional reference to

to the ſpeech of Chriſt in the two Sections next preceding. In the former he had ſaid, The ſon of man came eating and drinking, and this poſſibly might induce the Phariſee to his invitation: and in the latter he had ſaid, Come unto me ye that are weary and heavy laden, and that might invite the woman to her addreſs.

This woman was Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, who was alſo called Mary Magdalen; of whom there is mention in the very beginning of the next Chapter. That ſhe was Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, John giveth us ground to aſſert, John 11. 2. as we ſhall ſhew when we come there: where we ſhall evidence, that theſe words, It was that Mary which annointed the Lord with oyntment, and wiped his feet with her hair, can properly be referred to no ſtory but this before us: And that Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus was called Mary Magdalen, we ſhall prove in the next Section: Chriſt in the ſtory in Sect. 31. when Johns diſciples came to him we ſuppoſed to be at Jeruſalem, and anſwerably it may be conceived that this paſſage occurred at Bethany, where Simon the Phariſee may not improbably be held to be the ſame with Simon the Leper, Matth. 26.6. where this very woman again annointed him.

SECTION XXXIV.

LUKE Chap. VIII. Ver. 1, 2, 3.

Certain women that followed Chriſt.

LUKE again is the warrant for the order. In the former ſtory he had ſpoken of one woman that had found healing and mercy with Chriſt, and he ſpeaks here of divers, and among them Mary Magdalen. Now that ſhe was Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, let but theſe two arguments be weighed, not to inſiſt upon more. The firſt is this: If Mary Magdalen were not Mary the ſiſter of Lararus, then Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus gave no attendance at Chriſts death, nor had any thing to do about his buriall [or at leaſt is not mentioned as an agent at either] which is a thing ſo incredible to conceive, that it needs not much diſcourſe to ſet forth the incredibility of it. There is mention of Mary Magdalen, and Mary the mother of James and Salom, Mark. 15. 40. and Joanna, Luk. 24. 10. but not a word of Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus. She had twice annointed Chriſt in the compaſs of that very week, ſhe had ever been as neer and as zealous a woman diſciple as any that followed him, and her reſidence was at Bethany hard by Jeruſalem, and what is now become of her in theſe two great occaſions of attending upon Chriſts death and imbalming? Had ſhe left Chriſt, and neglected her attendance on him, at this time above all others? or have the Evangeliſts, whilſt they mention the other that attended, left her out? It is ſo unreaſonable to believe either of theſe, that even neceſſity inforceth us to conclude, that when they name Mary Magdalen, they mean Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus. And Secondly take this Argument of Baronius, which hath more weight in it then at firſt ſight it doth ſeem to have, who in his Annals ad Annum Chriſti 32, goes about to prove this thing that we aſſert, and he ſhews how it alſo was the opinion of the Fathers, and thoſe in former times. His words are theſe: We ſay upon the teſtimony of John the Evangeliſt, nay of Chriſt himſelf, that it plainly appears, that Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, and Mary Magdalen was but one and the ſame perſon. For when in Bethany the ſame ſiſter of Lazarus annointed the feet of Jeſus, and Judas did thereupon take offence, Jeſus himſelf checking the boldneſs of the furious Diſciple, ſaid, Let her alone, that ſhe may keep it againſt the day of my burial: Now that ſhe that brought the oyntment to the ſepulcher for the annointing of the body of Jeſus, was Mary Magdalen, is affirmed by Mark, and that ſhe with Mary the Mother of James and Salome did that office. When therefore neither in him, nor in any other of the Evangeliſts there is any mention of Mary the Siſter of Lazarus, who was foretold by our Saviour that ſhe ſhould do that office, it may eaſily be known that both theſe Maries were but one and the ſame. At Joh, 12. 7. we ſhall ſhew that that ſpeech muſt be conſtrued to ſuch a ſenſe, as he hath put on it, ſave only that following the vulgar Latin, he reads ſine ut ſervet, which indeed makes his ſenſe the fuller, but though not ſo read, yet will that ſenſe be full enough.

It is to be objected indeed, that Mary was called Magdalen, from the place Magdala, of which there is mention Matth. 15. 29. and in Tal. Jeruſ. in Maazaroth. fol 50. col. 3. in This paſſage, R. Jochanan in the name of R. Simeon ben Jochai. He had two incloſures, one in Magdala, the other in Tiberias, &c. And in Beracoth fol. 13. col. 1. there is mention of one ר יודה מגדלא R. Juda of Magdala: now Magdala being in Galilee [as ſome ſeat it] or over againſt Galilee beyond Jordan [as others,] it was ſo very far diſtant from Bethany, that Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, whoſe Town was Bethany, could not poſſibly be called Magdalen from Magdala. To which we may firſt give Baronius his anſwer, who alſo mentioneth this objection; That though ſhe were of Bethany by original, and the native ſeat of her fathers houſe, yet might ſhe alſo be of Magdala by marriage, or ſome occaſional occasional residence otherwise. And in the second place, we may adduce what the Talmudicks speak of one מרים מגדלא Mary Magdalen, or Megaddala, for the word is of doubtful pointing, whom they character for a notorious strumpet in those times that Jesus of Nazareth lived. Alphez. in Gittin. fol. 605. Some man finds a fly in his cup, and takes her out and will not drink, and this was the temper of Papus the son of Judah, who locked the door upon his wife whensoever he went out. The glossaries R. Solamon and Nissim, upon this passage comment thus: Papus the son of Judah, was husband למרים מגדלא to Mary Magdala, and whensoever he went forth he locked the door upon his wife, lest she should speak with any man, which was a usage unfitting, and hereupon there arose discord between them, and she plaid the whore against him. Now they construe the latter word מגדלא as signifying one that broided or plated her hair, which ἐμπλεκὴ τριχῶν Peter blames in women, 1 Pet. 3. 3. Tal. Babyl, Venet. in Sanhedr. per. 7. is speaking of one that inticed to Idolatry, and how he was brought to the Sanhedrin and stoned. And thus, say they, they did to Ben Saida in Lydda, and hanged him on the Passeover eve. Ben Saida was the son of Pandira. [They call our Saviour blasphemously by this name Ben Saida.] And a little after. His mother was Saida. His mother was Mary Magdalen, Mary the platter of womens hair. vid etiam Schab. fol. 104. And in Chagigah fol. 4. The Angel of death said to his messenger, Go fetch me מרים מגדלא שיעד נשויא Mary the broider of womens hair; He went and fetched Mary Magdala, or Mary the broider of hair for young men. Now whether the word מגדלא be read Magdela or Magdila, a Participle in Hiphil, which is most proper, and so warranted by Aruch in גדל and Kelim per. 15.] or Megaddela in Piel: either of them in a Greek dress, especially the former, come so near the sound of the word in hand, that we may very well construe Mary Magdalen in this Talmudick construction for a woman of common infamy, and that hath this nick-name of Magdila from her lascivious dress and carriage. Observe Lukes expression, Μαρία ἡ καλουμένη Μαγδαληνὴ, Mary which was called Magdalen: which manner of phrase is rarely used when persons are named after their Country.

SECTION XXXV.

MATTH. Chap. XII. from Ver. 22, to Ver. 46.

MARK Chap. III. from the last clause of Ver. 19. And they went into an house: to Ver. 31.

A Devil cast out: Christ called Belzebub: Blasphemy against the holy Ghost.

THe series and consequence of this Section will require some cleering. 1. The reader here seeth that Mark hath not mentioned any thing from the ordaining of the twelve Apostles unto this place: for the holy Ghost that held all their pens, did so dispose them, that sometimes one should speak the story, sometimes another, and sometimes more or all of them together. Now though the first clause of this Section in Mark, And they went into an house, be joyned so close to the Apostles ordaining, as if that were the next thing done; yet the current of the story in the rest of the Evangelists, doth shew that it is not to be taken in, at that instant: and indeed the progress of the story even in Mark himself, doth shew that this is the proper place of it, as will appear to him that shall precisely observe it. 2. Matthew hath laid this story of casting out a Devil, &c. next after two stories that occurred before the Sermon in the Mount, as hath appeared in its place: the reason of which may be supposed to be, because he would take up the exceptions of the Scribes and Pharisees together: That this story in Matthew lieth in juncture to these next succeeding will readily appear in them. 3. There is a story in Luke 11. so like this, that one would think it were the very same; for there is mention of the same miracle, casting out a Devil, and the same cavil of the Pharisees, and the same answer of Christ: and yet the progress of the history of Luke thither, and especially the coming off from that story, do perswade that it was another story. For Luke chaineth such following passages to it, that cannot possibly be brought in concurrent with the current of these Evangelists now before us. And we shall observe hereafter, that Christ in his latter time did repeat over again very many of those things that he had spoken a good while before: as Moses his Deutronomy was but a rehersal of things that had been acted and spoken in his former time. The same devillishness was in the Scribes and Pharisees in all places, and it was accordingly to be met withal by Christ in more places then one: They had taken up a consent to beat down the dignity and authority of his Miracles, by asserting that whatsoever he did, he did by the power of Magick, and this corrupt blood ran up in their veins every where whersoever he met them, and therefore it is no wonder if the same words be in their mouths here and there, when the same rotten principle was every where in their hearts. Observe how scornfully they require a sign from Heaven, when they had but newly seen a most heavenly sign.

The word Beelzebul was taken up for the more deteſtation, as importing, The god of a dunghil, and the ſacrificing to Idols they called dunging to an Idol, R. Joſe, ben R. Ben. ſaith, הרואה אותם מובלין עץ He that ſeeth them dunging to an Idol, muſt ſay, He that ſacrificeth to other gods muſt be deſtroyed. Talm. Jeruſ. Beracoth, fol. 12. col. 2.

What Chriſt ſpeaketh about the unpardonableneſs of blaſphemy againſt the holy Ghoſt, is in direct facing of their Tener; which held, that blaſphemy was attoned for by death though by nothing elſe. He [ſay they] by whom the name of Heaven is blaſphemed, repentance hath no power to ſave him from puniſhment, nor the day of expiation to attone for him, or chaſtiſements of the Judges to acquit him. But repentance and the day of expiation attone for a third part, and chaſtiſements a third part, and death a third part. And of ſuch it is ſaid, If this iniquity be purged till you die: Behold we learn that death acquitteth. Talm. Jeruſ. Sanhed. fol. 27. col. 3.

The Jews defamed the miracles done by Chriſt as done by Magick, as appeareth not only by this and other places in the Goſpel, but even in Talm. Bab. Schabb. fol. 104. col. 2. R. Eliezer ſaid to the wiſe men, Did not Ben Saida [this is a blasphemous name they give to Jeſus of Nazareth, as was ſaid a little before] bring inchantments out of Egypt in inciſions in his fleſh?

But when they ſaw they were not able to contradict and decry the credit of the great miracles that he did, and they ſaw that this would not ſerve their turn, to ſay he did them by the power of the Devil; the Devil taught them to betake themſelves to another ſhift clean contrary, and that was, to ſay and maintain, that when Meſſias came, he ſhould do no miracles at all: which they aſſert in Sanhedr. per. Helek. and Maym. in Melachim. per. ult.

CHRISTS Mother and Brethren ſeek him, &c.

THe Order is cleered by the tranſition of Matthew, While he yet talked, &c. Luke hath ſet the coming of Chriſts mother and brethren, after the Parable of the Sower [whereas the other two Evangeliſts have ſet it before and that in its proper place] thereby intimating the end and proſecution of the errand they came upon, which was to take him up from preaching: with which intention and importunity they follow him from place to place. Here is an evidence of the Virgin Maries ſinfulneſs, as well as other womens, if going about to ſtop Chriſts Miniſtry were a ſin, as certainly it was, proceed that intention from what pretence ſoever. Mark 3. 21. His friends went to lay hold on him, for they ſaid ἐξέστη: ſignifie that word what it will, whether he is beſide himſelf, or he is faint, or he is in a rapture, &c. their errand and intention was to take him off from the courſe he was in: which he knew well enough, and therefore he gives ſo ſmart an anſwer, Who is my mother, &c? Compare Deut. 33. 9.

SECTION XXXVII.

MATTH. Chap. XIII. from the beginning to Ver. 54. | MARK Chap. IV. from the beginning to Ver. 35. | LUKE Chap. VIII. from Ver. 4, to Ver. 19.

The Parable of the Sower: and divers other Parables.

MATTHEWS tranſition doth again cleer the order here. The ſame day went Jeſus, &c. The ſame day that his Mother and brethren came to him, as is apparent in the twelfth Chapter. So that this conſideration helpeth to methodize the order of Luke: for whereas the other two have ſet the coming of Chriſts mother and brethren before his uttering of the Parable of the Sower, &c. he hath ſet it after; and that without contrariety though with diverſity. For both the occurrences were on the ſame day: and he hath by this order ſhewed how the mother and friends of Chriſt having once found him, went along with him, whether to proſecute the intention they came upon, or better convinced to attend him and his doctrine.

CHRIST ſpeaking of Parables, which he doth ſo exceeding much through the Goſpel, was according to the ſtile and Manner of that Nation, which were exceedingly accuſtomed to this manner of Rhetorick. The Talmuds are abundantly full of this kind of oratory, and ſo are generally all their ancient writers: and they commonly enter upon their Parables with this preface משל למה חדכר דומה: A Parable: To what is the thing like? which ſt Matth he alſo uſeth not ſeldom. And ſometime they enter upon it more abruptly abruptly with such an entrance as this לאיש or למלך בו To a man, or To a King of flesh and blood, &c. meaning, It is like to a man or like to a King, &c. I believe there are very many in the world, that have not been further acquainted with the writings of the Jews then what they have seen quoted by other writers, and yet are ready to censure them of lies and falshoods [which indeed they are not free from] meerly upon want of acquaintance with their stile of Parables and hyperboles.

Very good use may be made of the Talmudick treatises, Peah, Demai, and Kilaim, which treats intentionally concerning sowing and seeds, for illustration of these Parables. In Kilaim, they dispute of sowing על סלעים על טרשים upon rocks and upon stones, and of mingling חיטין וזונין, wheat and tares, &c. cap. 1. In Peah in Tal. Jerus. fol. 20. they speak of a tree of mustard seed, that one might climbe into like other trees, &c. And in divers other passages in these Parables, some light may be fetched from those tracts: seeing Christ all along speaketh of things usual and most particularly usual among that Nation.

SECTION XXXVIII.

MATTH. Chap. VIII. Ver. 18,19,20,21,22. | MARK Chap. IV. Ver. 35. | LUKE Chap. IX. Ver. 57. 58,59,60,61,62.

A Scribe will follow CHRIST, &c.

THe story of CHRISTS preparing to go over the water, is evidenced by Mark, to come in here in its proper place; for he saith, The same day at even, &c. Matthews laying it where he hath done, may seem to be because of its neerness to Matthews or Levies feast, as will appear in the following current of the story; which feast he hath laid at Matthews call, and so hath accordingly brought here divers stories together, though far distinct in time; as some being neer the time of his call, some neer the time of his feast. But a greater scruple ariseth, namely, Whether this story in Matthew, of two that would follow Christ, and that in Luke 9.57, &c. of three that would do so, be one and the same story, or two occurrences at several times? It is well the matter is of no more chronological import, for it is hard to resolve which way to take it. The words of the persons to Christ, and his answer to them, are so much the same, that it is hard to think two several stories should run so parallel in all circumstances: And yet Lukes laying it so far out of its place, might perswade that it is not the same story. It would be more tiresome then profitable to dispute the matter at lage; therefore to make sure and quick work, both the stories may be taken in at both places. I should rather hold them to be two stories: In both of them where it is said, by those that should follow Christ, Let me first go and bury my father, It argues not that their father was dead or very sick; but that they thought themselves bound not to leave their father whilst he was living.

SECTION XXXIX.

MATTH. Chap. VIII. from Ver. 23, to the end. And Chap. IX. Ver. 1. | MARK Chap. IV. from Ver. 36, to the end. And Ch. V. from beg. to V. 22. | LUKE Chap. VIII. from Ver. 22, to Ver. 41.

CHRIST calmeth the sea: casteth out a Legion of Devils, &c.

THe order needeth no cleering, it is so plainly asserted by all the three: only among them in relating the story thus ordered, there seems to be some difference: 1. Mark says, They took him in the ship as he was, namely as he was now in it, having gone into it to preach to the people, as ver. 1. The other two speak of his entring into the ship now, as if he had not been in it before, because they continue not this story, to the story of his speaking of the Parables out of the ship as Mark doth, but speak of this after other stories. 2. Matthews calling of the Country beyond Jordan whether he went, the Country of the Gergasens, whereas the other two call it the Country of the Gadarens, is no great scruple, since it bare two names, ancient and modern. But 3, the main doubt lies in this; that whereas Mark and Luke speak but of one possessed, Matthew speaks of two. So I observe that Matthew speaks of two blind men begging at Jericho, Matth. 20. 30. whereas Mark speaketh but of one, Mark 10. 46. And so likewise Matthew speaks of both the theeves mocking Christ, Matth. 27. 44. whereas Luke speaks but of one of them so doing, Luk. 23.39, &c.

It might be answered, as to this story, that it may be that these two that Matthew speaketh of were not alike furious, but that the impetuousness of the one was more then the other:

other: and that Mark and Luke ſpeak of him only that was in the worſe caſe. Or for ought that Matthews Greek prohibiteth, the two might be underſtood for Man and Wife, whom the two other Evangeliſts treat of as one perſon. But by the other examples adduced, where Matthew ſpeaking of two, Mark and Luke ſpeak but of one, it is plain and ſatisfactory, that theſe two latter, writing after Matthew, and he having given the ſtory before them, numbring the perſons concerned in it, they have not been curious ſo much to ſpecifie the number of perſons on whom the miracles were wrought, which he had done before, as careful to record the miracle done, that none of Chriſts workings might be left unrecorded, as to the nature of the thing done.

The Evangeliſts deſcribe the condition of theſe poor poſſeſſed ones, much in the ſame colours that the Jews do him that they call שוטה, who is one of the five ſorts of perſons whom they ſeclude from all actings of import or truſt, שוטה ſay they [or a diſtract perſon] is he that goes out in the night and lodgeth among the graves, and tears his cloths to pieces, and ſpoils what ſoever men give him. Jeruſ. in Trumoth fol. 4. col. 2.

It is of ſome ſcrupulouſneſs to caſt, how ſo many Swine ſhould be in thoſe parts, ſince Swines fleſh was ſuch an abomination among the Jews, and thoſe that kept and bred Swine little leſs abominated. Their wiſe men ſaid, Curſed be he that brings up Dogs and Swine, Maymon. in Niz. Mammon per 5. And there is a ſtory of a Woman reviling one of their Rabbies, in theſe words, One of theſe three things is in thee, either thou art a drinker of wine, or a uſurer, or one that breeds Swine. Jeruſ. Shekalim fol. 47. col. 3. But even Pliny may help us to an Anſwer and Reſolution in this doubt, who tells us how rare dainties Swines fleſh is accounted of by the Romans, Neque alio ex animali numeroſior materia ganiæ: quinquaginta prope ſapores, cum cæteris ſinguli. Of one creature, ſaith he, is there made more numerous matter for luxury: Almoſt fifty ſeveral taſtes in it, whereas in other creatures there is but one. And hence thoſe pages of the Cenſors Laws; Interdictaque cænis abdomina, glandia teſticuli, vulvæ, ſincipita verina, [A Roman Cook were fitteſt to engliſh this.] And a little after he tells, that Solidum aprum Romanorum primus in epulis appoſuit P. Servilius Rullus: Publius Servilius Rullus firſt of the Romans, ſerved in a whole Swine to the table, the Father of that Rullus that promulgated the Lex Agraria in Tullies Conſulſhip. Tam proprinqua origo nunc quotidianæ rei eſt: A thing now in daily uſe, had its beginning no longer ago. Obſerve that it was of ordinary uſe among the Romans to ſerve in ſolidum aprum at their feaſts. Vid. Plin. nat. hiſt. lib. 8. cap. 51. Now were it granted that the Gadarens were Jews, which for the generality they were not [and to find Swine feeding among the Heathen was no ſtrange thing] yet when there might be ſuch trading in Swine as the Roman cookery and luxury cauſed to be, the covetouſneſs of a Jew would ſtrain him far for his profit, eſpecially it being not directly againſt the Law to deal with theſe Cattel alive, though ſo ſtrictly forbidden to eat them dead.

Levies Feaſt: Concerning Faſting, &c.

MUch needeth not to be ſpoken concerning the order here. Why Levies, or Matthews Call and feaſt are ſet together by all the Evangeliſts that ſpeak of them, we have obſerved before, namely becauſe they would diſpatch the whole ſtory of that man at once or altogether: And that his call was at the place where we have laid it, the current of the ſtory thither confirmeth paſt denial. Likewiſe that his Feaſt muſt come in here, Matthews words, ver. 18. do make it plain: for he ſaith, that while Jeſus was ſpeaking thoſe things concerning faſting, &c. Jairus came to him: whoſe coming the other two Evangeliſts have cleerly pitched in this place.

In Matthew the late Publicans houſe, when Chriſt is invited to dinner, many Publicans and Sinners ſit down at meat with him, a thing as far contrary to the Phariſaical diſcipline as what was moſt contrary, for which the Phariſees challenge him and his Diſciples. They looked upon Chriſt and his Diſciples, as חבריא men of Religion and Devotion, and therefore that ought to ſeperate themſelves from the vulgar ſort of people; eſpecially from ſuch as theſe were, of an infamous ſtamp and character: A Scholar of the wiſe, by their Canons, might not eat with one of the vulgar, much leſs with Publicans and Sinners, the worſt ſort of all the vulgar that were.

A bloody issue healed: Jairus daughter raised.

MATTHEW assures the order, for he saith, While Jesus was speaking: those things that are recorded in the preceeding Section, concerning Fasting, and not putting new wine into old bottles, &c. Jairus came to him to beg the recovery of his now dying daughter.

Jairus was one of the Rulers of Capernaum Synagogue, and had seen so many miracles done by Christ there, that if he were not a Disciple already, yet he belives that Christ can easily recover her, though when he came away from her she was giving up the ghost. As Jesus goeth with him in Capernaum streets, a woman with a bloody issue of twelve years continuance cometh behind him and toucheth him: Her disease and Jairus daughter, were born in one and the same year, for they were both twelve years old, Luke 8. ver. 42,43.

The malady of this woman was not only of the said languishing, but it was also of a great uncleanness, according to the uncleanness mentioned in the Law. The Talmudick treatise Zavim, and Maymony in Issurei biah, cap. 4,5,6. would read a doleful Lecture upon her disease, as to this point of uncleanness. And this it may be was one main cause that made the woman to come trembling and fearing to Christ when she saw she could not be hid, Mat. 5.33 because she had been so bold as to touch Christ in her uncleanness.

The story of the Pictures of Christ and this woman touching him, both made in brass [of which the Papists have made no small ado towards their worshipping of Images] hath spoken exceeding wide and far from hitting upon the right place where this woman and Christ met. The story as it is related by Eusebius, Baronius and others, is this. That in Cæsarea Philippi called otherwise Paneas, the house of this woman was to be seen: and before the door of the house, a brazen Image of a woman kneeling, and before her the brazen statute of a man, in a garment down to the feet, and stretching out his hand to the woman: And that there grew there a certain strange herbe, which when it grew up to touch the brazen hem of his garment, it had the medicinal virtue of healing any disease.

But why all this at Cæsarea Philippi? whereas this occurrence of the womans healing by the touch of the hem of his garment was in Capernaum: for Matthew tells, that when Jesus came back out of the Country of the Gadarens, he came into his own City. Matth. 9. 1. which was Capernaum: and there was Matthews house, in which he was when Jairus came to him. See Sect. 23.

Before he comes to Jairus his house, his daughter is dead, and there he finds minstrels and piping in a mournful tone, for the bewailing of her. This was the custom of the Jews in such cases, as is to bee seen in Talm. Jeruf. in Beracoth. fol 5. col. 4. Maymony in אישות cap. 14, &c. vid etiam Jeruf. Moed Katon. fol. 83. col. 4.

A good while ago he had denounced a sad doom against Capernaum, Matth. 11.23. at Sect. 52. O thou Capernaum which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell, &c. which was spoken as to the generality of the City, who for the things they had heard and seen, were exalted to heaven, as that being Christs own City, or the place of his habitation, yet they believed not. And this may be some reason why when he had raised this dead girle, he bids her parents keep the matter close: for that City had justly forfeited all such revelations of him: Yet for all the denouncing of that sad fate against her, he oft resorteth thither, and forsaketh not his habitation there; partly because he had some there, who for all the unbelief of the generality, belonged to him, and believed in him; and partly because he had no reason to remove his habitation for their unbelief, or to pass off his dwelling for other mens wickedness; for where could he go to reside, but he should reside among some of the same temper?

Two blind men, and a poſſeſſed dumb man healed.

THe order is cleer from theſe two paſſages of connexion: When Jeſus departed thence, ver. 27. And As they went out, ver. 32.

Jeſus from Jairus his houſe returned to his own home, ver. 28. and there two blind men come to him, whoſe eyes he toucheth, and ſaith, According to your faith be it to you: urging this upon them the rather, becauſe of the general untowardneſs and unbelief of the place where he now was, Capernaum: and becauſe of the Phariſees that were now preſent, ver. 34. that he might magnifie faith.

As theſe blind men went out, they brought in a man poſſeſſed with a dumb Devil, and he alſo was healed, which the Phariſees ſtill aſcribe to magick, &c.

CHRIST at Nazaret, and offence taken at him.

IT is ſaid by Matthew, that when Jeſus returned back out of the land of the Gadarens, he came into his own City, Matth. 9.1. that is, to Capernaum, where he himſelf dwelt, and Matthew, and Jairus; and the three laſt Sections relate ſtories done in their three houſes: Now Mark ſaith, that from thence he went out and came into his own Country, that is to Nazareth: which title is uſed of that City again, John 4.44.

In that Synagogue he had been abuſed a good while ago, and his life endangered, Luke 4. 29. and thither he is come now to try them again, and finds not much better entertainment then before, but only not ſo full of danger: therefore he did not many great works there becauſe of their unbelief, which Mark uttereth, He could do no mighty works there ver. 5. which meaneth not any want of power, but it relateth to his will, and to the rule by which he went in doing his works: ſuch another phraſe ſee Gen 19.22.

When it is ſaid by the ſame Evangeliſt, He marveled at their unbelief: it meaneth not, that he marvelled becauſe they had not ſaving faith, but he marvelled becauſe they believed no more then they did.

Another perambulation of Galilee.

MATTHEW himſelf joyns this portion to the ſtories in Sect. 42. and the laſt words of Mark in the Section preceding, he went round about the villages teaching, are concurrent with the firſt words in this, and ſo do aſſert the connexion.

CHRIST at his former rejection at Nazaret, begins to go abroad preaching through their Synagogues as in Sect. 18. and ſo he doth now: and ſo great multitudes reſort unto him, that he now reſolveth upon ſending forth his Diſciples to preach abroad alſo.

MARK Chap. VI. V. 7,8,9,10,11.

LUKE Chap. IX. Ver. 1,2,3,4,5,6.

The twelve Apoſtles ſent out to preach.

THe order in Matthew and Mark ſhews and clears it ſelf.

The twelve had been ordained for Apoſtles a great while ſince, and all that while, had been with Chriſt as probationers, to ſee his works and to learn his Doctrine: and ſince their pointing out to be Apoſtles it is obſervable, how much Chriſt hath applied himſelf to Doctrine, that they might learn the Goſpel of the Kingdom, and be ſtored with what to preach, when he ſhould ſend them forth. Hitherto they had been learners and as for the gifts of the Spirit they as yet differed nothing from the reſt that followed him, but now he gives them power of healing and caſting out devils, [and now is the power of miracles reſtored.] So that they cured diſeaſes by the Spirit, but they preached not by the Spirit, but taught that only which they had learned from the mouth of Chriſt.

He ſendeth them out by two and two, and ſo it is like the twelve ſpies divided themſelves when they went to ſearch the Land. It may be the Apoſtles went in theſe couples that Matthew had reckoned them in.

What Chriſt forbiddeth them to take with them for their journey, was 1. to inure them to depend upon his protection and not upon their own carefulneſs: And 2. He hereby intimates that they ſhould find ſuch good entertainment in their Miniſtry, that they ſhould find ſafety and maintenance whereſoever they came. Therefore when in Luke 22.6. Now take purſe and ſcrip, &c. he thereby would not ſignifie that his care of them was any whit abated of what it was now, but that they ſhould meet with worſe times and worſe entertainment then they had had now.

Whereas in Matthew and Luke they are forbidden to take ſtaves, in Mark it is ſaid, they ſhould take nothing for their journey ſave a ſtaffe only: not ſtaves for weapons or for their defence, but a ſtaff for their reſting on for their eaſe in the journey: as Gen. 32.10.

They are confined to preach to Iſrael only, [though many Gentiles dwelt intermixedly with them in their Cities] becauſe the Lord would own the peculiarity of the Nation in the firſt preaching of the Goſpel, as he had done all along in the Oeconomy of the Law: when they had forfeited their priviledge of being a peculiar people, by crucifying him that ſent the Goſpel amongſt them, then is the Apoſtles commiſſion inlarged to go to the Gentiles. *Matth.*28.

MARK Chap. VI. from Ver. 14. to Ver. 30. | MATTH. Chap. XIV. from the beginning to Ver. 13. | LUKE Chap. IX. Ver. 7,8,9.

JOHN beheaded: his Diſciples come into Chriſt.

MARY and Luke do juſtifie the order, for both of them have laid this ſtory next to the ſtory of Chriſts ſending forth his Diſciples. Matthew when he ſaith At that time, he uſeth the word in its latitude, as it is often uſed in Scripture, not preciſely or determinately for the very day or ſeaſon when a thing was done, but in the current of time then in being. And yet in this expreſſion he ſeemeth alſo to have reſpect to the ſtory that he had related next before, though that were ſome reaſonable ſpace of time before this: For there he had told that Chriſt coming into his own Country, was ſlighted and undervalued, and they were offended in him, yet Herod was amazed at the wonders that he heard of him.

Here are two times regardable in this Section, namely the time of John Baptiſts death, and the time of Herods hearing of the fame of Jeſus: and the juncture of the ſtories is very cloſe. As the Diſciples were preaching up and down according to Chriſts miſſion, Herod beheaded the Baptiſt: and by their preaching in the name of Jeſus, the fame of Jeſus cometh to Herods hearing; and the Diſciples again hearing of the murder of John, get in to their maſter. So that the ſtory of Johns death, is related here in the proper place and time when it did occur. And from one paſſage in John the Evangeliſt in the next following Section, there is the ground of a fair conjecture of the time of his beheading: For we ſhall ſee in the beginning of the next Section, that all the four do ſpeak of Chriſt departing privately into a deſert place: Matthew particularly gives the reaſon, namely becauſe he had newly heard, by Johns Diſciples, of the death of their maſter. Now John the Evangeliſt in giving that ſtory of Chriſts retiring, hath inſerted this paſſage, And the Jews Paſover was nigh, whereby we may conclude that the Baptiſts death was a little before the time of the Paſover. And from hence we may take up the whole ſpace of his Miniſtry and impriſonment. He began to Preach and Baptize in the year of Chriſt, 29, at the ſpring of that year or about Eaſter. Half a year after Jeſus is baptized by him, about the Feaſt of Tabernacles. Till after the Feaſt of Tabernacles come twelve month, viz. in the Year of Chriſt 30, he is ſtill abroad baptizing in Bethabara and Ænon: About October in that Year he is impriſoned, and ſo lieth in reſtraint till almoſt Eaſter twelve month, which was in the Year of Chriſt 32. And ſo his ſtory is of three years ſpace, the better half of which he preached at liberty, and the other half he lay in priſon.

Herod

Herod upon the hearing of the fame of Jeſus, is ſtruck with horror of conſcience upon thought of the murder of John: and if the leaven of Herod was Sadduceiſm, his horrour makes him deny his Sadducaical principles, and to think that John was Riſen from the dead.

Five thouſand fed miraculouſly: Chriſt walketh on the Sea.

ALL the four ſpeak the ſame ſtory of Chriſts miraculous feeding many thouſands in a Deſert: Mark and Matthew do plainly link this ſtory to the preceding, as is conſpicuous to the eye of whoſoever ſhall view in them the laſt verſe of the foregoiug Section, and the firſt of this,

Johns Diſciples with the tidings of their Maſters death, and Jeſus Diſciples from their Preaching abroad, came in to Jeſus much about the ſame time: and it may be Johns Diſciples clave to him and depart no more from him. Upon the tidings Jeſus withdraws into a deſart place, over the Sea of Galilee, Joh. 6. 1. not over to the other ſide beyond Jordan, but he coaſted by Sea from one place to another on the ſame ſhore; namely from Capernaum to the Deſart of Bethſaida: for it is ſaid, the people followed him afoot and came up to him: and when his Diſciples return by Sea again, they are ſaid to go over to Bethſaida, Mark 6. 45. and from thence over to Capernaum, John 6. 17. coaſting ſtill upon the ſame ſide.

John in this ſtory hath mention of the Paſover neer at hand, verſ. 4. becauſe he only of all the four hath undertaken to give account of all the Paſovers, betwixt Chriſts Baptiſm and his death, for the better reckoning of the time of his publick Miniſtry. It may be the coming on of the Paſover had brought all the Apoſtles in, to attend their Maſter thither. They fall in at Capernaum his own City whether it is like he had appointed them to come in at ſuch a time.

The third PASSOVER ſince Chriſts Baptiſm.

When Chriſt intends to feed the multitude, he propounds to Philip among all the Diſciples, Where ſhall we buy bread? for this was in the Deſert of Bethſaida, which was Philips City, John 1. 44.

SECTION XLVIII.

JOHN Chap. VI. from Ver. 22. to the end of the Chapter.

Jeſus teacheth in Capernaum Synagogue, concerning eating his fleſh, &c.

THE firſt words in the Section, The day following, aſſerts the order.

Divers of thoſe that had been feed by Chriſt miraculouſly in the Deſert of Bethſaida, remained upon that ground all night, expecting Jeſus to come again among them, who was departed away from them, but, as they ſaw, not with his Diſciples; therefore they the next morning follow him to Capernaum, and there find him. It was Synagogue day there, namely either the ſecond or fifth day of the week, and in the Synagogue Chriſt ſpeaketh of eating his fleſh and drinking his blood, which ſeemeth a Doctrine ſo monſtrous to many, that divers that had followed him, do now depart from him.

What would theſe people have? They had been fed miraculouſly yeſterday, and yet to day they ſay to him. What ſign ſheweſt thou that we may ſee and believe? ver. 30. Our fathers did eat manna in the deſert, &c. ver. 31. They looked for a continued miraculous feeding as Moſes fed Iſrael with Manna in the wilderneſs: and to that the words of Chriſt refer, ver. 26. Ye ſeek me, not becauſe ye ſaw the miracles, but becauſe ye ate of the loaves.

It is ſaid, When they had ſeen the miracle that Jeſus did, they ſaid This is of a truth the Prophet that ſhould come into the world, and they went about to make him King, ver. 14, 15. They thought they ſaw in this miracle the ſign of the Meſſias they looked for, who ſhould feed his people miraculouſly as Moſes had done, and therefore when they now require a ſign to be ſtill ſhewed in that nature, Chriſt tells them they muſt expect no other food to be provided for them by him, then his own fleſh and blood: which ſounds ſo coldly in ſome of their ears, that they will follow him no more.

SECTION

SECTION XLIX.

JOHN Chap. VII, Ver. 1.

After theſe things Jeſus walked in Galilee, for he would not walke in Jury, becauſe the Jews ſought to kill him.

BEtween the time of this Section and that preceding, we are to imagine the Paſsover to have paſſed, of which there is mention, John 6, 4. So that after this paſſage in Capernaum Synagogue, Chriſt goeth up to the Paſsover at Jeruſalem, and there the Jews, that is the Sanhedrin ſought to kill him. At the paſsover the laſt year they convented him before them, to anſwer for his violation of the Sabbath in healing the man at Bethesda. John 5. and he plainly affirms and proves himſelf to be the Meſſias, and he comes off with ſafety, but after what manner is not expreſſed.

But now the increaſe of his Diſciples, the ſpreading of his frame and Doctrine by the preaching of the twelve, and it may be the example of the murdering of the Baptiſt, had ſo ſtirred them up to ſeek his life, that he perceiving it, gets away from Jeruſalem into Galilee, and will not yet come into Judea again.

MARK Chap. VII. all the Chapter. And Chap. VIII. from begin. to Ver. 22.

MATTH. Chap. XV. all the Chap. And Ch. XVI. from the begin. to V. 13.

Scribes and Phariſees impious traditions: The Woman of Canaans Daughter, healed. A man Dumb and Deaf healed. Four thouſand fed miraculouſly. Phariſees. require a ſign, &c. Leaven of Phariſees, &c.

THeſe two Evangeliſts joyn this portion to the end of Sect. 47. Now what we have laid between in Sect. 48. & 49. is of ſo plain ſubſequence and order, that no more needeth to be ſaid of this or them.

Certain Scribes and Phariſees that were ſent purpoſely from Jeruſalem, [as may be conjectured, becauſe the Sanhedrin there ſought to deſtroy Jeſus] ſeeking to intrap and oppoſe him, and to make a party againſt him, quarrel his Diſciples for not waſhing before meat. Their preciſeneſs about this matter may bee ſeen in Talmudick Treatiſe Jadaim, and in Maymony in his Tract Mikvaoth, and occurſorily almoſt in every place in the Jewiſh Writers, where they have occaſion to ſpeak of their meales and of their manner of eating.

1. Waſhing of the hands or dipping of them, is if the inſtitution of the Scribes: they are the words of Maymony in Mikvaoth, per. 11.

2. Hillel and Shammai decreed about waſhing the hands: But R. Joſe the ſon of R. Ben ſaith, The tradition about it had come to their hands, but they had forgot it. Theſe therefore decreed but according to the mind of thoſe that had gon before them. Talm. Jerus. in Schabb. fol. 3. col. 4.

3. אכילת חולין בטהרה The eating of their common meat in cleanneſs, is very much ſpoken of in their Writings and moſt highly extolled: Inſomuch that the Gloſs upon Chagigah per. 2. doth determine a man of Religion by this, that He eats his common meals in cleanneſs: and the Gemariſts in the place of the Jeruſalem Talmud laſt cited have this saying, Whoſoever hath his dwelling in the Land of Iſrael, and eats his common meals in cleanneſs, and ſpeaks the Holy tongue, and ſaies over his Phylacteries morning and evening, that man may be confident that he ſhall obtain the life of the world to come.

And again in Challah. fol. 58. col. 3. R. Feſi in the name of R. Shabeai and R. Cajaſhin the name of Simeon Ben Lachiſh ſay thus, A man ſhould walk four miles to the waſhing of his hands. It is a tradition, that waſhing before meat is arbitrary, but after meat it is duty. Only that at his waſhing before, he ſaies over ſome prayer, but after, not. R. Jacob bar. R. Iſaac, hereupon retorted, Doſt thou ſay he waſheth and ſaith over a prayer, and yet doſt thou ſay that waſhing is arbitrary? It is ſaid he ſhould go four miles to the waſhing of his hands, and yet doſt thou ſay it is arbitrary?

How they prized this and other traditions of the Elders above the word of God, and ſo by and for them made that of no weight, may be read too numerouſly in them, in ſuch like blaſphemous paſſages as theſe: The words of the Scribes are more lovely then the words of the Law, and more weighty then the words of the Prophets.

And,

And, He that ſaith there are no Phylacteries, and in ſo ſaying tranſgreſſeth againſt the words of the Law, he is not guilty: but he that ſaith there is five Phylacteries, and in ſo ſaying, addeth to the words of the Scribes, he is guilty. Jerus Beracoth fol.3.col.2.

The written Law is narrow, but the traditional is longer then the earth and broader then the ſea. Tanchum,fol.4.col.4.

Our Saviour damning theſe curſed Traditions, doth inſtance only in that unnatural tenet of theirs, that extinguiſheth all filial aſſiſtance to needy Parents: as if a ſon ſaid to his father or mother, It is Corban, &c. Their Canons ſet down the duty of a ſon to his father,as,to give him meat and drink if he ſtood in need,and to cloath him, to waſh his hands, feet and face, and if he need, to lead him in and out. Toſapht.in Kidduſhin per 1. And yet with this ſuperinduced Tradition, they deſtroyed all ſuch duty. About the word Corban in the ſenſe in which it is uſed here, the Talmudick Treatiſes, Nedarim and Nazir and the Toſaphtoth upon them, are good explications, where it is often uſed.

His reſolving the caſe about meats not defiling the man, overthrew a great part of Phariſaiſm: for this waſhing before meat was meerly out of their Traditions, and it was a great part of their ſanctimony. Moſes indeed had forbidden divers things as unclean to be touched, and by the touching of which the perſon was legally defiled,but that with this reference, that he was unclean as to Gods ſervice, or to the Congregation, but this pretended uncleanneſs of theirs, for which they appointed waſhing before meat, had reſpect ſimply neither to the one nor the other.

Chriſt to a Heathen woman that begged the diſpoſſeſſing of her daughter,calls the Heathens Dogs, and ſhe readily underſtands his meaning, as that being a common title that the Jews put upon them, Midr. Till. fol. 6. col. 3. אומות עולם נמשלו ככלבים The Nations of the world are compared to Dogs.

No ſign given to the Phariſees when they demand one, but the ſign of Jonah the Prophet: whereby Chriſt doth not only intimate his own burial and reſurrection, but he chiefly intendeth to hint the calling of the Gentiles after his reſurrection, as the Niniviteſ were after Jonahs, which was a thing the Jews could not endure to hear of.

SECTION LI.

MARK Chap. VIII. Ver. 22,23,24,25,26.

A blind man reſtored to ſight at Bethſaida.

MARKS authority warrants the connexion here: eſpecially it being conſidered that in the preceding Section Chriſt and his Diſciples are croſſing over the Sea, and here they are arrived at Bethſaida. A journey by ſea thither they had, when Jeſus fed the the five thouſand in Sect 47. and now being come up to that place where that miracle was wrought, it was a ſtrange conſtruction the Diſciples made of the words of their maſter, Beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, when they thought he blamed them for not bringing bread: the very place where they were, might have confuted their miſpriſion.

Chriſt openeth the eyes of a blind man, but will not do it in Bethſaida, but leads the man out of the Town,nor will he ſuffer him to go into the Town when he is cured, nor to tell it there. He had a good while ago, as hath been ſaid,denounced wo againſt Bethſaida, Matth. 11. 21. and for her perverſeneſs he will no more ſtrive with her for her good: He had gathered out of her thoſe that belonged to himſelf.

The Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven given to Peter, &c

MATTHEW and Mark eſtabliſh the order.

Upon Peters confeſſion that Jeſus was The Chriſt the Son of the living God: 1.He promiſeth to build his Church upon the Rock of that Truth, and the Rock confeſſed in it, from *Iſa.*28.16. *Pſal.*118.22,&c. 2. He promiſeth the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven to Peter only, of all the Apoſtles: meaning thereby,that he ſhould be the man that ſhould firſt unlock the door of faith,and of the Goſpel unto the Gentiles,which was accompliſhed in Act. 10. And 3. he giveth him power of binding and looſing, and this power the other Diſciples had common with him, *Matth.*18.18.

Binding

Binding and looſing in the language and ſtile moſt familiarly known to the Jewiſh Nation [and it can little be doubted that Chriſt ſpeaketh according to common and moſt familiar ſenſe of the language] did refer more properly to things then to perſons: Therefore he ſaith, ὅ ἐαν δήσης, and not ὃν. And in Matth. 18. 18. ὅσα ἐαν δήσητε, not ὅσους.

The phraſe לאסור ולהתיר To bind and to looſe in their vulgar ſpeech, meant, to prohibit and to permit, or to teach what is prohibited or permitted, what lawful, what unlawful, as may appear by theſe inſtances; a few produced, whereas thouſands might be alledged out of their writings.

Talm. in Peſachim per. 4. halac. 5. Our wiſe men ſay that in Judah they did work on the Paſſover eve till noon, but in Galilee not at all: And as for the night בש אוסרין The School of Schammai bound it, that is, forbad to work on it, or taught that it was unlawful: ובה מתירין but the School of Hillel looſed it till ſun riſing, or taught that it was lawful to work till ſun-riſe.

Jeruſ. in Shabb. fol. 6. col. 1. They are ſpeaking about waſhing in the Bathes of Tiberias on the Sabbath: and they determine how far this was lawful, in theſe words, אסרו להן רחיצה והיתירו להן ויעח They bound waſhing to them, but they looſed ſweating: meaning they taught that it was lawful to go into the Bath to ſweat, but not to bathe for pleaſure.

Ibid. fol. 4. col. 1. They ſend not letters by the hand of a Gentile on the eve of the Sabbath, nor on the fifth day of the week: Nay on the fourth day of the week בש אוסרין The School of Schammai bound it ובה מתירין But the School of Hillel looſed it.

Ibid. fol. 7. col. 4. Women may not look in a Looking glaſs on the Sabbath: but if it were faſtned upon a wall רבימתיר וחכמים אוסרין Rabbi looſed the looking into it, but the wiſe men bound it.

Id. in Jom. tobh. fol. 60. col. 1. R. Jochanan went from Tſipporis to Tiberias, he ſaith, Why brought ye to me this Elder דאנא שדי הוא אסר ואסר הוא שדי For what I looſe he bindeth, and what I bind he looſeth.

Maym. in Hhamets umatſah. per. 4. חמץ סופרים אסרוהו The Scribes have bound leaven, that is, they have prohibited it.

Tanchum. fol. 1. col. 3. מדוחק התירו שאלת שלום בשבת They have upon neceſſity looſed ſalutation on the Sabbath: that is, they have permitted it, or taught that it was lawful.

Thouſands of inſtances of this nature might be produced, by all which it is clear that the Jews uſe of the phraſe was of their Doctors or learned mens teaching what was lawful and permitted, and what unlawful and prohibited. Hence is that definition of ſuch mens office and work, in Toſaphta ad Jebamoth per. 4. חכם שרן את הדין טימא וטיהר אסר והיתיר A wiſe man that Judgeth Judgment, maketh unclean and maketh clean, bindeth and looſeth: that is, teacheth what is clean and unclean, what is permitted and prohibited. And Maymony in Sanhedr. per. 4. giving the relation of their ordaining of Elders, and to what ſeveral imployments they were ordained, ſaith thus, A wiſe man that is fit to teach all the Law, the Conſiſtory had power to ordain him, To Judge, but not to teach Bound and loos, or power to teach Bound and loos, but not a Judge in pecuniary matters: or power to both theſe, but not to Judge in matters of mulct, &c. So that the Ordination of one to that Function which was more properly Miniſterial, or to teach the people their duty, as what was lawful, what not, what they were to do, and what not to do, was to ſuch a purpoſe, or in ſuch a tenour as this, Take thou power to bind and looſe, or to teach what is bound and looſe, for they uſe both the expreſſions לאסור ולהתיר and לחודרי באיסור והתר

By this vulgar and only ſenſe of this phraſe in the nation, the meaning of Chriſt uſing it thus to his Diſciples, is eaſily underſtood; namely that he firſt doth inſtate them in a Miniſterial capacity to teach, what bound and looſe, what to be done and what not, and this as Miniſters, and thus all miniſters ſucceſſively to the end of the world. But as they were Apoſtles of that ſingular and unparelled order, as the like never in the Church again, he gives them power to bind and looſe in a degree above all Miniſters that were to follow: namely, that whereas ſome part of Moſes Law was now to ſtand in practice, and ſome to be laid aſide, ſome things under the Law prohibited, were now to be permitted, and ſome things then permitted, to be now prohibited, he promiſeth the Apoſtles ſuch aſſiſtance of his Spirit, and giveth them ſuch power, that what they allowed to ſtand in practice ſhould ſtand, and what to fall ſhould fall: what they bound in Earth ſhould be bound in Heaven, &c.

MATTH. Chap. XVII. from the beginning to Ver. 24. | MARK Chap. IX. from Ver. 2. to Ver. 33. | LUKE IX. from V. 28. to Ver. 46.

CHRIST Transfigured. A Devil cast out of a Child.

MATTHEW and Mark link this story to the preceding with this link, After six days &c. which Luke hath uttered, About an eight days after, which is but the same in sense: Six days compleat came between the day that Christ had spoken the words before and the day of his transfiguration: So that the day of his Transfiguration was the eight day from the day when Christ said, There are some standing here that shall not taste of death till they have seen the Kingdom of God come with power.

This story of Christs Transfiguration relateth to that prediction concerning the great Prophet, Deut, 18. 18. I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, &c. And it shall come to pass that whosoever will not hearken to my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him. A Prophet, that is, a succession of Prophets till the great Prophet should come who should seal Vision and Prophesie.

Christ had been sealed for the great Priest at his Baptisme, when entring into his Ministry at the same age that the Priests entred into their Office, he is attested from Heaven, This is my wellbeloved Son in whom I am well pleased. He is sealed for the great Prophet here, by the like attestation from Heaven, with the same words, This is my wellbeloved Son in whom I am well pleased, but withal it is added Hear him, answerable to those words, Whosoever will not hearken, &c. Deut 18.19.

Moses the first Prophet had all his Oracles out of a Cloud: and a Cloud of Glory that lead Israel in the Wilderness, departed at his death: think of that when you see a cloud here overshadowing and a Divine Oracle given out of it, at the sealing of the Prophet greater then he.

Moses was the first Prophet of the Jews, and Elias the first Prophet of the Gentiles, and they both now appear to attend their Master. Christ and the three Disciples were in this mount of his Transfiguration all night: for Luke saith, It came to pass the next day when they were come down, &c. ver. 37. Compare Christ transfigured and his face shining with the shining of Moses his face, and so compare that first Prophet and this great Prophet again together.

The Disciples that had authority and power given them over all Devils, Luke 9. 1. are not able here to cast one out: and their Master sheweth a double reason why, namely, because of their unbelief, and because that kind went not out but by Fasting and Prayer: Now, that their unbelief should be any more then it had been before [for they had cast out Devils before this, Matth. 6. 13.] it might seem strange, but that here were some concurrents towards that, more then they had met with before now: and that we may observe especially in these two things: 1. There were divers diseases, which in their own nature, were but natural diseases, which yet the Jews did commonly repute as seizure and possessing by the Devil, especially those that distempered the mind, or did in more special manner convulse the body: and according to this common language and conception of the Nation, the language of the Gospel doth speak exceeding frequently: Examples of this kind of Dialect among the Jews we might produce divers: as that in Maym. in Gerushin. per. 2. A man which is troubled with an evil spirit, and saith when the sickness [חולי] begins upon him, Write a bill of Divorcement to my Wife, he saith as good as nothing, because he is not compos sui: And so likewise a drunken man, when he comes neer the drunkenness of Lot, &c. He calls the evil spirit [חולי or] a sickness, and by it he means Lunacy or Distractedness that had its lucida intervalla.

So the Jews speak of a man שאחוז קורדיקוס that is possessessed by Cordicus: which they interpret to be a spirit that seizeth on him that drinketh too much Wine out of the Winepress. Talm. in Gittin. per. 7. Vid. R. Sol. and Nissim ibi. And to spare more, because the story in hand is of a Child, take but this example of an evil Spirit which they conceived did seize upon Children: שיבחא Shibta, say they, is an evil spirit that seizeth upon Children by the neck, even upon the sinnews behind the neck, and drieth them up from their use and strength till it kill him. And the time of it is from the Childs being two months old, and the danger of it is till the Child be seven years old. Aruch in שיבחא Which seemeth to mean nothing else but Convulsion fits or shrinking of sinnews, or some such like thing, a natural malady.

Now in this Child there were not only these fits of Convulsions or the Falling sickness and the like, but he was really possessed with the Devil indeed. So that though the Disciples had healed several persons of maladies, which the Jews in their language and conceptions called poſſeſſings with evil Spirits, and the Evangeliſts ſpeak their language, yet this is a ſubject to work upon of a further difficulty by far, the devil being bodily in this Child indeed. 2. Granting [for we dare not deny] that they had caſt out Devils indeed before, yet this caſe carried ſome extraordinary matter in it above other times. They were then preaching up and down, and their Commiſſion gave them power to caſt out Devils to confirm their Doctrine, but now they were not in that imployment. They were alſo now ſet upon by the Scribes and Phariſees, with a poſſeſſed perſon of an extraordinary example, as being poſſeſſed from an Infant, purpoſely that they might puzzle them, and that in the fairer opportunity, when their Maſter and three of the chief of their company, Peter and James and John were abſent. Therefore if by all theſe concurrents of diſadvantage, their Faith were ſomewhat ſhaken, it is to be the leſs wondred at, by how much the more the caſe was more ſtrange and unuſual to them, and they had not been put to ſuch a trial before.

SECTION LIV.

MATTH. Chap. XVII. Ver. 24,25,26,27.

CHRIST payeth money miraculouſly gotten.

MARKS words in the beginning of the next Section, laid to the firſt verſe of this will be evidence ſufficient for the order of both.

Chriſt is demanded the half ſhekel that every Iſraelite was bound by the Law annually to pay for the redemption of his life, Exod. 30. 13. The word Δίδραχμα ſpeaks that. Now the proper time of collecting that began a little before the Paſover, as we have obſerved before out of the Treatiſe Shekalim. And though it were now almoſt half a year paſt the Paſover, yet is this the firſt time that Jeſus had been at his own houſe in Capernaum, ſince the time of gathering that Money had come in. This half ſhekel that every Iſraelite paid yearly, went to the repair of the Temple, and to the buying of things needful for the ſervice there; Chriſt pays his Church Duties, therefore here, though, as his own words argue, he being the Son of the great King for whom that Tribute was demanded, might have pleaded immunity: for Kings take Tribute of ſtrangers, not of their own Children. His paying it by a miraculous compaſſing of it out of a Fiſhes mouth, ſheweth at once his Divine power that could make all things ſerve his ends, and his great care to diſcharge his due paymentss and to avoid offence; and withal, his poverty, when he is put to a Miracle for ſuch a little ſum of money, for he would not work Miracles where there was not need. His paying for Peter with him, was becauſe he was of the ſame Town, and ſo was under the ſame demand of payment, and he knew that he was in the ſame want of money. The other Diſciples were to pay in the places of their ſeveral houſes. When Jeruſalem was deſtroyed by the Romanes, Δίδραχμον ἐδίδου ἕκαστος τὸ πάτρια αὐτῶν ἔθη ἀποστέλλοντας τῷ Καπιτωλίῳ Διὶ κατ' ἔτος ἀποφέρειν. The Jews were commanded to pay this half half ſhekel yearly to Jupiter Capitolinus, Xiphilin. apud Dion. lib. 66. Joſeph. de Bell. lib. 7. cap. 27.

SECTION LV.

MARK Chap. IX. from V. 33. to the end of the Chapter. MATTH. Chap. XVIII. all the Chapter. LUKE Chap. IX. from Ver. 46. to Ver. 51.

A diſpute who greateſt; One caſting out Devils, and yet not following Chriſt: Die Eccleſiæ, &c.

THE order needeth no demonſtration: the ſeeming difference between Matthew and Mark in the beginning of the Section needeth animadverſion rather: Mark ſaith their diſpute who ſhould be greateſt, was as they went in the way towards Capernaum, and when Chriſt asked them at Capernaum what their diſcourſe had been, they held their peace. But Matthew ſaith, At the ſame time, namely while Chriſt was at Capernaum, the Diſciples came to him and asked him, Who is the greateſt, &c. in which relation he briefly coucheth the two ſtories that Mark ſpeaketh of into one, namely, their talking by the way who ſhould be greateſt, and this queſtion coming before Chriſt.

It may be Chriſts ſo lately taking Peter and James and John into the mount apart from the reſt, gave occaſion to this debate, which he determineth by ſetting a Child in the middeſt, &c. They that have held this Child to have been Ignatius in his infancy, who was afterward the Martyr, [as ſee Niceph. lib. 2. c. 3. Baron. ad Annum Chriſti 71. Marg. de la Bign. in Ignat. in Biblioth. Patr. tom. 1.] ſure did not well obſerve his own words, if they be his own, in his Epiſtle to the Church of Smyrna, Μισῶ τὴν ἀνάστασιν ὅτι σαρκὶ αὐτὸν ὄιδα.

Vide. And I do not only know that Christ is come in the flesh, by his being born and being crucified, but I saw him in the flesh after his resurrection. For so the Latine renders it, Vidi eum in carne: or be it, I knew him in the flesh after his resurrection, it may seem very strange, that he that was so very a Child as Christ to take him in his arms this year almost at the feast of Tabernacles, and the next year at Easter, which was but within half a years space, to become so intelligent as to take notice of his being risen.

Upon Christs speaking of receiveing those that come in his Name, John propounds a dubious case of one that they had met with that went about indeed in his Name, and in his Name cast out Devils, and yet would not own himself his Disciple, nor follow him: which raiseth to us a further scruple, How this man came to this miraculous power? for that it was so, and not Magical exorcizing in the Name of Jesus, as divers enemies of the Gospel used afterward, may be gathered by Christs answer, who calls it doing a Miracle in his Name, and speaks of this man as not being against him but for him. Whether he did these Miracles in the Name of Messias or of Jesus we will not question: the original of this power to him, we may resolve much into the same principle from whence Caiaphas propheſied, John 11. 51. This he spake, not of himself, but being Highpriest that year he propheſied: There is an emphasis in That year: For now was the fulness of time, the year of expectation, and accomplishment of Vision and Propheſie, and the time of the powring out of the Spirit as never before: and if in that full meal of this provision that Christ had made for his own, some crumbs fell besides the table that others gathered up, or were partakers of, it doth the more magnifie the diffusion, and doth so much the more point out and give notice to observe the time. For Christ did so little leave himself without witness, and did give so clear evidence that this was the great and signal time spoken of by the Prophets in all generations, that Miracles wrought not only by himself and his Disciples, but even by the Jews own Children, as Matth. 12. 27. give abundant testimony to it.

Matthews text in this Section runs parallel with the other to ver. 10. and so far the Reader may take them up together: then goeth he on with Christs speech and the story alone.

The number of a hundred divided into ninety nine and one, ver. 12. is according to the usual and ordinary manner of the Jews speech, with whom this very division is very common.

Talm. in Peah. per. 4. halac 1. & 2. When a man is dividing nuts among the poor, though ninety nine call on him to divide them, and one call on him to scatter them, to him they must hearken. With Grapes and Dates it is not so, though ninety nine call on him to scatter them, and one to divide them, to him they must hearken, &c.

Jerus. in Shab. fol. 14. col. 3. Rabh, and R. Chaijah Rabbah, both of them said, If ninety nine dye by an evil eye, and one by the hand of Heaven. R. Chaninah and Samuel both of them said, if ninety nine dye by cold and one by the hand of Heaven, &c.

The rules that Christ giveth about dealing with an offending brother, were very well known in the Nation, and such as were practised, at least prescribed in their own Discipline.

1. Admonition privately betwixt the party offended and the party offending. Of such Maymony speaks in his Treatise Deah. per. 6.

2. Admonition, two witnesses being present. Jerus. in Joma fol. 45. col. 3. He that sinneth against his fellow, it is necessary that he say unto him, I have offended against thee. If he receive him, well: If not, he must bring two men and appease him before them, &c. Only Christ raiseth his lesson to a higher charity, namely for the offended party to try the amendment of the offending. So the jealous Husband admonisht his Wife before two. Sotah. per. 1. and the Sanhedrin by two Scholars of the wise admonished an Israelitish City that fell to Idolatry, before they made war upon it. Maym in Avodah Zarah. per. 4.

3. If he will not hear them, tell the Church. They used the open proclaiming of an incorrigible person in the Synagogue, A woman that is rebellious against her husband, that she may vex him, and says, Behold I will thus vex him because he did so and so to me: they send to her from the Judicatory or Bench, and say to her, Know thou that if thou persist in thy rebelliousness, though thy Joynture be a hundred pound, thou hast forfeited it; and afterward they make Proclamation concerning her in the Synagogues and in the Schools every day for four Sabbaths together, saying, such a Woman rebels against her Husband, &c. Maymony in אישות per. 14. And likewise Ibid. cap. 12. If a man will not provide for his Children, they rebuke him, and shame him, and are urgent with him; and if yet he will not, they proclaim him in the Synagogue saying, Such a one is cruel and will not nourish his Children, &c. Here was telling the Church, by open Proclamation.

SECTION LVI.

CHRIST. XXXIII.

JOHN Chap. VII. from Ver. 2. to Ver. 10.

The Feast of Tabernacles.

MATTHEW and MARK both relate that when Jesus had ended these sayings, which are contained in the preceding Section, he departed from Galilee, and came into the coasts of Judea beyond Jordan, Matth. 19. 1. Mark 10. 1. which is not to be understood as if he departed thither presently, but they say no more of his actions till his departure thither: and so pass over almost half a years story in silence, which Luke and John do make up. These bring Jesus out of Galilee beyond Jordan, and presently back to Jerusalem to his passion: but these as we shall see, bring him twice to Jerusalem, before his last coming up, namely this to the feast of Tabernacles, and another to the Feast of Dedication.

The Brethren, that is, the kinsmen of Jesus urge him to go up to the feast of Tabernacles, that his Disciples in Judea might see his works, ver. 3. remember here John 3. 22. & 4. 1. His brethren themselves believed not on him, ver. 5. and that the rather, because they thought his privacy that he desired to keep in, was not answerable to the port and state of the Messias: therefore they desire that he would appear in the power of his miracles in Judea the center of the Nation, that if he were the Messias, he might carry it out there, as they expected the Messias should do.

SECTION LVII.

LUKE Chap. IX. from Ver. 51. to the end of the Chapter. JOHN Chap. VII. Ver. 10.

CHRIST going towards the Feast of Tabernacles.

THat this journey of Christ towards Jerusalem that Luke speaketh of in this Section, is the same with this in John, namely his going up to the Feast of Tabernacles, is plain by this, that Luke mentioneth two journeys of his to Jerusalem more; namely in Chap. 13. 22. which was to the Feast of Dedication, and Chap. 17. 11. which was to the Passover and his Passion.

The words of Luke then, When the time was come that he should be received up, he stedfastly set his face to go to Hierusalem, mean, that now being come within half a year of the time of his death, he resolved to be more constant at Jerusalem then he had been; having avoided the place and Country, once and again, because the Jews sought to kill him.

The stories of several men in this Section, that take upon them to follow Christ, but they had something else to do first, have been spoken to before, at Sect. 38.

SECTION LVIII.

LUKE Chap. X. from the beginning to Ver. 17.

The seventy Disciples sent forth.

AS to the order of the story, First, It is to be observed, that Luke saith, It was after these things mentioned in the former Section; that is, after Christ was sent out from Galilee towards the feast of Tabernacles. Secondly, that it is said John 7. 10. That Jesus went up to that Feast, not openly, but as it were in secret, whereupon it may be concluded, that he had dispatched the seventy Disciples away before he came there. He giveth them the same instructions that he had given the twelve, and the same power to heal the sick: only whereas the twelve went at large to any of the Cities of Israel, these were to go to those places where Christ himself should come, to make way for him, and to prepare the places for the receiving of him against he came: so that now Christ disposeth for the full revealing of himself for the Messias, the Seventy beforehand proclaiming him and preaching in his Name, and he afterward coming and shewing himself to be he of whom they preached. The numbers 12, and 70, cannot but call to mind the Twelve Tribes and the seventy Elders of Israel. The Seventy were but a little while abroad [for thirty five couples would soon dispatch a great deal of work:] and they return again to their Master before he departs from Jerusalem, Luke. 10. 17, 38.

He

He again accuſeth Chorazin, Bethſaida and Capernaum, which he had done before at Sect. 32. for having at any time occaſion to ſpeak of contempt of the Goſpel, they may juſtly be introduced as having the moſt tender of it, and yet deſpiſed it.

SECTION LIX.

JOHN Chap. VII. from Ver. 11, to the end of the Chapter.

CHRIST at the Feaſt of Tabernacles.

THe pregenancy of the order here, ſpeaks it ſelf: In the two preceding Sections, Jeſus was in the way up to the Feaſt, and now he is come there.

Now is the year of the World 3960, and the year of Chriſt 33 begun: both entring in this very month in which the Feaſt of Tabernacles was. The great year of the world, the fulneſs of time, the year of redemption and powring down of the Spirit. It was indeed the year of Jubilee, however the Jews would jumble their account [as ſee Maymon in Shemiatah veiobel. per. 10.] whether ignorantly or wilfully let them look to it. For count from the 7th. year of the rule of Joſhua, when the wars of Canaan ended, and Jubilees began, and you have 1400 years to this preſent year that we are upon, juſt eight and twenty Jubilees: this year the laſt that Iſrael muſt ever ſee. It is the confeſſion of Zohar in Lev. 25. that the Divine glory ſhould be freedom and redemption in a year of Jubilee. Compare the ſending out of the ſeventy Diſciples neer upon the very inſtant when this Jubilee began, with the ſounding of the Trumpet for the proclaiming of the Jubilee, Lev. 25. 9. and there is a fair equity and an anſwerableneſs to that type, in that very thing.

From this Feaſt of Tabernacles to the Paſover at which time Chriſt ſuffered, was that laſt half year, of the laſt half ſeven mentioned Dan. 9. which compare with the laſt half year of Iſraels being in Egypt, in which time Moſes did his Miracles, and which ended alſo at the Paſover.

Among the many varieties of ſolemnity and feſtivity uſed at the Feaſt of Tabernacles, of which we have given account at large in another volume, there was the powring out of water fetched out of the fountain Siloam, with the wine of the drink-offering, and at night their moſt tranſportant joyfulneſs, expreſſed by their ſinging, dancing and the like jocund geſtures, for that powring out of water: which by ſome, in Jeruſ. ſuccah. fol. 55. col. 1. is interpreted to ſignifie the powring out of the holy Ghoſt: The conſideration of this illuſtrates ver. 37, 38. where it is ſaid, that in the laſt and great day of the Feaſt, Jeſus cried, If any thirſt, &c. He that believeth on me, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of water, &c. Upon which words many believed him, becauſe they had ſeen already ſo fair evidence of the gifts of the Spirit, in the powerfull works of himſelf and his Diſciples: and yet the text ſaith here, The holy Ghoſt was not yet given, becauſe Jeſus was not yet glorified: a far greater gift of that being yet behind.

The Sanhedrin would fain have been medling with him to have tried him for a falſe Prophet, as may be gathered from their words ver. 52. but his hour was not yet come.

JOHN Chap. VIII.

A Woman taken in Adultery, &c.

IT is ſaid in the concluſion of the former Chapter, that every one [of the Sanhedrin] went home, and here, Jeſus went into the Mount of Olives: which joyns the ſtory plain enough. Not that he lodged in mount Olivet in the open fields, but that he went to Bethany, and lodged in the Houſe of Lazarus, of which we ſhall find confirmation in the next Section.

In the morning he comes to the Temple, and in the treaſury, or the Court of the women, he ſitteth down, and teacheth the people: For it was the cuſtom for the Teachers of the people to ſit when they taught, and thoſe that were taught to ſtand about them. As he thus ſits teaching, the Scribes and Phariſees bring a Woman to him taken in the act of Adultery, &c.

The Syriack wants this ſtory: and Beza doubts it [a man always ready to ſuſpect the text] becauſe of the ſtrangeneſs of Chriſts action, writing with his finger on the ground. Mihi ut ingenue loquar [ſaith he] vel ob hunc ipſum locum ſuſpecta eſt hæc hiſtoria. Whereas it ſpeaks the ſtyle of John throughout, and the demeanor of the Scribes and Phariſees, and of Chriſt moſt conſonantly to their carriage all along the Goſpel. The ſnare that they laid for him in this matter, was various. That he ſhould condemn the adultereſs, but where was the adulterer? why brought they not him too? If he condemned her, he ſeemed to aſſume Judicial power: if he condemned her not, he ſeemed a contemner ner of the Law. But he in his divine wiſdom uſed ſuch a mean, as condemned their baſeneſs, and confounded their machination againſt him. His writing with his finger upon the ground, may rather be conſtrued from alluſion to Numb. 5. 23. or from Jer. 17. 13. or from a paſſage in Tal. Jeruſ. in Megillah. fol 74. col. 2. or from ſeveral other illuſtrations, then for that action roughly and rudely to deny the authenticknes of the ſtory. The cenſuring and judging of this Woman, belonged to a Judicial bench at the leaſt of twenty three Judges, and it would have carried a fair accuſation againſt him, had he gone about to judge in ſuch a matter. The Woman was eſpouſed and not yet married, as ſee Deut. 22. 24. for their Judicials puniſhed him that lay with an eſpouſed maid, with ſtoning, Sanhedr. per. 7. halac. 4. but him that lay with a married wife, with ſtrangling, Ibid. per 11. halac. 1.

Chriſts words at ver. 25. I am even the ſame that I ſaid to you from the beginning, refer to his open and manifeſt aſſerting himſelf for the Meſſiah a year and a half ago before the Sanhedrin. Joh. 5.

Their words to him, ver. 57. Thou art not yet fifty years old, mean, Thou art not yet come within the compaſs of old age, no not to the firſt skirts of it, for fifty years was the beginning of ſuperannuation to the Levites at the Temple, Numb. 4. and the Jews had a common opinion, that whoſoever died before fifty, or at leaſt fifty two, died untimely, and as it were by cutting off.

SECTION LX.

LUKE. Chap. X. from Ver. 17. to the end of the Chapter.
And Chap. XI, and XII, and XIII, to Ver. 23.

THe obſerving of the beginning and end of this Section, will cleer the ſubſequence of this to the preceding, and the order of all the ſtories comprehended in it. It begins with the ſeventy Diſciples returning from the imployment upon which their Maſter had ſent them. Now that they returned to him at Jeruſalem whither he was gone to the Feaſt of Tabernacles, appears by this, that after they are come up to him, he is in Bethany in the houſe of Mary and Martha, Luke 10. 38, 39.

The Section ends with this relation, And he went through the Cities and Villages teaching and journeying towards Jeruſalem, Luke 13. 22. So that in Chap. 10. 17. he is at Jeruſalem, having come thither to the Feaſt of Tabernacles, And in Chap. 13. 22. He hath been abroad and is now travelling up to Jeruſalem again to the Feaſt of Dedication. Therefore this whole Section is the ſtory of his actions from the one Feaſt to the other.

Chap. X. Upon the Diſciples relating that the Devils were ſubject to them in his Name, he anſwers, I ſaw Satan fall from Heaven like lightning. Which referreth partly to his death ſhortly to be, by which Satan was overthrown, and partly [if Heaven mean the Church of the Jews, and the ſtate of Religion there as it means not ſeldome] to the power of the Goſpel this very year and forward, among them, caſting him out. With theſe words of Chriſt, and the conſideration of the time they refer to, we may fitly compare ſeveral places which give and receive light mutually with it: As Matth. 12. 45. where Satan caſt out of this nation returns again, 1 Cor. 6. 3. Rev. 12. 9. & Rev. 20. 1, 2. &c.

Unto a Lawyer Chriſt defineth who is a Neighbour, by the Parable of the wounded man and the good Samaritan, vaſtly differing from the Doctrine of the Phariſees in that caſe. Take theſe two or three aſſertions of their own Schools for ſome illuſtration of this Parable.

1. They accounted none under the term Brother, but an Iſraelite by blood, and none under the term Neighbour, but thoſe that were come into their Religion. Aruch in voce בנבריות. By uſing the word Neighbour are excluded all the Heathen. Maym. in Retſeah per. 2. An Iſraelite that ſlayeth a ſtranger ſojourning among them, is not to be put to death by the Sanhedrin for it, becauſe it is ſaid, If a man come preſumptuouſly upon his Neighbour: By which it is apparent they accounted not ſuch a one a Neighbour.

2. They have this bloody and deſperate tenet: Hereticks, that is, Iſraelites that follow Idolatry, or ſuch as commit provoking tranſgreſſions, as to eat a carcaſs, or to wear linſeye woolſey for provocation, this is an Heretick. And Epicurians, which are ſuch Iſraelites as deny the Law and Prophets, it is commanded that a man kill them if he have power in his hand to kill them; and he may boldly kill them with the ſword: but if he cannot, he ſhall ſubtilly come about them till he can compaſs their death. As if he ſee one of them fallen into a well, and there was a ladder in the well before, let him take it up and ſay, I muſt needs uſe it to fetch my Son from the top of the Houſe, and then I will bring it thee again. But Heathens betwixt whom and us there is no war, as alſo the feeders of ſmall Cattle in Iſrael, and ſuch like, we may not compaſs their death; but it is forbidden to deliver them, if they be in danger of death.

[Obſerve

[Obſerve this] As if one ſee one of them fall into the Sea, he ſhall not fetch him up, for it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt not ſtand up againſt the blood of thy Neighbour. But ſuch a one is not thy Neighbour.

3. Of all other people in the World they abhorred Samaritans, as appeareth by John 4. 9. & 8. 43. and by exceeding many expreſſions to that purpoſe in their own writings: and therefore our Savious urging for cleer and free charity in this Parable, exemplifieth in a Samaritan the unlikelieſt man in the world to do any charitable office for a Jew: and he a Neighbour, though ſo remote in blood, religion and converſe.

Chriſt is at Bethany, ver. 30. in the houſe of Mary and Martha. Martha was an uſual Womans name in the Nation. Joſhua the Son of Gamla married Martha the Daughter of Baithus, Juchaſ. fol. 57. Abba the Son of Martha. Id. fol. 72. and Aruch in נחם. Iſaac bar Shemuel, bar Martha. Jeruſ. in Shab. fol. 3. col. 4. &c. And now let the Reader caſt his eye back from hence, and calculate, when or how it was, that Chriſt came ſo acquainted with this family, and he will find no time or occaſion ſo likely, as when the Woman-ſinner waſhed his feet, Luke 7. which we proved there was Mary, the ſiſter of Lazarus, who was alſo called Magdalen.

Chap. XI. ver. 2. The Lords prayer rehearſed: Chriſt had taught it, almoſt a year and a half ago, in his Sermon in the Mount, and now being deſired to teach them to pray, he gives the ſame again. They that deny this for a form of prayer to be uſed, either know not, or conſidered not, what kind of prayers the eminent men among the Jews taught them: John had taught his to pray, after the ſame manner and uſe of the Nation; and Chriſt being deſired to teach the Diſciples as John had taught his, rehearſeth this form which he had given before. They that again deny this Prayer is to be uſed by any but real Saints, becauſe as they ſay, none but ſuch can call God Our Father; either know not or conſider not, how uſual this compellation was among the Nation in their devotions, and Chriſt ſpeaketh conſtantly according to the common and moſt uſual language of the Country.

At ver. 14. and forward, there is a ſtory of caſting out a Devil, ſo like that in Sect. 35. the Jews cavil, and our Saviours words about it are the very ſame: and yet the current of the hiſtory evinceth them for two ſeveral ſtories: for as the Jews always carried the ſame malicious conſtruction of his Miracles, ſo doth he juſtly always return them the ſame anſwer, as hath been obſerved already.

At ver, 27. there is a link that chains the time and ſtories, As he ſpake theſe things: and another at ver. 29. If compared with ver. 16. and again at ver. 37. where his denouncing wo againſt the Phariſees, although it be much the ſame for ſenſe with that in Matth. 23. yet that they were uttered at two ſeveral times and upon two ſeveral occaſions, will appear by that time that we come to that Chapter.

In Chap. XII. He rehearſeth many things that he had ſpoken before: the ſame doctrine being needful to be inculcated over and over, though to the ſame audience: much more when new auditors were ſtill coming in. Therefore Chriſt towards his latter end, did like Moſes, making his Deuteronomium rehearſe the doctrine that he had taught before.

Chap. XIII. The firſt verſe beareth this link of connexion, and continuance of ſtory: There were preſent at that ſeaſon, &c. Pilates bloody Act in mingling ſome Galileans blood with their ſacrifices, cannot be looked for ſo properly in any place, as at the Temple. Joſephus his ſtory in Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 5. is far from it. Siloam was in the midſt of the City, Jeruſ. in Chagigah fol. 76. col. 1. a place of great concourſe, where the fall of the Tower ſlew eighteen men.

SECTION LXI.

JOHN Chap. IX, and Chap. X. all the Chapters.

A blind man from his bearth healed. Chriſt the good ſhepherd: The Feaſt of Dedication.

THat this healing of the blind man was at Jeruſalem, appeareth by this, that Chriſt ſends him to the pool of Siloam to waſh, ver. 7. which lay upon the weſtern part of the City. For Chriſt was now come up to the Feaſt of Dedication, Chap. 10. 22. ſo that this cleers the order and time.

He cures blind eyes on the Sabbath, by putting clay upon them made of his ſpittle, a ready way one would have thought to have put ſeeing eyes out. Maym. in Shabb. per. 21. Faſting ſpittle is forbidden to be put ſo much as upon the eye on the Sabbath.

Maladies of Children that were extraordinary, the Jews did very much aſcribe to ſome ſin of the Parents: and the traditionaries uſed this conceit as a means to awe men to the obſervance of their traditions. So they conceit of this man. Chap. 9. 2, 34. Thou waſt altogether born in ſins. We alledged before, their fancie about Shibta an evil ſpirit that ſeized ſeiſed upon Children by the neck and ſhrunk up their ſinnews: And whence, ſay they comes this? And they give this anſwer. If the mother come from the houſe of office and give the Child ſuck preſently, &c. A fetch meerly to awe women to waſh after ſuch occaſions, and to put the more repute upon their traditions about waſhings.

The man upon whom the miracle is wrought taketh Jeſus to be a Prophet upon it, but as yet doth not know him for Meſſias. ver. 17. And when he ſaith to the Jews, Will ye alſo be his Diſciples? ver. 27. he ſpeaketh it ſeriouſly and from a good heart, urging them to own him for a Prophet as he did: And when he was vehement with them in this pious aſſerting, they caſt him out of the Synagogue. For they had agreed already, that if any man did confeſs that he was the Meſſias, he ſhould be caſt out of the Synagogue, ver. 22. A paſſage very well worth obſerving, both towards ſome diſcovery of the nature of their excommunication, and for illuſtration of ſeveral matters in this divine hiſtory.

Chap. X. Chriſt from Ezek. 34. and Zech. 11. aſſerteth himſelf the great Shepherd, and condemneth the evil ſhepherds that undid the flock: eſpecially the three that his ſoul loathed. Zech. 11. 8. The Phariſees, Sadduces and Eſſeans: He feeding his flock with two ſhepherds ſtaves, called Beauty and Bands: at the laſt breaketh them: His ſtaff Beauty, diſſolving the Covenant of Peculiarity, once made with Iſrael, by which they alone were his people, but that peculiarity now gone, and the Gentiles taken in. And his ſtaff Bands, diſſolving the brootherhood twixt Iſrael and Judah, that now there is a difference betwixt a true Iſraelite and a Jew; and Iſraelites owning Chriſt, and they that own him not are no more brethren.

It was at Jeruſalem the feaſt of the Dedication, ver. 22. Under the ſecond Temple when the Grecian Kings decreed decrees againſt Iſrael, and aboliſhed their Law, and ſuffered them not to practiſe the Law and Commandments, and laid their hands upon their goods and upon their daughters, and went into the Temple and made breaches in it, and defiled the pure things, and Iſrael was in exceeding great ſtraits becauſe of them, and they afflicted them with great affliction, untill the Lord God of their Fathers had pitty on them, and delivered them out of their hand: and the Aſmonean high Prieſts prevailed againſt them, and ſlew them, and delivered Iſrael out of their hands: and ſet up a King of the Prieſts, and the Kingdom returned to Iſrael more then two hundred years, even to the ſecond deſtruction: And when Iſrael prevailed againſt their enemies and ſlew them, it was the five and twentieth day of the month Ciſleu: and they went into the Temple, and found not of pure Oyle in the Sanctuary but only one bottle, and there was not in it ſo much as to light above one day: yet they lighted the Lamps with it for eight days, untill they had beaten their Olives and got pure Oyle. And becauſe of this, the wiſe men that were in that generation, ordained that thoſe eight days, beginning from the 25 th. of Ciſleu, ſhould be days of rejoycing and thanksgiving: and they light up Candles on them in the evening at the doors of their houſes, every night of the eight, for the declaring and ſetting forth of that miracle: and thoſe days are called the Dedication, &c. Maym. in Channuchah. per. 1. See 1 Maccab. 4. 59. Theſe eight days of Ciſleu fell about the middle of our December. And ſo by this intimation John hath kept the Clock of time going, that we may tell how the ſtory goes. Since Chriſts being at the Feaſt of Tabernacles hitherto, was about two months and ſomewhat more.

The three laſt verſes of this tenth Chapter, which mention Chriſts going beyond Jordan, ſpeak the ſame thing with Matth. 19. 1. and Mark 10. 1. and might very properly be ſet collateral with thoſe texts, but ſince it was ſomewhat longer after Chriſts departure from Jeruſalem to his arival beyond Jordan, theſe may be taken in here, and underſtood, as ſpoken of his ſetting forth from Jeruſalem, and ſhewing whether he intended to go.

SECTION LXII.

LUKE Chap. XIII. Ver. 23. to the end of the Chapter. And Chap. XIV, XV, XVI, XVII, XVIII, to Ver. 15.

THE order here is ſomewhat obſcure, and that eſpecially from theſe two things. 1. Becauſe of the firſt verſe of all the Section, which may ſeem to be linked to the time of the verſe preceding it in Luke. He went thorow the Cities and Villages teaching and journeying towards Jeruſalem. Then ſaid one to him, &c. 2. Becauſe of that paſſage in Chap. 17. 11. And it came to paſs as he went to Jeruſalem, he paſſed through the mids of Samaria and Galilee, which might ſeem to be the ſame journey with that Chap. 13. 22. and that all the occurrences in theſe Chapters were in that journey.

But for the proof and cleering of the order, to be as we have laid it, theſe things are to be obſerved. 1. That this ſtory wherewithall this Section beginneth, One ſaid to him Lord, are few to be ſaved? &c. was on the ſame day that he crieth out, O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, &c. ver. 31. 34. Now that this was when Chriſt was no more to come up to Jeruſalem till his laſt coming up thither, is evident from his words, ver. 35. Ye ſhall no more

ſee me till the time when ye ſhall ſay, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the Name of the Lord: So that this was after his coming up to the Feaſt of Dedication. And thoſe words were ſpoken, whilſt he was yet at Jeruſalem, before he went away thence from the Feaſt to go beyond Jordan: The word Then therefore wherewith this Section beginneth in our Engliſh tranſlation, doth not enforce the neceſſary conjunction of the times, for in the Original it is not תיהי but אז. 2. Whereas it is ſaid, in *Chap.*17.11. That as he went to Jeruſalem, he paſſed through Samaria and Galilee, it is to be underſtood his laſt journey thither: and the manner of expreſſion doth help to confirm of our order, as we ſhall ſee there. Herod was now at Jeruſalem, as compare ver. 31. and 34. and it may be, he being Ruler of Galilee, had helped forward the death of theſe Galileans whom Pilate had ſlain as they were Sacrificing: and an intimation of ſuch like danger from him is given Jeſus: And this may be conceived one cauſe that ſets him out of the City, and to go beyond Jordan, which is recorded in the laſt verſes of the preceding Section, John 10.40. and how the order of ſtory is to be caſt in the readers thoughts it is eaſie to ſee. Chriſt being at the Feaſt of Dedication at Jeruſalem, one comes and asks him, Lord, are few to be ſaved: Luke 13.23. And the ſame day, ver.31. ſome Phariſees tell him of danger from Herod. He anſwers, that it was true indeed that he was to die at Jeruſalem, for a Prophet could not be tried but by the great Council there [Talm. in Sanhedr. per. 11.] but he had yet ſome time to walk and work miracles before, and ſo he goes away from Jeruſalem.

Chap. XIV. He healeth the Dropſie on the Sabbath, and pleadeth the lawfulneſs of the action, from their own pity to their beaſts, to pull them out of a Pit on the Sabbath, of which *Maym. in Schabb. per.*25.

R. Abuhabh in præfat. ad Ner. 7. hath a Parable ſomewhat like that paſſage at *ver.*8. and forward. Three men, ſaith he, were bidden to a feaſt, A Prince, a wiſe man, and an humble man: The Prince ſate higheſt, next him the wiſe man, and the humble man loweſt. The King obſerved it, and asked the Prince, why ſitteſt thou higheſt? He ſaid, Becauſe I am a Prince. To the wiſe man, Why ſitteſt thou next? He ſaid, Becauſe I am a wiſe man. And to the humble man, Why ſitteſt thou loweſt? Becauſe I am humble. The King ſeated the humble man higheſt, and the wiſe man ſtill in his place, and the Prince loweſt.

Chap. XV. By three eminent and feeling Parables, is ſet forth Gods readineſs to receive ſinners, &c. in the laſt of which is a cleer intimation of the calling of the Gentiles.

Chap. XVI. The Parable of the unjuſt ſteward, of the rich man and Lazarus, from Pſal. 49. Lazer is uſed conſtantly in the Jeruſ. Talm. for Eleazer. The word ſignifies God help me, or God is my help, a fit name under which to perſonate a begger. Abrahams boſome, a phraſe uſed by the Jews. That day that Rabbi died, R. Ada ben Ahava ſaid, This day he ſits in Abrahams boſome, Juchaſin fol. 77.col. 4. That the tongue of the damned in hell thirſt for water, as ver. 24. is alſo their conception. Talm. Jeruſ. in Chagigah. fol. 77. col. 4. is relating a ſtory of a good man and a bad man that died: And the good man לא איתנמל ליה חסד, had no burial rites, but the bad man had. Afterward one in a viſion ſaw the good man walking in gardens, and among pleaſant fountains of waters: but the bad neer a river, and his tongue reach after water, but could not reach it.

Chap. XVII. At ver. 11. it is ſaid, As he went through Jeruſalem, he paſſed through Samaria and Galilee. This meaneth his laſt journey thither; but the expreſſion is ſomewhat ſtrange: Had it been as he went to Jeruſalem he paſſed through Galilee and Samaria, this had ſet his face towards Jeruſalem: but uttered as it is, it ſeems to ſet his back upon it: But by this paſſage the Evangeliſt helpeth to explain what John and the other Evangeliſts ſpeak of his journey from Jeruſalem beyond Jordan, but that he went not to Jericho, and ſo the next way to the next place beyond Jordan, namely that he went through Samaria up into Galilee, and there croſſed over Jordan to Bethabara, which was over againſt Galilee.

From ver. 20. and forward, there is a ſpeech of Chriſt much like that in *Matth.*24. which ſtill giveth us occaſion to obſerve how Chriſt rehearſed things over and over.

Chap. XVIII. By two Parables he ſheweth the needfulneſs and efficacy of fervency, conſtancy and humility in prayer. In the Phariſees prayer ver. 11. we may obſerve what kind of Faith in God the Judaick Faith was. He waited for good from God, but grounded this in himſelf, becauſe of his own righteouſneſs. But in the Goſpel the righteouſneſs of God is revealed, and that from faith to faith. In the Publicans poſture in his prayer, two of their Canonical geſtures in prayer are exhibited; ſtanding and looking downward. Maym. in Deah per. 7. חס מסחכל למטה כמו שהוא עומד בתפילה A ſcholar of the wiſe muſt look downward when he ſtands praying. The Phariſees faſting twice a week, may be explained from *Jeruſ. Taanith fol.*64.3, *& Maym. Taanith per.*1.

SECTION LXIII.

MATTH. Chap. XIX. from the beginning to Ver. 13.

MARK Chap. X. from the beginning to Ver. 13.

CHRIST beyond Jordan. Concerning Divorce.

MATTHEW saith, When Jesus had finished these sayings, he departed from Galilee, and came into the coasts of Judea beyond Jordan. Which sayings that he speaketh of, were finished a long while ago, at Sect. 55. but because he setteth down nothing betwixt that time and this journey over Jordan, therefore he thus joyneth their stories together: The time and actions that he hath omitted, we have seen how Luke and John have supplied.

Were there any Coasts of Judea beyond Jordan? Either the conjunction And is to be understood, He came into the coasts of Judea and beyond Jordan, as it is understood Psal. 133. 3 Acts 7. 16, &c. or by Fines Judææ trans Jordanem, is meant Fines Judæorum, because the Syrians also dwelt in the coasts beyond Jordan.

Moses at the very same instant of time gave a Law to put an adulterous Wife to death, *Deut.*22.22. and a Law to divorce her, *Deut.*24.1. in the former shewing the desert of the fact, in the latter permitting to mitigate of the rigour of that Law, and as our Saviour here interprets it, to prevent those cruel effects that their hardness of heart might have produced, had there been no mitigation. They brag of that Law of divorce as if it favoured them, as a peculiar priviledge, Jeruſ. kidduſhin fol. 58. 3. R. Chaijah Rabbah said, Divorces are not granted to the nations of the world, meaning not to the Gentiles as they were to the Jews: whereas truth here informs us, that it was permitted only because of the hardness of their hearts and to avoid greater mischief. When permission of divorce was given, after a Law to punish adultery with death, for a mitigation of it, it requires most serious weighing, whether a Law to punish adultery with death should be undispensable now, after the Law of Divorce given, and continued by our Saviour in case of Fornication.

SECTION LXIV.

MATTH. Chap. XIX. from Ver. 13. to the end of the Chapter.

MARK Chap. X. from Ver. 13 to Ver. 32.

LUKE Chap. XVIII. from Ver 15. to Ver. 31.

Infants brought to Christ. A rich man departs sorrowful.

MATTHEW and Mark do evidence the order, and as Luke hath helped out their briefness before, so do they also again help us out about his order.

Whose Children were these that were brought to Christ? Not unbelievers doubtless, but the Children of some that professed Christ: Why did they bring them? Not to be healed of any disease doubtless, for then the Disciples would not have been angry at their coming: for why at theirs, more then at all others, that had come for that end? Their bringing therefore must needs be concluded to be in the name of Disciples, and that Christ would so receive them and bless them: And so he doth, and asserteth them for Disciples, and to whom the Kingdom of Heaven belonged; taking the Kingdom of Heaven in the common acceptation of the Gospel.

Observe Mark 10. 19, &c. that mention being made by Christ of the Commandments, as if he spake of the whole Law, yet he instanceth only in the second table. And see the like again, *Rom.*13.8, &c. James 2.8,9,10, &c. The demeanour of men toward the second table is a sure trial how they stand to the first.

It is easier for a Camel to go through the eye of a needle. An expression common in the Nation. *Talm Bavamenia fol.*3 '. facie 2. It may be thou art of Pumbeditha where they can bring an Elephant through the eye of a needle.

SECTION LXV.

MATTH. Chap. XX. from the beginning to Ver. 17.

Labourers in the Vineyard, &c.

THe first word For makes plain the order and connexion, joyning this speech to that before.

The Jeruſ. Talm. in Beracoth hath a Parable somewhat like to this, but wildly applied to a far different purpose: A King hired many workmen, and there was one of them hired for his work, for more then what was enough: What did the King? He took him and walked with him up and down. At the time of the evening the workmen came to receive their wages, and he also gave him his full wages with them. The workmen repined and said, We have laboured all the day and this man laboured but two hours, and thou hast given him full wages with us: The King said to them, This man hath laboured more in two hours then you have done all day. So R. Bon laboured more in the Law in twenty nine years, then another in a hundred, &c. fol. 5.

SECTION LXVI.

JOHN Chap. XI. from the beginning to Ver. 17.

Tidings come to Christ of Lazarus ſickneſs.

AT Sect. 63. Chriſt goeth beyond Jordan: the occasion of his coming back, was the message of Mary and Martha to him, to desire his help to their sick brother: The story of this therefore is necessary to be related before the story of his coming thence, which is the next thing that the other three Evangelists fall upon, after they have done with what is set down in the preceding Sections.

The words of the second verse, It was that Mary which anointed the Lord with oyntment, and wiped his feet with her hair, are most generally construed as pointing to that story in the next Chapter, Joh. 12. 3. Then took Mary a pound of Oyntment of Spikenard very coſtly, and anointed the feet of Jeſus, and wiped his feet with her hair: Which seemeth very improper and unconsonant upon these reasons. 1. To what purpose should John use such an anticipation? It was neither material to the story that he was entring on, Chap. 11. to tell that Mary anoynted Chriſts feet a good while after he had raised her brother: nor was it any other then needless to bring in the mention of it here, since he was to give the full story of it in the next Chapter. 2. The word ἀλείψασα is of such a tense as doth properly denote an action past, and is so to be rendred, if it be rendred in its just propriety, It was Mary which had anointed. 3. Whereas no reason can be given why John should anticipate it here, if he meant it of an anointing that was yet to come, a plain and satisfactory reason may be given, why he speaks of it here, as referring to an anointing past, namely because he would shew what acquaintance and interest Mary had with Chriſt, which did imbolden her to send to him about her sick brother, for she had washed and anointed his feet heretofore. The words of John therefore point at an action past, and indeed they point at that story of the woman-sinner washing the feet of Chriſt with teares, and anointing them with Ointment, and wiping them with her hairs, Luke 7. It is true indeed that John who useth these words that we are upon, had not spoken of any such anointing before, whereunto to refer you in his own Gospel, but the passage was so well and renownedly known and recorded by Luke before, that he relateth to it as to a thing of most famous notice and memorial.

CHRIST foretelleth his ſuffering.

THe message from Mary and Martha, about their sick brother, inviteth Chriſt from beyond Jordan into Judea again. He staies two days after he had received the message in the same place where the messenger found him, and in the story of this Section he is set forward. And being now upon his last journey to Jeruſalem he foretelleth to his Disciples what should become of him there: They followed him with fear and amazement before, foreſeeing that he went upon his own danger, and yet when he had ſpoken the thing out to them at the full they underſtood him not.

MATTH. Chap. XX. from Ver. 20. to Ver. 29.

MARK Chap. X. from Ver. 35. to Ver. 46.

The requeſt of Zebedees ſons. They are told of their Martyrdom.

THe order is plain of it ſelf: and yet the connexion is ſomewhat ſtrange: for in the laſt words before, Chriſt had foretold of his death, yet the Sons of Zebedee here deſire to ſit on his right hand and left in his Kingdom. Galatius reſolves it thus, Diſcipuli in errore aliquando fuerunt, credentes Chriſtum illico, poſt reſurrectionem terreni regni ſceptro potiturum: unde & quidam eorum, ſuper cæteros primatum ambientes, &c. The Diſciples ſometimes were miſtaken, conceiving that Chriſt preſently after his reſurrection ſhould obtain the ſcepter of an earthly Kingdom, whereupon ſome of them ambitious of priority above the reſt, deſired to ſit on his right hand and left, &c. lib. 4. cap. 1. It is true indeed that the Jewiſh Nation, and the Diſciples with them erred in judging about Meſſias his Kingdom, Act. 1. but they erred as far alſo about Meſſias his Reſurrection, till experience had informed them better. Therefore it cannot well be imagined, that the Wife and Sons of Zebedee thought of Chriſts Reſurrection in this their requeſt, but conceived of his temporal Kingdom according to the notions of the reſt of the Nation about it: What therefore our Saviour had ſpoken inſtantly before of his being ſcourged, crucified, killed, and Riſing again, they underſtood in ſome figurative ſenſe or other; but the Evangeliſts plainly tell us, they underſtood it not in the ſenſe that he ſpake it. It may be his naming theſe two The ſons of thunder, gave them ſome blind incouragement to ſuch a requeſt. Chriſt foretels his own death and their ſuffering Martyrdom under the title of Baptiſm, in which ſenſe the Apoſtle alſo uſeth the word 1 Cor. 15.29. The Jewiſh baptizings or dippings in their purifications, was a very ſharp piece of Religion, when in froſt and ſnow and wind and weather they muſt over head and ears in cold water, from which the phraſe was uſed to ſignifie death and the bittereſt ſufferings. The Jeruſalem Gemariſts do tell us, that the Women of Galilee grew barren, by reaſon of the cold in their purifyings. R. Aha in the name of Tanchum bar R. Chaia ſaith, In the days of R. Joſhua ben Levi, they ſought to aboliſh this dipping, becauſe of the women of Galilee which were made barren by reaſon of the cold. R. Joſhua ben Levi ſaith, Do ye ſeek to aboliſh a thing that feneeth Iſrael from tranſgreſſion? &c. Beracoth fol. 6. col. 3.

THe order lies plain in ver. 1. Chriſt was paſſed through Jericho before he met with Zaccheus, &c. Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai, hath made the name Zaccai or Zaccheus renowned in Jewiſh writings: his Father Zaccai might very well be now alive, and for any difference of the times might well enough be the Zaccheus before us, but that ſome other other circumſtances do contradict it. Whoſoever this man was, it is obſervable, that though his name Zaccheus ſpeak him a Jew, yet Chriſt reputes him not a Child of Abraham till he believe, ver. 19.

JOHN Chap. XII. from begin. to Ver. 12.

A Supper at Bethany: Jeſus his feet anointed.

THe connexion of this ſtory to the preceding Chapter, is plainly made by the Evangeliſt himſelf: Compare ver. 55. of Chap. 11. and ver. 1. of this.

Though there were a Proclamation out againſt Jeſus for his life, Chap. 11. 57. yet cometh he for Jeruſalem, and Lazarus at Bethany is not afraid to entertain him. He may well venture his life for him who had received it from him. It was their Sabbath day at night when he had this Supper, a time that they uſed to have extraordinary cheer. Mary who had anointed his feet before, Luke 7. 38. doth the like again.

There is a groundleſs and a ſtrange opinion of ſome, that the Supper in Matth. 26. 6, 7. and Mark 14. 3. was the ſame with the Supper in John 12. An imagination, that I cannot enough admire at, ſeeing there are ſo many things plainly to gainſay it: but the diſcuſſion of it ſhall be deferred till we come to thoſe Chapters. Only one particular here may not be omitted without obſervation, and which will make ſomething at preſent toward the confutation of that opinion, and that is our Saviours anſwer in the vindication of Maries act, Let her alone, againſt the day of my burial hath ſhe kept this: or rather, She hath kept it: Not that he meaneth that this anointing of his feet, was her anointing him againſt his burial, but that ſhe had kept ſome of this oyntment yet for that purpoſe hereafter. Judas repined at the expence of the oyntment that ſhe uſed for the anointing of his feet, and pleaded that it had been better beſtowed upon charitable uſes for the poor: Why? ſaith Chriſt, ſhe hath kept it yet and not ſpent all, that ſhe may beſtow it upon a charitable uſe, the anointing of my body to its burial. For 1. neither the text doth any whit aſſert that ſhe ſpent the whole pound that ſhe brought, nor indeed in reaſon was ſo great a quantity needful. 2. It was not ſo proper to apply it to his burial now, when

as he was to ride in triumph to Jeruſalem to morrow, as it was two daies before the Paſſover [when the other Supper and anointing was] which was the very night when Judas compacted for his betraying. 3. Then Chriſt ſaith ſhe poured it upon his body, Matt, 26. 12. which cannot be of the ſame ſenſe with pouring it upon his feet only. She therefore ſix days before the Paſſover anointed his feet, which was an ordinary uſe among the Jews to have their feet anointed, and the Talmudiſts give ſome rules about it in Talm. Jeruſ. Sanhedr. fol. 21. col. 1. and this ſhe doth in dear love and affection to him: But two daies before the Paſſover, ſhe doth not ſo much anoint his head, as pour the Ointment upon his head that it might run all over his body, and this ſhe did towards his burial, not only in his conſtruction, but in her own intention: ſhe being the firſt we read of that believed his death, as ſhe was the firſt that ſaw him after his reſurrection. Her faith and fact he foreſaw, and therefore ſaith now at the anointing of his feet, that ſhe yet kept it for the anointing of his body, which when ſhe did, he extols the fact with this encomion, that whereſoever the Goſpel ſhould be preached, that action of her, the example of the firſt faith in his death, ſhould be publiſhed in memorial of her. Thus did this Mary, [who as hath been ſhewed was Mary Magdalen] anoint Chriſt three ſeveral times, his feet at her firſt converſion, and his feet again at this time, ſix daies before the Paſſover, and his head and body two daies before the Paſſover, even that night that Judas firſt went about to make his bargain for betraying him.

CHRIST rideth upon an Aſs into Jeruſalem.

JOHN maketh the connexion plain, when he ſaith, On the next day, &c. And ſheweth that as Chriſt went up at this time, in the evidence and accompliſhment of that Propheſie, Zech. 9.9. ſo he alſo went up in the equity and anſwering of that Type, of taking up the Paſchal Lamb on the tenth day, Exod. 12. 3. for this was on that very day: and the Lamb of God doth now go in, as giving up himſelf for the great Paſchal.

John telleth us that he lay at Bethany the night before this, and yet the other Evangeliſts have related it, that when he came to Bethpage and Bethany, he ſent two of his Diſciples for the Aſs, &c. The Jews Chorography will here help us out: They tell us

1. אלפיים אמה מגרש העיר Two thouſand cubits was the Suburbs of a City. Maym. in Schabh. per. 27.

2. אלפיים אמה תחומים השבת Two thouſand cubits were the bounds of a Sabbath, or a Sabbath days journey. Talm. in Sotah per. 5.

3. Bethpage was of this nature: it was not a Town upon mount Olivet as it hath been very generally ſuppoſed, and accordingly placed in the moſt Maps, but it was ſome buildings and that ſpace of ground that lay from Jeruſalem wall forward towards mount Olivet, and up mount Olivet to the extent of two thouſand cubits from the wall, or thereabout; and hereupon it was reputed by the Jews of the ſame qualification with Jeruſalem, as a part of it, in divers reſpects.

Talm. Bab. Peſachin fol. 63. fac. 2. He that ſlays a Thanksgiving Sacrifice within, while the bread belonging to it is without the wall, the bread is not holy. What means without the wall? R. Jochanan ſaith, Without the wall of Bethpage. The Gloſs there ſaith, Bethpage was an outer place of Jeruſalem. And the ſame Gloſs uſeth the very ſame words again upon the ſame Tract, fol. 91. fac. 1. And again in the ſame Treatiſe fol. 95. fac. 2. the Miſhna ſaith thus, The two loaves and the ſhewbread are allowable in the Temple Court, and they are allowable in Bethpage. Nay the Gloſs in Sanhedr. fol. 14. fac. 1. ſaith, Bethpage was a place which was accounted as Jeruſalem for all things. So that the place ſo called, began from Jeruſalem and went onwards to and upon mount Olivet, for the ſpace of a Sabbath daies journey or thereabout, and then began the coaſt that was called Bethany. And hence it is that Luke ſaith that Chriſt when he aſcended into Heaven, led forth his Diſciples as far as Bethany, Luke 24. 50. which elſewhere he ſheweth was the ſpace of a Sabbath days journey, Acts. 1. 12. which cannot be underſtood of the Town Bethany, for that was fifteen furlongs, or very neer two Sabbath daies journey from Jeruſalem, but that he led them over that ſpace of ground which was called Bethpage, to that part of Olivet where it began to be called Bethany, and at that place it was where Chriſt began his triumphant riding into the City at this time.

It

It is obſervable that he is entertained with the ſolemnity of the Feaſt of Tabernacles: for carrying of Palm branches and crying Hoſanna was never uſed but only at that Feaſt, but now tranſlated to this occaſion: which may help ſomewhat to the explaining of Zech. 14.16.

Count from hence the daies to the Paſsover, as the Evangeliſts have reckoned them, and you will find that this was the firſt day of the week [the Lords day afterward] and this day ſeven night he roſe from the dead.

In the midſt of his triumph he weepeth over the City, though he knew that within five daies ſhe would be his death.

THe order is plain in the Text of John, and needeth no illuſtration.

Chriſt was thrice atteſted from Heaven, according to his threefold Office, King Prieſt and Prophet. At his Baptiſm, for the great Highprieſt, when he was anointed and entred into his Miniſtry. At his Transfiguration for the great Prophet to whom all muſt hear. And now for the great King, when he had newly fulfilled this Prophecy, Rejoyce O Sion, behold thy King cometh, &c.

MARK Chap. XI. from the middle of Ver. 11. to Ver. 27.

MATTH. Chap. XXI. from Ver. 17. to Ver. 23.

The fruitleſs Figtree curſed,

THe order is clear in Mark ver. 11.12.

Chriſt after his riding into Jeruſalem, having ſpent all the day there, goeth at even to lodg at Bethany: and in the morning going for Jeruſalem again and hugring ſeeth a Figtree, and finding no Figs on it curſeth it, and yet the Evangeliſt telleth that the time of Figs was not yet.

Why then ſhould Chriſt look for Figs, when he knew the time of the year was not yet for them?

Anſw. He looked not for any Figs that he thought could be grown ripe and fit to eat, that ſpring, it being now at the furtheſt but about our April, but he looked for thoſe that grew the laſt ſummer, and had hung on the trees all winter, It is true indeed that ſome trees had ſhot forth their fruit by Paſsover time, for ſo Maymony tells us in Kidduſh Hhodeſh per. 4. but neither to ripeneſs; nor was the Figtree any of them. For to thoſe words of our Saviour, Matth. 23.32. When the Figtree putteth forth her leaves ye know Summer is nigh, lay theſe of Jeruſ. in Sheviith fol. 35. col. 4. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel ſaith, From the putting forth of the Figtree leaf to the green Figs appearing are fifty daies: and from the firſt appearing of the Fig to the fall of the bloſſom fifty daies, and from thence to the ripe Figs fifty daies more: five months in all.

There were ſeveral kinds of Figtrees in that Land, as the Jews tell us in the Treatiſes Demai and Sheviith, where they have ſpecial occaſion to treat of that matter, [beſides thoſe Figtrees that were in their Orchards and Vineyards.] As 1. שיחין which they ſay were Figs of the Wilderneſs. 2. בנות שקמות which were baſer Figs likewiſe. 3. פרסאות Figtrees that brought their fruit to ripeneſs but once in two years. And 4. בנות שוח which they ſay grew in the fields and bare white Figs לשלש שנים from three years to three years. The Gemariſts diſpute, What? Do they bear their fruit every year, or only once in three years? They bear their fruit every year, but it is not ripe till three years end. How doth a man know its time, or what year it is with it? R. Jonah ſaith, by binding a liſt about it. It is a tradition of Samuel, that he hung ſome pendants upon it. The meaning of the matter is this: There was a Figtree growing in the fields of this nature, that the Figs that it ſhot forth one ſummer, it was two ſummers more before they came to ripeneſs, ſo that they hung upon the tree [unleſs hands or wind hindred] three ſummers and two winters before their maturity: Now becauſe the ſtrange nature of this tree, different from others, cauſed that the ſeventh year, or year of releaſe could not ſo eaſily be remembred and obſerved concerning it as concerning other trees, therefore they tied ſome coards or liſts about it, or hung ſomething upon it, that might give notice, and keep in remembrance what year it was with it, and whether the fruit, if any, were of the firſt, ſecond or third years growth. So likewiſe the figtrees mentioned before, called פגים were two ſummers in ripening their fruit. So that of ſuch a tree as one of theſe Chriſt might well look for figs of the laſt years growth, old figs under new leaves, if ſo be the leaves were new. Yet could not this properly be called καιρὸς σύκων [as there are that would change the reading of the original, and inſtead of ὁ γὰρ ἦν, for the time of figs was not yet, would have it read (but I queſtion whether with the conſent of any one copy in the world) ὃ γὰρ ἦν, For where he was, was the time of figs.] For that phraſe, The time of figs, meaneth the common time that generally figs were ripe, which was ordinary and commonly known, and which was not of well near five months after Paſsover time.

Chriſt cometh to the Temple and caſteth out buyers and ſellers as he had done three years before: this was four daies before the Paſsover. At Even he goeth and lodgeth in Bethany.

In the morning he cometh again to Jeruſalem. This was three daies before the Paſsover. As they came, the Diſciples obſerve the figtree withered, whereupon he ſaith, Have faith in God, for verily I ſay unto you, that whoſoever ſhall ſay unto this mountain, Be thou removed and caſt into the ſea, and ſhall not doubt in his heart but believe that thoſe things which he ſaith ſhall come to paſs, he ſhall have whatſoever he ſaith. In which words he neither warranteth nor encourageth any to look for a faith that ſhould remove mountains; but 1. He ſpeaketh Hyperbolically for the magnifying of the power and excellency of faith, as Mark 9. 23. Hyperboles, with which the Scripture abounds, are not to be taken according to the letter, but the thing intended is to be taken at the higher pitch. As to inſtance but in one example, and that about this very mountain that Chriſt pointed at, Zech. 14. 4. which meaneth not literally Olivets cleaving indeed or removing, but great concuſſions to the people, and open way made for the enemy. 2. Chriſt in this expreſſion ſpeaks the Jews own language, and by the very phraſe that they ordinarily uſed to magnifie their own abilities by, he magnifieth faith. When they would ſpeak of the high parts and qualities of their great ones, they uſed to ſay, He is a remover of mountains, Tal. Bab. Beracoth. fol. 64. fac. 1. Sinai and the Remover of mountains, whether of them ſent firſt, &c. Now Rabh Joſeph was Sinai, and Rabbah was The remover of mountains. Why ſo named? The Gloſs upon the place reſolves us thus, They called Rabh Joſeph Sinai, becauſe he was moſt expert in deep explications. And they called Rabbah bar Nachmani A remover of mountains, becauſe he was moſt acutely learned, &c. The ſame Talmud alſo in Erubhin fol. 29. ſaith thus, Rabba ſaith, Behold I am like ben Azzai in the ſtreets of Tiberias. The Gloſs thereupon ſaith thus, Ben Azzai taught profoundly in the ſtreets of Tiberias, and there was no man in his daies that was a remover of mountains like him. By removing of mountains meaning how able men they were, and how they could overcome the greateſt difficulties in Divinity. Which common phraſe Chriſt uſeth to face that wretched boaſting of theirs of their own parts and worth, and to ſet up faith in its proper dignity, as that that is only able for all things.

Tribute to Cesar. The Resurrection asserted in the Law.
The great Commandment. Christ how Davids Son.
Wo against the Scribes and Pharisees.

THE Evangelists are so clear in their order, both here and a good way forward, that there can be no scrupling in it.

The question proposed, Whether it were lawful to give tribute to Cesar, proceeded from that old maxime among them, upon mistake of Deut. 17. 15. that they ought not to be subject to any power or potentate, which was not of their own blood or Religion: the holding to which maxime, cost them the ruine of their City and Nation.

His answer from the Image of Cesar upon their coin, was according to their own concessions. The Jerusalem Talmud doth personate David and Abigail talking thus. Abigail said, What evil have I done or my Children, or my Cattel? David saith to her, Because thy Husband vilified the Kingdom of David, She saith, Art thou a King then? He saith to her, Did not Samuel anoint me King? she saith to him. עדיין טוניטח דמו ן שאול קיים The Coin of our Lord Saul is yet current: In Sanhedr. fol, 20. col. 2. Maym. in Gezelah per. 5. A King that cuts down the trees of any owner, and makes a bridge of them, it is lawful to go over it, &c. How is this to be understood? Of a King whose Coin is current in these Countries, for the men of the Country do thereby evidence, that they acknowledge him for their Lord and themselves his servants: But if his coin be not current, then he is a robber, &c.

The topick from whence he argueth the Resurrection against the Saduces, is also acknowledged by the Writers of that Nation: Tanchum. fol. 13. col. 3. The holy blessed God doth not joyn his Name to the Saints while they are alive, but when they are dead: as it is said, To the Saints which are in the earth, &c. But behold we find that he joyns his Name to Isaac [meaning, he calls himself the God of Isaac] while he was alive, &c. Jerus. in Beracoth fol. 5. col. 4. Whence is there proof that the righteous are called living when they are dead, &c.

He poseth the Pharisees in their very Catechism: they used it as a common name for the Messias to call him the Son of David, and yet when they are put to it to observe that David calls him Lord, they are so far nonplust, that they have not only not what to answer, for the present, but this silenceth them from future disputes. Now therefore he falls upon them with their deserved character and doom, and as in Matth. 5. he had pronounced beatitudes, so here in Matth. 23. he denounceth woes, and curseth these men from Isa. 65. 15, &c.

This Chapter as it is a speech to and of the Scribes and Pharisees, and treateth of their doctrines and demeanours, so from their own Pandects and Authors may it be explained from point to point: those speaking out their doctrines and practises to the full.

Their sitting in Moses chair, ver. 1. meaneth them as Magistrates, to whom Christ injoyneth all lawful obedience. Vid. Sanhedr. per. 1. halac. 6.

Their heavy burdens, ver. 4. translates their חומרי חורה of which they speak so much and so highly.

Their Tephillin are called Phylacteries, ver. 5. which meaneth not only Obſervatives, becauſe they were memorials of their duty and devotions [being four portions of the Law written in two parchments, and the one worn upon their forehead and the other upon their left arm] but Preſervatives, as being reputed by them a fence againſt evil ſpirits, Jeruſ. Beracoth fol. 2. A man hath need to ſay over his Phylacteries every evening in his houſe, to fright away evil ſpirits.

They loved to be called Rabbi Rabbi, ver. 7. R. Akibah ſaid to Eliezer, Rabbi Rabbi, Jeruſ. Moed. Katon fol. 81. 1. And yet they had this rule againſt it, Love the work, but hate the Rabbiſhip, Maym. in Talm. Torah. per. 3.

Call no one Father, ver. 9. in that ſenſe as they owned their Doctors by the title אבותנו relying upon the authority of humane doctrines.

Their permitting and practiſing to ſwear by the Temple, ver. 16. came into a common cuſtom, Juchaſ. fol. 50. col. 1. Baba ben Bota ſwear by the Temple, and ſo did Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel, and this was a cuſtom in Iſrael.

Their tithing mint, anniſe and cummin, ver. 23. explained in the Talmudick treatiſes Demai, whited Sepulchers, ver. 27. Shekalim per. 1. halac. 1. In the month Adar they whited the Sepulchers. And the reaſon is given by the Gemariſts, that people hereby might have the better diſcovery of them, the better to avoid defilement by them: which well obſerved, ſets on Chriſts invective againſt theſe wretches the more. Gemar. utriuſq: Talm. in loc. & Jeruſ. in Maaſar. Sheni. fol. 55. 3.

Their decking of Sepulchers in honour of thoſe that lay in them, ver. 29. handled in Jeruſ. in Moed Katon fol. 80. col. 3, & 4.

He concludeth his ſpeech with the intimation of what ſhame and guilt lay upon them for the blood of the former Prophets ſlain by their Fathers, filled up by their own wickedneſs in perſecuting thoſe that he did or ſhould ſend to them. He calleth them Serpents from Gen. 3. 15. and teacheth us to look upon them as the ſeed of the Serpent in an eminent degree, if any degree of that nature may be called eminent. He dooms all the Prophets blood to be required of that generation, becauſe they by their tranſcendent abuſe of thoſe whom God ſent, even of Meſſias himſelf, did juſtifie and exceed all the evil their Fathers had done againſt the Prophets: Yea all the blood ſhed before the blood of Zacharias, and his, though they held that to have been ſatisfied for, by the deſtruction, ſlaughter and captivity by the Babyloniſans, Jeruſ. in Taanith fol. 69. col. 2. He changeth the name of his Father, and ſo doth Targ. in Lament. cap. 2. ver. 20. And concludes with a ſad denunciation of deſtruction, and that they ſhould no more ſee him till they ſhould ſay, bleſſed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord: which very words he had uttered alſo a great while before this, Luke 13. 34, 35. and the multitude had ſaid, Bleſſed be he that cometh, &c. when he rode into Jeruſalem upon an Aſs. But the ſame words now uttered by him, are of ſomewhat doubtful interpretation, whether they mean, their no more ſeeing of him till the night and time of the Paſſover, [for at the Paſchal meal every company rehearſed this ſaying, Bleſſed be he that cometh, &c. in their great Hallel as they called it] or that they ſhould no more ſee him at all, becauſe they had not learned to entertain him, as coming from God. See Joh. 5. 43.

CHRIST foretelleth the destruction of Jerusalem, the signs and miseries preceeding and accompanying it.

THe Talmud tells us that there was a place upon mount Olivet, just in the face of the Temple, where the Priest slew and burnt the red Cow into the ashes of purification and as he sprinkled the blood, he looked directly upon the Temple door. Middoth per. 1. &c. This was the last Sermon that Christ made upon mount Olivet, and he makes it as he sits upon that mount, just facing the Temple, Matth. 24. 3. And that text that he had taken in tears but two or three days ago, weeping over the City and foretelling the destruction of it, Luke 19. 44. he now preacheth upon at large, declaring the misery and foreshewing the forerunners of that destruction.

The aim of his speech, or, to what time and purpose it refers, may be discerned by the question of the Disciples, to which it is an answer. When shall these things be, viz. that one stone of the Temple shall not be left upon another? Mark 13. 4. Luke 21. 7. and so it relates plainly to the destruction of the Temple and City. But Matthew hath added; And what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? from whence it is conceived by some, that the speech doth aim at the end of the world, and Christs last coming unto judgment. It is true indeed that the close of his speech in Matth. 25. doth speak plainly of the last judgment, and that many of those terrible things mentioned, Matth. 24. may very well typifie the terrours of the last day, but the prime and proper scope of the speech in that 24*th.* Chapter, is to set forth the destruction of Jerusalem, and the rejection and misery of the Jewish nation; as may be observed by these particulars.

1. Because in Matth. 24. 15, 16. He points directly to time and place, when and where these things shall be, viz. when the Temple shall be profaned, then these things come, &c.

2. Especially consider ver. 34. Verily I say unto you; this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled. This generation, not meaning Generatio Evangelica, as some do harshly interpret it, but as it means in Matth. 23. 36. Luke 11. 31, 32. and abundance of other places in the New Testament, the generation then in being.

3. The destruction of Jerusalem, is phrased in Scripture as the destruction of the whole world, Jer. 4. 23. Isa. 65. 17. and Christ coming to her in judgment, as his coming to the last judgment, Matth. 17. 28. John 21. 22. Math. 19. 28. Rev. 1. 7, &c.

Therefore those dreadful things spoken of in ver. 29, 30, 31. are but borrowed expressions to set forth the terrors of that judgment the more. Ver. 29. The Sun shall be darkened, &c. shews the decay of all glory, excellency and prosperity in that Nation, and the coming in of all sadness, misery and confusion: as Isa. 13. 10. Joel. 2. 10. Ver. 30. Then shall they see the sign of the Son of man, &c. Not any visible appearance of Christ, or of the cross in the clouds [as some have imagined,] but whereas the Jews would not own Christ before for the Son of man, or for the Messias, then by the vengance that he should execute upon them, they and all the world should see an evident sign, that he was so. This therefore is called his coming, and his coming in his kingdom, Matth. 17. 28. because this did first declare his power, glory and victory on that nation that had despised him. Ver. 31. He shall send his Angels with a great sound of a Trumpet, &c. that is, his Ministers with the Trumpet of the Gospel, to fetch in his elect from among the Gentiles when the Jews were now destroyed and cast off. And the false Christs, and false Prophets that should arise, ver. 5. 24. arose in that Nation in those last days of it, as is abundantly evident both in the New Testament, and in Josephus: And those wars and rumors of wars, and Nation rising against Nation, &c. ver. 6, 7. were accomplished not only in the horrid civil wars among the Jews, but also in the great concussions in Roman Empire, in the wars betwixt Otho and Vitellius, and betwixt Vitellius and Vespasian, [of which the Roman Historians, especially Tacitus is very large] the like to which, there had not been before, even to the sacking of Rome it self, and the burning of the Capitol.

CHRISTS head anointed at a supper at Bethany two nights before the Passover: At the same supper he washeth his Disciples feet: giveth Judas the sop and the Devil entreth into him.

THe proof of the proper order here will require some dispute, not so much in regard of any obscurity or difficulty of the order it self, but in regard of needless and groundless difficulties that are put upon it. There are two strange opinions we meet with here: The one is, that holdeth that this supper mentioned by Matthew and Mark, was the same supper which is mentioned in John 12. which was six days before the Passover. And the other is, that holdeth, that this supper in John 13. was the Supper on the Passover night: so that for the shewing and asserting of the order as we have laid it, these three things are to be done.

First, It is to be proved, that the supper in John 12. and the supper in Matth. 26. and Mark 14. were not one and the same supper, but two suppers at some daies distance. Secondly, That the supper in John 13. was not on the Passover night, but before the Passover night. And thirdly, That the supper in John 13. was the same supper with that in Matth. 26.6. and Mark 14.3. two daies before the Passover.

First, That the supper in John 12. and the supper in Matth. 26. and Mark 14. were two different suppers [to which something hath been said before,] appears by these observations. 1. The supper in John 12. was in the house of Lazarus [unless we will unwarrantably strain the construction of the story,] but the supper in Matth. 26. and Mark 14. was in the house of Simon the Leper. 2. At the supper in John 12. Christs feet were anointed, but his head was anointed at the supper in Matth. 26 and Mark 14. 3. The supper in John 12. was six days before the Passover, but the supper in Matth. 26. and Mark 14. was but two days before: For observe Mark 14. 1. After two days was the feast of the Passover: and then ver. 3. And Jesus being at Bethany, &c. Here they that hold the opinion that we are confuting, will not acknowledg the order of the Evangelists direct, but say there is a dislocation, so that though two days be mentioned before, yet the story following was six days before the Passover. But the method of Matthew and Mark hath been so direct hither through the story of Christs actions, since his last coming to Jerusalem, that no reason possible can be given why they should invert the order here. They had punctually mentioned his actions, five, four, three days before the Passover, and now they come to speak of two days before, and under that account bring in this supper, and what sense or reason can there be to surmise that it was six days before? They had shewed you Christ five days before the Passover, at Bethany, John 12. 1, 12. Mark 11. 1, 11. And four days before the Passover, at Bethany, Mark 11. 12, 15, 19, 20. And three days before the Passover, at Bethany, Mark 11. 20, 27. and 13. 3. And then they come and speak of two days before the Passover, and they speak also of Christs being at Bethany, and yet would the opinion under confutation apply the reckoning of the two days only to point at the high-Priests assembling: and Christs being at Bethany, to be jumped backward over all the story before, even to beyond Matth. 21. Mark 11. An opinion that by its improbability is confutation enough to it self.

A second thing to be cleared is, that the supper in John 13. was not on the Passover night but before: which may be evidenced by these arguments instead of more. 1. Because John saith expresly ver. 1. that it was πρὸ τῆς ἑορτῆς, before the festival of the Passover, for so the word ἑορτὴ constantly signifies, not the meal of the Paschal, as some would construe it here, but the whole festival. 2. The Disciples when Jesus said to Judas, What thou doest, do quickly, though he spake about buying something against the feast, ver. 29. by which it appears that the feast was not yet come.

Thirdly, Luke sheweth, that the entring of Satan into Judas [which was at the supper, John 13.] was before the Passover day came: for observe his order, Luke 22.3. Then entred Satan into Judas, and he went and communed with the chief Priests, &c. and then ver. 7. Then came the day of unleavened bread: Upon all which considerations, it is apparent, that this supper in John 13. at which Satan entred into Judas [whereupon he went and compacted for his Masters betraying] was not on the Passover night, but some space before the Passover day came. There is indeed a passage in John 13. 38. which may seem to bring that supper to the Passover night, which is, when Christ saith at the supper to Peter, The Cock shall not crow till thou hast denied me thrice, which seemeth to carry it, as

as if this ſupper were on that very night when Peter denied him. For anſwer to which, let it be obſerved: 1. That Peter denied Chriſt but once before the Cock crew. Mark 14. 68, 69, 70. and it will teach us to expound the words of Chriſt, John 13.38.and Matth. 26. 24. not as meaning that he ſhould deny him three times over before any Cock crew, but that he ſhould deny him thrice in the time of Cocks crowing, which time was a fourth part of the night, Mark 13. 34. And that it meaneth in ſuch a ſenſe is yet more apparent by Mark 14.30. where he utters it, The Cock ſhall not crow twice. 2. Let it be obſerved, that in John 13. 38. it is only ſaid, The Cock ſhall not crow, but in Matth. 26. Mark 14. when the ſpeech refers to the very night when his denial was, it is ſaid,This night, before the Cock crow; And, This day, even this night before the Cock crow, &c. And ſo it is underſtood that Chriſt uſeth that ſpeech to Peter twice over,and in it he doth twice refute his preſuming upon his own ſtrength which Peter twice ſhewed: Firſt at the ſupper in John 13. which was two daies before the Paſsover, and there the emphaſis of the ſpeech lieth eſpecially in the word Thrice; as if he had ſaid to him, Art thou ſo confident of thy ſtrength and ſtanding for me? I tell thee the time will be, when thou ſhalt deny me thrice in the time of Cocks crowing. The ſecond was at the Paſsover ſupper, and then Chriſt puts the emphaſis upon the word This night: Art thou ſo confident? I tell thee this night thou ſhalt deny me,&c.

Thus having ſhewed that that ſupper in John 13. was not on the Paſsover night, but before; a third thing is to ſhew, that it was two daies before the Paſsover, and the ſame with that ſupper mentioned by Matthew and Mark in Bethany: And for the proof of this we need go no further then this obſervation: That both the Evangeliſts Matthew and Mark, do begin the treaſon of Judas from that ſupper in Bethany, Matth. 26.13,14. Mark 14. 9, 10. for as ſoon as they have related the ſtory of that ſupper, they preſently tell, Then one of the twelve called Judas went to the chief Prieſts,&c. Now it is apparent that he began the acting of his treaſon from the time of Satans entring into him with the ſop which was at that ſupper John 13.and ſo it concludeth that to be the ſame ſupper with that in *Matth.*26.6.

The texture of the ſtory then lieth thus: Six daies before the Paſsover Chriſt ſuppeth and lodgeth in Bethany: five daies before the Paſsover he rideth in triumph to Jeruſalem, and at even cometh and lodgeth in Bethany again, four daies before the Paſsover he goeth to Jeruſalem again, and at night cometh to Bethany again to lodge. The third day before the Paſsover he goeth again into the City; and at even cometh to Bethany again: And that night he ſuppeth in the houſe of Simon the Leper, it being now two daies to the Paſsover; As he ſits at ſupper, Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, called alſo Mary Magdalen, anoints his head, &c. And he before the table was taken away, ariſeth from the table and waſheth the Diſciples feet, and after ſits down and gives Judas the ſop.

Satan entreth into Judas: he compacts for the betraying of his Maſter.

THe continuation of the ſtory in John cleereth the connexion. He dipped the ſop and gave it to Judas, And after the ſop Satan entred into him. This was at a ſupper in Bethany two daies before the Paſsover, as hath been ſhewed: From thence, though it were night, Judas trudgeth to Jeruſalem, acted intirely by Satan, and agreeth with the Sanhedrin for his Maſters betraying. They had met purpoſely to contrive the apprehenſion and death of Chriſt, but had reſolved, that it muſt not be at the feaſt,for fear of tumult: but Judas coming in, undertakes to deliver him up, though at the feaſt, yet quietly enough in the abſence of the people: And they bargain to give him thirty pieces of ſilver; the price of a ſervant, *Exod.*31.22. CHRISTS ſpeech to comfort his Diſciples, &c.

THe firſt words, Therefore when he was gone out, continue the ſtory: When Judas was gone out about his curſed work, and the hour was now come when Chriſts Paſſion was beginning, [for we may juſtly take his being ſold, for a part of his ſufferings] he giveth his Diſciples divers leſſons, ſome of admonition, ſome of inſtruction, ſome of comfort. For the better judging of the time of this ſpeech [beſides the connexion which joyns it to Judas his going forth upon the devils entring into him with the ſop] theſe two things are obſervable. 1. That the laſt words of the 14*th. Chapter* are, Ariſe, let us go hence, by which it is plain, that the ſpeech contained in this preſent Section, and the ſpeech in Joh. 15, & 16, and 17. were ſpoken at two ſeveral times and in two ſeveral places, That, at the Paſsover ſupper, for John tells, Chap. 18. 1. that when Jeſus had finiſhed that ſpeech, he went over the brook Kidron: but this, before, and in another place, becauſe upon the ending of it it is plain Jeſus removed to another place, by his ſaying, Ariſe let us go hence. 2. That Chriſt ſaith, Yet a little time I am with you, Chap. 13. ver. 33. Yet a little while and the world ſeeth me no more, Chap. 14. v. 19. Hereafter I ſhall not talk much with you, ver. 30. which intimate ſome ſpace of time yet to come, and not ſo ſuddain a parting, as the ſpace was betwixt his riſing from his laſt ſupper, and his apprehenſion. This ſpeech therefore was ſpoken at Bethany after Judas his going out: and the Section contains the ſum of Chriſts diſcourſe with his Diſciples, while he ſtaied there, which was the night that Judas received the ſop, and the next day and night, and till towards the evening of the day after: And the laſt words, Ariſe, let us go hence, intimate his removal from Bethany to Jeruſalem on the Paſsover day. Judas either that night that he had received the ſop, or the next day, layeth the plot with the high-Prieſts for the delivering up of his Maſter at the feaſt, and having ſo done, he returneth to his Maſter to Bethany again. And the next day which was the Paſsover day, Chriſt ſendeth Peter and John from thence to prepare the Paſsover for him, and when he ſaw time, he calls, Ariſe, let us go hence, and ſo he ſetteth for Jeruſalem with the reſt of the Diſciples and Judas in the company.

MARK Chap. XIV. from Ver. 12. to Ver. 26.
LUKE Chap. XXII. from Ver. 7. to Ver. 24.

CHRIST eateth the Paſsover: ordaineth the Lords Supper, &c.

PETER and John who were ſent to prepare the Paſsover, had this work to do. They were to get a room fitting; to that their Maſter directs them by a ſign. They were to get a Lamb, and to bring him into the Temple, and there to have him killed and his blood ſprinkled, under the name of a Paſchal for thirteen perſons. For no Lamb could be eaten for a Paſchal, whoſe blood was not ſprinkled at the Altar, and that לשם פסח in the name of a Paſchal, and למנוי by count for ſuch a number of perſons as had agreed to be at the eating of him. Talm. in Peſachin. per. 5. [as Chriſt died but for a certain number.] Which ſhews [had not the Evangeliſts done it otherwiſe] that Chriſt ate his Paſsover on the ſame day that the Jews did theirs [which ſome, upon miſunderſtanding of Joh. 18. 28. have denied] nay that it was not poſſible otherwiſe, for how impoſſible was it to get the Prieſts to kill a Paſchal for any, upon a wrong day?

Having got the Lamb thus ſlain at the Temple, they were to bring him home to the houſe where he was to be eaten, to get him roaſted, and to get bread and wine ready, and what other proviſion was uſual and requiſite for that meal.

At Even Jeſus cometh and ſitteth down with the twelve: and as he ate, he gave intimation of the Traitour, who was now at the table and eating with him. Which might ſeem to make this ſtory the ſame with that in John 13. 21, 22. and ſo might argue, that this and that were but one and the ſame Supper. But herein is an apparent difference in the ſtories. 1. At the Supper in John 13. Chriſt giveth only a private ſignification of the Traitour by a token given ſecretly to John, but here he points him out openly. 2. There he gives him a ſop, here he only ſpeaks of dipping with him in the diſh. Only there is ſome diverſity in the Evangeliſts, in relating this ſtory: Matthew and Mark have laid this taxation and diſcovery of the Traytour before the adminiſtration of the Lords Supper, but Luke after.

And

And there is the like variety in their relating the time of these words of Christ, I will no more drink of the fruit of the vine, &c. for Luke hath brought them in as spoken before the Sacrament, but the other two after. In both which, first the main intent of the relation is to be looked after, and then may we better state the time. The intent in the former, is to shew Judas at the Table, and at the Table all the time both of the Paschal and the Lords Supper, those symboles of love and communion, yet he such a wretch as to communicate in both, and yet a Traitour. The two, Matthew and Mark would shew that he was at the Table, and so the mention of that they bring in upon Christs first sitting down and beginning to eat: and Luke makes the story full, and shews that he was at the Table all the time, both at Passover and Sacrament, and the words of Christ upon the delivering of the Cup, But behold the hand of him that betrays me, &c. cannot possibly be mitigated from such a construction. As to the later, the meaning of Christ in the words, I will no more drink of the fruit of the vine, &c. is, that the Kingdom of God was now so near, that this was the last meat and drink, or the last meal that he was to have, before that came. By the Kingdom of God, meaning his resurrection and forward, when God by him had conquered death, Satan and Hell. And whereas he saith, Till I drink it new with you in the Kingdom of God, he did so, eating and drinking with them after his resurrection. This therefore being the aim of his speech, it was seasonable to say so, any time of the meal, This is the last meal I must eat with you till I be risen again from the dead. and hereupon the Evangelists have left the time of his uttering of it at that indifferency, that they have done. And indeed these two passages had such reference one to another, that the one might bring on the other, and both of them might very well be spoken by Christ twice: The observing of the direct order of Christs actions at this meal, which the Evangelists have related, will help to clear this matter.

When he was set down with them, he first saith, I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer, for this is the last I must eat with you before the Kingdom of God be come. And thereupon he taketh the first cup of wine that was to be drunk at that meal, and drinks of it and gives it them, and bids, Divide it among your selves, for I shall not drink of the fruit of the vine, &c. meaning, this is the last time I shall eat and drink with you, &c. And this speech properly brought in the other, One of you shall betray me: as paraphrased, speaking thus, I shall no more eat with you, for there is one now at the Table with me, hath compassed my death. Hereupon they question who it should be, &c. After this passage they eat the Paschal Lamb after its rite, and after it, he ordaineth the Lords Supper: bread to be his Body henceforward, in the same sense that the Paschal Lamb had been his Body hitherto, and the Cup to be the New Testament in his Blood now under the Gospel, as the blood of Bullocks had been the Old Testament in his Blood, Exod. 24. And after the administring of the Cup, he tells them again, that that was the last that he must drink, for the hand of him that betrayed him was at the Table.

A contest among the Disciples about priority.

LUKE himself is a clear warrant of the order. And withall, the joynt consideration of the story before will help to confirm it. The question among themselves about the Traitour, helpeth to draw on this other question about priority: an unseasonable and a very unreasonable quarrel: To which their Master giveth closely this twofold answer, besides proposing his own example of humility. 1. That let not them stand upon priority, for he would equally honour them in his Kingdom, &c. 2. That this was not a time to stand upon such business as seeking to be preferred one before another, for this was a time of sifting, and a time when all the care they could take for their safety should be little enough: therefore they had now something else to do then to look after precedency.

JOHN Chap. XV, XVI, XVII.

CHRISTS laſt words to his Diſciples and a Prayer for them.

JOHN in Chap. 18. 1. informs us that when Jeſus had ſpoken the words contained in theſe Chapters, he went over the brook Kidron: by which it appeareth that they were ſpoken at his laſt Supper inſtantly before he roſe and went to the garden where he was apprehended. At their Paſsover Suppers they uſed large diſcourſes ſeaſonable and agreeable to the occaſion: and eſpecially in commemorating what God had done for that people. Whatſoever Chriſt had ſpoken upon that ſubject, is not recorded, but this which was more needful for the Diſciples preſent condition, were agreeable to the great occaſion now at hand, and moſt beneficial for the Church in time to come.

CHRISTS Apprehenſion, Arraignment, Death and Burial.

THrre is no difficulty in the connexion of the beginning of this Section to the preceding, but only this, that the reſt of the Evangeliſts make mention of Chriſts ſinging of an hymn, as the laſt thing he did, before his ſetting out for the mount of Olives; but John maketh his ſpeech and prayer to be laſt, and ſpeaketh not of his ſinging a hymn at all. Which indeed is neither contrariety nor diverſity of ſtory, but only variety of relation for the holding out of the ſtory more compleat. The three former Evangeliſts have recorded how Chriſt did celebrate the Paſsover and ordain the Sacrament at the end of it, and therefore they properly ſpeak of his ſinging an hymn, for that was ever an unſeperable piece of ſervice at the Paſsover Supper, and conſtantly uſed at the concluſion of that meal: But John had made no mention of the Paſsover Supper or Sacrament at all, and therefore it was not only not needful, but alſo not proper, that he ſhould mention the ſinging of any hymn at all: But he relateth the laſt ſpeech and prayer of Chriſt, which the other had omitted. And whether this ſpeech recorded by him, or the hymn mentioned by them, were laſt done by Chriſt, is not much material to the order of the ſtory. I ſuppoſe the ſpeech was later. The hymn that they ſung was Pſ. 115. & 116. & 117. & 118. which was the later part of the great Hallel as they called it, which was conſtantly ſung at the Paſsover and their other great Solemnities, and with this later part was this Solemnity concluded.

His Prayer in the Garden.

CHRIST riſing from Supper, goeth forth of the City over the brook Kidron to the mount of Olives. [Compare Davids caſe and journey, 2 Sam. 15. 23.] Judas when they roſe from the Table, ſlips away into the City, and there hath his cut-throats laid ready by the chief Prieſts, for the curſed deſign that they had compacted about. As Chriſt goeth along he telleth the eleven that were with him, of their trouble that night by his apprehenſion, and their ſcattering from him: but he would be in Galilee before them, and there they ſhould meet again. And ſo he directeth them which way to betake themſelves after the Feaſt, and what to do when their Maſter ſhould be taken from them by death. He foretelleth Peter again of his denial of him that night: which Peter now armed with a ſword cannot hear of, but promiſeth great matters.

He cometh to Gethſemany, A place of Oyl Preſſes, at the foot of Olivet, into a Garden. The Talmudiſts ſpeak of the Gardens here, and tell how the Gardiners uſed to fatten their grounds with the ſcouring of the ſink that carried the blood and filth of the Temple Court into that valley. Leaving eight Diſciples behind, he taketh Peter and James and John with him, and imparteth to them the fears and ſorrows that now ſeized upon him, and leaving them alſo about a ſtones caſt behind, charging them to watch and pray: He prays thrice for the removal of this Cup if poſſible, &c. and in an Agony he ſweats drops like blood. [Remember Adams fall in a Garden, and the firſt doom, In the ſweat of thy brows, &c.] Now was the power of darkneſs, Luke 22.23. all the power of hell being let looſe againſt Chriſt, as it was never againſt perſon upon Earth before or ſince and that from the pitching of this field of old, Gen 3. 15. Thou ſhalt bruiſe his heel. So that it was not ſo much for any pangs of Hell that Chriſt felt within him, as for the aſſaults of Hell, that he ſaw inlarged againſt him, that he was ſo full of ſorrow and anguiſh. His deſiring the removal of the Cup was puræ humanitatis, but his ſubmitting to the will of God puræ ſanctitatis: As when a gangrened member is to be cut off, pura natura reluctſ againſt it, but right reaſon yields to it. He prayed thrice, and after every time came to his three Diſciples, and ſtill found them ſleeping.

His apprehenſion.

He had ſcarce awakened them at the third time, when the Traytour and his Aſſaſines are upon him to apprehend him. At their firſt approach Judas according to the ſign given, that his fellow-villains might know Jeſus from the reſt, ſteppeth to him and kiſſeth him. And thereupon the reſt draw up near him. Jeſus ſteppeth forward to meet them, and asketh, Whom ſeek ye? They ſay, Jeſus of Nazareth: he ſaith, I am he: and thereupon they went backward and fell to the ground: And his thus confounding them with a word, ſhewed, that none could take his life from him, unleſs he laid it down of himſelf. While they lie on the ground, and he hath them thus under him, he indents for the diſmiſſion of his Diſciples, and having agreed for their ſafety and diſcharge, he yields himſelf. So up they got, and lay hold upon him: and Peter to ſhew ſome of his promiſed ſtoutneſs cuts off Malchus ear, but Chriſt heals the wound. With this wretched crue that apprehended him, there were ſome of their Maſters that ſet them on, Luke 22. 52. To all together he telleth, that it was plain it was now their hour the and power of darkneſs, for that they had him ſo oft among them in the Temple, that they were never able to lay hands on him till now: Upon theſe words the Diſciples think it time to ſhift for themſelves: And one flees away naked.

His appearance before Annas.

Beſides the ill account that theſe men could give of this nights Paſsover [no ſooner eaten, but their hands in blood] and beſides the horrid offence they committed againſt the Lord and againſt his Chriſt in this fact that they were upon, they doubly tranſgreſſed againſt their own Canons: namely in arraigning and condemning a perſon upon a holiday, for ſuch a day was now come in: and arraigning and judging a perſon by night, both which are directly forbidden by their Law. Tal. in Jom. tobh per. 5. halac. 2.

They firſt bring Chriſt to Annas, And why? For he was neither chief Magiſtrate, but Gamaliel; nor the Highprieſt, but Caiaphas: He was indeed Sagan, and Father in Law to Caiaphas, but by neither of theſe relations had he Judicial power as a ſingle man. But as the Chief Prieſts had a ſpecial hand in this buſineſs, and Annas was chief among them by his place and relation to Caiaphas, and ſo had had no doubt a ſingular ſtroke in contriving this buſineſs that was now tranſacting, ſo upon his apprehenſion he is firſt brought thither, to ſhew that they had the man ſure whom he ſo much deſired to be ſecured, and to take his grave advice what further to do with him. He was brought bound to him, and ſo bound he ſends him to Caiaphas.

At Caiaphas his houſe was the Sanhedrin now aſſembled: Whether we take this for his lodgings in the Temple, or his houſe in the City it is not much material. Peter follows thither, and by another Diſciple that was acquainted there, he is helped into the Hall, and ſits with the Servants by the fire. The Chief-Prieſt and Elders were buſie to find out Witneſſes that might accuſe him, and though many falſe Witneſſes [זוממים in Talmudick language] come in, yet all will not do: for it was not poſſible to touch him of any offence. He all this while ſtanding ſilent (Iſa. 53. 7.) Caiaphas adjures him to tell whether he were the Chriſt or no, he confeſſeth it, and withal tells them that the time ſhould come that they ſhould find the truth of this by experience, when he ſhould ſhew his power and vengeance in his judgment againſt them, and their City, coming in clouds, &c. This confeſſion and words they account blaſphemy: and that they might have the ſurer impreſſion of ſo conſtruing them, Caiaphas rent his garments, and by that action would, as it were, force them to agree with him that it was ſo, when his garments had paid ſo dear, for the confirming of it. Their cuſtom and reaſon of renting their clothes upon the hearing of blaſphemy, is handled in Jeruſ. in Sanhedr. fol. 25. col. 1. & 2. and in Maym. in Avrdah Zarah. per. 2. where thoſe two Canons being obſerved, Every one that hears Gods Name blaſphemed, is bound to rent his garments: And the Judges hearing blaſphemy muſt ſtand upon their feet, and muſt rent their clothes and may not ſew them up again. It will cauſe us to obſerve ſomething in it, that the Highprieſt only rent his clothes, and not the reſt of the Bench with him. Which though they did not, yet they vote with him, that it was blaſphemy, and therefore he was guilty of death: which had it been executed, muſt have been by ſtoning. Sanhedr. per. 7. halac. 4. And now they begin to ſpit on him, to buffet him and abuſe him.

Peters denial.

Here Peter firſt denies him: for being challenged as he ſate by the fire, by the damſel porter, for one of his company, he denies it, and ſhrinks away into the porch, and then the firſt Cock crew. Luke ſaith that the maid came to him as he ſate by the fire: Matthew and Mark, that he was now beneath in the Palace, and without in the Palace, meaning, beneath or without from that place or room where the Bench ſate. Betwixt this firſt denial and the ſecond, there was but a little while, Luke 22. 55. In the ſpace between, the Highprieſt is queſtioning Jeſus of his Diſciples and Doctrine, and becauſe he anſwers, Ask them that have heard me, &c. an officious Officer ſmites him, as if he had not anſwered with reverence enough. Peter this while was in the porch, where he was when the Cock crew after his firſt denial: and there another maid ſees him and brings him to the company that ſtood by the fire, and challenges him for one of his Diſciples, and now he denies with an oath. And about an hour after, Luke 22. 59. [which ſpace of time the Bench took up in examining Chriſt about his Diſciples and Doctrine] a kinſman of Malchus challengeth him, and tells the company he ſaw him with Jeſus in the Garden, and he pleading the contrary, is diſcovered to all the company to be a Galilean by his Dialect, but he denies with execrations: and preſently the ſecond Cock crew: And Jeſus looking back upon him, he remembers what he had done and goes out and weeps bitterly. And ſo preſently after the ſecond Cock the Bench riſeth and leaveth Jeſus in the hands of their Officers, by whom he is taunted, ſtricken and ſhamefully uſed.

His being delivered up to the Roman power.

In the morning the Sanhedrin met formally in their own Council chamber, and again queſtion Jeſus [brought there before them, and they reſolved to put him to death] Whether he were the Meſſias or no? he giveth the ſame anſwer as before, that though they would not believe him if he told them he was, which was the truth, yet the time was coming when they ſhould find it true: They queſtion him again, Art thou the Son of God? which he not denying, they judge him a blaſphemer again and deſerving to die, and ſo deliver him up to the ſecular power. It is obſervable in both theſe queſtionings of him upon this point, both in the night, and now in the morning, how convertible terms the Son of God, and the Son of man are made. In the night they queſtion him, Art thou the Son of God? He anſwers, Ye ſhall ſee the Son of man, &c. Mat. 26. 63,64. And now in the morning again he ſaith, Ye ſhall ſee the Son of man ſitting on the right hand of power: and they reply, Art thou then the Son of God? Luke 22.69,70.

Judas his Recantation and Ruine.

Judas unquiet in mind for what he had done in betraying, attends the trials, and waits the iſſue: and when he now ſaw that he was condemned by the Bench to be delivered up to the Heathen power, he ſteps in, and offers his money again, and confeſſeth he had betrayed innocent blood, and this probably as Chriſt ſtood by. Having received a ſurly anſwer again from them, he flings down his money in the Temple where they ſat [Gazith or Hhanoth, it is not ſeaſonable to queſtion here] and departing, is ſnatched by the devil who was bodily in him, into the air, and there ſtrangled, and flung down headlong to the earth, and all his bowels burſt out, With the thirty pieces of ſilver, his wages of iniquity, the Prieſts conſult to buy the Potters field. And here a quotation of Matthew hath troubled Expoſitors ſo far, that divers have denied the purity of the Text. His words are theſe, Then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremy the Prophet, And they took the thirty pieces of ſilver, &c. Matth. 27. 9. Whereas thoſe words are not to be found in Jeremy at all, but in Zechary they are found, Zech. 11.13.

Now Matthew ſpeaks according to an ordinary manner of ſpeaking uſed among the Jews, and by them would eaſily and without cavil be underſtood, though he cited a text of Zechary under the name of Jeremy: For the illuſtration of which matter we muſt firſt produce a record of their own. The Babylon Talmud in Bava Bathra, fol. 14. facie 2. is diſcourſing concerning the order in which the Books of the Old Teſtament were ordered and ranked of old. And firſt they ſhew that there was this general diviſion of it, into אורייתא נביאים כתובים The Law, the Prophets, and the Hagiographa. By the laſt meaning meaning The Pſalmes, Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, Canticles, Job, Ruth, Eſther, &c. Then do they tell, that the Books were particularly thus ranked: The five Books of Moſes, Joſhua, Judges, Samuel, Kings: and then the Prophets, among whom Jeremy was ſet firſt, and then Ezekiel, and after him Eſay, and then the twelve. But they object, was not Eſay long before Jeremy and Ezekiel in time? Why ſhould he then be ſet after them in order? And they give this anſwer, The laſt Book of Kings ends with deſtruction, and Jeremy is all deſtruction. Ezekiel begins with deſtruction and ends with comfort, and Eſay is all comfort. סמכינן חודבנא לחודבנא ונחמתא לנחמתא Therefore they joyned deſtruction and deſtruction together, and comfort and comfort together. And thus in their Bibles of old Jeremy came next after the Book of Kings, and ſtood firſt in the volume of the Prophets. So that Matthews alleadging of a Text of Zachary, under the name of Jeremy, doth but alleadge a Text out of the volume of the Prophets, under his name that ſtood firſt in that volume: And ſuch a manner of ſpeech is that of Chriſt, Luke 24. 44. All things muſt be fulfilled which are written of me in the Law, and the Prophets and the Pſalmes: in which he follows the general diviſion that we have mentioned, only he calleth the whole third part, or Hagiographa, by the title the Pſalms, becauſe the Book of Pſalms ſtood firſt of all the Books of that part. In that ſaying Matth. 16. 14. Others ſay Jeremy, or one of the Prophets, there is the ſame reaſon why Jeremy alone is named by name, viz. becauſe his name ſtood firſt in the volume of the Prophets, and ſo came firſt in their way when they were ſpeaking of the Prophets.

The chieſt Prieſts and Elders bring Jeſus to Pilate, but would not go into his Houſe [the Houſe of a Heathen] leſt they ſhould be defiled, but that they might eat the Paſſover. John 18. 28. Why? They had eaten the Paſsover over night, at the ſame time that Jeſus ate his [and well they had ſpent the night after it.] But this day that was now come in, was ראויה וחגיגה their day of preſenting themſelves in the Temple, and offering their Sacrifices and peace offerings, of which they were to keep a ſolemn feaſting, and this John calls the Paſſover: In which ſenſe Paſsover Bullocks are ſpoken of, Deut. 16. 2. 2 Chron. 30. 24. and 35. 8, 9. The School of Shammai ſaith, their appearing was with two pieces of ſilver, and their chagigah with a Meah of ſilver. But the School of Hillel ſaith, their appearing was with a Meah of ſilver, and their chagigah with two pieces of ſilver. Their burnt offerings at this ſolemnity were taken from among common cattel, but their peace offerings from their tithes. He that keepeth not the chagigah on the firſt day of the feaſt, muſt keep it all the feaſt, &c. Chagigah per. 1.

Pilate conceives him brought to him as a common malefactor, and therefore he bids them take him back and Judge him by their own Bench and Law: and in theſe words he meant really and according as the truth was, that it was in their power to judge and execute him, and needed not to trouble him with him. And when they anſwer, We may not put any man to death, Joh. 18. 31. They ſpeak truly alſo, and as the thing was indeed, but the words of Pilate and theirs were not ad idem: חגי קודם מ׳ שנה עד שלא חרב הבית ניטלו דיני נפשות It is a tradition that fourty years before the Temple was deſtroyed capital Judgments were taken away from them. Jeruſ. in Sanhedr. fol. 18. col. 1. But how? Not by the Romans, for they permitted them the uſe of their Religion, Laws, Magiſtracy, capital and penal executions and judgments in almoſt all caſes, as freely as ever they had: and that both in their Sanhedrins within the Land, and in their Synagogues without, as far as the power of the Synagogues could reach at any time: as might be proved abundantly, if it were to be inſiſted on here.

The words then of theſe men to Pilate are true indeed, That they could put no man to death, but this was not, as if the Romans had deprived the Sanhedrin of its power, but becauſe theeves, murderers and malefactors of their own Nation were grown ſo numerous, ſtrong and heady, that they had overpowred the Sanhedrins power, that it could not, it durſt not execute capital penalties upon offenders as it ſhould have done. And this their own Writings witneſs. Juchaſin fol. 21. The Sanhedrin ſlitted fourty years before the deſtruction of the Temple, namely from that time that the Temple doors opened of their own accord, and Rabban, Jochanan ben Zaccai rebuked them and ſaid, O Temple, Temple, Zechary of old prophecied of thee ſaying, Open thy doors O Lebanon that the fire may enter, &c. And alſo becauſe that murderers increaſed, and they were unwilling to judge Capital matters, they ſlitted from place to place, even to Jabneh, &c. which alſo is aſſerted in Schabb. fol. 51. Avodah Zarah fol. 8.

When they perceive that Pilate no more received the impreſſion of their accuſation of him as a malefactor like others, they then accuſe him of Treaſon, as forbidding to pay Tribute to Ceſar, and as ſaying that he himſelf was a King: and this they thought would do the buſineſs. Pilate hereupon takes him into his Judgment Hall [for hitherto the Jews conference and his had been at his gate] and queſtions him upon this point,and Jeſus plainly confeſſeth that he was a King,but his Kingdom not of this world [and therefore he needed not from him to fear any prejudice from the Romane power] and ſo well ſatisfies Pilate, that he brings him out to the gate again, where the Jews ſtood, and profeſſeth that he found no fault in him at all. Then the Jews lay in freſh accuſations againſt him, to which he anſwereth not a word.

Brought before Herod.

Pilate by a word that dropt from them, underſtanding that he was of Galilee, Herods Juriſdiction, ſent him to Herod, who was now at Jeruſalem: partly becauſe he would be content to have ſhut his hands of him, and partly becauſe he would court Herod, towards the reconciling of old heart-burnings between them. And now Jeſus ſees the monſter that had murthered his forerunner. Herod was glad to ſee him, and had deſired it a long time, and now hoped to have got ſome miracles from him, but he got not ſo much as one word: though he queſtioned him much, and the Jews who followed him thither did vehemently accuſe him. The old Fox had ſought and threatned his death before, Luke 13. 31, 32. and yet now hath him in his hands, and lets him go [only abuſed and mocked and gorgeouſly arraied] and ſo ſends him back to Pilate, that ſo he might court him again, more then for any content he had that he ſhould eſcape his hands. See Acts 4. 27.

Before Pilate again.

Pilate at his gate again talks with the Jews, and motions the releaſe of the Priſoner, and whether him or Barabbas: and leaves it to their thoughts and goeth to his Judgment ſeat again. By this time is his Lady ſtirring,and underſtanding what buſineſs was in hand, ſhe ſends to him about her dream. He goes to the gate again, inquires what is their vote about the Priſoners releaſe: they are all for Barabbas. He puts it to the vote again, and they are the ſame ſtill: he urgeth a third time, and pleadeth the innocency of Jeſus, but they ſtill urge for his crucifying. Then calls he for water, and waſheth his hands, but inſtantly imbrues them in his blood.

By this time it was the third hour of the day, or about nine a clock, the time of the beginning of the morning Sacrifice. Hence Mark begins to count, Mark 15. 25. namely, from the time that Pilate delivered him up. He is whipped by Pilate, led into the Prætorium by the ſouldiers,Crowned with thorns [remember the Earths firſt curſe, Gen. 3.18.] arraied in ſcarlet,,and a reed put into his hand for a Scepter,and in this garbe Pilate brings him forth to the gate to them again, and publiſheth again that he found no fault in him. They urge that he ought to die becauſe he ſaid he was the Son of God. This ſtartles Pilate, and in he takes him again and re-examines him, but he would give him no anſwer, but only, Thou couldſt have no power over me, unleſs it was given thee from above, &c. Hereupon he goes out to the gate again, and urgeth for his releaſe more then ever. They anſwer, Then he is no friend of Ceſar, and this knocks the buſineſs dead. In therefore he goes again and brings out Jeſus and ſits down upon another Tribunal in publick, and Jeſus ſtanding before him in his ſcarlet Robes and thorny Crown, he tells the Jews, Here is your King: Our King? ſay they, Away with him, crucifie him. What? ſaith he, Shall I crucifie your King? They anſwer, We have no King but Ceſar. Compare Zech. 11. 6. where their deſtruction is threatned to be by their King Ceſar: as it was by Veſpatian.

Then he delivers him up to be crucified: and it was the preparation of the Paſsover, and about the ſixth hour, Joh. 19. 14. John ſeemeth the rather to have added this circumſtance, not only to ſtate the time [which indeed was of weighty concernment] but alſo to brand theſe Jews impiety, and neglect of their Religion for the ſatisfying of their malice. This day was a very high day, of their appearance in Temple and their Chagigah [as we touched before] and in the morning they durſt not to go into Pilates Palace for fear of defiling,and leſt they ſhould be prevented of theſe great devotions,and yet the day is thus far ſpent, and nothing done but only they have purchaſed the ſhedding of ſo innocent blood.

But John in this paſſage laies two viſible ſcruples before us: Queſt. 1. How is it poſſible to reconcile him and Mark together, when Mark ſaith, It was the third hour and they crucified him, Mark 15.25. whereas he tells us, It was the ſixth hour when Pilate delivered him up? Anſw. 1. If we caſt up in our thoughts how many things were done this day before his nailing to his Croſs, it cannot be imaginable that they were all done before the third hour of the day. The Sanhedrin meet, ſit in Counſel, examine the priſoner and vote him guilty; Bring him to Pilates Palace, there have manifold canvaſes with

Pilate

Pilate pro and contra about him; Bring him to Herod, where he is queſtioned about many things; his garments changed and gorgeous Robes put upon him, and ſent back to Pilate again. Then a freſh canvaſs about him or Barabbas to be releaſed, and Pilate puts them to a three-times deliberation upon it. Then overcome with their importunity, waſheth his hands, ſcourgeth him, and delivers him up to them to be abuſed. The Souldiers lead him into the Hall, make a Crown of Thorns, diveſt and veſt him anew, and make ſport with him at pleaſure. Pilate again brings him forth, and anew ſeeks and labours his releaſe: brings him in again and enters a new ſerious examination of him, hearing mention of his being the Son of God: Goes out again and labours all he can for his deliverance, but being taxed that then he could not be Ceſars friend, he goes to the bench and formally paſſeth ſentence upon him, writes the title of his Croſs, the Jews in the mean while abuſing him. Then he is lead forth out of the City bearing his Croſs, and brought to the place of execution, which was a good way off, ſtript, hath wine mingled with myrrh given him to drink, which he refuſeth, is nailed to the Croſs, his garments parted, and then Mark brings this in, And it was the third hour, and they crucified him. Now this great multitude of various paſſages can hardly be conceived poſſible to have been gone through by the third hour of the day or nine of the clock in the morning, no not though the Jews had bent themſelves to diſpatch before that time, which was far from their thoughts. 2. Mark therefore in that calculation of the time, takes his date from the firſt time that Pilate gave him up to their abuſings: and his Phraſe may be taken of ſo comprehenſive an intimation, as to ſpeak both the time of his firſt giving up, at the third hour of the day, and the time of his nailing to his Croſs, the third hour from that. And much after the ſame manner of account that our Saviours ſix hours ſufferings, from Pilates firſt giving him up, to his dying, are reckoned: So the 430 years of ſojournying of the Children of Iſrael in Egypt, Exod. 12. are computed, namely, the one half before they came into Egypt, and the other half after. Queſt. 2. But it may juſtly move a ſecond quære, How Chriſt could be on his Croſs and darkneſs begun from the ſixth hour, as the other Evangeliſts record it, when John ſaith that it was but about the ſixth hour when Pilate delivered him up? Which words of John as they raiſe the ſcruple, ſo they may give the anſwer: For it might very properly be ſaid, and that according to the uſual ſpeech of the Nation, that it was about the ſixth hour, when the ſixth hour was but now beginning, and by the time that it was compleated all that might be diſpatched, that paſſed betwixt his ſentencing and his being raiſed upon the Croſs.

Crucified.

Sentence of death was paſſed upon him as he ſtood in his ſcarlet Robes and thorny Crown: and when the Jews have now their deſire, they mock him, ſuddenly ſtrip him, and put on his own clothes: Then taking him away to the place of Execution, they lay his Croſs upon him [ſuch engines of death doubtleſs lay alwaies ready about the Judgment Hall] and ſo as Iſaac in the figure, he firſt bare the wood, that afterward muſt bear him, Gen. 22. 6, 9. The place of execution was without the City, חוץ לג׳ מחנורת as the Talmudiſts do determine in Talm. Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 42. 2. [See how the Apoſtle applies this to his ſuffering for the Gentiles, Heb. 13. 12.]

By the time he was come out of the City gates, they obſerve that he is overburdened with his Croſs, and thereupon they force Simon a Cyrenian [ſome noted Diſciple belike] to bear the end of it after him.

They come to the place of Execution commonly called Golgatha [not the place of graves, but] the place of ſculs: where though indeed there were ſome burial of the executed, yet was it in ſuch a manner that the place deſerved this name rather then the other: for they buried not an executed perſon in the grave of his Fathers, but there were two places of burial for ſuch: one for them that were ſlain with the ſword and ſtrangled, and the other for them that were burnt and ſtoned: and when the fleſh was waſted, the bones were gathered and buried in the graves of their Fathers: Talm. ubi ſup. fol. 46. 1. The proper writing and pronunciation of the word had been Golgolta, but uſe had now brought it to be uttered Golgotha, which very pronunciation the Samaritan Verſion uſeth in Num. 1.

They firſt ſtrip him, and then offer him intoxicating wine, which when he taſted he refuſed to drink. חיוצא ליהרג משקין אתו קורט של לבונה בכוס של יין כדי שתטרף דעתו When any perſon was brought forth to be put to death, they gave him to drink ſome frankincense in a Cup of Wine, that it might ſtupifie him: as it is ſaid, Give ſtrong drink to him that is ready to periſh, and wine to thoſe that be of heavy hearts. And there is a tradition, that the Gentlewomen of Jeruſalem afforded this of their good will, &c. Tal. Bab. ibid. fol. 43. 1. And let it not be impertinent to add that which immediately follows in the ſame page: A crier went before him that was to be executed, which proclaimed, N. the Son of N. is going to execution becauſe he hath committed ſuch a fact, and N. and N. are witneſſes againſt him if if there be any that can clear him, let them ſpeak. And inſtantly after: There is a tradition that they hanged Jeſus on the eve of the Paſſover, and a Crier went before him fourty days, Such a one goes to be put to death, becauſe he hath bewitched, deceived, and perverted Iſrael: if any one can ſay any thing for his clearing, let him come and ſpeak: but they found no clearing of him, therefore they hanged him upon the eve of the Paſſover, &c.

He is nailed to his Croſs hands and feet, and ſo the Jews themſelves confeſs Abel [his figure] to have been wounded by Cain, Tanch. fol. 3. col. 4 and Iſaac to have been bound on the Altar: Idem fol. 12. col. 2. And with him are crucified two malefactors, [compare Joſeph betwixt two offenders, Gen. 40.] ληϛαὶ in Joſephus his conſtruction, will help us to underſtand the ſenſe of the word here. Four ſouldiers part his garments and caſt lots for his coat and ſit down to watch him.

Over his head was his cauſe written, in the expreſſion of which the variety of the Evangeliſts ſhews their ſtile, and how where one ſpeaks ſhort another inlargeth, and what need of taking all together to make up the full ſtory. Mark hath it, The King of the Jews. Luke, This is the King of the Jews. Matthew, This is Jeſus the King of the Jews. John, Jeſus of Nazareth the King of the Jews: Where the main thing regarded is, that he was condemned for taking on him to be King of the Jews as they pretended, which was alſo pretended to be Treaſon againſt Ceſar: and to this point all the Evangeliſts ſpeak alike, and their variety is only in wording this for the readers underſtanding: and he that ſpake ſhorteſt ſpake enough to expreſs the matter of his accuſation: and the reſt that ſpeak larger are but a comment upon the ſame thing. The three tongues in which this was written, Hebrew, Greek, and Latine, are thus ſpoken of in Midras Tillin fol. 25. col. 4. R. Jochanan ſaith, There are three tongues. The Latine tongue for war, The Greek tongue for ſpeech, and the Hebrew for prayer.

All ſorts of people had followed him to the execution: Some openly wept for him and bewailed him, which was not a thing uſual in ſuch caſes. In the Talmudick Tract laſt cited fol. 46. 2. there is this ſtrange doctrine, לא היו מתאבלין אבל אונגין שאין אנינות אלא בלב They bewailed not him that went to be executed, but only mourned inwardly for him. And what think you was the reaſon? The Gloſs tells you thus, They bewailed him not, becauſe his diſgrace might be his expiation: meaning, that whereas they accounted, that the more ſhame and puniſhment a condemned perſon ſuffered, the more theſe tended to his expiation, they therefore would not openly bewail him, for that would have been ſome honour to him, and ſo would have abated of his expiation; but none lamenting for him, it was the greater diſgrace, and the greater the diſgrace the better was his ſin [as they thought] expiated, and atoned for. This ſtrange cuſtom and opinion, doth ſet forth this publick bewailing of Chriſt the more remarkably.

Others, when he was now raiſed upon his Croſs reviled him, among whom were the chief Prieſts, Scribes, and Elders: who had ſo little to do, or rather their malice ſo much as to attend the execution. They were at firſt in ſome heſitancy whether he would not deliver himſelf by miracle: but when they ſaw he did not, then they triumph and inſult at no meaſure. Nay, the theeves that were crucified with him ſpared him not, for ſo Matthew and Mark tell us, but at laſt one of them becomes a convert and receives aſſurance of being that day with him in Paradiſe. [בגן עדן a phraſe very uſual with them.] Compare the caſe of Joſephs fellow priſoners, Gen. 40. the one deſiring him to remember him and eſcaping, and the other not.

It may be, the darkneſs now begun, in an extraordinary and dreadful manner, was ſome means of working upon this thief for his conviction that Jeſus was the Meſſias: For inſtantly upon his raiſing upon his Croſs, it was now the ſixth hour or high Noon compleat, and the darkneſs began, and continued till three a clock afternoon: the very ſpace of time of the day that Adam lay in darkneſs without the promiſe, from the time of his fall till God came and revealed Chriſt to him.

By the Croſs ſtood the Mother of Jeſus now a Widdow, and as it ſeemeth, deſtitute of maintenance, therefore he commendeth her to the care and charge of his beloved Diſciple John. אלמנה ניזונית לנכסי יורשין A widdow was to be maintained out of the eſtate of her husbands heirs untill ſhe received her dowry. Maym. in אישות per. 18. But the poverty of Joſeph and Mary afforded neither heritage, nor dower, nor had they any Children but Jeſus who was now dying. If thoſe that are called the brethren of Jeſus were the ſons of Joſeph by another wife, as ſome have thought them, they had been fitteſt to have been charged with the maintenance of the widdow.

About the ninth hour Jeſus crieth out, Eli, Eli lama ſabachthani, that is, My God, my God, why haſt thou left me? Not forſaken him, as to the feeling of any ſpiritual deſertion, but why left to ſuch hands and to ſuch cruel uſage? Some ſaid hereupon he called Elias: but was this ſaid in mockery? or indeed did they think his words Eli, Eli meant Elias? Two things might make them really think ſo: the unuſualneſs of the word Eli or Elohi in their Syriack tongue, the word Mari being it by which they commonly expreſſed preſſed the ſenſe of that. And 2. the common opinion and legends that they had of Elias his coming to comfort and reſolve men in diſtreſs and perplexity, of which their Talmuds give not a few examples.

Complaining of thirſt he had vinegar given him, which having taſted, and feeling the pangs of death come upon him, he ſaith, It is finiſhed, and giving up a great cry, and committing his Spirit to God, he dieth [at the time of the evening ſacrifice.] At which inſtant there was an Earthquake which rent the rocks: and the vail of the Temple was then alſo rent in the middle: The Prieſt that offered Incenſe that evening ſacrifice time, could bring an amazed teſtimony of this, when he came forth. The renting of the rocks light in ſuch a place as where were the graves of many Saints hewn out, which now were opened [and ſhewed the conqueſt over the grave] and at another Earthquake at which Chriſts grave was opened on the morning of his reſurrection, the mouldred bodies of theſe graves revived, and after his riſing they came out of the graves alſo and came into the holy City. Obſerve that Matthew calls Jeruſalem The holy City, when it hath now murdered Chriſt, chap. 27. 53. How great a matter muſt it be that muſt unchurch a Nation?

The Centurion and the company preſent, at the ſight of what ſtrange things had occurred, return much affected and full of thoughts about what was done: As the evening grew on, the Jews deſire and obtain that the legs of them might be broken ſo to haſten their end, that they might not hang on the Croſs all night. This diſpatcheth the penitent thief [howſoever it did the other] as we may conclude from the words of Chriſt that told him of being that day in Paradiſe: But Chriſt being dead already they brake no bone of him, but one with a Spear pierceth him, and out of his ſide cometh water and blood diſtinct and diſcernable the one from the other.

At Even Joſeph of Aramathæa [Samuels Town, 1 Sam. 1. 1.] a Prieſt or a Levite, one of the לשכת בולו ושא Council-chamber of the Temple, begs the body of Jeſus, which otherwiſe ſhould have been buried in the common graves of Malefactors, and intombs it in his own Tomb, Nichodemus joyning with him, and the Women obſerving where he was laid, go and prepare ſpices for his further imbalming when the Sabbath was over: all ſhewing their love to him, but in this very action ſhewing their little expecting his Reſurrection.

AS for the ſubſequence of this Section to the preceding, there can be no ſcruple, but it requires ſome heedfulneſs, to lay the ſtory in it, in its proper currency, becauſe of ſome ſeeming diverſities in the four in their relating the ſtory of it.

The Lord of life was under death about 36 hours: and ſo long was that day wherein the Sun ſtood ſtill in the time of Joſhua: as Kimchi ſaith, it is the acknowledgment of the Jews: on Joſh. 10.

Chriſt himſelf calleth this ſpace three daies and three nights, Matth. 12. 40. whereas it was but two nights and one whole day, and two ſmall parts of two more. And yet herein he ſpeaketh warrantably even by the known and allowed Dialect of the Nation. Both the Talmuds in the Treatiſe Shabba per. 9. do diſpute about the three daies that Iſrael ſeparated from their Wives before the giving of the Law, Exod. 19. 15. and among other things they have theſe paſſages: R. Akibah made the day a עונה and the night a עונה And ſo did R. Iſmael. But this is a tradition, R. Eliezer ben Azariah ſaith, יום ולילה עונה ומקצת עונה ככולה A day and a night make a עונה, and a part of a עונה is accounted as the whole. Obſerve theſe laſt words to the purpoſe that we are upon: Three natural daies by this rule were three עונות, and any part of any of theſe, was accounted as the whole of it.

The Evangeliſts ſeem to differ ſomewhat in the mention of the time of the Womens coming to the ſepulchre. John ſaith Mary Magdalen came while it was yet dark. Matthew, when it began to dawn: whereas Mark ſaith, ſhe and the other women came thither at Sunriſing: All which together ſpeak the ſtory to the full to this tenour. That at the dawning, and while it was yet dark, the Women as ſoon as they could ſee [at the leaſt Mary Magdalen] ſet out to go to the Sepulchre: and that was at the very inſtant of Chriſts riſing, when there was a great Earthquake and an Angel came and rolled away the Stone. Mary Magdalen came from Bethany, from her brother Lazarus his houſe [if ſhe came from from her own home] and the other Women were at their ſeveral lodgings, and to get them all together [for they were to go about this work all together] would ſpend ſome time: ſo that though Mary were ſo early ſtirring, yet before they were all got together to the Sepulchre it was Sunriſing. Theſe Women little knew of the watch that was ſet over the grave, and the ſealing of the ſtone [which was done on the morning of the Sabbath] for all their care is how to get the ſtone rolled away. When they come there, they find that done already [and the Watch was fled] and the Angel that had rolled it away ſitting on it on the right hand of the entring in, and when they were entred in they ſaw another Angel, which both told them of his being riſen. And thus Matthew and Mark that mention but one Angel, are to be reconciled to Luke who ſpeaketh of two.

The Women return and tell the Diſciples what they had ſeen, but their words ſeemed to them as idle tales: yea, Mary her ſelf yet believed not that he was riſen: It is worth ſtudying upon the faith of the Diſciples: it was a ſaving faith in Chriſt, and yet they believed not that he ſhould die till he was dead, nor believed that he ſhould riſe again, no not when he was now riſen.

Peter and John run to the Sepulchre, and Mary Magdalen follows them: They ſee the body gone and the clothes lying there [and John proves the firſt that believes his reſurrection] and they return home, but Mary ſtaies there weeping ſtill: And looking in, ſhe ſees two Angels, the one at the head and the other at the feet where the body had lain [like the two Cherubins at either end of the Ark:] And looking behind her ſhe ſeeth Jeſus, and thought it had been the Gardiner, but preſently knew him, and comes away to bring the Diſciples word. Here Matthew ſpeaks ſhort: for he mentioneth but one journey of the Women to the grave and back, and ſaith that as they came back Jeſus met them. Whereas Mary had two journeys, and it was ſhe alone that met him, and that in her ſecond return. As ſhe returned now the Watchmen are come into the City, and bribed to deny that he was riſen, and ſo the Chief Prieſts and Elders give money to hire the Nation into unbelief.

LUKE Chap. XXIV. from Ver. 13. to Ver. 36. — MARK Chap. XVI. Ver. 12, 13.

His ſecond appearing: viz to Peter and Alpheus going to Emmaus

THE ſame day in the afternoon two of them went to Emmaus a Town ſixty furlongs, or ſeven miles and a half from Jeruſalem. Joſephus placeth it at the very ſame diſtance De Bello lib. 7. cap. 27. calling it there Ammaus, and relating how Veſpaſian after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, gave it for the habitation of ſome of the Roman ſouldierry left there. But in Antiq. lib. 17. cap. 12. he calls it Emmaus, and relates how it was fired by Varus, &c. It lay in the way towards ſome part of Galilee, and it may be theſe two men were now returning home thither, and intended to lodge at Emmaus the firſt night: but now they ſtop their journey and return thence the ſame night to Jeruſalem. The two were Peter, and Alpheus the Father of three Apoſtles, who alſo was called Cleopas. See ver. 18. & 34. of this appearance to Peter, Paul ſpeaks, 1 Cor. 15. 5.

And that Alpheus and Cleopas were but one and the ſame perſon, may not only be conjectured from the nearneſs of the ſound, and from their being written in Hebrew with the ſame letters, חלפי but it is made plain in John 19.25. Where ſhe is called Mary the Wife of Cleopas, who in the other Evangeliſts is clearly evidenced to be Mary the Wife of Alpheus. the mother of James and Joſes, &c. Mat. 27. 56. Mar. 15. 40.

His third appearing: viz to the Eleven.

THE connexion is plain in John and Luke: for the former ſaith, The ſame day at evening being the firſt day of the week, &c. And the other, that as they were ſpeaking of his appearing to the two at Emmaus, he came in among them. The firſt day of the week is an ordinary Judaick phraſe אחד בשבת; and ſo they reckon the daies forward שני בשבת The ſecond day of the week. שלשי בשבת The third day of the week, &c. They that are now ſo very punctual to have the days ſo named and no otherwiſe, miſtake that for a phraſe purely Evangelical, which indeed is a phraſe purely Judaical.

As

As they ſat at Supper Jeſus cometh in among them: ſhews them his hands and ſide: eateth with them: openeth the Scriptures and their underſtandings: breatheth upon them, and ſaith, Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt, &c. Whoſoever ſins ye remit, &c. This was to intereſt them in a power and priviledge peculiar and diſtinct from any they had received yet, and diſtinct from that they were to receive on Pentecoſt day, viz. this inveſted them in power of life and death, to inflict death, or corporal plagues miraculouſly upon the enemies or diſgracers of the Goſpel, or to ſpare them as they ſhould be directed by the Holy Ghoſt, which they here received. The death of Ananias and Saphira was a fruit of this power, as is obſerved at that ſtory.

Thomas was not preſent at this time, and yet Mark ſaith, He appeared unto the eleven as they ſat at meat: and ſo Luke 24. 33. Peter and Cleopas found the eleven gathered together, &c. Nay 1 Cor. 15. 5. He was ſeen of the twelve: The title of the whole Chorus being uſed, though all were not preſent.

SECTION XC.

JOHN Chap. XX. from Ver. 26. to the end.

His fourth appearing: Thomas now preſent.

JOHN ſaith this was After eight daies, which [reckoning the daies current] was that day ſevennight, or the firſt day of the week again: a ſecond eſtabliſhment of that day for the Chriſtian Sabbath. Thomas upon ſeeing, believes, but bleſſed are they that have not ſeen yet have believed. See 1 Pet. 1. 8.

Tanchum. fol. 8. col. 1. R. Simeon ben Lachiſh ſaith, A Proſelyte is more lovely in the ſight of God then all that company that ſtood at mount Sinai: Why? Becauſe they if they had not ſeen the thunders and lightnings and fire, and the mountains trembling, and the ſound of the Trumpet, they would not have received the Law: but a proſelyte though he ſee none of theſe things, yet he comes and gives up himſelf to God, and takes upon him the Kingdom of Heaven.

SECTION XCI.

JOHN Chap. XXI. all the Chapter.

MATTH. Chap. XXVIII. Ver. 16. Then the eleven Diſciples went away into Galilee.

A fifth appearing: To ſeven of the Apoſtles at the ſea of Tiberias, &c.

CHRIST before his death had told them of his meeting with them in Galilee after his reſurrection: and when he was riſen, he appoints them to a mountain there. They are now come up into the Countrey, and while they wait the time of his appointment, Peter and ſix other of the Apoſtles go a fiſhing: not as their trade now, for they never had been all of them fiſhers before, but either for a preſent ſupply of proviſion for themſelves, or for preſent imployment till their Maſter ſhould diſpoſe of them. He had at firſt revealed himſelf to three of theſe ſeven [nay four, if Andrew were here] by a miraculous draught of fiſhes, and ſo he doth to them all now: and who can tell whether they had not ſome thoughts of that, and ſome expectation of the like appearing now, which did the rather urge them to this work?

At ſea he helpeth them to a marvelous draught of 153 great fiſhes [ſo many thouſands were the proſelytes that wrought for the Temple, only 600 over, 2 Chron. 2. 17.] and at land he had provided them a dinner againſt they came aſhore, and dines with them. And this, ſaith John, was the third time that he ſhewed himſelf to his Diſciples: which aſſerts the order of this Section, and ſheweth that this was before his appearing to the whole number at the mountain where he had appointed them: The two times that he had appeared to them before this, this Evangeliſt giveth account of before, namely one time when Thomas was not preſent, and another time when he was.

After dinner he putteth Peter to a threefold confeſſion, anſwerable to his threefold denial, and foretelleth his Martyrdom, but telleth that John ſhould live till he ſhould come: meaning in that ſenſe, as his coming and coming in glory is oft uſed in the Goſpel, namely his coming to take vengeance of the unbelieving Jewiſh Nation: Peter ſhould be Martyred by them, but John ſhould live to ſee them receive their deſerts.

SECTION XCII.

MATTH. Chap. XXVIII. from Ver. 16. to the end | MARK Chap. XVI. Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18. | LUKE Chap. XXIV. Ver. 49.

A sixth appearing: at the mountain in Galilee to all the eleven: and 500 more.

HIs appointing them into Galilee to such a mount [it is like to that mount near Capernaum where he had chosen the Apostles and made his Sermon, Matth. 5.] was not barely to appear to the eleven, for that had he done before, and that could he have done at Jerusalem, but it was an intended meeting, not only with the eleven, but with the whole multitude of his Galilean and other Disciples, and therefore he published this appointment so oft, before and after his Resurrection: and we cannot so properly understand his being seen of above five hundred brethren at once, of which the Apostle speaketh, 1 Cor. 15. 6. of any other time and place as of this: He had appointed the place, and the concourse argueth that he had appointed the time too, or at least this concourse waited at the place till his time should come. And here may we conceive that he kept the Lords day or the first day of the week for the Christian Sabbath with this multitude of his Disciples; revealing himself clearly to them, and preaching to them of the things that concerned the Kingdom of God.

Particularly he gives command and commission to go and Disciple all Nations: For whereas hitherto he had confined them to preach only to Israel, now must they preach to every creature, Mark 16. 15. πάσῃ κτίσει [See Colos. 1. 23.] לכל חבריות is the Jews ordinary language, that is, to all men. מודיע לבריות עיון ומעשרין Solomon in his Proverbs makes known Theory and Practice to the creatures, Kafvenaki in Prov. 1. משרה דוח הקדש על הבריות He causeth the Holy Ghost to dwell upon the Creatures, Midr. Til. in Psal. 135. Nimrod made Idols ומטעה הבריות and caused the creatures to erre, Tanch. fol. 8. 4. The Lord requires that ברות the creatures should pray before him, Id. fol. 16. 4. In which and an hundred other instances that might be given, the word Creatures signifieth only Men: and their charge and commission to preach the Gospel to every creature, means to all men, the Gentiles as well as the Jews.

Warrant then and charge is given for the fetching of them in [the great Mystery, Ephes. 3. 4, 6.] who had lain subject to vanity of Idolatry, and under the bondage of all manner of corruption ever since their casting off at Babel 2203 years ago. They had been taught of the devil, his oracles and delusions, &c. but now they must all be taught of God, Isa. 54. 13. by the preaching of the Gospel. They had in some few numbers in this space been taught by Israel to know the Lord and proselyted into their Religion, but now such proselyting should not need, for all must come to the knowledge of God, Heb. 8. 11. the Gospel carrying the knowledge of him, and it being carried through all Nations. Those of them that had come into the Church of Israel and the true Religion, had been inducted and sealed into it, by being baptized. Talm. in Jebam. per. 4. &c. And so that proselyte Sacrament [as I may so call it] must be carried and continued among all Nations, as a badge of homage and subjection to Christ, to whom all power is given in Heaven and earth; and of the profession of the true God, The Father Son and Holy Ghost, against all false Gods and false worship. Infants born of Christian Parents are to bear this badge, though when they undertake it, they understand not what they do, because none in Christian Families should continue without the note of homage to Christs soveraignty, and this distinctive mark against Hetheniſm that worshippeth false Gods, as no male among Israel after eight daies old must be without the badge of Circumcision.

Discipling was not of persons already taught, but to that end that they should be taught, and if the Disciples understood this word in Christs command after any other sense, it was different from the sense of the word, which the Nation had ever used and only used: For in their Schools a person was made תלמיד a Scholar or Disciple, when he gave in himself to such a Master to be taught and trained up by him: and in the Disciping of Proselytes to the Jews Religion, it was of the very like tenour. That sense therefore that many put upon these words, viz. that none are to be baptized but those that are throughly taught, is such a one as the Apostles and all the Jewish Nation had never known or heard of before.

That wretched and horrid opinion that denieth the Godhead of Christ, and the Godhead of the Holy Ghost, little observeth, or at least will not see why the administration of Baptism among the Gentiles must be in the Name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, whereas among the Jews it was only in the Name of Jesus, Act. 2. 38. namely for this reason, that as by that among the Jews, Jesus was to be professed for the true Messias against all other, so by this among the Gentiles who had worshipped false Gods, The Father, ther, Son and holy Ghoſt ſhould be profeſſed the only true God. And it would be but a wild, as well as an irreligious Paraphraſe that that opinion would make of this paſſage, Go preach the Goſpel to every Creature, and Baptize them in the Name of the Son a Creature, and the holy Ghoſt a Creature.

He promiſeth the miraculous gifts of the holy Ghoſt to them that ſhould believe: [not to all, but to ſome for the confirmation of the Doctrine:] and chargeth the Diſciples to return to Jeruſalem and there to ſtay till he ſhould pour down the holy Ghoſt upon them, to inable them for this Miniſtry among all Nations to which he had deſigned them. Mark and Luke do briefly add the ſtory of his aſcenſion, becauſe they will diſpatch his whole ſtory, but that is related more amply, Act. 1.

A ſeventh appearing: To James.

After the appearing to above five hundred Brethren at once, which we ſuppoſe and not without ground to have been that laſt mentioned, the Apoſtle relateth that he was ſeen of James, 1 Cor. 15.7. and then of all the Apoſtles: which doth plainly rank this appearance to James between that to the five hundred Brethren on the mountain in Galilee, and his coming to all the Apoſtles when they were come again to Jeruſalem. Which James this was, Paul is ſilent of, as all the Evangeliſts are, of any ſuch particular appearance. It is moſt like he means James the leſs, of whom he ſpeaks oft elſewhere, and ſo doth the ſtory of the Acts of the Apoſtles as one of the ſpecialer note in the time of Pauls preaching among the Gentiles. We read oft in the Goſpels, of Peter and James and John three Diſciples of ſingular eminency in regard of the privacy that Chriſt vouchſafed to them at ſome ſpecial times, more then to the other Apoſtles, and in that he badged them with a peculiar mark of changing their names, and did not ſo by any of the other. But that James was the Son of Zebedee, : Now when he was Martyred, Act. 12. you find that James the Son of Alphæus called James the leſs, came to be ranked in the like dignity with Peter and John, and was Miniſter of the Circumciſion, in ſpecial manner with them, Gal. 2. 9. they to the Jews ſcattered abroad, and he reſidentiary in Judea. See Act. 15.13. & 21.18. Gal. 2.13. If we queſtion how he of all the reſt of the Apoſtles came in, to make up that triumvirate when the other James was gone, we cannot tell where ſo pregnantly to give an anſwer as from hence; in that Chriſt vouchafed thus particularly to appear to him, which was not only an argument, but might carry the virtue of a command, to bring him into that rank, Office and Imployment, when the other James had run his courſe.

THE CHRONICLE AND ORDER OF The Acts of the Apostles: THE EPISTLES, AND THE REVELATION.

The Second Part.

CHRIST. XXXIII.

ACTS Chap. I.

FROM Galilee where Christ had last appeared to his Disciples, he remandeth them back to Jerusalem, and there cometh again to them. Where among other conference, they question him, Whether he would at that time restore the Kingdom to Israel? His summoning them again to that place, the Metropolis, it may be gave them occasion to move that question; they as yet, with the rest of the Nation conceiting the Messias a temporal Deliverer; and possibly not fully understanding what he meant by the promise of the Father. His answer, It is not for you to know the times and seasons, intimates not that ever there should be such a restauration, but it smartly checketh their curiosity, as erroneous and needless; and sets them to look off earthly longings, to mind the business they had to do, viz. to preach him through the world. He leadeth them out as far on mount Olivet, as where it began to be called Bethany, and there, about the place where he had begun his triumphant riding upon an Ass into Jerusalem, he now rides triumphantly into Heaven in a cloud.

The Disciples having seen his Ascension, and two Angels that told them of his coming again in like manner as he went, return to Jerusalem, and there go up into an upper room, and their number is summed up an hundred and twenty. עלייה An upper room was ordinarily chosen by the Learned of the Jews for their meeting place to discuss and determine matters of Learning and Religion. Schab. per. 1. halac. 4. These are the articles that the Schools of Shammai and Hillel discussed בעליית in the chamber, or upper room of Chananiah ben Hezekiah, &c. Jerus. Pesachin. fol. 30. col. 2. עלייה בית אדומים בלוד The upper room of Beth Arum in Lydda, &c.

An hundred and twenty were not all the present professors in Jerusalem, but these spoken of were they that were of Christs constant retinue, and companied with him all the time that he went in and out among them, ver. 21. and who being constant witnesses of his actions, ons, and auditors of his doctrine, were appointed by him for the Miniſtry. Theſe are they that the ſtory meaneth all along in theſe paſſages: Chap. 2. 1. They were all together. Chap. 4. 21. They went to their company. Chap. 6. 3. Look ye out among your ſelves. Chap. 8. They were all ſcattered abroad except the Apoſtles. Chap. 11. 19. They which were ſcattered abroad, preached, &c The Jews ſay, Ezras great Synagogue ... was of a hundred and twenty men. Avoth R. Nathan per. 4. Juchaſin fol. 13. And their Canons allow not the ſetting up of a Sanhedrin of three and twenty Judges, in any City, but where there were an hundred and twenty men fit, ſome for one Office and imployment, ſome for another. Talm. in Sanhedr. per. 1. and Maymony in his Treatiſe of the ſame name, per. 1.

The activity of Peter in the work of the Goſpel, mentioned more along this ſtory, then of any of the others, was not only injoyned, but alſo inlivened, by that ſaying of his Maſter, When thou art converted Strengthen thy brethren: and he that had fallen ſo foul, as he had done, had need of all induſtry to evidence his recovery, and to get ground again.

The Phraſe in ver. 25. Judas is gone to his own place, may properly be compared with the opinion of the Nation, about a traytour, He that betrayeth an Iſraelite, either body or goods, into the hands of the Heathen, hath no portion in the world to come, Maym. in chobel Umazzik per. 8. And with the Gloſs of Baal Turim upon theſe words in Num. 24. 25. Baalam went to his own place, They mean, ſaith he, that he went to Hell.

ACTS Chap. II.

THE expectation of the Nation grounded from Dan. 9. that the Meſſias ſhould appear about this time, Luke 19. 11. had brought multitudes of Jews out of all Nations to ſee the iſſue: And Pentecoſt having brought up alſo all the Country of Judea to celebrate that Feaſt; in this double conflux of people, the holy Ghoſt is given and cometh down upon the hundred and twenty Diſciples, in the likeneſs of fiery tongues: At which very time of the year, and in fire, the Law had been given 1447 years ago. The Jeruſ. Gemariſts in Taanith. fol. 65. col. 3. have a ſaying, That as Jeruſalem was deſtroyed by fire, ſo ſhould it be rebuilt by fire. And in Jom tobh fol. 61. col. 3. and Chagigah fol. 78. col. 1. they ſay that David died at the Feaſt of Pentecoſt. Both paſſages regardable at this place.

As the confuſion of tongues at Babel had cauſed the caſting off of the Gentiles, [by ſevering them from the participation of the true Religion [which was only profeſſed and known in the Hebrew tongue] ſo was the gift of tongues, to be a needful means, to bring them in to Religion again; when every one may hear of the things of God in his own language. The Diſciples were doubly indowed by this gift, as to the matter of language; for they were hereby inabled to ſpeak to every Nation in their own tongue: and not that only; but they were inabled to underſtand the Originals of Scripture, which they underſtood not before. Their birth and breeding had not allowed them ſo much learning as to underſtand any Bible that was then extant, either Hebrew or Greek, but here is the firſt operation of this gift of the Spirit upon them, that they are firſt made able to underſtand the Originals of Scripture, and then able to unlock them to any one in their own tongue. And here ſhould they begin that take on them to expound the Scriptures by the Spirit, namely to unlock the difficulties of the Original languages, [for therein the maineſt difficulty of the Scripture lodgeth] according as was the method of the Spirits operation in the Apoſtles.

Pentecoſt was a time of rejoycing, and at all ſuch feſtivities the Jews had ever good ſtore of wine ſtirring: ſo that theſe men conclude that they had drunk too much and ſpake as men diſtract: which Peter confutes by telling them it was not yet the third hour of the day, or nine a clock. For upon their Sabbaths and holidaies they uſed not to eat or drink till their Synagogue ſervice was done. Maym. in Schab. per. 30. which was not of a good while after nine a clock.

His alleadging of Joel, In the laſt daies I will pour out my Spirit, &c. teacheth us how to conſtrue the phraſe, The laſt daies, in exceeding many places both of the Old Teſtament and the New, as Iſa. 2. 1. 1 Tim. 4. 1. and 2 Tim. 3. 1. 1 Pet. 4. 7. 1 Joh. 2. 19, &c. namely for the laſt daies of Jeruſalem and the Jewiſh State. For to take his words in any other ſenſe [as ſome do for the laſt daies of the world] is to make his allegation utterly impertinent and monſtrous.

Three thouſand converted, are Baptized In the Name of the Lord Jeſus, ver. 38. which no whit diſagreeth from the command, Baptize in the Name of the Father and of the Son, &c. Matth. 28. 19. For the form of Baptiſm in thoſe firſt daies of the Goſpel, of which the New Teſtament giveth the ſtory, may be conſidered under a threefold condition. 1. John the Baptiſt baptized in the Name of Meſſias, or Chriſt that was then ready to come, but that Jeſus of Nazareth was he, he himſelf knew not till he had run a good part of

of his course, Joh. 1.31. as was observed before. 2. The Disciples baptizing the Jews, baptized them in the Name of Jesus: upon this reason, because the great point of controversie then in the Nation about Messias was, Whether Jesus of Nazareth were he or no. All the Nation acknowledged a Messias, but the most of them abominated that Jesus of Nazareth should be thought to be he: therefore those that by the preaching of the Gospel came to acknowledge him to be Messias, were baptized into his Name, as the critical badge of their imbracing the true Messias. But 3. among the Gentiles where that question was not afoot, they baptized in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. And so that baptizing in the Name of Jesus, was for a season for the setling of the evidence of his being Messias, and when that was throughly established, then it was used no more, but Baptism was in the Name of the Father, and Son, &c. Of the same cognizance were those extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, evidences of Jesus his being the Messias, and means of conveying the Gospel through the world, and when both these were well established then those gifts ceased for ever.

All that believed were together and had all things common, ver. 46. The Children of those that believed, must come under the title of Believers too, or they must famish. For this community of goods being for the relief of the poor, as we shall shew at the fourth Chapter, the Children, Babes and Infants of believing Parents that were poor, must be taken in under this expression, All that believed, &c. or how did they for support? if the community of goods reacht them as well as their Parents, the title must reach them too: When a Master of a Family was baptized, his Children were they never so young were baptized with him, and hence the mention of baptizing *whole houshold*s Act.16.15.33. They that pleading against Infants Baptism, do cavill, that it may be, there were no Infants in those Families that are mentioned, bewray that they little understand the manner of administring Baptism in its first use. For the stress of the business lies not in this, whether it can be proved that there were Infants in those Families, where it is recorded, that *whole houshold*s were baptized, but the case is this, that in all Families whatsoever, were there never so many Infants, they were all baptized, when their Parents were baptized. Thus was the constant custom among the Jews for admission of Proselytes, and thence this Canon, That a Woman proselited and baptized when she was great with child, her Child needed not then to be baptized when it was born. Maym. in Issure biah per. 13. For if he had been born before she was baptized, he must have been baptized with her. And the New Testament gives so little evidence of the altering this custom, at those first baptizings under the Gospel, that it plainly on the contrary shews the continuance of it, when it speaketh of the Apostles baptizing whole households.

ACTS Chap. III, IV.

PEntecost Feast lasted eight daies, as well as their other Feasts, Passover, Tabernacles, and Dedication did. Jerus. in Moed Katon, and Chagigah at large. The occurrences of the very day of Pentecost it self, are related already: Now whether the healing of the Creeple, and the consequences upon that, contained in the third Chapter, befell upon the same day in the afternoon, or on the next day after, which was the day when all the males appeared before the Lord in the temple, or further in the Feast, is not certain, but that they were within the compass of the Feast, is more then probable, by the great multitude that was converted at one Sermon.

Peter and John go into the Temple at the ninth hour, the hour of prayer. Talm. in Pesachin. per. 5. The dayly sacrifice of the evening was killed at the eight hour and a half, and offered at the ninth hour and an half. Joseph. Antiq. lib. 14. cap. 8. Δὶς τῆς ἡμέρας περὶ τε τὴν ἕω καὶ ἐννάτην, &c. Twice a day, namely in the morning and about the ninth hour, they offered on the Altar. There, as they go in, at the East-gate, that led into the Court of the Women, they find and heal a Creeple, which had been so from his birth. The Jews looked upon this miracle, as wrought by their own holiness, as appears by the Apostles answer to them, ver. 12. For such a conceit walked among the Nation, that extraordinary holiness might attain to miraculous workings. R. Phineas ben Jair saith, Industry bringeth to purity, Purity to cleanness, Cleanness to holiness, Holiness to humbleness, Humbleness to fear of sin, Fear of sin to partaking of the Holy Ghost. Jerus. Schab. fol. 3. col. 3.

Yet are they imprisoned that night, and the next morning convented before the Council. Among others which are named of the Council, which were Priests, Alexander and John, mentioned ver.6. seem to be Alexander Alabarcha, or his Son, and Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai, the latter, Vice-president at this time under Rabban Gamaliel.

They dismissed, come to their own company, and related what had occurred, and upon joynt prayer the place is shaken, and they are again filled with the Holy Ghost. Why? What could be added to them they having been so filled with the Holy Ghost before? In their prayer they petitioned these two things, That God would give them boldness boldneſs to ſpeak his Word, and that Healings and Signs and Wonders might be done in the name of Jeſus: And the power of both theſe falls now upon them: and eſpecially, it may be conceived that Wonder of Wonders, upon the twelve, power to beſtow the Holy Ghoſt.

The community of goods, with the mention of which the ſecond and the fourth Chapters conclude, may be conſidered under theſe two animadverſions: 1. That although perſecution as yet for the Goſpel, had brought none to poverty, yet it is manifeſt that there were poor amongſt them. And ſome come to the more poverty for the Goſpel ſake too. For if they were poor before they received the Goſpel, then the Synagague of which they were, provided for them: but now they were deſtitute of that proviſion, they having forſaken the Synagogue; or a the leaſt the Synagogue them, becauſe of their forſaking of their Judaiſm. For the Evangelical Church therefore, that was now begun, to provide for her poor, it had not only the Synagogue for an example, but would have had it for a reproach, if they had neglected ſo needful a duty, which that took care for ſo conſtantly and tenderly. 2. This having of all things common therefore, was not an extinction of propriety and of meum & tuum, as if one rich man ſhould have as good intereſt in another rich mans eſtate as himſelf, but it was intended mainly for the relief of the poor: Not to bring any that had eſtates to voluntary poverty, not to level eſtates, but to relieve thoſe which ſtood in need. Chap. 2.45. & 4. 35. Diſtribution was made to every man as he had need: To them that preached the word for their maintenance, and to the poor for their relief.

ACTS Chap. V.

Ananias and Saphira ſet up as everlaſting monuments to all generations of Gods juſt indignation againſt the deſpiſers of the Spirit of Chriſt. רוחו שׁל משיח The Spirit of Meſſias was in honourable mention and eſteem in the Nation, in their common ſpeech, though they would not know him when he was revealed. Now the ſin of this couple was firſt covetouſneſs, but eſpecially preſuming to play falſe, and yet thinking to go undiſcovered of that Spirit which wrought ſo powerfully in the Apoſtles. That curſed opinion that denies the Godhead of the Holy Ghoſt, runs parallel with this ſin of Ananias and Saphira to a hair.

Peters warrant for this execution we may read in that paſſage, John 20. 22, 23. He breathed on them and ſaid, Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe ſins ye remit they are remitted, and whoſe ſins ye retain they are retained. How? To forgive ſins abſolutely? this belongs only to God. Was it to forgive them declaratively? This ſeem too low a conſtruction, and too reſtrained: It ſeemeth therefore the moſt proper meaning of this donation, that he now indued them with power, to avenge what ſins the Holy Ghoſt [now received] ſhould direct them, to avenge, with bodily plagues, giving up to Satan, or with death: and again to remit ſuch penalties as they ſhould be directed to remit, and they ſhould be remitted. The Holy Ghoſt whom they had received then with ſo peculiar a power, Ananias and Saphira do here plainly vilifie, and affront directly; therefore an execution of ſuch power upon them was as proper and direct. But be it whether it will, that Peter took his warrant originally from thence, or had it inſtantly by ſome immediate revelation, as the judgement was fearful, ſo his executing of it was remarkable, ſhewing at once his aſſurance of the pardon of his own lying againſt his Maſter, when he can and dare thus avenge a lye againſt the Holy Ghoſt: and alſo his juſt zeal and activity for the honour of his Maſter whom he had denied.

It is ſaid in ver. 12. They were all in Solomons porch, which was the Eaſt cloiſter of the mount of the Temple, and in part of it did the Sanhedrin now ſit, and the Apoſtles not afraid to act ſo near them: But at laſt they are apprehended and impriſoned, but miraculouſly inlarged, and preaching in the Temple again: and thereupon convented before the Council. Gamaliel, Pauls Maſter was now Preſident, and continued in this dignity till within eighteen years of the deſtruction of the City. He pleadeth here for the Apoſtles, not out of any love to their perſons or doctrine, for he lived and died a downright Phariſee: but partly becauſe he ſaw the Sadduces at preſent the chief agents againſt them, and chiefly becauſe the miracles they wrought were ſo plain and convincing, that he could move no leſs then what he did. And yet for all the fairneſs of this man at this time, yet did he afterward ordain and publiſh that prayer called מינים ברכת The prayer againſt Hereticks, meaning Chriſtians; framed indeed by Samuel Katon, but approved and authorized by this man, Preſident of the Sanhedrin [then at Jabneh] and commanded to be uſed conſtantly in their Synagogues, in which they prayed againſt the Goſpel and the profeſſors of it. Taanith. fol. 65. 3. Maym. in Tephil. per. 2.

ACTS CHAP. VI, VII.

THE ſeven Deacons [as they are commonly called] choſen by occaſion of the Helleniſts murmuring againſt the Hebrews about neglect of their widows. The Hebrews were Jews the inhabitants of Judea, and the Helleniſts thoſe Jews that lived in other Countries diſperſedly among the Greeks: Not only in Greece, but almoſt in all other Countries, which the conqueſts of Alexander, and the continuance of the Syrogrecian Monarchy after him had filled with Greeks, as all Countries alſo were filled with Jews.

In all the Jews Synagogues there were פרנסין Parnaſin, Deacons, or ſuch as had care of the poor, whoſe work it was to gather alms for them from the Congregation, and to diſtribute it to them. שני גבאי צדקה ועוד אחד כדי שיהיו נ׳ לחלק צדקה There were two that gathered alms for them and one more added to diſtribute it to them. Maym. in Sanhedr. per. 1. R. Chelbe in the name of R. Ba bar Zabda ſaith, They appoint not leſs then three Parnaſin. For if judgment about pecuniary matters were judged by three, much more this matter which concerneth life is to be managed by three. Jeruſ. in Peah fol. 21. col. 1. That needful office is here tranſlated into the Chriſtian Church: and the ſeven are choſen to this work out of the number of the hundred and twenty that are mentioned, Chap. 1. 15. and that company only was the chooſers of them, and not all the Believers in Jeruſalem. The reaſon why the Hebrews neglected the widows of the Helleniſts may be ſuppoſed, either becauſe they would ſtick to their old rule, mentioned once before, That a widow was to be maintained by her husbands children. Talm. in chetub. per. 11. Maym. in אישות per. 18. [compare 1 Tim. 5. 4.] or becauſe the Hebrews of Judea had brought in more into the common ſtock for the poor, by ſale of their Goods and Lands, then thoſe that had come from forrain Countries had done, they not having Goods and Lands ſo ready to ſell. All that had been brought in hitherto, had been put into the Apoſtles hands, and they had been burdened with the care and trouble of the diſpoſal of it: but now they transfer that work and office to the ſeven, ſolemnly ordaining them by Impoſition of hands into it, and here only, the Impoſition of the Apoſtles hands confers not the Holy Ghoſt, for theſe men were full of the Holy Ghoſt before.

Stephen an eminent man among them, is quarrelled by certain of the Libertines, and the Helleniſts Synagogue. Libertini משוחררים are exceeding frequently ſpoken of in the Jews Writings. And the Alexandrian Synagogue [one of the Helleniſts] is mentioned in Jeruſ. in Megillah. fol. 73. col. 4. and Juchaſ. fol. 26. who tell, that R. Eliezer bar Zadoc took the Synagogue of the Alexandrians that was at Jeruſalem, and imployed it to his own uſe.

When they are not able to overpower him by argument and diſputation, they take a ready way to do it, by falſe accuſation, and conventing him before the Sanhedrin: where being accuſed of vilifying Moſes, and ſpeaking of the deſtruction of that place, he is vindicated, even miraculouſly, before he pleadeth his own cauſe, by his face ſhining like the face of Moſes, and bearing an Angelical aſpect and Majeſty; for indeed he ſpake but what was ſpoken by the Angel Gabriel, Dan. 9. 26, 27.

In his Apology, he ſpeaketh to the heads of his accuſation, but ſomewhat abſtruſely; yet ſo as to them to whom he ſpake to be well underſtood, his diſcourſe being according to their own Rhetorick and Logick: To what was laid to his charge, for vilifying Moſes, and ſaying, his cuſtoms ſhould be changed, he rehearſeth in brief the whole hiſtory of Moſes, and ſhews he was Orthodox to him; but yet he driveth all to this, that as the times before Moſes were ſtill moving and growing on to ſettlement in Moſes, ſo when Moſes himſelf had ſetled all he had to do, yet he pointed them to a Prophet yet to come, to whom they ſhould hearken as the ultimate Oracle, which was this Jeſus that he preached to them. And whereas he was accuſed for ſpeaking of the deſtruction of the Temple, he firſt ſhews, that fixedneſs to this or that place, is not ſo much to be ſtood upon, as appears by the flitting condition of the Patriarchs [whoſe flittings he giveth the ſtory of at large] and by the moving condition of the Tabernacle before the Temple was built: And when the Temple was built, it was not becauſe God would confine himſelf to one place, for the moſt High dwelleth not in Temples made with hands, ver. 48. &c.

He inſerteth two or three ſharp and true accuſations of them, whereas theirs of him had been but falſe and cauſeleſs. As, that their fathers had perſecuted thoſe that foretold of Chriſt, as they did him for now preaching him, and they followed their fathers ſteps; nay went further, for they had murdered Chriſt, whereas their fathers had but murdered his Prophets. And whereas they were ſo punctual, about the Ceremonious rites given by Moſes, they neglected the moral Law, which was given by the diſpoſition of Angels.

This cuts them to the heart, that they paſs a rancourous and furious ſentence of death upon him: but he hath a ſight of the high bench of Heaven, God and Chriſt at his right hand, their judge and his: A moſt fit proſpect for the firſt Martyr.

They caſt him out of the City and ſtone him for blaſphemy. For theſe were to be ſtoned. He that went in to his mother, or to his fathers wife, or to his daughter in Law, or to a male, or to a beaſt: and he that blaſphemed, or that committed Idolatry, &c. And the place of ſtoning was out from the place of Judgment, [nay out of the City, as the Gemariſts reſolve it] becauſe it is ſaid, Bring him that curſed, out of the Camp. And A crier went before him, that was to die, proclaiming his fault. Sanhedr. per. 6. & 7.

When he was come within four cubits of the place of ſtoning, they ſtript him naked: only covered his nakedneſs before. Ibid.

And being come to the very place, firſt the witneſſes laid their hands upon him, Maym. in Avodah Zarah per. 2. and then ſtripping off their coats that they might be more expedite for their preſent work, firſt one of them daſheth his loins violently againſt a ſtone that lay for that purpoſe: if that killed him not, then the other daſheth a great ſtone upon his heart, as he lay on his back: and if that diſpatched him not, then all the people fell upon him with ſtones. Talm. ubi ſup.

Steven in the midſt of all this their fury, and his own anguiſh, gets on his knees and prays for them: and having ſo done he fell aſleep. The Jews do ordinarily uſe the word רמך to ſignifie Dying, which properly ſignifies ſleeping, eſpecially when they ſpeak of a fair and comfortable death: which word Luke tranſlates here. כל הנסקלין נתלין All that were ſtoned were alſo hanged up upon a tree. Talm. ubi ſup. Whether Steven were ſo uſed is uncertain, but it is evident that he had a fair burial, and not the burial of a malefactour.

CHRIST. XXXIV.

ACTS CHAP. VIII.

A Great perſecution followeth the death of Steven: in which Saul was a chief agent, Scholar of Gamaliel [Preſident of the Sanhedrin] and it may be the buſier for that. In Talm. Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 43. col. 1. they ſay, Jeſu had five Diſciples, Mathai, Nakai, Netſer, Boni and Thodah, and they are urging reaſons there, why they ſhould all be put to death, &c.

All the hundred and twenty Miniſters mentioned, Chap. 1. 15. are ſcattered abroad [only the twelve ſtay at Jeruſalem as in the furnace to comfort and cheriſh the Church there in ſo ſad a time] and they preach all along as they go, and ſo Satan breaks his own head by his own deſign, for by perſecution by which he had contrived to ſmother the Goſpel, it ſpreads the more.

The firſt plantation of it mentioned, is in Samaria, and that according to Chriſts own direction, and foretelling, Act. 1. 8. Ye ſhall be witneſſes to me, both in Jeruſalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, &c. He had forbidden them before, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any City of the Samaritans do not enter, Matth. 10. 5. but now that partition wall that had been between, is to be broken down. Of all Nations and people under Heaven the Samaritans were the moſt odious to the Jews, and a main reaſon was, becauſe they were Jews Apoſtates. For though the firſt peopling of that place, after the Captivity of the ten Tribes, was by Heathens, 2 King. 17. yet upon the building of the Temple on mount Gerizim, ſuch multitudes of Jews continually flocked thither, that generally Samaritaniſm was but a mongrel Judaiſm. They called Jacob their father, expected Meſſias, had their Temple, Prieſthood, Service, Pentatuch, &c. And to ſpare more, take but this one paſſage in Talm. Jeruſ. Peſachin fol. 27. 2. The Cuthæans all the time that they celebrate their unleavened bread feaſt with Iſrael, they are to be believed concerning their putting away of leaven: If they do not keep their unleavened bread feaſt with Iſrael, they are not to be believed concerning their putting away of leaven. Rabban Gamaliel ſaith, All the Ordinances that the Cuthæans uſe, they are more punctual in them then Iſrael is. It is an unhappy obſcurity that the Hebrew Writers have put upon the word Cuthæans, for though it moſt properly ſignifie Samaritans, yet have they ſo commonly given this name to Chriſtians, as the moſt odious name they could invent to give them, that in the moſt places that you meet with it, you cannot tell whether they mean the one or the other. In the place cited, it ſeemeth indeed moſt likely that it means the Samaritans, becauſe it ſpeaks of their keeping the feaſt of unleavened bread, and uſing the Ordinances of Iſrael: unleſs it ſpeak of thoſe Jews that had received the Goſpel and become Chriſtians, and were fallen to their Judaiſm again, and joyned that with their Chriſtianity, which very many did, as we ſhall have occaſion to obſerve hereafter.

Simon Magus taketh upon him to believe and is baptized: The naming of him calls to mind the mention of one Simon a Magician that Joſephus ſpeaks of, Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 5. who who was a means to intice Druſilla from her former husband to go and marry Felix the Governour of Judea, this might very well be that man. And it minds of a paſſage in Tal. Jeruſ. in Jebamoth fol. 13. col. 1. בני סימוניא אתון לגבי רבי I cannot but render it, The Simonians came to Rabbi, and ſaid to him We pray thee give us a man to be our Expoſitor, Judge, Mimſter, Scribe, Traditionary, and to do for us all we need. I know what סימוניא ראנמא is in Tal. Bab. in Cholin. fol. 15. But certainly בני סימוניא means ſome people; but whence ſo named, there is no diſputing here.

Philip baptized Samaria, and did great wonders among them, but could not beſtow the Holy Ghoſt upon them: that power belonged only to the Apoſtles; therefore Peter and John are ſent thither for that purpoſe. They laid their hands upon them and they received the Holy Ghoſt: Not upon all, for what needeth that? Or what reaſon was there for it? The gifts of the Holy Ghoſt that were received, were theſe miraculous ones, of Tongues, Propheſie, &c. Acts 10. 46. & 19. 6. Now of theſe there were but theſe two ends, 1. For the confirmation of the doctrine of the Goſpel, ſuch miraculous gifts attending it. And 2. for inſtruction of others: for Tongues were given indeed for a ſign, 1 Cor. 14. 22. but not only for a ſign, but for edification and inſtruction, as the Apoſtle alſo ſheweth at large in the ſame Chapter. Now both theſe ends were attained, though they that received the Holy Ghoſt were not all, but only a few and ſet number: nay the later not conceivable of all, for if all were inabled miraculouſly to be Teachers, who were to be taught? The Impoſition therefore of the Apoſtles hands, mentioned here and elſewhere, and thoſe paſſages, Theſe ſigns ſhall follow thoſe that believe, they ſhall caſt out Devils, they ſhall ſpeak with Tongues, &c. Mark 16. 17. Repent and be baptized every one of you, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt, Act. 2. 38, &c. were not upon all that believed the Goſpel, and were baptized: but upon ſome certain number, whom they were directed by the Holy Ghoſt to lay their hands upon, as thoſe men that God had appointed and determined for Preachers and Miniſters to the people, and who by the Impoſition of the Apoſtles hands, receiving the Holy Ghoſt, were by thoſe gifts inabled to underſtand the language and ſenſe of Scripture, and to be inſtructers of the people, and to build them up.

Candaces Eunuch, having been at Jeruſalem to worſhip, and returning back is converted by Philip. [Of Candace Queen of Meroe in Æthiopia, ſee Strabo lib. 17.] He met with him in the way that lead from Jeruſalem to Gaza the deſert. Of this place Strabo again lib. 16. ſpeaketh thus, Then is the haven of the Gazæans: above which, ſome ſeven furlongs, is the City, once glorious, but ruined by Alexander ἡ μέχρι ἐρημος and it remaineth deſert. Diodorus Siculus calls it πόλις παλαιὰ The old Gaza, lib. 19. for another was built at the haven by the Sea ſide, called ſometimes Mainma. Sozom. Eccleſ. hiſt. lib. 5. cap. 3. and afterward Conſtantia, named ſo by Conſtantine after the name of his ſiſter: as ſaith Euſeb. de Vit. Conſtant. lib. 4. cap. 28. or as Sozomen, of his ſon Conſtantius.

Whether this Eunuch were a Jew or a Proſelyte is ſcarce worth inquiring: his devotion is far more worth ſpending thoughts upon, which brought him ſo long a journey, and imployed him ſo well in his travail, as in reading the Scripture. He is baptized in the name of Jeſus, ver. 37. and [as it may well be conceived] takes ſhip at Gaza, and is the firſt, that we find, that carried the profeſſion of Jeſus into Africk. The mention of which, may juſtly call our thoughts to conſider of the Temple built in Egypt by Onias, and the vaſt numbers of Jews that were in that and the Countries thereabouts, and yet how little intimation there is, in the New Teſtament Story, by whom or how the Goſpel was conveyed into thoſe parts.

Philip is rapt by the Spirit from Gaza to Azotus, which were 270 furlongs, or 34 miles aſunder, as Diodor. Sicul. ubi ſupra, meaſures.

ACTS CHAP. IX. from the beginning to Verſ. 23.

THE converſion of Paul: A monument of mercy, 1 Tim. 1. 14, 16. A Phariſee, a perſecutor, a murderer, yet become a Chriſtian, a Preacher, an Apoſtle.

He conſented to Stevens death: and after that he gets a Commiſſion from the chief Prieſts, and makes deſperate havock in Jeruſalem, Act. 8. 2. & 22. 4. & 26. 10.

We find all along this Book, that the chief Prieſts are not only the buſieſt men in perſecuting of the Goſpel, but in many places it is related ſo, as if they were the only men and had intire power in their own hands, as a peculiar Court, to give Commiſſions, to judge, condemn and execute: as it hath been and is the opinion of ſome, that there was an Eccleſiaſtical Sanhedrin diſtinct from the Civil.

It is true indeed that there was in the Temple a Conſiſtory only of Prieſts, which ſat in the room called Parhedrin, and Liſcath Buleute, The Chamber of the Council: but theſe ſate not there, as Magiſtrates over the people, but only as a Conſiſtory, to take care of the ſervice and affairs of the Temple, that nothing ſhould be wanting, nor nothing ſlacked that was required about it, or that conduced to the promoting of the ſervice of it, and their power extended not beyond that virge. Any other Conceſſus or Conſiſtory of Prieſts alone, then this, I believe cannot be ſhewed in any records of that Nation, and this is far from the power and conſtitution of a Sanhedrin. The Talmud indeed in Chetuboth per. 1. Halac. 5. ſpeaketh of a Beth din, or Conſiſtory of the Prieſts which required four hundred zuzims in dower or joynture for a virgin: Which ſeemeth to aſſert this as a peculiar Court, inveſted with diſtinct power from the other. But the Gemariſts, eſpecially the Babylonian do make it plain, that no ſuch thing can be inferred from this action: for they tell us that the Prieſts determined this buſineſs of four hundred zuzims dower to their own daughters, only for the honour of their Tribe and blood: So that this was not any act of judicial power binding others, but an act of conſent among themſelves to keep up the credit of their Function and Families. But here is not time and place to diſcuſs this point [a matter of no ſmall Controverſie] further then what may give illuſtration to the ſubject before us.

How to underſtand therefore this judicial activity of the chief Prieſts throughout this book, the Evangeliſt hath given us a rule betime in the ſtory, Chap. 4. ver. 5. Where he ſhews that the whole Sanhedrin is to be underſtood, of which the Prieſts were a great, if not the greateſt part, and were in this cauſe the buſieſt men. In caſe of neceſſity, there might be a Sanhedrin, though never a Prieſt or Levite was of it, for ſo is their own Canon, namely if fit men of either rank were not to be found; but in common carriage, and experience they were the greateſt and moſt potent number, as whoſe profeſſion and Function beſpake ſtudiouſneſs and pleaded honour. In all the New Teſtament we meet but with theſe men by name, of all the Sanhedrin. Annas, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, Gamaliel, Nicodemus, and Joſeph of Arimathea. And how many of theſe were not Prieſts? Gamaliel indeed was of the Tribe of Judah, and of the Progeny of David, being grandchild of Hillel. But as for all the reſt, ſome of them were undoubtedly of the Prieſthood, and the others more probably ſo too, then of any other Tribe: Of Annas and Caiaphas there is no queſtion: And if John, Acts 4.6. be the eminenteſt John that was then among them, it means Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai, who was now Vicepreſident of the Council, and he was a Prieſt as Juchaſin tells us. And if Nicodemus be the ſame with the eminenteſt Nicodemus of thoſe times of whom Avoth R. Nathan per. 6. and Talm. bab. in Cetubboth fol. 66. make mention [as we have no cauſe to think otherwiſe] then was he by their plain deſcription a Prieſt likewiſe. And ſo was Joſeph of Arimathea, if his ſtile and title βουλευτὴς be to be underſtood according to the common ſpeech of the Nation, as there can be no reaſon why it ſhould not be ſo underſtood. And as for Alexander, of whom is leaſt evidence, it is not worth ſpending ſo much time upon as to diſcuſs, ſince theſe already mentioned may be witneſs enough.

In all the buſie ſtirring therefore of the Prieſts in this ſtory of the Acts of Apoſtles, as Chap. 7. 1. & 23. 2. and about this Commiſſion of Saul, we are not to take them as a diſtinct and ſeparate power from the Sanhedrin, but as a part of it, and ſuch as whoſe Function and intereſt, as they thought, did moſt of all the other urge them to look to the prevention of this growing evil of the Goſpel, as they did, as heartily, as erroneouſly repute it: and therefore the ſtory doth more eſpecially pitch upon them as the moſt ſtirring men. And ſo Paul himſelf doth help to interpret Lukes relation. For whereas Chap. 9.1,2. it is ſaid, Saul went to the high Prieſt and deſired of him letters to Damaſcus, he who beſt could tell how this ſhould be underſtood, explains it thus, Chap. 22. 5. Of the High Prieſt, and of all the eſtate of the Elders I received letters to the brethren, &c. The words of all the eſtate of the Elders determine the point we have in hand, and the other words to the brethren, call us to the conſideration of another: and that is, how far the Sanhedrins decrees and injunctions had power and command over the Jews in forrain Lands. By producing the words of one of their Acts we ſhall better judge of this matter and underſtand the words to the brethren, both at once.

In Talm. Jeruſ. Sanhedr. fol. 18. col. 4. they ſay thus, For the three Countries they intercalated the year for Judea, and beyond Jordan and Galilee. For two of them together they did it, for one alone they did it not. There is a ſtory of Rabban Gamaliel and the Elders, that they ſate at the going up to the Temple, and Jochanan the Scribe ſate before them: Rabban Gamaliel ſaith to him, Write לאחנא בני דרומא עילאה To our Brethren that dwell in the upper South Country ולאחנא בני דרומא ארעייא And to our Brethren that dwell in the lower South Country, Peace be multiplied to you. We give you to underſtand that the time of ſetting forth your tithes is come, &c. ולאחנא And to our Brethren of Galilee the upper, and Galilee the lower, Peace be multiplied unto you. We give you to underſtand that the time of ſetting forth your tithes is come, &c. ולאחנא And to our Brethren of the captivity of Babel, of Media, of Greece, and the whole captivity of Iſrael, Peace be multiplied unto you: We give you to underſtand, that ſince the Lambs are yet little, and young Pigeons ſmall, and the time of the firſt ripe ears is not yet come, that it ſeemeth good to me and to my fellows to add thirty days unto this year. And the very ſame is related again in Maaſar ſheni fol. 56. col. 3. By which we ſee that when Luke ſaith, that Saul had the Sanhedrins letters to the brethren, he ſpeaks but the very language that ſuch letters uſed to ſpeak in: and by this we ſee alſo, that their letters miſſive to their brethren in forrain Lands, were rather Declarations then Commands: For it was not ſo much the awe of the Sanhedrins power reaching to thoſe remote places, that kept the whole Nation to obedience of their decrees, as it was their innate and inured ambition to be held and kept a peculiar and diſtinct and conform people, and their devotedneſs to their Law and Worſhip, the great Oracle of which they held the Sanhedrin to be, in all ages. Such letters may we conceive were theſe to the Synagogues at Damaſcus, not imperious, but declarative and perſwaſive: which before Saul had delivered [who was now שליח סנהדרי גדולה Apoſtolus Synhedrii magni] he is converted and deſigned for an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt.

He ſaw Chriſt, *ver.*17. 1 Cor. 9. 1. though he ſaw him not: for as Iſrael at Sinai ſaw the Lord, not in any repreſentation, but only his glory, ſo did he Chriſt in his glory, and a voice. And ſo they that travelled with him heard the voice, ver. 7. in its terrible ſound, but they heard it not, Acts 22.9. in its artiçulate utterance, ſo as to underſtand it, [the like to that in Joh. 12.29.]

At three days end he receiveth his ſight, and Baptiſm, and was filled with the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 17, 18. but how he received the laſt is ſomewhat obſcure: whether before his Baptiſm or upon it, by immediate infuſion as they did *Chap.*10.45. or by impoſition of Ananias his hands; which if he did, as it was extraordinary for any beſides an Apoſtle to confer the Holy Ghoſt, ſo could not Ananias do, or think of doing this, without an extraordinary warrant: Whether way it was, he is now ſo compleatly furniſhed with all accompliſhments for his Miniſtry, that he confers not with fleſh and blood, that is, not with any men, nor goes he up to Jeruſalem, no not to confer with the Apoſtles, *Gal.*1.16,17. but hath the full knowledge of the Goſpel, and full aſſurance of his knowledge that it was right: And ſo he begins to preach in Damaſcus.

CHRIST. XXXV. XXXVI. Theſe two years Paul ſpendeth in Damaſcus and Arabia, and Damaſcus again, Gal. 1. 17.

CHRIST. XXXVII. ACTS CHAP. IX. from Verſ. 23. to Verſ. 32.

AFTER three years from his Converſion he cometh to Jeruſalem, being driven from Damaſcus by a machination of the Jews, who had wrought with the Governour to apprehend him, but he is let over the wall in a basket, 2 Cor. 11. 32, 33.

He goeth up to Jeruſalem to ſee Peter, Gal. 1. 18. but at his firſt coming thither, the Diſciples are afraid of him, till Barnabas makes way for his intertainment, *Act.*9.27. His going to ſee Peter is to confer with the Miniſter of the Circumciſion, himſelf being appointed Miniſter to the Uncircumciſed: And how Barnabas who was to be his fellow ſhould come to be acquainted with him before any of the reſt, we can hardly find out any other way to reſolve, then by conceiving he had ſome intimation from God of his own Apoſtleſhip among the Gentiles, and Pauls with him.

He ſtayeth at Jeruſalem but fifteen days and ſeeth none of the Apoſtles, but Peter and James the leſs, Gal. 1. 18, 19. He preacheth boldly there, and diſputes ſo vehemently with the Helleniſts that they go about to kill him, Act. 9. 29. But why him, rather then Peter, James, Barnabas, and others that were now at Jeruſalem? We may anſwer, Becauſe he himſelf was a Helleniſt, one once of their own Colledge, and the more zealous he was now againſt them, the more incenſed were they againſt him, for an Apoſtate, as they accounted him: and now he that with them had contrived the death of Steven, is forced by them to fly for his own life.

CHRIST. XXXVIII. XXXIX. XL. ACTS CHAP. IX. from Ver. 32. to the end. And CHAP. X. all. And CHAP. XI. to Verſ. 19.

THE Stories ſucceeding to *ver.*19. of *Chap.*11. as they are of a doubtful date, becauſe neither the Hiſtorian here, nor any other part of Scripture hath fixed the determinate time of their occurring, ſo is not the limiting of them to their year or time ſo very needful; if only it be ſecured, that they follow in time to thoſe preceding that we have have ſpoken to; and that we may be aſſured of their order, though we cannot be of their preciſe time. And this is eaſie to reſolve upon, without much debate. The laſt verſe of the former Section, informs us of a peace and reſt come to all the Churches, and the beginning of this brings in Peter [as in this calm] paſſing through all quarters preaching and confirming them. And that this could not be but after the times of the ſtories mentioned hitherto, appeareth by this, that though it is true indeed, that Peter was abroad in Samaria upon the converſion of it, yet he was returned again to Jeruſalem, Chap. 8.25. and was there three years after, when Paul comes up thither.

This therefore is a new voyage, in which he doth three great things, healeth Æneas of a Palſie at Lydda: raiſeth Dorcas from the dead at Joppa; and openeth the door of the Goſpel to the Gentiles in Cæſarea.

Æneas is a name that we find in the Jewiſh Writers. רי שמואל בר אינייא R. Samuel the ſon of R. Æneas, is mentioned in Jeruſ. Jebamoth fol. 6.2. And Lod or Lydda they ſpeak exceeding frequently of, and produce remarkable ſtories and memorials of it. And indeed the quarters of Peters preſent walk, compared with the Hebrews records concerning theſe places, may well claim ſome obſervation. For when he is at Joppa he is in the middle, as it were, of thoſe places which in a little time after this [nay it may be at this very time] were two of their greateſt and eminenteſt Schools.

At Jabneh on the one hand of Joppa did the great Sanhedrin ſit long: both before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem and after: for when it began to be unſetled and to flit up and down fourty years before the deſtruction of the City, its firſt removal from Jeruſalem was hither: and here ſat Gamaliel, Pauls Maſter, with his Sanhedrin a good ſpace of time, and for ought can be ſaid to the contrary, it might very well be there at this time when Peter was at Joppa.

Now as the Jews called that place Jabneh ſo the Gentiles called it Jamnia, and how near it was to Joppa you may gueſs from theſe words of Strabo, lib. 16. This place [ſpeaking of Joppa] was ſo populous that out of the neighbour Town Jamnia, and other places thereabout, it was able to raiſe 40000 men.

At Lydda on the other hand of Joppa, were moſt famous Schools, and eminent men as well as at Jabneh. Λύδδα κώμη πόλεως τὸ μέγεθος ἔχ ἀποδέουσα. It was a Town that wanted little of the bigneſs of the City. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 5. It lay Weſt of Jeruſalem a days journey off, as the Talmud ſeats it and meaſures, in Maaſar Sheni per. 5. hal. 2. It was in Judea: And thereupon four and twenty of the School of Rabbi came thither to intercalate the year, but an evil eye came in upon them, and they died all at one time. Jeruſ. Sanhedr. fol.18. col.3. For they might not intercalate the year but in Judea, Maym. in Kidduſh Hodeſh per. 4. but upon this miſchance they removed that buſineſs into Galilee. Here it ſeems the Sanhedrin ſat alſo ſometimes, or at leaſt they had a great Bench of their own, for there is mention of ſtoning ben Satda at Lydda on the eve of the Paſſover, Ibid. fol.25.4. To reckon the ſtories and eminent men belonging to this place were endleſs, at the leaſt it is needleſs here.

But the mention and gender of Saron which is alſo named with Lydda, Act. 9. 35. may plead excuſe if we alledge one or two Talmudick paſſages for the clearing of it, Jeruſ. in Sheviith fol.38.4. From Bethoron to Emmaus was hilly, from Emmaus to Lydda plain, and from Lydda to the Sea vale.

Idem in Sotah fol. 18.4. R. Jochanan and R. Eliezer went from Jabneh to Lydda and met with R. Joſhua in בקיעין Bekin.

Gittin per. 1. hal. 1. He that bringeth a bill of Divorce from a Heathen Country muſt be able to ſay, In my preſence it was written and ſealed in my preſence: Rabban Gamaliel ſaith, Yea he that brings one from Rekam and Chagra. R. Eleazer ſaith, Yea he that brings one from Caphar Lodim to Lod. Rabbi Niſſim upon the place ſaith thus: Caphar Lodim was out of the Land, near to Lod, which was within the Land, and it was ſo called becauſe Lyddans were always found there.

Jeruſ. in Beracoth fol. 3. 1. They brought a cheſt full of bones from Caphar Tobi and ſet it openly at the entring in to Lod. Tudrus the Phyſician came, and all the Phyſicians with him, &c.

Beſides obſerving, that Tobi is the name of a man [Rabban Gamaliels ſervant. Beracoth per. 2. hal.7.] as Tabitha is the name of a woman in the ſtory before us; the word Saron being of the maſculine gender, it plainly tells us that it is not the name of a Town, but of the plain or flat where divers Towns ſtood, and among others it may be theſe mentioned.

ACTS CHAP. X. all the Chapter.

LIttle inferiour to theſe places for Learned men, was Cæſarea upon the Sea, and beyond them for other eminencies. רבנין קיסרין The Doctors of Cæſarea are of exceeding frequent and exceeding renowned mention in both Talmuds: and by name R. Heſhai the great; R. Achavah, R. Zeira, R. Ada, R. Prigori, R. Ulla, R. Tachalipha and ſeveral others. It was antiently called πύργος Στράτωνος Stratons tower, but ſumptuouſly built and beautified by Herod the great, in honour of Cæſar, it was called Cæſarea. It was mixedly inhabited by Jews and Gentiles, and much of an equal number; and moſt commonly well fraught with Roman ſouldiers, becauſe the Governours reſidence was ordinarily here.

Of ſome of theſe Bands was Cornelius a Captain: a man come to an admirable pitch of piety, and it is hard to imagine how he came by it: For that he was not ſo much as a Proſelyte, is apparent, in that they at Jeruſalem cavil at Peter for going to him, as to a Heathen. And whether he were גר תושב A ſojourning ſtranger as they called ſome, is not much material, ſince by their own judgment גר תושב בנוי לכל דבר A ſojourning ſtranger was as a Gentile to all purpoſes, Jeruſ. Jebamoth fol.8. col.4. Whenceſoever he learned faith in Chriſt, his full knowledge of Chriſt he learned from Peter: he having a warrant by viſion to ſend for Peter, and he a warrant by viſion to go to him.

Here the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven committed to Peter ſo long ago, *Matth.*16. do their work: opening the door of faith firſt to the Gentiles, which never was ſhut ſince, nor ever will be whileſt there is a Church to be upon the Earth. Jonah at Joppa, and Simon bar Jona there, both ſent to the Gentiles, compare together.

Upon Peters preaching, the Holy Ghoſt falls upon thoſe Gentiles that were preſent, to the amazement of thoſe of the Circumciſion that had come with Peter: for they had not only not ſeen the like before, but had been trained up, while in their Judaiſm, under a maxime of a clean contrary tenour, which taught them That the Holy Ghoſt would dwell neither upon any Heathen, nor upon any Jew in a Heathen Country. Cæſarea was [as the Jews reputed] בין התחומות between the borders: that is, a place diſputable whether to account within the Land or without, or indeed both, Juchas fol. 74. And ſo were alſo other places upon this Weſtern border of the Land, the great Sea ſhore: as Acon or Ptolemais, Jeruſ. challah fol. 60. col. 2. Aſcalon, Idem Sheviith fol. 36. 3. and divers others, but all things computed, no fitter place in the Land could have been choſen for the beginning of this great work of bringing Jews and Gentiles together into one bound, then this: not only becauſe this City was both Jew and Gentile, within the Land and without, but alſo, becauſe here was the Roman Court the chief of the Gentiles: and the mentioning of Cornelius his being of the Italian Band, hinteth ſuch an obſervation.

The Holy Ghoſt at this its firſt beſtowing upon the Gentiles, is given in the like manner as it was at its firſt beſtowing upon the Jewiſh Nation, Act. 2. namely by immediate infuſion: at all other times you find mention of it, you find mention of Impoſition of hands uſed for it. But here it may be obſerved withal, that whereas the fruit of this gift of the Holy Ghoſt was, that they ſpake with Tongues, verſ. 46. it confirmeth that which we ſpake at *Chap.*2. viz. that the firſt fruit of this gift of Tongues was, that they that had it, were inabled to ſpeak and underſtand the Originals of the Scripture: And here it appeareth more plainly then there: And more plainly ſtill in thoſe twelve at Epheſus, Acts 19. 6. And thoſe that ſpake with Tongues in the Church of Corinth, 1 Cor. 14. For to what purpoſe was it for them to ſpeak there with Tongues where they all underſtood the ſame Language? It was not to gibber and talk in ſtrange Language that men might admire but not underſtand, but it was for edification of others, yea and for edifying of himſelf that ſo ſpake, 1 Cor. 14. 4. He that ſpeaketh a Tongue edifieth himſelf: How? What could he ſpeak in any ſtrange Language to his own edification, which he might not as much edifie himſelf by, had he ſpoken it in his own native Tongue? But only that this is meant, his ability by the gift of Tongues, to underſtand and ſpeak the Original language of the Scripture, was both for his own edification and the edification of others. Suppoſe one in the Church of Corinth could ſpeak Perſick, Arabick, Ethiopick, &c. and did chatter theſe Languages among them; he could not poſſibly ſpeak any thing in thoſe Tongues [though interpreted] that could edifie the people any more, then if he ſpake it in his mother Tongue: But if he ſpake and underſtood and uttered the Original language of Scripture, that if interpreted, would edifie: and he could not ſpeak in his mother Tongue, unleſs taken from thence, what he might ſpeak thence.

Peter

Peter returning to Jeruſalem is taken to task by ſome of the Circumciſion for going in to the Gentiles and eating with them: a thing of unſpeakable deteſtation to the Jews: Hence thoſe alluſions: Let him be to thee as a Heathen, Matth. 18. With ſuch a one no not to eat, 1 Cor. 5. We find not any ſuch quarrel at Peter and John for going down to Samaria, though the Samaritans were as odious to the Jewiſh Nation as people could be, but they were neither uncircumciſed, nor Idolaters: both which, eſpecially the latter, bred their deteſtation of the Heathen.

CHRIST. XLI.

ACTS CHAP. XI. from Verſ. 19. to the end of the Chapter.

AS Cæſarea the ſeat of the Roman Governour of Judea, firſt ſeeth the door of faith opened to the Gentiles, ſo Antioch the ſeat of the Roman Governour of Syria, firſt heareth the name Chriſtian. Theſe of the hundred and twenty Miniſters [mentioned, Acts 1. 15.] that had fled upon the perſecution raiſed againſt Steven, went preaching up and down firſt as far as the bounds of Judea extended: then ſome of them ſtepped out, as far as into Phænice, Cyprus and Syria, but all this while dealing with the Jews only. At laſt ſome of them at Antioch ἐλάλουν πρὸς τοὺς Ἑλληνιστὰς ſpake to the Helleniſts ver. 20. Here the word Helleniſts is of doubtful interpretation: only this is doubtleſs in it, that it means not Jews, as the word doth, Acts 6. 1. for it is ſet in oppoſition to them, ver. 19. Doth it mean Proſelytes then? That it cannot neither, for they were reputed as Jews to all purpoſes. Means it Heathens? Yes, that is undoubted it doth, both by the ſcope of the ſtory here, and by the quarrel urging theſe believers at Antioch to be Circumciſed, Chap. 15. But why then ſhould they be called Helleniſtæ rather then Hellenes? Some conceive, becauſe they were become גרי תושב Proſelyte ſojournours, meaning that they had forſaken their Idolatry: as Cornelius had done his, though he were not גר צדק a Proſelyte circumciſed: But what if theſe were native Syrians by pedegree and language, could they then for that be called Helleniſts or Greeks? The word therefore muſt mean, that they were ſuch as were Syrogrecians; Antioch it ſelf indeed having been once the head of the Syrogrecian Empire: Hellenes or purely Greeks they could not be called [though it will not be denied they ſpake that Language] becauſe they were not only no inhabitants of that Country, but not altogether of that blood: but ſuch as were of a mixture of Syrian and Greek; the progeny of the old plantations and infranchiſments of the Syrogrecian Monarchy. Whatſoever their title Helleniſts includeth, they being undoubtedly Heathens, it ſheweth that theſe Miniſters preached to them, underſtood of the liberty given to preach to the Gentiles, and the paſſage betwixt Peter and Cornelius, or they durſt not have been bold to have gone beyond the partition wall without their warrant: And the readineſs of the Church at Jeruſalem to ſend Barnabas to them, ſhews that they alſo were ſatisfied in this matter, and ſo this evidenceth that this ſtory was after that about Cornelius.

Their ſending Barnabas, and his fetching Saul to the ſame work with him, giveth ſome confirmation of that which was touched before, namely that it is very probable that Barnabas knew of his own being deſigned for a Miniſter to the uncircumciſion, and of Pauls being joyned with him in that work, a great while before they were ſent away from Antioch upon it: They now ſpend a whole year in the Church there, and there the Name Chriſtian is firſt taken up, and that in a Gentile Church. Antioch of old had been called Hamath, but now it bare the name of one that had been as bloody a perſecutor of the Church and truth: as the Church of Iſrael had ever ſeen, Antiochus. The very name of the place may raiſe a meditation.

ACTS CHAP. XII, XIII.

HERE we meet with ſome ſcruple in Chronology, and about the precedency of the ſtory in theſe two Chapters: for though the actions in Chap. 12. be laid firſt, and that very properly, that the ſtory of Peter may be taken up together, and concluded before the ſtory of Paul come in, which is to be followed to the end of the Book, yet there may be juſt queſtion whether, the ſending of Paul and Barnabas from Antioch to preach among the Gentiles, which is handled in the beginning of Chap. 13. were not before ſome, if not all thoſe things related in Chap. 12. And the queſtion ariſeth from theſe two ſcruples. 1. Becauſe it is doubtful, in what year of Claudius the famine was, that is ſpoken of Chap. 12. 28. And 2. becauſe it is obſcure, how long Paul and Barnabas ſtaid at Antioch after their return from Jeruſalem, Chap. 12. 25. before they were ſent away among the Gentiles. But about this we need not much to trouble our ſelves: ſince as to the underſtanding of the ſtories themſelves, there can be little illuſtration taken from their their time: ſave only as to this, that the publick Faſt in the Church of Antioch, may ſeem to have ſome relation to ſome of the ſaid ſtories mentioned before, as coincident with them, or near to them; namely, either the famine through the world, Chap. 11. 28. or the perſecution in the Church, Chap. 12. We ſhall not therefore offer to diſlocate the order of the ſtories, from that wherein they lie, the Holy Ghoſt by the intertexture of them rather teaching us, that ſome of them were contemporary; then any way incouraging us to invert their order. Only theſe things cannot paſs unmentioned, toward the ſtating of their time and place, partly of coincidency, and partly of their ſucceeding one the other, and which may help us better to underſtand both.

1. That whereas Dion the Roman Hiſtorian *lib.*60. hath placed a ſore famine [at leaſt at Rome] in the time of Claudius, in his ſecond year: Joſephus carries it, *Antiq. lib.*12. *cap.*2. as if the bitternes of it at Jeruſalem, were in his fourth, which Euſeb. in Chron. determines poſitively; both may be true; for, for famines to laſt ſeveral years together is no ſtrange thing in Hiſtory, Divine or Humane, nor in experience in our own age.

2. That Herod Agrippa's murdering of James, and impriſoning of Peter could not be before the third year of Claudius: for Joſephus a witneſs impartial enough in this caſe, informs us, that Claudius in his ſecond Conſulſhip, which was indeed the ſecond year of his reign, made an Edict in behalf of the Jews, and ſent it through the world, and after that ſent Agrippa away into his own Kingdom: Now his Conſulſhip beginning the firſt of January, it was ſo next impoſſible that thoſe things ſhould be done at Rome, and Agrippa provide for his journey and travel it, and come to Jeruſalem, and murder James and apprehend Peter, and all before the Paſsover, (unleſs he haſted as it had been for a wager) that he that can believe Peter to have been impriſoned in Claudius his ſecond year of Conſulſhip and reign, muſt exceedingly ſtraiten the time of theſe occurrences, to make room for his belief.

3. In the third year of Claudius, therefore, are thoſe ſtories in *Chap.*12. to be reputed; only the laſt, about Herods death, in the beginning of his fourth, for a Paſsover in his fourth Herod lived not to ſee.

4. It may be obſerved that Luke hath placed the going up of Paul and Barnabas with the alms of the Church of Antioch to the poor of Judea, before the murder of James, Chap. 11. 30. but their return thence, not till after that, and Herods death, Chap. 12. 25. not that thereupon we are neceſſarily to think that they ſtaid there ſo long, as while all thoſe things in *Chap.*12. were acting, but that by that relation the ſtory of Paul and Barnabas is begun again, and we may very well conceive, for all that poſtſcript of Luke after the ſtory of James his Martyrdom, Peters impriſonment, and Agrippa's death, their return to Antoich, and going from thence among the Gentiles, *Chap.*13. to have been at that time while ſome of the things in *Chap.*12. occurred.

We will therefore take the Chapters up in the order in which they lye, and only carry along with us in our thoughts, a ſuppoſal that ſome of the ſtories in either might concur in time. And becauſe we have found here ſome need to look after the Years of the Emperour, which we have not had before, and ſhall have much more, forward, eſpecially when we come up to the times of Nero, it may not be amiſs to affix their Years alſo, as they went along concurrent with the Years of our Saviour.

CHRIST. XLIII.	ACTS CHAP. XII. from the beginning to Ver.20.	CLAUDIUS. III.

JAMES beheaded by Herod, for ſo doth the Jews Pandect help us to underſtand theſe words, He ſlew James with the ſword. Talm. in Sanhedr. per. 7. hal. 3. They that were ſlain by the ſword were beheaded, which alſo was the cuſtom of the Kingdom; that is, of the Romans.

The ceremonious zeal of Agrippa in the Jewiſh way, bending it ſelf againſt the Church, may be conſtrued as a Jewiſh act, wicked, as upon the ſcore of that Nations wickedneſs and guilt.

The underling condition in which they had lain all the time of Cains [he having no good affection to that people] being now got looſe and aloft knows no bounds: and being ſomewhat countenanced by the Edict of Claudius, they cannot be content with their own immunities, unleſs they ſeek alſo the ſuppreſſion of the Chriſtian Church. Though Claudius his Proclamation had this ſpecial clauſe and caveat, μὴ πρὸς ἄλλων ἐθνῶν δεισιδαιμονίας ἰουδαΐζειν, that they ſhould not go about to infringe the liberty of other mens Religion. This unbounded incroaching of theirs did within a little time cauſe the Emperor, who had now made a Decree for them, to make another againſt them.

Peter deſigned by the murderer for the like butchery, eſcapes by miracle: and the Tyrant before that time twelve month, comes to a miraculous fearful end.

ACTS CHAP. XIII. from beginning to Verſ. 14.

THE Divine Hiſtorian having hitherto followed the Story of the Church and Goſpel as both of them were dilated among the Jews, and therein pitched more eſpecially upon the Acts of Peter and John the ſingular Miniſters of the Circumciſion, more peculiarly Peters: he doth now turn his Pen, to follow the planting and progreſs of the Goſpel among the Gentiles, and here he inſiſteth more eſpecially upon the Story of Paul and Barnabas the ſingular Miniſters of the uncircumciſion, more peculiarly Pauls.

There were now in the Church of Antioch five men which were both Prophets and Teachers, or which did not only inſtruct the people and expound the Scriptures, but had alſo the Prophetick ſpirit and were partakers of Revelations: For though Prophets and Teachers were indeed of a diſtinct notion, 1 *Cor.*12.28. Epheſ. 4.11. and their abilities to teach were according of a diſtinct original, namely the former by revelation, and the latter by ſtudy, yet κατὰ τὸν ἴσον ἐκκλησίαν, [which phraſe may not paſs without obſervation] according to the ſtate of the Church then being, they not only had prophetick Teachers, but there was a kind of neceſſity they ſhould have ſuch, till time and ſtuddy had inabled others to be Teachers, which as yet they could not have attained unto, the Goſpel having been ſo lately brought among them.

Among theſe five, the names of Barnabas and Saul are no ſtrangers to the Reader, but the other three are more unknown.

1. Simeon who was called Niger: If the word Niger were Latin, it might then fairly be conjectured, that this was Simon of Cyrene, the Mooriſh complexion of his Country juſtly giving him the title of Simeon the black; but ſince the Patrionymick, Cyrenean, is applied only in the ſingular number to the next man Lucius, and ſince the word נגר was then uſed among the Jews in ſeveral ſignifications, as may be ſeen in Aruch, we ſhall rather conceive this man a Cypriot from Chap. 11. 20. and as Barnabas alſo was, *Chap.*4. 36. and his ſurname Niger whatſoever it ſignified, uſed to diſtinguiſh him from Simon Peter, and Simon the Cananite.

2. Lucius of Cyrene: Held by ſome and that not without ſome ground to be Luke the Evangeliſt: which it is like hath been the reaſon, why antiquity hath ſo generally held Luke to be an Antiochian: true, in regard of this his firſt appearing there under this name Lucius though originally a Cyrenian, and educated as it may be ſuppoſed in the Cyrenian Colledge or Synagogne in Jeruſalem, Chap. 6. 9. and there firſt receiving the Goſpel. In Rom. 16.21. Paul ſalutes the Roman Church in the name of Lucius, whereas there was none then in Pauls retinue whoſe name ſounded that way but only Luke: as we ſhall obſerve there.

3. *Manaen, who had been brought up with Herod the Tetrarch. Juchaſin fol.*19. mentioneth one Menahem who was once Vicepreſident of the Sanhedrin under Hillel, but departed to the ſervice of Herod the great, with fourſcore other eminent men with him: of whom we gave ſome touch before: It may be this was his ſon, and was called Manaen or Menahem after the father, and as the father was a great favourite of Herod the great the father, ſo this brought up at Court with Herod the Tetrarch the ſon.

As theſe holy men were at the publick miniſtration with faſting and prayer, the Holy Ghoſt gives them advertiſement of the ſeparating of Paul and Barnabas, for the Miniſtry among the Gentiles. A miſſion that might not be granted, but by ſuch a divine warrant; conſidering how the Gentiles had always lain behind a partition wall to the Jews: For although Peter in the caſe of Cornelius had opened the door of the Goſpel to the Heathen, yet was this a far greater breaking down of the partition wall, when the Goſpel was to be brought into their own Lands and to their own doors: When God ſaith, Separate them to the work whereunto I have called them, it further confirmeth that it was and had been known before that they ſhould be Miniſters of the uncircumciſion.

The Romiſh gloſſaries would fain ſtrain the Maſs out of the word λειτουργούντων, and the Rhemiſts think they have done us a courteſie, that they have not tranſlated it to that ſenſe: whereas, beſides that the word naturally ſignifieth any publick miniſtration, the Holy Ghoſt by the uſe of it ſeemeth to have a ſpecial aim, namely to intimate to us, that this was a publick faſt, as well as another publick miniſtration. Publick faſts were not ordinary ordinary ſervices, and they were not taken up but upon extraordinary occaſions, and what the preſent occaſion might be, had been a great deal better worth ſtudying upon, then how to make the Greek word ſpeak the Maſs which it never meant.

How publick faſtings and days of humiliation were uſed by the Jews, and upon what occaſions, there is a ſpecial Treatiſe in the Talmud upon that ſubject, called Taanith, and the like in Maymony, that beareth witneſs: and it was no whit unſuitable to the Goſpel, upon the like exigencies to uſe the like kind of ſervice and devotion: And the preſent famine that was upon all Countries might very well miniſter occaſion to this Church at Antioch at this preſent for ſuch a work, for we cannot but ſuppoſe that the famine was now in being.

Whatſoever the occaſion was, the Lord, in the midſt of their humiliation, pointeth out Paul and Barnabas, for an imployment of his own, who were but a while ago returned from an imployment of the Churches: And ſo the other three Simeon, Lucius, and Menaen, underſtanding what the Lord meant, and having uſed another ſolemn day in faſting in prayer, lay their hands upon them and ſet them apart by Ordination. According as the ordaining of Elders among the Jews was by a Triumvirate, or by three Elders. Sanhedr. per. 1. halac. 3.

This is the ſecond Impoſition of hands ſince the Goſpel began, which did not confer the Holy Ghoſt with it [for theſe two were full of the Holy Ghoſt before: and this is the firſt Ordination of Elders ſince the Goſpel, that was uſed out of the Land of Iſrael. Which rite the Jewiſh Canons would confine only to that Land. Maym. Sanhedr. per. 4. Which circumſtances well conſidered, with the imployment that theſe two were to go about, and this manner of their ſending forth, no better reaſon I ſuppoſe can be given of this preſent action, then that the Lord hereby did ſet down a platform of ordaining Miniſters in the Church of the Gentiles to future times.

Paul and Barnabas thus deſigned by the Lord and ordained and ſent forth by this Triumvirate and guided by the Holy Ghoſt, they firſt go to Seleucia: moſt likely Seleucia Pieriæ, of which Strabo ſaith, that it is the firſt City of Syria from Cilicia, Geogr. lib. 14. to which Pliny aſſenteth, when he meaſureth the breadth of Syria, from Seleucia Pieriæ to Zeugma upon Euphrates, Nat. hiſt. lib. 5. cap. 12. The reaſon of their going thither may be judged to be, that they might take ſhip for Cyprus, whither they intended, for that this was a Port, appeareth by what follows in Strabo, when he ſaith, That from Seleucia to Soli is about a thouſand furlongs ſail: and ſo it is plain in Lukes Text when he ſaith, they departed unto Seleucia, and from thence they ſailed to Cyprus: where let us now follow them.

Cyprus was a Country ſo exceeding full of Jews, that it comes in for one in that ſtrange ſtory that Dion Caſſius relates in the life of Trajan. The Jews [ſaith he] that dwelt about Cyrene, chooſing one Andrew for their Captain, ſlew the Greeks and Romans, and eat their fleſh, and devoured their inwards, and beſmeared themſelves with their blood, and wore their skins. Many they ſawed aſunder from the head downward, others they caſt to wild beaſts: many they made to ſlay one another, ſo that there were two hundred and twenty thouſand deſtroyed in this manner. There was the like ſlaughter made in Egypt and Cyprus, where there alſo periſhed two hundred and fourty thouſand. From whence it is that a Jew may not ſince come into Cyprus: and if any by ſtorms at Sea be driven in thither, they are ſlain. But the Jews were ſubdued by others, but eſpecially by Lucius whom Trojan ſent thither. This was the native Country of Barnabas, Act. 4. 36.

Although theſe two Apoſtles were ſent to the Gentiles, yet was it ſo far from excluding their preaching to the Jews, that they conſtantly began with them firſt in all places where they came.

They begin at Salamis, the place next their landing, and there they preached in the Synagogues of the Jews, having John Mark for their Miniſter.

From thence they travailed preaching up and down in the Iland, till they come to Paphos which was at the very further part of it, toward the Southweſt Angle. There they meet with a Magical Jew called Barjeſus, and commonly titled Elymas, which is the ſame in ſenſe with Magus: Such Jewiſh deceivers as this went up and down the Countries to oppoſe the Goſpel, and to ſhew Magical tricks and wonders, for the ſtronger confirming of their oppoſition. Such were the vagabond Jews exorciſts, Act. 19. 13. and of ſuch our Saviour ſpake, Matth. 24. 24. and of ſome ſuch we may give examples out of their own Talmudical Writers. And here we may take notice of a threefold practice of oppoſition that the Jews uſed in theſe times and forward againſt the Goſpel and the ſpreading of it, beſides open perſecution unto blood.

1. Much about theſe times was made the prayer that hath been mentioned which was called ברכת מינים The prayer againſt Hereticks, which became by injunction one of their daily prayers. Maymony ſpeaketh the matter and intent of it in his Treatiſe Tephillah, in theſe words: In the days of Rabban Gamaliel, Hereticks increaſed in Iſrael [by Hereticks he meaneth thoſe that turned from Judaiſm to Chriſtianity] and they troubled

Iſrael, and perſwaded them to turn from their Religion. He ſeeing this to be a matter of exceeding great conſequence, more then any thing elſe, ſtood up, he and his Sanhedrin, and appointed a prayer, in which there was a petition to God to deſtroy thoſe Hereticks: and this he ſet among the common prayers, and appointed it to be in every mans mouth, and ſo their daily prayers became nineteen in number. Perek. 2. So that they daily prayed againſt Chriſtians and Chriſtianity.

2. The Jews had their emiſſaries every where abroad, that to the utmoſt in them cried down the Goſpel, preached againſt it, went about to confute it, and blaſphemed it and Chriſt that gave it: Of this there is teſtimony abundant in the New Teſtament: and in the Jews own Writings.

And 3. they were exceeding many of them skilled in Magick, and by that did many ſtrange things, by ſuch falſe miracles ſeeking to outface and vilifie the Divine miracles done by Chriſt and his Apoſtles: and ſtriving to confirm their own doctrines which oppoſed the Goſpel, by backing them with ſuch ſtrange and wondrous actings. Juchaſin ſpeaks of Abba Chelchia, and Chamin, and Chamina Ben Duſa, גיסים בלומרים men skilled in miracles, fol. 20. And the Jeruſ. Talmud ſpeaks of their inchantings, and magical tricks in Shabb. fol. 8. col. 2. & 3. Sanhedr. fol. 25. col. 4. nay even of their charming in the name of Jeſu. Shabb. fol. 14. col. 4.

Paul miraculouſly ſtrikes Elymas blind, and inlightens Sergius Paulus with the light of the Goſpel. This was at Paphos where old ſuperſtition dreamed of the blind God Cupid. Doting Elymas grope for thy fellow. The firſt miracle wrought among the Gentiles is ſtriking a perverſe Jew blind, which thing may very well become an Allegory.

From Paphos they go to Perga in Pamphilia, and there John departs from them and returns to Jeruſalem: but what was the occaſion is hard to conjecture. Whether it were that he heard of Peters trouble and danger that he had been in at Jeruſalem, and deſired to ſee him, for that he had ſome ſpecial intereſt and familiarity with Peter, may be collected from 1 Pet. 5. 14. and in that Peter was ſo well acquainted at his mothers houſe, Act. 12. 12, &c. Or whether in regard of this his relation to Peter the Miniſter of the Circumciſion, he made it nice to go among the Gentiles into the thickeſt of which he ſaw they were coming every day more then other. For at Paphos where they had laſt been, was a Temple of Venus, and at Perga, where they now are, was a Temple of Diana. Strab. lib. 14. Pomp. Mela. lib. 1. cap. 14. Or whatſoever the matter was, his departure was ſo unwarrantable, that it made a breach betwixt him and Paul for the preſent, nay it occaſioned a breach betwixt Paul and Barnabas afterward. And ſo we leave him in his journy to Jeruſalem, whither when he came, he ſtaied there till Paul and Barnabas came thither again.

ACTS CHAP. XII. from Ver. 20. to Ver. 24.

HERODS death was in the beginning of this year, the fourth of Claudius or near unto it, according as Joſephus helpeth us to compute, who teſtifieth that the third year of his reign was compleated a little before his death. Vid. Antiq. lib. 19. cap. 7. He left behind him a ſon of ſeventeen years old, in regard of whoſe minority, and thereby unfitneſs to reign, Claudius ſent Cuſpius Fadus to Govern his Kingdom. His daughters were Berenice ſixteen years old, married to Herod King of Chalcis her fathers brother: And Mariam ten years old, and Druſilla, ſix, who afterward married Felix.

ACTS CHAP. XIII. from Ver. 14. to the end of the Chapter. And CHAP. XIV.

AT the fifteenth Chapter we have ſome faſtneſs of the time, viz. in what year the Council at Jeruſalem, as it is commonly called, did occur; which certainty we have not of the times of the occurrences henceforward thitherto: ſo that ſince we cannot determinately point any paſſage to its proper year, we muſt caſt them in groſs under this this groſs ſum of years, and diſtribute them to their proper ſeaſons by the beſt conjecture we can.

From Perga in Pamphilia, Paul and Barnabas come to Antioch in Piſidia, and on the Sabbath day going into the Synagogue, are invited by the Rulers of the Synagogue, after the reading of the Law and Prophets to ſpeak a word of exhortation to the people: But how could the Rulers know that they were men fit to teach? It may be anſwered, By former converſe with them in the City, and it is very like that the Rulers themſelves had drunk in ſome affection to the Goſpel by converſe with them, which made them ſo ready to urge them to preach: For it is not imaginable that this was the firſt time that they had ſeen them: nor that they came to Town that very day, but that they had had ſome converſe before.

Paul preacheth: and the Synagogue broke up, and the Jews gone out, the Gentiles deſired that the ſame words might be preached to them in the week between, εἰς τὸ μεταξὺ σάββατον: namely on the ſecond and fifth days of the week following, which were Synagogue days, on which they met in the Synagogues as on the Sabbath day: And which days, their Traditions ſaid, were appointed for that purpoſe by Ezra. Talm. in Bava Kamah. per 7. R. Sol. and Niſſim in Chetubboth per. 1. in Alphef. Their preaching on thoſe days had ſo wrought, that on the next Sabbath almoſt all the City was gathered together to hear the word: and many of the Gentiles receive it, but the Jews ſtirred up ſome female unbelieving proſelytes againſt them, and ſome of the chief of the City, ſo that they drave them out of thoſe coaſts, and they ſhaking off the duſt of their feet againſt them go to Iconium. This Ceremony injoyned them by their Maſter, Matth. 10. 14. was not ſo much for any great buſineſs put in the thing it ſelf, as that even from a tenet of their own, they might ſhew how they were to be reputed of. It was their own Maxime, That the duſt of a Heathen Country or City did defile or make a perſon unclean. Toſaphta ad Kelim per. 1. hath this ſaying, In three things Syria was like unto any Heathen Land: The duſt of it made a perſon unclean, as the duſt of any other Heathen Country did, &c. So that their ſhaking off the duſt of their feet againſt them, was to ſhew that they reputed them and their City as Heatheniſh.

ACTS CHAP. XIV.

AT Iconium they continue long, and with good effect, but at laſt they are in danger of ſtoning, and thereupon they ſlip away to Lyſtra and Derbe Cities of Lycaonia, and to the region that lieth round about: That region Strabo deſcribeth lib. 12. where among other particulars he tels that Derbe lay coaſting upon Iſauria, and in his time was under the dominion of Amyntas. At Lyſtra or Derbe Paul converteth Lois and Eunice, and Timothy, and as ſome will tell you, here, or at Iconium he converteth Tecla. For healing a Creeple they are firſt accounted Gods, but preſently by perſwaſion of ſome Jews, Paul is ſtoned, but being reputed dead, recovereth miraculouſly. From thence they go to Derbe, and return to Lyſtra, Iconium and Antioch, and ordain Elders in thoſe Churches. χειροτονήσαντες, ver. 24. is unproperly rendred here Per ſuffragia creantes Presbyteros: for ſo they could not do; there not being a man in all theſe Churches fit to be choſen a Miniſter, or qualified with abilities for that Function, unleſs the Apoſtles by Impoſition of hands beſtow the Holy Ghoſt upon them, which might inable them: For the Churches being but newly planted, and the people but lately converted, it would be hard to find any among them ſo thoroughly completed in the knowledge of the Goſpel as to be a Miniſter: but by the Apoſtles hands they receive the Holy Ghoſt, and ſo are inabled. It is true indeed, the Greek word in the firſt ſenſe denoteth ſuffrages, but that is not the only ſenſe. And ſo doth the word סמך in the proper ſenſe ſignifie laying on of hands, yet there was סמוכות ordination that was without it. Maym. in Sanhedr. 4. כיצד הוא הסמיכה לדורות How is ordination to be for perpetuity? Not that they lay their hands on the head of the Elder, but call him Rabbi, and ſay, Behold thou art ordained. &c.

CHRIST. L. CLAUDIUS. X.

ACTS CHAP. XV.

WE are now come up to the Council at Hieruſalem. The occaſion of which was the buſie ſtirring of ſome, who would have brought the yoke of Moſaick obſervances upon the neck of the converted Gentiles. Multitudes of the Jews that believed, yet were zealous of the Law, Act. 21. 20. and it was hard to get them off from thoſe Rites, in which they had been ever trained up, and which had been as it were an inheritance tance to them from their fathers: This bred this disturbance at the present, and in time an Apostacy from the Gospel of exceeding many. Antiquity hath held that Cerinthus was the chief stickler in this business; but whosoever it was that kindled it, it was a spark enough to have fired all, had it not been timely prevented.

Paul and Barnabas who had chiefly to deal in the ministration to the Gentiles, are sent from Antioch to Jerusalem to consult the Apostles about this matter. This is the same journy and occasion that is spoken of *Gal.*2. Then fourteen years after I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas and took Titus with me. And I went up by revelation, &c. Not but that he was sent by the Church as Luke hath asserted here, vers. 2. but that the Church was directed by revelation to take this course for the setling of the question, namely to send up to the Apostles at Jerusalem. And hence we may fix the time of this business, if it be resolved from whence the beginning of these fourteen years is to be dated, namely whether he mean fourteen years after his first conversion, or fourteen after his former journy to Jerusalem, mentioned Gal. 1.18. which he took three years after his conversion. The later is the more undoubted, upon these two observations. 1. It were exceeding obscure, and is exceeding unagreeable to Scripture accounting, to reckon the later sum of fourteen years from the time of his conversion, and not from the number or time that went next before, which was his being at Jerusalem three years after he was converted. 2. His scope in that his discourse is, not to shew barely what journies he took to Jerusalem after his conversion, but to shew how long he preached among the Gentiles and abroad out of Judea time after time, and yet when he came to the Apostles to Jerusalem, they found no fault with him, nor with the course he took in his Ministry. After I was converted I went not to Jerusalem to consult the Apostles, but went into Arabia, and back again to Damascus, and so preached up and down, one utterly unknown by face to the Apostles; yet when after three years thus doing I came up to Peter the Minister of the Circumcision, he was so far from contrarying the course that I had gone, that he gave me fifteen days entertainment. And after that time I went through Syria and Cilicia, and abroad among the Gentiles, yet after fourteen years imployment in this kind, when I went up to Jerusalem again, I found fair respect with the Apostles and they gave me the right hand of fellowship. This drift of the Apostle being observed in that place, which cannot be denied, if his main purpose through the whole Epistle be observed, it evidently stateth the time of this journy to Jerusalem to be seventeen years after his conversion.

* κατ' ἰδίαν. When Paul and Barnabas came to Jerusalem, they applied themselves * singularly to Peter, James and John the Ministers of the Circumcision, and imparted to them the doctrine, and manner of dealing that they had used among the Gentiles, Gal. 2.2. And this they did that they might clear themselves of all false rumours, that might be laid to their charge [as if they crossed the doctrine and mind of the Apostles] and that they might have their judgment and concurrence along with them. With Paul there was Titus, who hitherto had been uncircumcised, all along in his attending and accompanying Paul: and even now at Jerusalem, though he were before the Apostles of the Circumcision, yet was he not forced to be circumcised there neither; because there were some false Brethren who lay upon the catch to observe and scandal the liberty of the Gospel that the Apostles used, and they were unwilling to give way to them in any such condescension, lest they should have wronged the Gospel. For though Paul allowed the Circumcision of Timothy, and though even these Apostles perswaded Paul to use some of the Mosaick ceremonies, *Act.*21.24. for avoiding offence to the weak, and for the more winning of those that were well satisfied, yet would they not yield an inch in any such thing to these catchpoles that lay upon the lurch, to spy out something if it might have been whereby they might have disgraced the Gospel.

Well: the result of the Apostles conference is, that the three of the Circumcision, neither detracted from what the two of the uncircumcision had done already, nor added any more things to be done by them hereafter: But they agree that Paul and Barnabas should go to the Heathen, and they themselves to the Circumcision: desiring only that though they went among the Gentiles, yet they would remember the poor of the Circumcision, which they consented to, and all was well concluded betwixt them.

But they that urged for the imposition of Moses his yoke would not be so satisfied, but the matter must come to a publick canvass, and so the Elders also met together with those Apostles to consider of it.

Peter would have none of Moses burdens laid upon the Gentiles, because he himself had seen them to have been partakers of the Holy Ghost, in as free and full a measure, as they had been that had been most Mosaical. Paul and Barnabas affirmed that they had seen the like, and therefore what needed the Gentiles to be troubled with these observances, seeing they were so eminent in gifts of the Spirit as well as they of the Circumcision and what could these add to them. But James findeth out a temper betwixt those that would would have all these yokes imposed, and those that would have none, that so the Jews might have the less offence, and the Gentiles no burden neither. And that was, that the Gentiles might be required to refrain from eating things offered to Idols, and strangled, and blood, and fornication. The three first were now become things indifferent [however strictly they had been imposed by the Law before] Christ having by his death done down the partition wall, and laid these things aside as useless when there was to be no distinction of meats or Nations any more: yet because the Jews were so glewed to these things that the tearing of them away suddenly, would in a manner have fetched up skin and flesh and all, therefore the whole Council upon the motion of James think it fit that the Gentiles should thus far Judaize, till time and fuller acquaintance with the Gospel might make both Jews and Gentiles to lay these now needless niceties aside.

The Jews about these things had these Canons among many others.

Avodah Zarah. per. 2. These things of Idolatry are forbidden, and their prohibition meaneth the prohibition of their use. Wine and vinegar used in Idolatry which at first was wine, &c. And flesh that was brought in for Idolatry is permitted to be used [viz. before it was offered] but what is brought out is prohibited.

And bottles and cans used in Idolatry, and an Israelites wine put in them are prohibited to be used.

Maymon. in Avoda Zarah per. 7. A beast offered to an Idol is forbidden for any use: yea even his dung, bones, horns, hoofs, skin: yea though there were only a hole cut in the beast to take out the heart, and that alone offered. Divers other things used in Idolatry are mentioned and prohibited.

The observing of all which helpeth to clear the distinction of the words used in the Text, namely ἀλισγήματα τῶν εἰδώλων & εἰδωλόθυτα, for these properly were not one and the the same thing, for every ἀλίσγημα τῶν εἰδώλων was not εἰδωλόθυτον, but e contra, every εἰδωλόθυτον was ἀλίσγημα. For divers things were used at an Idolatrous offering, which themselves were not offered, as knives, dishes and the like, which cannot be called εἰδωλόθυτα, and yet by these traditions were prophane and unclean, and prohibited to be used.

About not eating of blood, they expounded the prohibition of the Law in that point, unto this purpose, He that eats blood to the quantity of an olive, if presumptuously, he is to be cut off, and if ignorantly, he is to bring a sin offering. Talm. in Cherithuth per. 1. & 5. Maym. in Maacaloth Asuroth per. 6.

By things strangled their Canons understood any thing that died of it self, or that was not killed as it ought to be. And he that eat to the quantity of an olive, of the flesh of any cattel that died of it self, or of any beast, or any fowl that died of it self, was to be whipt, as it is said, Ye shall eat no carcase: and whatsoever was not slain as was fitting, is reputed as if dying of it self. Talm. in Zevachin per. 7. Maym. ubi supra per. 1. Therefore they had their rules about killing any beast that they were to eat, of which the Talmudick Treatise Cholin discusieth at large.

Now as concerning fornication, it is controverted, first whether it mean bodily or spiritual: and secondly, how it cometh to be ranked among things indifferent [as the other named were] it self being of no such indifferency, whethersoever is meant, the one or the other. The former certainly is not meant, for the word ἀλισγήματα εἰδώλων reacheth that to the full, and more needed not to be spoken to that point: The later therefore is meant: but why named here with things indifferent? Not because it was indifferent as well as they: Nor because it was so very offensive to the Jews as were the other: for they made but little of fornication themselves, according to the common taking of the word fornication: but fornication here seemeth to translate their word עריות that meaneth with them marriages in degrees prohibited: which the Gentiles made no matter about: and so the Apostles would bring the convert Gentiles under obedience of the Law, Levit. 18.

Before we part from this Council, as it is commonly called, we may thus far take notice of the nature of it as to observe, that it was not a convention premeditated, and solemnly summoned, but only occasional and emergent, and that it was only of those Apostles and Elders that were at Jerusalem, at the instant when the matter from Antioch was brought thither, and the other Apostles that were abroad were not fetched in, nor indeed needed any such thing: for the message from Antioch required not so much the number of voices, as the resolves of those Apostles that had especially to deal with the Circumcision: and whom the Antiochian Church doubted not to find ready at Jerusalem.

The matter being determined, Letters are dispatched, with the Decrees, unto the Churches by Paul and Barnabas, and Judas and Silas: they come to Antioch and there abide a while: and at last go their several ways, Judas to Jerusalem, and Paul, Barnabas and Silas away among the Gentiles.

It was the agreement between Paul and Barnabas on the one party, and Peter, James and John on the other, that those two should go among the Gentiles, and these three among the Circumcision, Gal. 2. 9. James abode at Jerusalem as the residentiary Apostle of that that Country, *Gal.*2.13. Act. 21. 18. and there at last he suffered Martyrdom. Peter and John went abroad among the Jews dispersed in forreign parts, so that at last you have Peter at Babylon in the East, and John at Patmos in the West, and by this we may guess how they parted their imployment between them.

When Paul and Barnabas are to set forth, they disagree about Marks going with them. Barnabas being his uncle, would have had his company, but Paul denied it, because of his departure from them before. Mark it seemeth was at Antioch at this time [and it may be a quære whether Peter were not there also, *Gal.*2.11.] and when the contest twixt Paul and Barnabas was so sharp that they part asunder, Barnabas taketh Mark and Paul Silas, and go their several ways, and it is questionable whether they ever saw one anothers faces any more. Only Paul and Mark were reconciled again and came into very near society, as we shall observe afterward.

CLAUDIUS. XI.

ACTS CHAP. XVI.

PAul and Silas having travelled through Syria and Silicia, come to Derbe and Lystra: there he Circumciseth Timothy, whom he intended to take along with him and to breed him for his successor in the Ministry after his death. Timothy was a young man of very choice education, parts and hopes, and some remarkable Prophesies and predictions had been given concerning him, what an instrument he should prove in the Gospel, which made Paul to fix upon him, as one designed for him from Heaven.

They set forth and travel Phrygia and Galatia, and when they would have gone into Asia and Bithynia the Spirit forbad them, because the Lord would hasten them into Macedonia unto a new work, and such a one as they had not medled withal till now, and that was to preach to a Roman plantation, for so the Text doth intimate that Philippi was, *ver.*12. and *ver.*21. and so saith Pliny, lib.4. cap.11. He had indeed been always in the Roman dominions, but still among other Nations, as Jews, Greeks, Syrians and the like, but we read not that he was in any City of Romans till here. And his going to preach to that people is so remarkable, that the Text seemeth to have set two or three notable badges upon it. For that Nation lieth under so many sad brands in Scripture, and lay under so great an abominating by the Jews, that the Gospels entring among them, hath these three singular circumstances to advertise of it. 1. That the Spirit diverted Paul from Asia and Bithynia to hasten him thither. 2. That he was called thither by a special vision, the like invitation to which he had not in all his travels to any other place. 3. The Penman doth not joyn himself in the story till this very time. For hitherto having spoken in the third person, he and they, as He came to Derbe, ver.1. They went through the Cities, vers. 4. &c. he cometh now to joyn himself, and to use the word We and Us. After he had seen the vision immediately we indeavoured to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us, vers.10.

Yet was this City mixed also of abundance of Jews living among them, as that people was now dispersed and sowed in the most places of the Empire, from Rome it self Eastward, however it was on this side: On the Sabbath, by a river side where the women it seemed used their bathings for purification, and where was a Synagogue, they preach and convert Lydia a proselytess, and she is instantly baptized and her household before she go home, for ought can be found otherwise in the Text: from whence we may observe what believing gave admission to Baptism to whole households. In this Roman Colony it is observable that the Synagogue is called proseucha, and that it is out of the Town.

Paul casteth out a spirit of divination, and is thereupon beaten and imprisoned he and Silas, but inlarged by an earthquake, and the Jaylour is converted: and he and his family instantly baptized. After a little while Paul and Silas depart, having laid the foundation of a very eminent Church as it proved afterward: from which Paul in his Epistle thither, acknowledgeth as many tokens of love received, as from any Church that he had planted: and to which he made as many visits afterward. When he departeth he had ordained no Ministers there for ought can be gathered from the Text, and it may be, he did not, till his return thither again, which was the course he had used in other Churches, Acts 14. 23. He speaketh of divers fellow-labourers that he had there in the Gospel, both men and women, Phillip 4. 3. which cannot be understood of preaching, but that these being converted, they used their best indeavour to perswade others to imbrace the same Religion, &c.

ACTS CHAP. XVII.

PAUL and Silas or Silvanus, and Timothy come to Theſſalonica, where they make many converts, but withal find very much oppoſition. In three weeks ſpace, or very little more, they convert ſome Jews, many Proſelytes, and not a few of the chief Gentiles: women of the City: which number, conſidered with the ſhortneſs of the time in which ſo many were brought in, and the bitterneſs they indured from the unbelieving, made their piety to be exceedingly renowned all abroad, 1 Theſſ. 1. 6, 7, 8.

Perſecution driveth the Apoſtles to Beræa another Town of Macedonia, Plin. *l.*4. c. 10. there they found perſons better bred and better learned then that rabble mentioned ver. 5. that they had met withal at Theſſalonica. The Jews called their learned men בני חורין filii nobilium: it may be Lukes εὐγενέστεροι, ver. 11. tranſlates that: The rabble from Theſſalonica brings the perſecution hither alſo, ſo that Paul is glad to depart to Athens, but Silas and Timothy abide at Beræa ſtill.

At Athens there was a Synagogue of Jews and Proſelytes, ver. 17. ſo that it is undoubted the Scholars of the Univerſity had heard from them the report of the true God; therefore Paul is not ſo much cried out upon, for telling them of the true God in oppoſition to the falſe, as for preaching of Jeſus crucified, riſen and glorified, which neither they nor even the Jews Synagogue there, had ever heard of before: for this he is convented before their great Court of Areopagus, where his diſcourſe converts one of that Bench, Dionyſius.

ACTS CHAP. XVIII.

FROM Athens, Paul cometh to Corinth. Urbs olim clara opibus, poſt clade notior, nunc Romana colonia, ſaith Pomp. Mela. lib.2. cap.3. A little view of the City may not be uſeleſs. It ſtood in the Iſthmus, or that neck of Land that lay and gave paſſage betwixt Peloponeſus and Attica: upon which Iſthmus the Sea pointing in, on either hand made Corinth a famous and a wealthy Mart Town, by two Havens that it had at a reaſonable diſtance from it on either ſide it, the one Jochæum, at which they took ſhipping for Italy and thoſe Weſtern parts: and the other Cenchræa, at which they took ſhipping for Aſia: Merchandiſe arriving at theſe Ports, from thoſe ſeveral parts of the World, were brought to Corinth which lay much in the middle between them, and ſo this City became the great Exchange for thoſe parts. It lay at the foot of a high promont called Acrocorinthus, or the Pike of Corinth. The compaſs of the City was ſome forty furlongs or five miles about, being ſtrongly walled. In it was a Temple of Venus, ſo ample a foundation, that it had above a thouſand Nuns [ſuch Nuns as Venus had] to attend upon it. The City was ſacked by L. Mummius the Roman General, as for ſome other offence that it had given to that ſtate, ſo more eſpecially for ſome abuſe ſhewed to the Roman Embaſſadors there. But it was repaired again by the Romans and made a Colony. Vid. Strabo lib. 8. Plin. lib.4. cap.4.

Paul coming hither findeth Priſcilla and Aquila lately come from Italy, becauſe of Claudius his Decree, which had expelled all the Jews from Rome: Of this Decree Suetonius ſpeaketh, as he is generally underſtood, In Claudio cap.25. Judæos impulſore chreſto aſſidue tumultuantes Roma expulit. Claudius expelled the Jews out of Rome, who continually tumultuated becauſe of Chriſt. In ſome copies it is written Chriſto, but ſo generally interpreted by Chriſtians in the ſenſe mentioned, that we ſhall not at all diſpute it. The ſame quarrel was got to Rome with the Goſpel, that did attend it in all parts of the world where it came among the Jews, they ſtill oppoſing it and conteſting againſt it, and ſo breeding tumultuouſneſs.

The Apoſtle here, in a ſtrange place, and out of monies, betaketh himſelf to work with his hands for his ſubſiſtence, as alſo he did in other places upon the ſame exigent. His work was to make Tents of skins ſuch as the Souldiery uſed to lodge in when they were in the field: Hence the phraſe, Eſſe ſub pellibus. This Trade he learned before he ſet to his ſtudies. It was the cuſtom of the Jewiſh Nation to ſet their children to ſome trade, yea though they were to be ſtudents. What is commanded a father towards his ſon? To circumciſe him, to redeem him, to teach him the Law, to teach him a Trade, and to take him a wife. R. Judah ſaith, He that teacheth not his ſon a trade, does as if he taught him to be a thief. Rabban Gamaliel ſaith, He that hath a trade in his hand to what is he like? He is like to a Vineyard that is fenced. Toſapht. in Kidduſhin per. 1. So ſome of the great wiſe men of Iſrael had been cutters of wood. Maym. in Talm. Torah. per. 1. And not to inſtance in any others, as might be done in divers, [Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai that was at this inſtant Vice-preſident of the Sanhedrin, was a Merchant 4 years, and then he fell to ſtudy the Law. Juchasin fol. 21.] Paul had power and warrant to challenge maintenance for preaching, as he intimateth many times over in his Epistles, but there was not yet any Church at Corinth to maintain him, and when there was, he would take nothing of the Gentiles for the greater honour and promotion of the Gospel. See 1 Cor.9.6, 11, 12.

He frequenteth the Synagogue every Sabbath, and there reasoneth and perswadeth divers both Jews and Greeks. But when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, he was pressed in spirit and testified to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ, they having brought him tidings of the great proficiency and piety of Macedonian Churches, namely the Philippian and Thessalonian. See Act. 17.14. 1 Thess. 1.8. & 3.6. upon whose example he was the more earnest to bring the Jews of Corinth on; but they oppose and blaspheme: whereupon he and Silas and Timothy set to work to build up the Gentiles there. The converts in this place were Crispus and Gaius, and the household of Stephanas, 1 Cor.1.14,&c. and Epenetus, Rom.16.5. He is called the first fruits of Achaia, and so is the houshold of Stephanas, 1 Cor.16.15. converted at his first coming thither. He now sets upon a new task having the Lords incouragement by a vision by night, and so he stayeth at Corinth a year and an half.

In the time of this his abode there, he writeth

which was the first Epistle that he wrote.

The poscript affixed to that Epistle doth date it from Athens [as it seemeth] because of that passage in *Chap.*3.1. We thought it good to be left at Athens alone: whereas 1. There was a Church in Achaia when Paul wrote this Epistle, *Chap.*1.7. now there was none there while Paul was at Athens, for from thence he went to Achaia, and began to plant the Church at Corinth. 2. Timothy and Silas were joynt Writers with the Apostle of this Epistle, *Chap.*1.1. now if they were with him at Athens whilst he abode there, which it may be they were, at the least one of them, 1 *Thess.*3.1. yet was not the Epistle then written, for it is questionable whether Silas was there, and Timothy went a messenger thither, and returned again before this was written, Chap. 3.6. The time of its writing therefore was when Timothy and Silas with him returned from Macedonia and came to Paul at Corinth, Act.18.5. and Timothy who had been sent thither purposely, gives a comfortable account of their faith and constancy. So that this Epistle was written from Corinth, somewhat within the beginning of the first year of Pauls abode there.

In it, among other things, he characterizeth the condition of the unbelieving Jews, *Chap.*2.15,16. for the Thessalonian Church from its first planting had been exceedingly molested with them.

He saith, The wrath is come upon them to the utmost: which whether it mean passively, that the wrath of God lay so heavy upon them, or actively, that in their vexation and anger against the Gentiles, that was come upon them, that was foretold for a plague to them, *Deut.*32.21. it sheweth that that Nation was now become unrecoverable: and so he looks upon it as the Antichrist in the next Epistle, as we shall observe there.

Paul abiding still at Corinth, a tumult is raised against him, and he is brought before the tribunal of Gallio the Proconsul, who refusing to judge in matters of that nature, [because the Jews themselves had power to judge such matters in their own Synagogue] the people become their own carvers, and beat Sosthenes even before the Tribunal. This Gallio was brother of Seneca the famous Court Philosopher, Nero's Tutor: and of him Seneca giveth this high Encomion in the Preface to his fourth Book of natural Questions. I used to tell thee [saith he to his friend Lucius] that my brother Gallio, whom no man loves not a little if he can love no more, is not acquainted with other vices, but this of flattery he hates. Thou hast tried him on all hands. Thou hast begun to praise his disposition--- He would go away. Thou hast begun to praise his frugality, He would presently cut thee off at the first words: Thou hast begun to admire his affability and unaffected sweetness--- For there is no mortal man so dear to any, as he to all--- And here also he withstood thy flatteries, insomuch that thou criedst out, that thou hadst found a man impregnable, against those snares that every one takes into his bosom. And again in *Epist.*104. Gallio, saith he, when he was in Achaia and began to have a fever, he presently took ship, crying out, that it was not the disease of his body but of the place. To him he Dedicates his Treatise de Beata Vita. See more of this Gallio, Tacit. Annal. 15. Sect.11.

From Corinth in the time of his present abode there [but whether before this tumult before Gallio or after, is not much material] Paul writeth whileſt he and Sylvanus and Timotheus were there together, Chap. 1.1. as they had been at the writing of the firſt.

THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS,

The exceeding much trouble and perſecution that this Church had ſuffered from the unbelieving Jews from its firſt planting, Act. 17.5, &c. 1 Theſſ. 1.6. & 2.14. & 2 Theſſ. 1.4. gave the Apoſtle juſt occaſion whileſt he was preſent with them to diſcourſe with them, and to inform them, concerning the condition and carriage and end of that Nation: that they might be ſetled and reſolved to bear all whatſoever they ſhould ſuffer from that accurſed people and generation: and here he taketh up the ſame diſcourſe again for their further eſtabliſhment.

Beſides outward moleſtation and affliction of their bodies, there were falſe teachers that troubled their minds, and eſpecially with theſe two puzzles. 1. To make them to doubt what became of them that died in the faith and profeſſion of Jeſus: for whereas the Apoſtle handles the matter of the reſurrection in the former Epiſtle, Chap. 4. 14. I cannot ſuppoſe that he doth it to them as to men of the Sadducee opinion, denying the reſurrection, or as to men that had never heard of the reſurrection before, for all the Jews, ſet the Sadduces aſide, did aſſuredly believe it: but becauſe that the oppoſers of the Goſpel had buzzed to them their loſt condition after death, for their revolting from the Jewiſh Religion, and becoming Apoſtates [as they reputed it] to the Goſpel. The tenth Chapter of the Treatiſe Sanhedrin that names certain ſorts of people that muſt not inherit the world to come, gives us good cauſe to ſuppoſe that this was no ſmall terror that thoſe envious oppoſers would perplex the minds of thoſe withal, who had forſaken the Jewiſh Religion, and betaken themſelves to the profeſſion of Chriſt. The Talmudick place cited ſpeaketh thus, All Iſrael hath a ſhare in the world to come, as it is ſaid, Thy people ſhall all of them be righteous: But theſe have no ſhare in the world to come, He that ſaith, The reſurrection is not taught in the Law, and that the Law is not from God, and Epicurus. Now by Epicurus they mean not luxurious ones, as the word Epicure is commonly uſed by us, but as the Gemara explains it there המבזה תח One that deſpiſeth their Doctors: and elſewhere they yoke it with משומדים Apoſtates. המשומדין והאפיקורוסין Apoſtates and Epicures. Roſh. haſhanah per. 1. and ſo they brought all that ſtarted from the vain doctrine of their traditionaries under this title, and under that terror of having no ſhare in the world to come. 2. They went about to perplex the mind of theſe converts with urging how near the day of the Lord was. The Scripture, and the Apoſtle had ſpoken of the day of the Lords coming, when he ſhould come to take vengeance of the Jewiſh Nation for their wickedneſs and unbelief: and theſe would terrifie this Church with inculcating the nearneſs of it, pretending for this, partly revelation, and partly the words or writing of the Apoſtle. The aim in this terror was to amaze the new believers and to puzzle them about what to hold, and what to do in that ſad time, which they pretended was ready to fall upon their heads. The Apoſtle reſolves that there was ſome good ſpace of time to be before, for there was to be a falling away, and the man of ſin to be revealed.

The phraſe The man of ſin and child of perdition, is plainly taken from that place, Iſa. 11.4. With the breath of his lips he ſhall ſlay the wicked one: and the Apoſtle makes it clear that he referreth to that place, by uſing the very words of the Prophet, at ver. 8. Whom the Lord ſhall conſume with the breath of his mouth. The Jews put an Emphaſis upon that word in the Prophet, The wicked one, as it appeareth by the Chaldee Paraphraſt, who hath uttered it ארמילום רשיעא He ſhall deſtroy the wicked Roman: And ſo the Apoſtle puts an Emphaſis upon it, and tranſlates it the Man of ſin: And in that Chriſt is introduced in the Prophet, as having a ſpecial quarrel and vengeance againſt him, he is called the ſon of perdition, or he that is ſo certainly and remarkably to be deſtroyed. It is true, this meaneth the Roman, as the Chaldee, and our Proteſtant Divines by the warrant of John in the Revelation do interpret it: but in the firſt place and ſenſe it meaneth the Jewiſh Nation, which proved Antichriſt, as well as Rome ever did, and as far as Rome ever did, and before Rome ever did, and as long and longer then Rome hath yet done. As Jews and Rome joyned in the murder of Chriſt, ſo are they joyned in this character of Antichriſt, but the Jews to be underſtood firſt: See ver. 7. the myſtery of iniquity was already working when the Apoſtle wrote this Epiſtle, which cannot poſſibly be underſtood but of the Jewiſh Nation, and ſo it is explained again and again, 1 John 2.18. & 4.3. & 2 Joh. v. 7, &c.

The ſeveral characters that the Apoſtle gives of the Man of ſin, agree moſt throughly to that generation and Nation, and ſo the Scripture plainly applies them to it.

1. There was a falling away in that Nation of multitudes that had imbraced the Goſpel. See Matth. 24.12. Chriſt foretelling it, and Paul from thence, 1 Tim. 4.1. by the later times that he there ſpeaks of, meaning the laſt days of Jeruſalem and the Jewiſh ſtate, as the phraſe is uſed in that ſenſe abundantly. Such apoſtacy may be obſerved hinted in the Epiſtle to the Galatians, to the Hebrews, Coloſſians, *Rev.*2.4. 2 *Tim.*1.15. and to ſpare more, obſerve the concluſion of that Parable, Matth. 12.43,44,45. So ſhall it be with this wicked generation. The Devil once caſt out of it by the Goſpel, but returned by their Apoſtacy.

2. How this Nation was the ὁ Ἀντικείμενος, the great oppoſer of the Goſpel, needeth no inſtance to any that hath read the New Teſtament. And he that reads the Jewiſh Records, ſhall find evidence enough of it, of which we have given ſome brief account at Acts Chap. 13.

3. Ὑπεραιρόμενος ἐπὶ πάντα λεγόμενον θεὸν ἢ σέβασμα. Which exalts himſelf againſt every thing that is called God or worſhipped: were it ἐπὶ θεὸν, Againſt God, it were moſt true, to the very letter, their Scribes in the Temple of God it ſelf, ſitting and ſetting up their traditions above the commands of God, Matth. 15. 6. But how they exalted themſelves againſt every thing called God, or the Magiſtracy and thoſe that were ſet over them, we may obſerve in ſuch paſſages as theſe, 2 Pet. 2.10. They deſpiſe government, &c. Jude v.8. They deſpiſe dominion, and ſpeak evil of dignities, &c. and in their own ſtories to endleſs examples.

4. As for the fourth mark mentioned, verſ. 9. namely his coming after the working of Satan with all Magical power and deluſion, our Saviour had foretold it of that generation, *Matth.*24.24. compared with verſ. 34. of that Chapter: and it is abundantly aſſerted by Scripture, by Joſephus, and other of their own Writers, as we have given ſome examples before.

Now what the Apoſtle meaneth when he ſpeaketh of one that letted [*verſ.*6. And now ye know what withholdeth, and *ver.*7. He who now letteth will let] is of ſome obſcurity; we may without offence give this conjecture. As the term The day of the Lord, is taken in Scripture eſpecially in this double ſenſe, for his day of judging the Jewiſh Nation, and for his day of judging all the world; ſo are we to underſtand a falling away, and a Man of ſin of the Jewiſh Nation before the former, and a falling away and Antichriſt, betwixt the former and the later. This laſt is readily concluded upon, to be the Papacy, and he that letted, to mean the Imperial power: but what was he that letted in the former, that the Antichriſt among the Jews was not revealed ſooner? I ſhould divide this ſtake betwixt Claudius the Emperor [who by his decree againſt the Jews in Rome, Act. 18. 2. give a check by the appearance of his diſpleaſure, to all the Jews elſewhere that they durſt not tyrannize againſt the Goſpel whileſt he lived as they had done.] And Paul himſelf who by his unceſſant travelling in the Goſpel, and combatting by the truth every where againſt the Jews, did keep down very much their deluſions and Apoſtacy whileſt he was at liberty and abroad, but when he was once laid up, then all went to ruine, as ſee *Act.*20. 29. 2 Tim. 1. 15, &c.

Paul when he departs from Corinth, leaves a Church fairly planted there, but how ſoon and how miſerably it grew degenerate, we ſhall meet with cauſe to obſerve before it be long. He cometh to Epheſus, and ſtriving to get up to one of the Feaſts at Jeruſalem, he leaves Priſcilla and Aquila there. Thither, ere long, cometh Apollos, an excellent Scripture-man, but one that knew only the baptiſm of John, but they inſtruct him better. Not that theſe Tent-makers turned Preachers, but that having had ſo much converſe with Paul, they were able in private conference to inform him better then yet he knew, from what they had learned from Paul.

ACTS CHAP. XIX. from Verſ. 1. to Verſ. 19.

OThers at Epheſus there were, that were no further gone in Chriſtianity neither, then the knowledge of the Baptiſm of John: Paul asks them, Have ye received the Holy Ghoſt? They anſwer, We have not yet ſo much as heard whether the Holy Ghoſt be: In which words they refer to a common and a true tenet of the Nation, which was, that after the death of Ezra, Haggai, Zachary and Malachy, the Holy Ghoſt departed from Iſrael and went up: *Juchas. fol.*15. and they profeſs they had never yet heard of his reſtoring. And it is very probable, that they had never heard of Jeſus; whom when Paul had preached to them, they imbrace; and the Text ſaith, they were then baptized in the Name of the Lord Jeſus. Not that they were rebaptized, but that now coming to the knowledge of the proper end of Johns baptiſm, namely to believe in Jeſus as *ver.*4. they own their baptiſm to ſuch an end and conſtruction. For 1. What need had they to be rebaptized, when in that firſt baptiſm they had taken, they had come in to the profeſſion of the Goſpel and of Chriſt, as far as the doctrine that had brought them in could teach them? It was the change of their profeſſion from Judaiſm to Evangeliſm, that required their being baptized, and not the degrees of their growth in the knowledge of the Goſpel, into the profeſſion of which they had been baptized already. How many baptiſms muſt the Apoſtles have have undergone, if every ſignal degree of their coming on to the perfect knowledge of the myſtery of Chriſt, might have required, nay might have admitted a new baptizing? 2. If theſe men were rebaptized, then muſt the ſame be concluded of all that had received the baptiſm of John, when they came to the knowledge of Jeſus: which as it is incredible, becauſe there is not the leaſt tittle of mention of ſuch a thing, ſo is it unimaginable in the caſe of thoſe of the Apoſtles that were baptized by John; for who ſhould baptize them again in the name of Jeſus, ſince Jeſus himſelf baptized none? *Joh.*4.3. 3. Theſe men had taken on them the baptiſm of repentance, and the profeſſion of Chriſt, in the baptiſm of John, that they had received: therefore unleſs we will ſuppoſe a baptiſm of faith, different from the baptiſm of repentance, and a baptiſm in the name of Jeſus different from the baptiſm in the name of Chriſt, it will be hard to find a reaſon, why theſe men ſhould undergo a new baptizing.

And if it ſhould be granted [which is againſt reaſon to grant,] that theſe men were really rebaptized, yet were not this a warrantable ground for rebaptization now, in regard of theſe main differences betwixt the caſe then and now. 1. That great controverſie then on foot, about, Whether Jeſus were the true Meſſias or no, which cauſed their rebaptization, if they were rebaptized. 2. The viſible conferring of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, upon their baptiſm if they were rebaptized: as being a main induction of ſuch a thing, if ſuch a thing were, that the name of Jeſus might be ſo apparently glorified, upon their being baptized in the name of Jeſus: which indeed was equally glorified, when they received thoſe gifts upon their acknowledging of Jeſus, and owning their baptiſm that they had of old been baptized with, as a badge of that acknowledgment, though not baptized again.

ACTS CHAP. XIX. from Ver.9. to Ver.21.

THE Apoſtle hath a long time to ſtay at Epheſus: in which he firſt begins for the ſpace of a quarter of a year to diſpute in the Synagogue: and then when divers were hardened and believed not, he ſeparated the Diſciples, and diſputed daily in the School of Tyrannus: Hitherto what converts there were to the Goſpel, they reſorted ſtill to the publick ſervice in the Synagogue, where Paul reaſoned daily for the truth of the Goſpel: but finding dangerous oppoſition, he gets away the Diſciples from thence, and in the School of one Tyrannus they are a particular Congregation.

In theſe great Towns where there were many Jews, both in Judea and elſewhere, they had a Synagogue and a Divinity-School: This Divinity-School they called Beth Midraſh, and thither they uſed to go every Sabbath day, after they had been at the Synagogue: whereupon they had this for a common proverb, מבית מקרש לבית מדרש: From the Synagogue to the Divinity-School. In the Synagogue they had prayers and reading of the Law, and plain Sermons of Doctrine, exhortation and comfort: In the Divinity-School were diſcuſſed and taught, dogmatical and controverſial points concerning the difficulties of the Law, and other high matters. And hence it may be thoſe different titles and adminiſtrations of Paſtor and Teacher, Epheſ.4.11. and He that teacheth, and he that exhorteth, Rom.12.7,8. took their pattern: if Paſtor mean one of the Miniſterial function.

In the time of this ſtay of Paul at Epheſus, He fought with beaſts there after the manner of men, 1 Cor.15.32. which ſeemeth to be underſtood, of a proper θηριομαχία or fighting with wild beaſts in the Theater, as was the barbarous and beſtial cuſtom of the Romans and thoſe times. For 1. Obſerve in the hubbub of Demetrius, Pauls companions are haled preſently into the Theater, *ver.*29. as if there the people had that that would take a courſe with them. 2. Obſerve that the Aſiarchæ or Theater-Officers are Pauls friends, as having knowledge and acquaintance of him and with him before. 3. Demetrius his uproar which was the greateſt danger that Luke hath mentioned of him, was not till after he had written his Epiſtle to Corinth, in which, he ſpeaks of fighting with beaſts, and therefore that could not be meant. 4. The phraſe κατ' Ἄνθρωπον doth ſeem clearly to diſtinguiſh it from any combate in a borrowed ſenſe. 5. The trouble that befel him in Aſia, by which he was preſſed above meaſure, and even deſpaired of life, 2 Cor. 1.8,9. cannot be underſtood ſo well of the tumult of Demetrius, for we read not of any hand laid upon Paul in it, as of ſome other danger nearer dearth.

In the latter year of theſe two above written, which was part of Pauls laſt year at Epheſus, on the 13th day of October of that year, Claudius the Emperor dieth, and Nero ſucceedeth him: a wretch whoſe memory is not worth looking after, unleſs it be for deteſtation:

tion: yet must we in our further progress of viewing the actions of Paul, and ranking his Epistles, be beholden to the Chronical observation of his years.

Paul himself saith to the Elders of Ephesus, By the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one, Acts 20.31. And yet Luke in this Chapter specifieth only two years and a quarter, ver. 8.10. The comparing of which two sums together, doth help us to measure the time of his abode there mentioned from *ver.*20. and forward. Namely that he spent three months in disputing in the Jews Synagogue: and two years in the School of Tyrannus: and three quarters of a year after, in going up and down Asia. The expiration of his three years was about Pentecost in the first year of Nero.

CHRIST. LV. NERO. I.

ACTS CHAP. XIX. Vers. 21, 22.

After these things were ended, Paul purposed in spirit when he had passed thorow Macedonia and Achaia to go to Jerusalem, saying, When I have been there, I must also see Rome.
22. So he sent into Macedonia two of them that ministred to him, Timotheus and Erastus, but he himself staid in Asia for a season.

PAuls thoughts of going to Rome, do argue the death of Claudius, who had banished all the Jews from thence, Acts 18.2. and that by the coming in of Nero, a new Emperor, that Decree was extinct, and freedom of access to Rome opened to them again: For it can be little conceived that Paul should think of going thither, when he could neither find any of his Nation there, nor he himself come thither without certain hazzard of his life: as the case would have been if Claudius and his Decree were yet alive. It is therefore agreeable to all reason, that the death of Claudius, and the succession of Nero was now divulged, and Paul thereupon knowing that it was now lawful again for a Jew to go to Rome, intendeth to take a farewel journy and visit to Macedonia, Achaiah and Jerusalem, and then to go and preach there.

Claudius died the 13th day of October, as was said before, and Nero instantly succeeded him. A Prince of so much clemency and mansuetude in the beginning of his reign, that Titus the Emperour afterward used to say, that the best Princes exceeded not the first five years of Nero in goodness. And Seneca, if he flatter not the Prince, or his own tutorage of him, gives him this among many other Encomiums of him, Lib. de Clementia, which he dedicates to him: Potes hoc Cæsar prædicare audacter, omnium quæ in fidem tutelamq; tuam venerunt, nihil per te, neque vi, neque clam, reipublicæ ereptum. Rarissimam laudem, & nulli adhuc principum concessam concupisti, innocentiam: Nemo unus homo uni homini tam charus unquam fuit quam tu populo Romano, magnum longumq; ejus bonum.

It must be some space of time before Claudius death could come to be reported at Ephesus: it is like, the new year after the Roman account, might be stept in. Whensoever it was that Paul heard the news, and that a door of access to Rome was opened for the Jews again, he sets down his determination to stay at Ephesus till Pentecost, and then to set for Macedon, and back to Jerusalem, and then to Rome. Upon this resolution he sendeth Timothy and Erastus into Macedon before him: appointeth them to call at Corinth in the way, and intends himself to stay at Ephesus till they should come thither again to him, 1 *Cor.*16.10,11.

Between Vers. 22. and *Vers.*23. of this XIX CHAP. of the ACTS, falleth in the time of Pauls writing

THE FIRST EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

He being now at Ephesus, and having set down the time of his removing thence, namely at Pentecost coming, 1 *Cor.*16.8. He had now been at Ephesus well towards three years, and had met with many difficulties; yet had so prevailed by the power of the Gospel, that not only all along hitherto many people were continually converted, but even now alate, many conjurers, and such as used magical Arts, devoted themselves to the Gospel and their books to the fire, and became the renewed monuments of the power and prevalency of the divine truth. This was that great and effectual door opened to him, of which he speaketh, 1 Cor. 16.9. and which occasioned his stay at Ephesus still, when he had sent Timothy and Erastus into Macedonia, Acts 19.21. In the time of which stay there, Stephanas, and Fortunatus and Achaicus, come from Corinth, 1 Cor. 16.17. with Letters from the Church to Paul, 1 Cor.7.1. and he upon their return, returns his answer in this Epistle sent by Titus and another, 2 Cor. 12.18. Some Postscripts have named Timothy for the the bearer, antedating his journy to Corinth, which was not in his going to Macedon, but in in his return back, and when this Epiſtle had already given them notice of his coming that way, 1 *Cor.*16.10.

Apollos when Paul wrote this Epiſtle was with him at Epheſus, and was deſired by Paul to have gone along with the brethren to Corinth, but he would not, 1 *Cor.*16.11. it may be becauſe he would not countenance a faction there by his preſence, which was begun under his name. The Church was exceedingly broken into diviſions, which produced very doleful effects among them. Theſe ſeveral enormities raged in that Church, though ſo lately and ſo nobly planted, and all originally derived from this firſt miſchief of faction and ſchiſme.

1. A member of the Church had married his fathers wife, yea as it ſeemeth 2 *Cor.*7.12. his father yet living: which crime by their own Law and Canons deſerved death: For he that went in to his fathers wife was doubly liable to be ſtoned, both becauſe ſhe was his fathers wife, and becauſe ſhe was another mans wife, whether he lay with her in his fathers life time, or after his death. Talm. in Sanhed. per.7. & Maym, in Iſſure biah. per.1 & 2. And yet they in the height of the conteſtings they had among themſelves, did not only, not take away ſuch a wretch from among them, nor mourn for the miſcarriage, but he had got a party that bolſtered him up and abetted him: and ſo while they ſhould have mourned they were puffed up. His own party in triumph that they could bear him out againſt the adverſe, and the other in rejoycing that in the contrary faction there was befallen ſuch a ſcandal. Or both as taking this Libertiniſm as a new liberty of the Goſpel. The Apoſtle adviſeth his giving up to Satan, by a power of miracles which was then in being. So likewiſe did he give up Hymeneus and Alexander, 1 Tim. 1.20. The derivation of this power we conceived at Act. 5. [in the caſe of Ananias and Saphira] to be from that paſſage of Chriſt to the Diſciples, John 20.22. He breathed on them and ſaid, whoſe ſins ye retain they are retained, &c. and ſo were the Apoſtles indued with a miraculous power of a contrary effect or operation. They could heal diſeaſes and beſtow the Holy Ghoſt, and they could inflict death or diſeaſes, and give up to Satan. Now though it may be queſtioned, whether any in the Church of Corinth had this power, yet when Pauls ſpirit with the power of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt went along in the action, as *Chap.*5.4. there can be no doubt of the effect.

2. Their animoſities were ſo great, that they not only inſtigated them to common ſuits at Law, but to ſuits before the tribunals of the Heathen, which as it was contrary to the peace and honour of the doctrine of the Goſpel, ſo was it even contrary to their Judaick traditions: which required their ſubjection and appeals, only to men of their own blood, or of their own Religion. The Apoſtle to rectifie this miſdemeanour, firſt calls them to remember, that the Saints ſhould judge the world, and this he mentioneth as a thing known to them, *Chap.*6.2. and it was known to them from *Dan.*7.18,27. And the Kingdom and Dominion, and the greatneſs of the Kingdom ſhall be given to the people of the Saints of the moſt High. How miſerably this is miſconſtrued by too many of a fifth Monarchy, when Saints ſhall only Rule, is to be read in too many miſeries that have followed that opinion. The Apoſtles meaning is no more but this, Do you not know that there ſhall be a Chriſtian Magiſtracy? Or that Chriſtians ſhall be Rulers and Judges in the world, and therefore why ſhould you be ſo fearful or careleſs to judge in your own matters? Obſerve in what ſenſe he had taken the word Saints in the former verſe, namely for Chriſtians in the largeſt ſenſe, as ſet in oppoſition to the Heathen. And he ſpeaks in the tenour of Daniel from whence his words are taken, that though the world and Church had been ruled and judged and domineered over, by the four Monarchies which were Heathen, yet under the Kingdom of Chriſt under the Goſpel, they ſhould be ruled and judged by Chriſtian Kings, Magiſtrates and Rulers. Secondly, He minds them, Know ye not that we ſhall judge Angels? ver.3. Obſerve that he ſays not as before, Know ye not that the Saints ſhall judge Angels? But we. By Angels it is uncontrovertedly granted that he meaneth evil Angels the Devils: Now the Saints, that is all Chriſtians that profeſſed the Goſpel were not to judge Devils, but we, ſaith he, that is the Apoſtles and Preachers of the Goſpel; who by the power of their Miniſtry ruined his Oracles, Idols, deluſions and worſhip, &c. Therefore he argueth, ſince there is to be a Goſpel Magiſtracy to rule and judge the World, and a Goſpel Miniſtry that ſhould judge and deſtroy the Devils, they ſhould not account themſelves ſo utterly uncapable of judging in things of their civil converſe, as upon every controverſie to go to the Bench of the Heathens to the great diſhonour of the Goſpel. And withal adviſeth them, to ſet them to judge who were leſs eſteemed in the Church, ver.4. Not that he denieth ſubjection to the Heathen Magiſtrate which now was over them, or incourageth them to the uſurpation of his power: but that he aſſerteth the profeſſion of the Goſpel, capable of judging in ſuch things, and by improving of that capacity, as far as fell within their line, he would have them provide for their own peace, and the Goſpels credit. We obſerved before, that though the Jews were under the Roman power, yet they permitted them to live in their their own Religion, and by their own Laws to maintain their Religion: and it may not be impertinent to take up and inlarge that matter a little here. As the Jews under the Roman ſubjection had their great Sanhedrin, and their leſs of three and twenty Judges, as appears both in Scripture, and in their Records, ſo were not theſe bare names, or civil bodies without a ſoul, but they were inlivened by their juridical, executive power, in which they were inſtated of old: So that though they were at the diſpoſal of the Roman Power, and Religion, and Laws, and all went to wrack when the Emperour was offended at them, as it was in the time of Caligula, yet for the moſt part, from the time of the Romans power firſt coming over them, to the time of their own laſt Rebellion, which was their ruine, the authority of their Sanhedrins and Judicatories was preſerved in a good meaſure intire, and they had adminiſtration of juſtice of their own Magiſtracy, as they injoyed their own Religion. And this both within the Land and without, yea even after Jeruſalem was deſtroyed, as we ſhall ſhew in its due place. And as it was thus in the free actings of their Sanhedrins, ſo alſo was it in the actings of their Synagogues, both in matters of Religion and of civil intereſt: For in every Synagogue as there were Rulers of the Synagogue in reference to matters of Religion and Divine worſhip, ſo were there Rulers or Magiſtrates in reference to Civil affairs, which judged in ſuch matters. Every Synagogue had Beth din ſhel ſheloſhah, a Conſiſtory or Judicatory, or what you will call it, of three Rulers or Magiſtrates, to whom belonged to judge between party and party in matters of money, ſtealth, damage, reſtitution, penalties, and divers other things which are mentioned and handled in both Talmuds in the Treatiſe Sanhedrin per. 1. Who had not power indeed of capital puniſhments, but they had of corporal, namely of ſcourging to fourty ſtripes ſave one. Hence it is that Chriſt foretels his Diſciples, In the Synagogues you ſhall be beaten, Mark 13.9. and hence had Paul his five ſcourgings, 2 Cor. 11.24. So that in every Synagogue there were Elders that ruled in Civil affairs, and Elders that laboured in the Word and Doctrine. And all things well conſidered, it may not be ſo monſtrous, as it ſeems to ſome, to ſay it might very well be ſo in thoſe times in Chriſtian Congregations. For ſince, as it might be ſhewed, that Chriſt and his Apoſtles in platforming of the model of Chriſtian Churches in thoſe times, did keep very cloſe to the platform of the Synagogues: and ſince the Romans in thoſe times made no difference betwixt Jews in Judaiſm, and Jews that were turned Chriſtians, nor betwixt thoſe Religions: for as yet there was no perſecution raiſed againſt Chriſtianity, why might not Chriſtian Congregations have and exerciſe that double Function of Miniſtry and Magiſtracy in them as well as the Jewiſh Synagogues? And if that much controverted place, 1 Tim. 5.17. ſhould be interpreted according to ſuch a ſenſe, it were neither irrational, nor improbable. Nor to interpret Paul ſpeaking to ſuch a tenour here. Only his appointing of τὰς ὲ τῇ ἐκκλησία ἐξουθενημένας, the leſs eſteemed in the Church to be appointed for that work is of ſome ſcruple: what if it allude to כת שלא מומחין A Committee of private men? Of which there is frequent mention among the Hebrew Doctors. See Maymon. in אישורי *fol.*253. *col.*1.

3. It was the old Jewiſh garb, when they went to pray, to hide head and face, with a vail, to betoken their aſhamedneſs and confuſion of face wherewithal they appeared before God: And hence is the conjunction of theſe two words ſo common in their Writings התעטף והתפלל He vailed himſelf and prayed. And this for a current rule, The wiſe men and their ſcholars may not pray, unleſs they be vailed. Maymon. in Tephillah per. 5. To which let us add that of Sueton. in Vitell. cap. 2. Lucius Vitellius, ſaith he, had an excellent faculty in flattering: he firſt ſet afoot the worſhipping of Caius Cæſar for a God: when returning out of Syria, he durſt not go to him but with his head vailed, and then turning himſelf about, he fell proſtrate.

Again it was the cuſtom of the Jewiſh women, to go vailed, or their faces covered, whenſoever they went into publick. A woman, ſaith Maymony, may not go into publick ואין עולה רדיד if ſhe have not a vail on. In אישורי per. 24. And this the Talmudiſts call דת יהודית The Jewiſh Law: and מנהג צניעות The garb of modeſty. Chetubboth per. 7. and Alphef. ibid. Where they ſay that that thoſe women tranſgreſs the Jewiſh Law that go forth unvailed, or that ſpin in the ſtreets, or that talk with every man.

Now in this Church of Corinth, the men retained the Jewiſh cuſtom that they prayed vailed, or with their head and face covered, but the women tranſgreſſed their Jewiſh Law, for they went unvailed and bare faced into the publick Congregation, and their reaſon was, as it ſeemeth by the Apoſtles diſcourſe, becauſe they, in regard of their beauty and comly feature, needed leſs to be aſhamed before God in his worſhip then the men. The Apoſtle reproves both, and argues that if the man pray vailed, who is the Image and glory of God, then much more ſhould the woman, who is but the glory of the man. But he cries down the mans praying vailed, as diſhonouring his head; and exhorts that the woman have power on her head, becauſe of the Angels, cap. 11.10. The word רדיד which we obſerved inſtantly before, out of Maymony ſignified a womans vail, doth alſo alſo ſignifie power or dominion: and accordingly the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, Let the Woman have power on her head: But what means he by, Becauſe of the Angels? I ſhould anſwer, Becauſe of the Devils: for theſe he had called Angels alſo, a few Chapters before, viz. Chap. 6. 3. And his words may be conſtrued to this ſenſe, that Women ſhould not expoſe their faces openly in the Congregation, leſt the Devil make a bait of their beauty, and thereby intangle the eyes and hearts of the men, who ſhould be then better imployed, then gazing and longing after beauty. There are, that by Angels underſtood the Miniſters, and interpret it, that Women ſhould be vailed leſt the Miniſters eyes ſhould be intangled by their faces: which expoſition if it be admitted, it may ſpeak for the admiſſion of that alſo which we give, which provides for the eyes of the whole congregation as well as of the Miniſters.

4. In the ſame eleventh Chapter he alſo blameth their diſorder in receiving the Sacrament of the Lords Supper in the height of their heats and conteſtations. Wherein they did not only not diſcern the Lords body, a Symbole and tye of communion, but they even tranſgreſſed that rule now Chriſtians, which thoſe of them that were Jews would not have done in their Judaiſm. It was then a Canon current, and binding amongſt them, that none ſhould eat and drink in their Synagogues, and none ſhould ſleep, Jeruſ. in Megilla fol. 74. col. 1. Maym. in Tephillah per. 11. and Gloſſ. in Maym. in Shabb. 30. But now as they ate and drank the Bread and the Cup in the Sacrament, in their Churches, and that warrantably, ſo did they alſo preſume unwarrantably to eat their own common Suppers there, and that only in defiance one of another, the rich to outface the poor, and one party another with their good commons; ſome banketing and feaſting to the full, whilſt others ſat hungry by and looked on. [See how Μεθύει, ver. 21. ſignifies in the LXX, Gen. 43. 34. Cant. 5. 1.] Thus did they eat and drink judgement to themſelves in the Sacrament, whilſt they would receive the ſymbole of communion and yet ſhew ſuch ſigns and evidences of diſunion at the very inſtant: And the Lord accordingly overtook ſome of them with evident judgements, weakneſs, ſickneſs and death, avenging at once upon them the indignity done to his Sacrament, and the indignity done to their brethren. Much like ſurfeting Nabals caſe and end.

5. And as the people were thus irregular in this part of worſhip in their publick aſſemblies, ſo were their Miniſters faulty in others, namely about the managing of ſpiritual gifts there. The pretence to the Spirit [where indeed it was not] hath alwaies been the great uſherer in of all errour and deluſion: And to this the very unbelieving Jews pretended, and often backed their pretences with magical impoſtures: and of this the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Chap. 12. 3. No man ſpeaking by the Spirit of God, as theſe men took on them to do, can call Jeſus accurſed, as they called him. And on the other hand, ſome that had ſpiritual gifts indeed, failed in the uſing of them to the edification of the Church, but put them forth ſometimes for their own vain glory: and ſuch was their miſcarriage which he taxeth, Chap. 14. They that from that Chapter would ground a preaching by the Spirit now, ſure do little obſerve what they do to build upon an example which the Apoſtle reproveth: and they infer from a place much miſtaken.

There were indeed the extraordinary gifts of tongues and prophecying in the Church of Corinth, but who had them, and what had they in having them, and how uſed they them? 1. It was not every or indeed any private member of the Congregation that had them, but the Miniſters only, and by theſe very gifts and impoſition of the Apoſtles hands by which theſe gifts were conferred, they were inducted into the Miniſtry and inabled to it. The learned Reader will obſerve the difference that in ver. 16. is made betwixt him that ſpake with the tongues, and Ἰδιώτης, הדיוט A private man, that ſat by. 2. It was not to gabble with any tongue that is called ſpeaking with a tongue [for to what edification poſſible could it be for any Miniſter in Corinth to ſpeak Perſick, Coptick, Gallick or any other ſtrange language in that Congregation where all of them underſtood one and the ſame language?] but it was to underſtand and ſpeak the Originals of Scriptures, as was touched before, and to be able to unfold them, and ſo to propheſie or preach to the people. Obſerve theſe paſſages in the Chapter: He that ſpeaketh with a ſtrange tongue edifieth himſelf, ver. 4. And, I would you all ſpake with tongues: Now how could a man edifie himſelf by ſpeaking in ſome ſtrange remote language, when he might ſpeak or underſtand the very ſame thing in his own mother tongue? And what were they better, if they all ſo ſpake, unleſs it were, that thereby they were the fitter to look into all humane learning? But he or all of them that were able to underſtand and ſpeak the original language of Scripture, might thereby edifie themſelves, and therein ſpeak and underſtand what they could not in their mother tongue. 3. It appears by the Apoſtles diſcourſe that theſe men uſed theſe gifts irregularly, confuſedly and for their own vain glory, which he rebukes and rectifies.

6. There were alſo in or crept into this Church, thoſe that were either down right Sadduces in denying the Reſurrection, or that though with the Phariſees they acknowledged ledged it, yet denied it of those that had forsaken their Judaism, and so would exclude all Christians from it: Upon this the fifteenth Chapter discourseth so fully and divinely that nothing can be more.

Those that this Church sent to visit Paul at Ephesus, brought with them a Letter from the Church, in the which they desired to be resolved about some doubts: as

1. About marriage, and a single life; what they should do in that case, since their Judaick Laws had always laid marriage upon them as a binding command. This they reckon the first command of the 613. Vid. marg. ad tripl. Targ. ad Gen. 1. And this their Canons did so strictly bind on as a duty, that they say that he that lives to such an age and marries not, transgresseth a preceptive Law. Maym. in אישות per. 1. In this case the Apostle saith, Præceptum non habeo; that he accounted it no such command, but every one was left to his liberty: according as he could contain, or not contain. And in his stating this case, how he speaks the language of his Nation, and how far he comes towards their opinions, or goes from them, the learned may observe, by comparing the beginning of this Chapter, with Maymony in his Treatise נשים especially fol. [apud me] 251. & 248. & 249.

2. About cohabitation of man and wife, when the one party was a Believer or a Christian, and the other party an unbeliever or an Heathen. And here he concludes that the children, if either parent were a Christian, were holy, ver. 14. that is, Christians, and not to be reputed as Heathen Children. It is the very phrase that his Nation used about the Children of Proselytes, that were born after they were proselyted; they were said to be born בקדושת in holiness, that is within the Religion, not in Heathenism.

3. About eating things sacrificed to Idols, and communicating in such things; a dangerous stumbling block of old, and particularly forbidden by the Council at Jerusalem: Of this he speaketh at large, and from the nature of Idol-sacrifices, and from the Nature of the Sacraments he sheweth how far they should be separate from such communion with Idolatry. He speaketh of all Israels being baptized unto Moses in the Cloud and Sea, and so separate from all Egyptian and other Idolatry and Prophaneness; and our baptism speaks the like separation. The Jews say Moses was sanctified by the Cloud, Jerus. in Joma fol. 28. col. 2. and Paul speaks here the same of all Israel, Chap. 10. 2.

4. About Ministers maintenance under the Gospel, Chap. 9. which he confirmeth, and sheweth that Peter and the rest of the Apostles and their Wives and Families were so maintained, Chap. 9. 5, &c.

He concludes the Epistle with a sad execration upon Whosoever loveth not the Lord Jesus Christ, let such a one be Anathema, Maran Atha, Chap. 16. 22. that is, let him be accursed or destroyed: Our Lord cometh. In which that he in the first aim and intention meaneth the unbelieving Jews, may be observed upon these four considerations. 1. Because the Jews of all men under Heaven were and are the greatest haters of Christ. Pagans indeed do not love the Lord Jesus, because they know him not, but again because they know him not they hate him not. The Turks love not Christ as Christians love him, but again they hate not Christ as the Jews hate him. The word Jesus here carries the Emphasis to level this execration at them: they pretended to love Messias or a Christ, but openly profess hatred of Jesus. 2. Because the Apostle here useth such Dialect, as that he speaketh in the very Jews language in the words Maran Atha. He had spoken in Greek all along the Epistle, and Greek all along his Epistles, and that here alone he should use a Syriack phrase and not translate it, it doth evidently shew, that his speech referreth more especially to the Jewish Nation. So Jeremy in Chap. 10. v. 11. threatning and cursing the Chaldean Idolatry, doth in the Chaldean language; one clause of which he useth not throughout his Prophesie beside. 3. The Jews of all men did chiefly or only call Jesus Anathema, as Chap. 12. 3. and as they are not ashamed openly to confess in their Talmud; therefore against them of all men first and chiefly is this Anathema aimed 4. This is agreeable to what the Scripture speaks copiously in other places: as Isa. 65. 15. You shall leave your name for a curse to my chosen, &c. Malac. 4. 6. Lest I come and smite the Land with a curse, &c. The most pious and charitable Apostle could wish himself to be Anathema for that Nation, on condition that they might believe and be saved, Rom. 9. 3. but since they will not believe, and do refuse salvation, and hate the Saviour, he forgets consanguinity for the love of Christ, and dooming and devoting all whomsoever, that loved not the Lord Jesus Christ to destruction, he intends them in the first place who were his chief haters.

The words Maran-atha are held by some to be of the form of the highest excommunication; Sic signatur, say they, species extremi Anathematis, ac si diceretur, Maledictus esto ad adventum & in adventu Domini: And withall that Maran atha is the same in sense with Shammatha: but this utterly without the warrant of any Jewish antiquity [whose language it is] at all. I believe it is impossible to shew Maran atha for a form of of Excommunication or execration in any of their Writings, nay very hard if not next impossible to shew the words Maran atha in their Writings at all in any sense.

The phrase in the Apostle refers first to Christs coming in vengeance against Jerusalem and the Jewish Nation, as the execration is first to be pitched upon them: Maran atha, Our Lord cometh. Many and dreadful things are spoken of this his coming in the Scripture, of which we have spoken in several places as we have come along. So that in this sentence he doth both justly doom this unbelieving and wretched Nation to their deserved curse, and doth withall in this phrase intimate that the doomed curse was near approaching, in the Lords coming in vengeance against them. Now though we construe the words in such an application to the Jews, it is not exclusively, but that their sense reacheth also to every one that loveth not the Lord Jesus of what Nation soever, and the Lord will come in time to make him an Anathema.

There is some obscurity in a passage in Chap. 5.9. both of Sense and History: I wrote unto you in an Epistle not to company with Fornicators: 10. Yet not altogether with the Fornicators of this world, &c. Where first we have to inquire what it is that the Apostle doth here forbid them, and then, when it was that he wrote this Epistle that he speaketh of. There are two things that are here prohibited; one, when he wrote that which he speaketh of, namely, that they should not company with Fornicators; and the other now when he writes this Epistle, viz. that they should not eat with such: the latter he had permitted till now, though he prohibited the former, which let them well observe that understand by eating the receiving of the Sacrament.

Besides what communion was among the Jews in sacris, there was a twofold companying or communicating among them in civil things; the one more common, the other more neer and peculiar: Their more common was, eating together at the same common table: For even such eating they accounted of, as of a communion, under a rule: and hence no eating with Gentiles for any Jew, Act. 11. 3. nor with Publicans and sinners for any that were of the stricter sort of Religions: therefore Christ is cavilled at for it so oft in the Gospel. The other was that communion or associating, which they called שתוף and עירוב the former of which comprehended their near joyning in partnership, deputations and the like, of the which the triple Talmudick. Tract Bava, and Maymonies of Shittuphin and Silluchin, do treat at large. The later comprehended their combining in joynt interest and association, in the use of any common Court or Cloister where many dwelt together: of which the Treatise Erubhin is a large discourse and obscure enough. Now the Apostle in the former prohibition Μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, seems to forbid this nearer communion: that if any that is called a brother or a Christian, be a Fornicator, &c. they should not associate with him in any such conjunction as partnership, deputation, imployment, cohabitation or common interest, &c. But upon the hearing of this horrid fact and example of the incestuous person, he heightens his prohibition, and now forbids, that they should not use so much as that common society with them, as to eat with them at common tables: which was to set them at the utmost distance, even at the same that the Jews did the very Heathens, for with them they might not eat.

Now how to understand Ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ, is of some difficulty. Some conceive it means an Epistle, which was sent before this, and which was lost. Which is an exposition somewhat hard to digest. Certainly it is gentler and more warrantable, yea even by the rules of Grammer to render Ἔγραψα to such a sense as this, I wrote, or had written, or was writing in this Epistle that you should not company with Fornicators, &c. but now hearing and weighing this high offence of the incestuous person, and the danger of such an example, I sharpen my style, and now forbid not only your near associating with such, but even the common fellowship of eating together at common tables, which was as much as that which is spoken, Matth. 18. 17. Let him be to thee as an heathen man.

ACTS Chap. XIX. from Ver. 23. to the end of the Chapter.

PAUL had determined to stay at Ephesus till Pentecost, because of a great and effectual door that was opened to him, and he was earnest to imbrace that opportunity, 1 Cor. 16. 9. but before his determined time of departure thence came, and as it seemeth not long before, Demetrius, with the rest of the Silversmiths raise a tumult against him as the great impairer of their profit, by crying down the worship of Diana and other Idols. These men used to make silver temples of Diana, Ναὸς Ἀργυροῦς, or little models, as it seemeth, made after that Temple fashion: which they that came to Ephesus to worship, bought, either to consecrate to the Goddess, and to leave there in her Temple, or rather to take away with them home in memorial of that Goddess. Tully in Verrem speaks of Ædes Minervæ posita in fano Apollinis. And Dion Cassius lib. 36. of Ναὸς ἥρας βραχὺς, &c. A little Temple of Juno set upon a Table looking toward the East, did of it self turn towards the North. And in lib. 40. Ὁ γὰρ Ἄρτεμις ἀνομασμένος [ὃν δὲ νεὼς μικρὸς ἐν ἀντῶ ἀετῶ χρυσῆς, &c.] The Eagle [ſaith he, meaning the Roman enſign] was a little Temple, and in it was ſet a golden Eagle: ſuch a one pitched in every one of the Roman Legions, and it never ſtir'd out of the winter quarters, till the whole camp did remove: this Eagle fixed on the top of a ſpear one man carried: the lower end of the ſpear being ſharp that it might be ſtuck into the ground. So that it ſeems the Roman Eagles were not flying Colours like ours, but a golden Eagle meddal wiſe incloſed in a little fabrick like a Temple: of ſuch a kind were theſe ſilver Temples of Diana, namely a little ſilver ſhrine made after the faſhion of the Temple and the Goddeſs in it.

The great Temple was reputed one of the ſeven wondrous fabricks of the world: It was hundreds of years in building at the charge of all Aſia, before it came to its laſt excellency and perfection. And as hither had been the conflux of the coſt of all Aſia toward the building of it, ſo when it was built, hither was the conflux of all Aſia's ſuperſtition. And as from hence it may be gathered how great a work it was to plant the Goſpel in this center of Idolatry, ſo doth Demetrius readily obſerve, how great a detriment is like to accrew to him and his fellows by the Goſpels deſtroying that Idolatry, as daily it did. Hereupon they raiſe a tumult againſt Paul, which is not only promoted by the Idolatrous Heathen, but by the Jews alſo, though upon another ſcore. In the hubbub there is mention of Alexander, whom they drew out of the multitude the Jews putting him forward. And he beckned with the hand and would have made his defence unto the People, but when they knew he was a Jew they would not hear him, ver. 33, 34. And Paul in his ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, who was at Epheſus when he wrote to him, ſaith, Alexander the Copper-ſmith did me much evil, 2 Tim. 4. 14. I think there is little queſtion to be made but that Alexander mentioned in both places is one and the ſame man: eſpecially if we conſider that he that Paul ſpeaks of was of Demetrius his Profeſſion a Copper-ſmith. Now whereas Luke ſaith the Jews put him forward, and he would fain have made a ſpeech in his defence to the people: it is eaſie to gueſs what the ſubject of this ſpeech would have been: Namely that whereas the Heathens every where looked upon the Jews as the great oppoſers and enemies of their Idolatry, and the Jews and Alexander were very apprehenſive, that the eyes of the Epheſians was on that Nation as the enemy of their Diana, and ſo they feared the tumult might have fallen upon them, they put forward Alexander to make their Apology, who if he had had liberty to have ſpoken would have laid load upon Paul and his company, and have excuſed the Jews: but thus it pleaſed God to provide for the Apoſtles ſafety, that the tumultuous people would not hear what Alexander would have ſaid: which would have laid all the blame on Paul.

ACTS CHAP. XX.

Ver. 1. And after the uproar was ceaſed, Paul called unto him the Diſciples, and imbraced them, and departed for to go into Macedonia.

2. And when he had gone over thoſe parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece.

3. And abode there three months: and when the Jews laid wait for him as he was about to ſayl into Syria, he purpoſed to return thorow Macedonia.

IT was his reſolution to have ſtaied at Epheſus till Pentecoſt, had he had no diſquieture or diſturbance there, 1 Cor. 16. 8. Now though it be not certain how long it was before the time that he had fixed for his departure, that the tumult there did pack him away: yet this is apparent, that when he came thence, he had the whole ſummer before him, and in that ſummer he travelled theſe journeys, and thus was his progreſs.

1. From Epheſus he ſetteth for Macedonia, ver. 1 & 1 Cor. 16. 5. from whence though he had been driven ſome five years ago by perſecution, Act. 16. as he is now from Epheſus, yet had he received ſo many evidences of the Macedonians faith towards God, and pledges of their tenderneſs and love towards himſelf, Philip. 4. 15, 16. that he is not only reſolved to venture himſelf again amongſt them, but he holds himſelf ingaged to reviſit them, and to beſtow his pains again among them for their further proficiency in the Goſpel. At his departure from Epheſus he leaveth Timothy there behind him, though in a dangerous place and time, yet neceſſity by reaſon of falſe teachers that were ready to break out, ſo requiring it, 1 Tim. 1. 3, 4.

2. By the way as he goes he makes ſome ſtay at Troas: where though he had fair ſucceſs in his Miniſtry, yet not finding Titus whom he expected to have met withall from Corinth, he makes not long ſtay there, but ſets away again ſpeedily for Macedonia, 2 Cor. 2. 12, 13.

3. It was in his thoughts whilſt he was at Epheſus, to have touched at Corinth, in this his journey, and to have made ſome ſtay there, 2 Cor. 1. 15, 16. but thus miſſing of Titus at Troas, and neither from him, nor yet from any other receiving intelligence how his Epiſtle

Epiſtle that he had written thither took with them, he thought it beſt to go by, and not to call there at this time, becauſe he doubted he ſhould have a heavy and comfortleſs meeting with them, 2 Cor. 2. 1, 2.

4. Being come into Macedonia he finds ſome troubles there: fightings without, either from falſe brethren, or from open enemies: and fears and unquietneſs within leſt all ſhould continue at Corinth, as he had herd of it: but at the laſt Titus cometh and refreſheth him with the deſired and welcome tidings that all was well there, and that his Epiſtle had had that happy iſſue and effect among them that he longed for, 2 Cor. 7.5,6.

5. Whilſt he ſtaieth in Macedonia and thoſe parts, he preacheth eſpecially in thoſe places where he had been before, namely Theſſalonica and Philippi; and now was the time alſo that he diſperſed the Goſpel as far as to Illyricum, of which he ſpeaketh in Rom. 15. 19.

6. At this time whilſt he was imployed in theſe Macedonian climates, he writeth, as may be concluded upon theſe obſervations,

THE FIRST EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY;

1. It is apparent from 1 Tim. 1. 3. & 3. 15. that that Epiſtle was written after Pauls ſetting out from Epheſus for Macedonia, and yet when he was in ſome thoughts of returning ſhortly for Epheſus again.

2. Now it cannot be conceived to have been written when he was going towards Macedonia, for then was he but newly parted from Timothy, and it is not likely he would ſo write to him when he was but newly come from him.

3. Nor can it be conceived to be written when he was coming back again from Macedonia into Greece, for then he was going to Epheſus in his own determination, and might have been his own meſſenger, aud had needed no Epiſtle ſending at all. And beſides he intimates in Chap. 3. 16. that it might be, he might ſtay a little long before he came to him: Therefore it cannot but be concluded that this Epiſtle was written whilſt he was in Macedonia or the parts thereabouts, at this time that we are upon.

It is ſomething ſtrange that there ſhould be ſo various and roving conjectures about the time and place of the writing of this Epiſtle where there is ſo plain a demonſtration thereof in the Epiſtle it ſelf, if ſtudiouſly compared with theſe times and voyages of Paul that are before us. The Arabick dateth it from Athens: ſuppoſing it, belike, at the time of his perambulation of Greece, of which there is mention in ver. 3. of this Chapter: the Syriaek from Laodicea: ſome Greek copies add from Laodicea Pacatiana: which miſtake belike grew, becauſe there is mention of an Epiſtle from Laodicea, Coloſ. 4. 16. of which we ſhall ſpeak and ſhew the miſtake when we come to the time of that Epiſtle. The Rhemiſts ſuppoſe this Epiſtle to Timothy was written at Pauls firſt impriſonment in Rome, when he was diſmiſſed and ſet at liberty, but how erroniouſly, will appear when we come to obſerve the time of the ſecond Epiſtle.

Paul had beſtowed much pains and a long time with the Church of Epheſus being preſent with it: and he takes much care of it now he is gone thence: partly becauſe of the eminency of the place, and partly becauſe of the ficklenes of ſome, who were ready to warp from the ſound truth and doctrine received, to hereſie and fooliſh opinions. For the keeping down of theſe therefore that they ſhould not overgrow the Church, he leaveth Timothy there, when himſelf departeth; chooſing him for that imployment above all other his followers, becauſe [as was ſaid before] ſome prophetick predictions had ſealed him for a ſingular and extraordinary inſtrument in the Goſpel, 1 Tim. 2.14.

He had two works to do in that City: firſt to prevent riſing Errors and Heterodoxies, and ſecondly to direct and order the Orthodox aright in Worſhip and diſcipline: not as any Dioceſan Biſhop [for he ſtaied but a while there, and what he did, he did but by the Apoſtles direction,] but as one that Paul had found ſound, bold, blameleſs, painfull and faithful.

Among the Jewiſh Churches that received the Goſpel, there grew in time a very epidemical and dangerous Apoſtacy, either totally from the Doctrine of the Goſpel, or partially from the purity of it, as we have frequent occaſion to obſerve upon ſeveral paſſages that we meet withal as we go along: and this backſliding from the Doctrine and Profeſſion of Chriſt once received, was the topping up of the iniquity of that Nation, and was a forerunner and a haſtner of their deſtruction and caſting off.

The firſt principles whereby their falſe teachers did priſon them towards this recidivation, were, puzzling them with idle fables, intricate genealogies, and eſpecially nice curioſities, and needleſs obligations of the Law: Their fables that were likelieſt to ſerve their turn for this purpoſe [as near as one may gueſs upon view of the whole heap in their Talmudick Records] may be ſuppoſed to have been thoſe ſtrange legends that they related related of the wondrous ſanctity, devotion and facts of ſome of their Phariſaical and legal righteous ones, and the wondrous gallantry and golden daies that they conceited in a carnal conſtruction of the times of Meſſias.

Their endleſs genealogies which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of Tit. 3. 9. and mentioneth together with theſe fables, 1 Tim. 1.4. were not any of the genealogies of Scripture, holy and divine, but their long and intricate pedigrees that they ſtood upon, to prove themſelves Jews, Levites, Prieſts and the like, thereby to intereſt themſelves in claim to all thoſe brave things that they perſwaded themſelves belonged to a Jew as a Jew, upon that very account: And to theſe we may add the long genealogy and pedigree of their traditions which they derived by a long line of ſucceſſion through the hands of I know not how many Doctors: of which the Talmudick Treatiſe Avoth, is as a Herald. And if we will conſtrue the word יוחסין Juchaſin, Genealogies, in the עשרה יוחסין Aſerah Juchaſin Ten linages, that they ſpeak of that came out of Babel at the return of the captivity, I am ſure we may find endleſs queſtions wherewithal they puzzeled mens minds about them; as Vid. Talm. in Kidduſhin per. 4. Alpheſ. ibid, &c.

And as for their making their baits of the Law for the catching and withdrawing of ſimple ſouls either totally from the acknowledging, or at leaſt from the ſimplicety of the Goſpel, it is very obvious in the Epiſtles of Paul and the other Epiſtles how they wrought, and how they prevailed: the witchery of old cuſtoms and long uſe, and the gawdineſs of a Ceremonious Religion, helping them to ſpeed in their deſigns, and forwarding their deceivings.

Such canker began to break out in the Church of Epheſus: whoſe creeping and infecting, it is the firſt and great work of Timothy to prevent, and to fill the ears of his hearers with ſound doctrine and admonitions, which might keep ſuch deceit and infection out. And anſwerably it muſt be his care to ſettle the Church in ſuch a ſalubrious conſtitution of Worſhip, Miniſtry and Government, as that it ſhould not be ready to ſway and incline to ſuch dangerous ſeductions. Hereupon doth the Apoſtle lay a divine Directory before him, concerning their manner of praying, chooſing and ordaining of Miniſters, approving Deacons, admitting widows, and regulating the people, that nothing could be wanting to the healthfull temper of that Church if they receive and imbrace theſe applications: In the moſt of which preſcriptions he uſeth exceeding much of their Synagogue language, that he may be the better underſtood, and reflecteth upon divers of their own Laws and cuſtoms, that what he preſcribeth may imprint upon them with the more conviction. He calleth the Miniſter Epiſcopus, from the common and known title The Chazan or Overſeer in the Synagogue: Aruch in חזן. He preſcribeth rules and qualifications for his choice, in moſt things ſuitable to their own cautions in chooſing of an Elder: Maym. in Sanhedr. per. 4. He ſpeaketh of Elders ruling only, and Elders ruling and labouring in the Word and Doctrine: meaning in this diſtinction, that ſame that he had ſpoken of in Chap. 3. Biſhops and Deacons. Both theſe in the common language then beſt known, were called Elders, and both owned as Rulers. Yea the very title that they uſually termed Deacons by [Parnaſin] was the common word that was uſed to ſignifie a Ruler. The Jeruſalem Talmud in Peah. fol. 21.1. ſpeaking of the three Parnaſin or Deacons that were in every Synagogue, hath theſe two paſſages, which may be ſome illuſtration to two paſſages in this Epiſtle. They appoint not leſs then three Pernaſin in the Congregation: for if matters of money were judged by three, matters of life much more require three to manage them. Obſerve that the Deacons Office was accounted as an Office that concerned life, namely in taking care for the ſubſiſtance of the poor. According to this may that in Chap. 3. 12. be underſtood. For they that have uſed the Office of a Deacon well, purchaſe to themſelves a good degree. A good degree towards being intruſted with ſouls, when they have been faithful in diſcharge of their truſt concerning the life of the body. The other paſſage is this, R. Haggai whenſoever he appointed Parnaſin [Deacons] he urged the Law upon the People, ſaying, All rule that is given, is given from the Law, &c. And here you may likewiſe obſerve, that Deaconſhip is called Rule.

We obſerve before, that it were not ſo monſtrous as it might ſeem, if by Elders that ruled only we ſhould underſtand a Civil Magiſtracy or Bench in every Congregation, as there was in every Synagogue; but ſince the Apoſtle nameth only Biſhops and Deacons, his interpretation here is beſt taken from and within himſelf; and to underſtand the Elders that ruled only of the Deacons, which were called both Elders and Rulers, as well as the Miniſters: and in the Jews Synagogues were profeſſed Scholars: The Talmudick place now cited tells us that R. Eliezer one of their greateſt Rabbins was a Parnas, or Deacon in a Synagogue. The Epiſcopi or Miniſters are titled οἱ κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδασκαλία, that laboured in the Word and Doctrine: which moſt properly is to be underſtood diſtinctly thus, which laboured in the Word, and which laboured in teaching: and the former to denote their laborioufneſs in ſtudy to inable them to teach, and the latter their laborioufneſs in teaching. Κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ is but the common phraſe of the Jews turned ed into Greek לעי בחורי [See the Syriack here] by which they mean a great ſtudent in the Law. Among multitudes of inſtances that might be alledged, I ſhall produce but this one out of Jeruſ. in Maaſar ſheni fol. 56. col. 2. R. Jonah paid his Tithes to R. Acha bar Ulla, not becauſe he was a Prieſt אלא משום רהורי לעי באורייתא but becauſe he laboured in the Law, that is, was a great ſtudent and an able teacher. They that ſuppoſe that the tithes under the Law were paid only at the temple, and to maintain the Prieſts in the ceremonious worſhip there, and upon this conceit look upon them only as Levitical, are far deceived: for as ſome were indeed paid at the Temple upon ſuch an account, ſo others and that the Greateſt part, were paid to the Prieſts and Levites in their 48 Univerſities, Joſh. 21. to maintain them whilſt they were ſtudying there, to inable them for the Miniſtry, and to teach the people, for which they were deſigned, Deut. 33. 10. Mal. 2. 7. and when they were diſperſed through the Land, into the ſeveral Synagogues to be Miniſters in them, tithes were alſo paid for their maintenance there.

He ſpeaketh of proviſion to be made for poor Widdows, even much according to the Jews own rules, that they went by in their Synagogues, which herein were good. The Talmudick Treatiſe Jevamoth ſpeaketh of this matter at large, and ſee Maym in אישות per. 18. & 20. The Widdows he allows to be taken in, to be maintained of the publick ſtock, he would have not to be Widdows by divorce, nor Widdows young; but of 60 years of age, and of grave and holy qualifications: Not that theſe were to vow the vow of continency [as ſee what a miſerable ado the Rhemiſts make upon the place] but that they muſt bee ſuch as were likely to bring no more charge then themſelves upon the Church, nor bring any ſhame or reproach by the lightneſs of their lives to it, and might be ſerviceable in their places, to attend upon ſtrangers, to waſh their feet, &c. But as for younger Widows, their age and thoſe times were dangerous, when the Nicolaitan doctrine without [which taught communicating with things of Idolatry and Fornication, and mixing and marriage indifferently with heathen] meeting with the heat of youth within, might make ſuch to wax wanton againſt Chriſt, and deny the faith and marry with heathens: or at leaſt to bring charge upon the Church if they continued in it.

He injoyns prayers to be made for all ſorts of men, whereas the Jewiſh cuſtom was, to curſe the Heathen, and to pray for none but themſelves and their own Nation. He cals the Church the pillar and ground of truth, Chap. 3. 15. the very title by which the great Sanhedrin was ordinarily ſtiled. Vid. Maym. in Mamrin. per. 1. the obſerving of which may be of good uſe for the explanation of it here.

After ſome ſtay in Macedonia, and preaching up and down in thoſe parts, Paul turns back again, and goes for Greece, Act. 20. 2. and by the way viſiteth Creet and there leaveth Titus, Tit. 1. 5. thinking that he ſhould preſently after a little ſtay in Greece, have ſet towards Jeruſalem, and that Titus ſhould have ſtaied there till further time: For if what hath been ſpoken lately concerning Titus be conſidered, how Paul ſent him with his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, and that after their parting at Epheſus upon that occaſion, they never met till Titus cometh up to him, when he was come from Epheſus to Macedonia, 2 Cor. 7. 5, 6. it will readily reſolve, that in that firſt journey to Macedonia he left him not in Creet, for Titus and he were not yet met again ſince their parting at Epheſus. And that he left him not there at his ſecond coming up to Macedonia [namely after his travelling in Greece, and when he was prevented of his intended journey into Syria, Act. 20. 2, 3.] it is apparent alſo by this, that inſtantly upon his returning from Greece and from his prevented journey, he ſendeth for Titus to come to him upon warning, Tit. 3. 12. which two particulars joyntly obſerved do make it plain that he left Titus in Creet when he came back from Macedonia in his journey into Greece, and when he intended after his perambulation of Greece to have gone for Syria, but the lying in wait of ſome Jews for his life, turned him again to Macedonia.

In his return thither, or upon his coming there, he writeth

THE EPISTLE TO TITUS.

It is not much material to controvert whether he ſent this Epiſtle in the way as he went towards Macedonia, or when he was come up into Macedonia; it is enough to know, that it was in the ſcantling of time, either in his journey thither, or inſtantly upon his coming there. The poſtſcript hath dated it from Nicopolis, becauſe of his words in Chap. 3. 12. Come unto me to Nicopolis, for there I have determined to winter: from which words, as the affixer of the poſtſcript hath gathered ſome ground to date it thence, ſo others have gathered better ground, to hold that it was not dated thence, becauſe he ſaith not ἐντεῦθεν Here, but ἐκεῖ There I have determined to winter: as if he were not yet come thither.

Who firſt planted the Goſpel in Creete may be an endleſs inquiry: certain it is that ſome Cretans were preſent at the firſt pouring forth of the Holy Ghoſt in the gift of tongues, Acts 2. 8. but whether they imbraced the Goſpel and returned with it into their own Country,

Country, is an inquiry as endleſs: Whether Barnabas ever preached there we may queſtion alſo, but when we have done all we can never reſolve. It is more then probable that Paul was there himſelf, from that expreſſion I left thee in Creete, but his ſtay there when he left Titus could not be long, as is eaſily cleared from the time of his journeys lately mentioned.

Whether he had been there ſome time before, or whether he had ſent the Goſpel thither by ſome of his Miniſters, or however it came there, there wanted ſomething to the conſtituting of the Church, which he leaveth Titus to accompliſh: And his work is juſt the ſame that he left Timothy at Epheſus for, as is eaſily ſeen by laying together the two Epiſtles, viz. to ſtop the mouth of the Heterodox, and to direct and adviſe the Orthodox in Doctrine and Diſcipline, and to ordain Elders and Miniſters in the Churches.

This matter of ordaining Elders hath made the poſtſcripts of the Epiſtles to theſe two men to intitle them Biſhops, the one of Epheſus, and the other of Creet, who how little they ſtayed or ſetled in either of theſe places, he readeth but dimly that ſeeth not.

The Apoſtle in this Epiſtle urgeth him to diſpatch the buſineſs that lay before him, that upon notice from him, he might be ready to come up to him to Nicopolis: a City that bare the name and badge of the Victory that Auguſtus obtained againſt Anthony. Dion. Caſſ. pag. 426. & 443.

Titus according to his appointment came to him, and when winter began to draw over, and Paul began now to think of journying ere it were very long, he ſends him upon an imployment to another place: which becauſe it was when winter was going off, we muſt place it in another year.

CHRIST. LVI.	NERO. II.

A New year being now entred, and Paul intending for Syria as ſoon as the ſpring was a little up, he ſendeth Titus before hand to Corinth, to haſten their collections for the Saints in Judea, that they might be ready againſt Paul ſhould come thither. And with Titus he ſendeth two other brethren, and by them all he ſendeth

THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

The proof that it was written and ſent at this time and in this manner, is plain by theſe places and paſſages in it: Chap. 9. 2, 3, 4. I know the forwardneſs of your mind, for which I boaſt of you to them of Macedonia: Yet have I ſent the brethren, leſt our boaſting of you ſhould be in vain; leſt haply they of Macedonia come with me, &c. Chap. 12. 14. Behold the third time I am coming to you. Chap. 13. 1. This is the third time I am coming to you. And Chap. 8. 16. But thanks be unto God who put the ſame earneſt care into the heart of Titus for you. 17. Being more forward of his own accord he went unto you. 18. And with him we have ſent the brother whoſe praiſe is in the Goſpel. 22. And we have ſent with them our brother, whom we have often times proved diligent in many things, &c.

Who theſe two nameleſs perſons ſhould be, will require ſome inquiry. The later I ſuppoſe was Eraſtus, both becauſe his diligence had been approved before, Acts 19. 22, &c. and alſo becauſe it is ſaid Eraſtus abode at Corinth, 2 Tim. 4. yet he not named among Pauls retinue when he ſet out for Aſia, Act. 20. 4. becauſe he was gone to Corinth before.

As for the other brother whoſe praiſe is ſaid to be in the Goſpel, that very phraſe and expreſſion hath cauſed many to conceive, that it was Luke, and that the words mean, Who is famous in all the Churches for the Goſpel he hath written: whereas [beſides that groundleſs ſtrictneſs that is put upon the words, limiting them to the writing of a Goſpel, which according to that moſt uſual manner of ſpeech, are rather to be underſtood of his renown in preaching the Goſpel] it is apparent by the words of Luke himſelf, that he went not either before Paul to Corinth, as this brother ſpoken of did, nor did he go before Paul to Troas as the reſt that are named by him did, but he went in Pauls company: for obſerve his ſpeech, Theſe tarried for us at Troas: And we ſailed away from Philippi, &c. The words Us and We do plainly aſſociate the penman himſelf with Paul at his ſetting out, and ſhew that he was none of thoſe that were ſent before.

Others therefore do gueſs that this brother that went along with Titus, was Silas, becauſe it is ſaid, Who alſo was choſen by the Churches to travel with us, &c. Which very thing which they uſe for an argument to prove it Silas, proves againſt it, for Silas was not choſen by the Churches to go with Paul, any more than Timothy or Titus were; but he was choſen by Paul alone, as they alſo were. See Act. 15. 40.

That

That clauſe then, Who was alſo choſen of the Churches to travel with us, doth deal the matter betwixt Barnabas and Mark, for none other can be named, to whom the words can be ſo properly applied as to one of them: and of the two, moſt properly to Mark; and he I doubt not, is the man that is here intended: For 1. the words with us, joyn Paul and Barnabas together in their travel, and the third man who was choſen to travel with them was none but Mark. For 2. he was choſen by the Church at Jeruſalem for that purpoſe, Acts 12. 25. and by the Church at Antioch, Acts 13. 5. as theſe words he was choſen by the Churches do well explain thoſe verſes. 3. It is true indeed that Paul had taken diſtaſt at Mark, and ſo bitter, that Barnabas and he had parted upon it, Act. 15. 39. yet in his ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy he deſires Timothy to bring Mark to him, for that he is profitable to him for the Miniſtry, 2 Tim. 4. by which it appears that he was not only reconciled to him, but alſo that he had made uſe of him and found him uſeful: When it was that they knit into amity and imployment again, is not diſcoverable, but that they had done ſo, the paſſage newly alledged, doth make paſt denial; and if his imployment of Mark were not now, or before, he can no more imploy him, before he himſelf become a priſoner. When we come to the time and order of the ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, we ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak to this matter again, and ſhall find ſomething there to help the confirmation of this aſſertion, nay to raiſe it higher then yet it hath ſpoken, namely, that Mark was not only ſent by Paul to Corinth at this time, but alſo that he was at Corinth when Paul ſent for him to come to him to Rome. And thus if theſe words, Whoſe praiſe is in the Goſpel, were to be underſtood of one that had written a Goſpel, here is a ſubject to apply them to in that ſenſe, for this Mark wrote a Goſpel as well as Luke.

The Apoſtle in this ſecond Epiſtle to Corinth, doth firſt excuſe his not coming to them according as he had promiſed in his firſt Epiſtle, 1 Cor. 16. 5. clearing himſelf from all lightneſs in making, and from all unfaithfulneſs in breaking that promiſe, and pitching the main reaſon upon themſelves and their preſent condition: becauſe he had not yet intelligence when he went firſt into Macedonia, of any reformation among them of thoſe enormities that he had reproved in his firſt Epiſtle, therefore he was unwilling to come to them in heavineſs, and with a ſcourge. This his failing to come according to his promiſe, had opened the mouths of divers in his diſgrace, and falſe teachers took any other occaſion to vilifie him, which he copiouſly ſatisfies and vindicates himſelf all along the Epiſtle.

His exceeding zealous plainneſs with them, and dealing ſo home and throughly againſt their miſdemeanours as he did, was one advantage that falſe teachers and his illwillers took to open their mouth againſt him, and to withdraw hearts from him: and withal and mainly, becauſe he was ſo urgent againſt the works of the Law as to Juſtification, and thoſe rites which the Jews, even the moſt that were converted to the Goſpel, too much doted on. About the former, their taunt and ſcorn againſt him was, His Letters are weighty and powerful, but his bodily preſence is weak and ſpeech contemptible, Chap. 10. 10. A poor contemptible fellow [ſay they] to be ſo ſharp and ſupercilious in his Letters, this is more then he durſt ſpeak if he were here! &c. But let ſuch know, ſaies he, that what I am by Letters in abſence, I will be by words and in deed in preſence. Concerning both this and the latter named, they paſſed Feſtus his cenſure upon him, as Acts 26. 24. that he was beſides himſelf. This he mentions and anſwers, Chap. 5. 13. Whether we are beſides ourſelves it is for God, or whether we be ſober it is for your cauſe. For the love of Chriſt conſtraineth us, becauſe we thus judge: that if one died for all, then were all dead, &c. Since Chriſt died for all, that is, for Jews and Gentiles both, he could not but conclude that all were dead, the Jew as well as the Gentile; therefore he could not but ſo urgently call upon the Jew to look off his own righteouſneſs, and the works of the Law, and to look for Juſtification by faith in Chriſt. Another ſcandalous opinion and reproach they alſo took up of him, That he walked after the fleſh [a ſtrange ſlander of Paul] Chap. 10. 2. but this was but an appendix to that before: becauſe he was not Phariſaically preciſe about their trivial rites of the Law [which too many of them mixed with the Goſpel,] but cried them down; therefore they cried him up for carnal. His anſwer to this is, that his Miniſtry may witneſs the contrary for him, ver. 3, 4, 5. the end of which and the abundant effect of which was to beat down ſuch carnal affections and actions as were ſuch indeed: His expreſſion of the weapons of his warfare being ſtrong to pull down ſtrong holds, expounds that Num. 24. 17. of Chriſts ſmiting the corners of Moab, and deſtroying all the Sons of Seth. And he gives this for a ſecond anſwer, that if they would be but obedient, they ſhould ſee how his Apoſtolick power was ready to avenge diſobedience.

Since he hath ſuch back friends and open enemies in this Church, it is no wonder if he write ſo doubtingly of them how he ſhould find them: and that he ſtaied no longer with them when he came to them, as his ſtay was very little. His former Epiſtle, as it is apparent by ſeveral paſſages in this, had wrought them into a reaſonable good temper: but miſchief now was crept on them again, at leaſt there were ſome that were tampering to bring it on. In regard therefore of that vilifying that theſe falſe teachers, enemies of him him and God did ſet him at, and ſought to make him odious and contemptible in the eyes of the Church, he is put to it to make his vindication, and that, as the matter required with much largneſs and earneſtneſs. He therefore copiouſly diſcourſeth, what God had done by him, what he had ſuffered for God, and what he had done for the Churches; in any of which things let any of theſe that reviled him, come near him if they could. In relating the paſſages of his life, he mentioneth many things, of which there is no mention in his ſtory in the Acts of the Apoſtles: and frequently in his diſcourſe, he ſpeaketh of his folly in boaſting, as Chap. 11. 1. Bear with me a little in my folly, and ſee *ver.*16,17. becauſe indeed mans boaſting of himſelf is folly, and they would be ready to cenſure his ſo, therefore he ſtyles his by that title, though it were not folly in him, but a needfull and an holy vindication of himſelf and of his Miniſtry.

After he had ſent away this Epiſtle, by Titus, Eraſtus and Mark, if our conjecture fail not, and had given notice to the Corinthians of his ſpeedy coming to them, and warning to get their Collections ready againſt he came, he provideth for his journey into Syria, which he had intended ſo long: partly to viſit the Churches in theſe parts, and partly to bring up the Collections that he had got for the poor of Judea: which he had promiſed to the three Miniſters of the Circumciſion. Peter, James and John that he would be carefull of, *Gal.*2.10.

CHRIST. LVI.	NERO. II.

ACTS Chap. XX.

Ver. 4. And there accompanied him into Aſia Sopater of Berea: and of Theſſalonians, Ariſtarchus and Secundus: and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus: and of Aſia, Tychicus and Trophimus.

5. Theſe going before tarried for us at Troas.

6. And we ſet from Philippi, after the daies of unleavened bread.

THE ſtory, as hath been ſaid, hath brought us to another year, the beginning of which, that is, from the entrance of January and forward, even till Eaſter, Paul ſpent in Macedonia, ſtill wintring there, viz. in Nicopolis, Philippi, &c. and after Eaſter he ſets for Jeruſalem, ver.6. Therefore we have ſuperſcribed it, The ſecond of Nero, and of Chriſt the 56th.

When we come to ſpeak of the Epiſtle to the Romans, which we ſhall meet with in our way very ſhortly, we ſhall ſay ſomething of the names of theſe men [for many of them will meet us there:] only we cannot meet Timotheus here without ſome notice taken of him, and ſome quære how he came here. The laſt year Paul left him at Epheſus when himſelf came thence, and being come thence into Macedonia he ſends him an Epiſtle with his earneſt deſire in it, that he would ſtay there ſtill upon that needful imployment upon which he was left, 1 Tim. 1. how then is Timothy now got to him into Macedonia, ſo that he is with him at his ſetting away from Philippi? We have not indeed any intimation that Paul ſent for him away, as we have of his ſending for Titus whom he left in Creete, intendedly for a longer time: but it is very probable that Paul deſigning to have ſailed for Syria, came near to him: and there diſcovering the danger that was laid in his way by the Jews, which might alſo have infolded Timothy, he brought him away back again with him, and ſo both returned into Macedonia, and now winter is over, they are ſetting for Aſia again.

But when Paul and this his company are all going for Aſia together, why ſhould they not ſet out together, but theſe go before and tarry at Troas, and Paul and ſome other of his company come after? Nay they were all to meet at Troas as it appeareth, ver. 6. why might they not then have gone all together to Troas?

The reaſon of this was, becauſe Paul himſelf was to go by Corinth: and not minding to ſtay there but very little, becauſe he haſtned to Jeruſalem, he would not take his whole train thither, but ſends them away the next way they could go to Troas, himſelf promiſing and reſolving to be ſpeedily with them there. He had promiſed a long time to the Church of Corinth to come unto them, and he had newly ſent word in that Epiſtle that he had lately ſent, that now his coming would be ſpeedy, 2 *Cor.*12.14. Behold the third time I am ready to come to you: and *Chap.*13.1. This is the third time that I am coming to you: Not that he had been there twice before, for ſince his firſt departing thence [when he had ſtaied there a long time together, at his firſt planting of the Goſpel in that place] there is neither mention nor probability of his being there again, but this was the third time that he was in coming, having promiſed and intended a journey thither once before, but was prevented, prevented, 2 Cor. 1. 15,16,17. But now he not only promiſeth by the Epiſtle that he will come, but ſtaketh the three Brethren that he had ſent thither, for witneſſes and ſureties of that promiſe, 2 *Cor.*13.1,2. that in the mouth of thoſe witneſſes his promiſe might be eſtabliſhed and aſſured.

Now the time is come that he makes good his promiſe, and whilſt the reſt of his company go directly the next cut to Troas, he himſelf and Luke, and whom elſe he thought good to retain with him, go about by Corinth.

And now to look a little further into the reaſon of their thus parting company, and of Pauls ſhort ſtay at Corinth when he came there, we may take into thoughts [beſides how much he haſtned to Jeruſalem] the jealouſie that he had that he ſhould not find all things at Corinth ſo comfortable to himſelf, and ſo creditable to them, before thoſe that ſhould come with him, as he deſired. He hath many paſſages in the ſecond Epiſtle that he wrote to them, that glance that way: For though as to the general there was Reformation wrought among them upon the receiving of his firſt Epiſtle, and thereupon he ſpeaketh very excellent things of them, yet were there not a few that thought baſely of him, 2 Cor. 10. 1,2. and traduced him and his Doctrine, Chap. 11. & 12. and gave him cauſe to ſuſpect that his boaſting of that Church to the Churches of Macedonia might come off but indifferently, if the Macedonians ſhould come with him to ſee how all things were there, 2 Cor. 9.4. And therefore it was but the good policy of juſt fear, grief, and prudence to ſend them by another way, and he had very juſt cauſe to ſtay but a while when he came there.

From Corinth in his ſhort ſtay there, he writeth

THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS,

as hath been well ſuppoſed by ſome of the Ancients, is aſſerted by the poſtſcript, and may be concluded from theſe Obſervations.

1. That he ſaith, that he is now going to Jeruſalem to bring to the Saints that benevolence that they of Macedonia and Achaia had collected for them, Rom. 15.26. The word Achaia tels us that he now was ſure of the Corinthian contribution, which he was not ſure of, till he came there.

2. That he commendeth to the Romans, Phœbe a ſervant of the Church of Cenchræa, Rom. 16. 1. which Cenchræa was a place belonging to Corinth, as was obſerved before, though at ſome few miles diſtance.

3. That he calleth Eraſtus, Chamberlain of the City, Rom. 16.23. of whom it is ſaid Eraſtus abode at Corinth. 2 Tim.4.

4. That he calleth Gaius his hoſt, or the man with whom he lodged, and the hoſt of the whole Church, or in whoſe houſe ſtrangers had their intertainment, Rom. 16. 23. who was a Corinthian, 1 Cor. 1. 14. And hence it appeareth that Gaius of Derbe, who was one of thoſe that were gone before to Troas, was one man, and Gaius of Corinth was another.

It is true indeed that the greetings of ſome men were ſent in this Epiſtle which were not with Paul at this preſent in Corinth: as Timothies, Rom. 16.20. who was gone to Troas: and Soſipaters, who was gone thither alſo [for he I ſuppoſe is the ſame with Sopater of Berea, Acts 20.4.] and this might ſeem to infringe the truth of this opinion that holdeth that this Epiſtle was written from Corinth: But when it is conſidered how lately Paul and theſe men parted, and that it is paſt doubt that he would acquaint them before their parting of his intentions to ſend to Rome, it is no difficulty to conceive how their ſalutations came inſerted into that Epiſtle.

There are indeed ſome that confeſs that it was written from Corinth, but not at this time but at another, namely in that time when Paul travelled Greece, of which journey there is mention *Act.*20. in which time, among other places, they conceive he came to Corinth and there wrote this Epiſtle. But 1. it may very well be queſtioned whether he were at Corinth in theſe three months travels or no. For whereas he had promiſed to call on them as he went to Jeruſalem, 1 Cor. 16.7. [which he intended when he travelled thoſe three months, but that he diſcovered that the Jews lay in wait for him] he excuſeth himſelf for not coming according to that promiſe, 2 Cor. 1. 16, 17. And if it were granted that he was at Corinth at that time, yet 2. he could not write this Epiſtle at that time, becauſe when he wrote it, he knew the contribution of the Corinthian Church was then ready, Rom. 15.26. which when he travelled Greece, either indeed was not ſo, or at leaſt he knew not that it was, as appeareth copiouſly in his ſecond Epiſtle to that Church.

The Apoſtle in this moſt ſublime Epiſtle, clears fully and divinely, the two great myſteries of the Goſpel, Righteouſneſs by faith, and the calling of the Gentiles. And in the handling of theſe he handles the great points Original ſin, Election, and caſting off of the Jews. He laies this poſition down concerning the firſt, *Chap.*1.17. That in the Goſpel is revealed the Righteouſneſs of God [juſtifying, as in the Law was revealed his righteouſneſs or juſtice condemning] and that from faith [of immediate inixion upon God as was Adams before his fall, and as was that which the Jews owned in God] to faith, in the righteousnes of another: namely Christ. This way of justification he proveth first by shewing how far all men both by nature and action are from possibility of being justified of or by themselves, which he cleareth by the horrid sinfulnes of the Heathen, Chap. 1. [a large proof of which might be read at Rome at that very instant:] and little less sinfulnes of the Jews though they had the Law, Chap. 2. & 3. and therefore concludeth, Chap. 3. 30. that God justifieth the circumcision by faith [and not by works, as they stood upon it] and the uncircumcision through faith [for all their works that had been so abominable, and that seemed so contrary to justification.] In Chap. 4. he taketh up the example of Abraham, whom the Jews reputed most highly justified by his works, for they had this saying of him אברהם קיים את התורה כלה Abraham performed all the Law every whit: but he proveth that he found nothing by his own works, but by believing he found all. In Chap. 5. he proves the imputation of Christs righteousnes for Justification, by the parallel of the imputation of Adams sin for condemnation: Not at all intending to assert that as many as were condemned by Adam, were freed from that condemnation by the death of Christ, but purposely and only to prove the one imputation by the other.

It was a strange doctrine in the ears of a Jew to hear of being justified by the righteousnes of another, therefore he proves it by the like, mens being condemned for and by the unrighteousnes of another. Two close couched passages clear what he aimeth at: The first is in ver. 12. Διὰ τοῦτο ὥσπερ, &c. Wherefore as by one man sin entred into the World, &c. The word ὥσπερ As, properly requireth a So to follow it, as you may observe it doth, in ver. 15. 18, 19. but here there is no such thing expressed, therefore it is so to be understood; and the Apostles words to be construed to this sense. Wherefore it is, or the case is here as it was in Adam, as by one man sin entred into the World, &c. there imputation, so here. The second is ver. 18. in the Original verbatim thus. As by the transgression of one, upon all men to condemnation, so by the righteousnes of one, upon all men to justification of life. What, upon all men? Our Translation hath added some words to clear the sense, but the shortnes of the Apostles style doth better clear his intent: namely to intimate imputation: as speaking to this purpose, As by the transgression of one there was that that redounded to all to condemnation, so by the righteousnes of one there is that that redoundeth to all to justification of life: And to clear that he meaneth not that all that were condemned by Adams Fall were redeemed by Christ, he at once sheweth the descent of Original sin, and the descent of it for all the death and righteousnes of Christ, Quæ tamen profuerunt antequam fuerunt. Ver. 13. For till the Law sin was in the World: but sin is not imputed where there is no Law. Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses. By what Law was sin sin and did death reign, when the Law was not yet given? Namely by that Law that was given to Adam, and he brake, the guilt of which violation descends to all.

Having to the end of the fifth Chapter stated and proved Justification by faith, in Chap. 6, & 7, & 8. he speaks of the state of persons justified, which though they be not without sin, yet their state compared with Adams, even whilst he was sinless, it is far better then his: He invested in a created, finite, changeable humane righteousnes; they in the righteousnes of God uncreate, infinite, unchangeable. He having the principles of his holiness and righteousnes in his own nature, they theirs conveyed from Christ: He having neither Christ nor the Spirit, but left to himself and his natural purity; they having both. See Chap. 8. 1, 2, 9, 10, &c.

At the nineteenth verse of Chap. 8. he begins upon the second mystery that he hath to treat upon, the calling of the Gentiles, whom he calls πᾶσα κτίσις The whole Creation, or Every Creature: by which title they also are called, Mark 16. 15. Colos. 1. 23. and he shews how they were subject to vanity of Idolatry and the delusions of the devil, but must in time be delivered from this bondage, for which deliverance they now groaned: and not they only, but they of the Jews also, which had received the first-fruits of the Spirit, longed for their coming in, waiting for the adoption that is, the redemption of their whole body: for the Church of the Jews was but the child-like body, and accordingly their Ordinances were according to child-like age of the Church: but the stature of the fulnes of Christs mystical Body, was in the bringing in of the Gentiles. Being to handle this great point of the Calling of the Gentiles and Rejection of the jews, he begins at the bottom, at the great doctrine of Predestination, which he handles from ver. 29. of Chap. 8. to Chap. 9. 24. and then he falls upon the other. That Israel stumbled at Messias and fell, seeking indeed after righteousnes, but not his, but their own; and that they are cast away, but not all; A remnant to be saved, that belonged to the Election of Grace: As it was in the time when the World was Heathen, some of them that belonged to the Election, came in and were proselyted to the worship of the true God; so some of these, while all the rest of their Nation lie in unbelief. And in this unbelief must they lie till the fulnes of the Gentiles be come in, and then all Gods Israel is compleated.

The

The moſt that he ſalutes in the laſt Chapter, appear to have been of the Jewiſh Nation and the moſt of them [though now at Rome] yet ſome time to have been of Pauls company and acquaintance in ſome other place. The expulſion of the Jews out of Rome by Claudius Decree, might very well bring many of them into his converſe, as well as it did Priſcilla and Aquila whom he names firſt among them. Epenetus was one of his own converts of Achaia; Mary had beſtowed much labour on him, yet he hitherto had never been near Rome. He that would diſpute the point of the firſt planter of the Goſpel at Rome, might do well to make the firſt muſter of his thoughts here: And whereas the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the faith of the Roman Church as ſpoken of throughout the World, Chap. 1. ver. 8. it is very queſtionable whether he look to the times before the Decree of Claudius, or thoſe ſince Claudius death, when all the ſcattered were returned again, and many of thoſe that had come out unbelieving Jews had returned Chriſtians thither; as I believe the caſe was of Aquila and Priſcilla: and ſome converted in other places had now taken up their reſidence there, as Epenetus, Andronicus, and Junia, &c.

Thoſe whoſe ſalutations he ſendeth thither, may be the better judged of, who they were, by obſerving who were of his retinue at this time, which are named, Act. 20. 4. as 1. Timothy, 2. Lucius, who ſeemeth to be Luke, called now by a Latine name, in an Epiſtle to the Latines. He was with Paul at Corinth at the ſending away of the Epiſtle: for having mentioned the others that were gone to Troas, theſe ſaith he ſtaied for us, joyning himſelf in Pauls company now going to Corinth. 3. Jaſon ſeemeth to be he that is called Secundus, Acts 20. 4. the one his Hebrew name, and the other the ſame in Latine, for Secundus is ſaid to be a Theſſalonian, and ſo was Jaſon, Acts 17. 7. 4. Soſipater here in all probability, he that is called Sopater of Berea there. 5. Tertius that wrote out the Epiſtle, it may be was Silas: an Hebrician will ſee a fair likelihood of the one name in the other, it being written in Hebrew letters שלש: and the Hebrew names to the Romans are rendred in the Roman Idiome. 6. Gaius, the ſame in Greek with the ordinary Latine name Caius: it appears that he was a Corinthian, 1 Cor. 1. 13. and in that Paul here calls him, Mine hoſt, and the Hoſt of the whole Church: to the underſtanding of which, the obſerving of a cuſtom of the Jews may give ſome illuſtration. Maymony in his Treatiſe concerning the Sabbath, ſpeaking about that rite that they uſed of hallowing the Sabbath with a ſet form of words at his coming in, per. 30. hath this ſaying: This hallowing of the Sabbath may not be uſed, but only in the place where they eat: as for example, he may not uſe the hallowing words in one houſe, and eat in another. Why then do they uſe the hallowing word in the Synagogue; Becauſe of travellers that do eat and drink there. Where the Gloſs upon the place comments thus, It is evident that they did not eat in their Synagogues at all, as it is apparent in the eleventh Chapter of Maymonies Treatiſe of Prayer, but in a houſe near the Synagogue: and there they ſat at the hearing of the hallowing of the Sabbath, &c. It may be obſerved from hence, that ſtrangers and travellers were intertained in a place near the Synagogue [compare Acts 18. 7.] which was a publick Xenodochion or receptacle of ſtrangers, at the charge of the Congregation: which laudable cuſtom is almoſt apparent was tranſplanted into the Chriſtian Churches in thoſe times: as compare ſuch paſſages as thoſe, Heb. 13. 2. Acts 15. 4. And poſſibly thoſe Agapæ or feaſts of Charity ſpoken of in the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, are to be underſtood of theſe loving and charitable entertainment of ſtrangers. Jude ver. 12. Theſe are ſpots in your feaſts of Charity, when they feaſt with you, feeding themſelves without fear. Falſe teachers travelling abroad undiſcovered, and being intertained in theſe publick receptacles for ſtrangers, and at the publick charge, would find there a fit opportunity for themſelves to vent their errors and deceptions. In this ſenſe may Gaius very properly be underſtood the Hoſt of the whole Church, as being the officer or chief overſeer imployed by the Corinthian Church for theſe intertainments: In which alſo it was almoſt inevitable but ſome Women ſhould have their imployment: according to which cuſtom we may beſt underſtand ſuch places as theſe, Phœbe a ſervant of the Church at Cenchrea, ſhe hath been a ſuccourer of many. Ver. 6. Mary beſtowed much labour on us. And ſee 1 Tim. 5. 9, 10, &c. He ſpeaketh alſo of other Women of whom he giveth this teſtimony, that they laboured much in the Lord, as Tryphena and Tryphoſa and Perſis, ver. 12. which may either be underſtood in the like ſenſe: or if not ſo, of their great pains ſome other way for the honour and promotion of the Goſpel, and benefit of the Saints and themſelves: as by viſiting and relieving the poor and ſick, taking pains in following the Miniſters of the Goſpel, and venturing themſelves with them: hiding and cheriſhing them in times of danger, and ſo venturing themſelves for them: and ſo he ſaith Priſcilla and Aquila for his life laid down their own necks, &c. He ſalutes three of his own kinſmen Andronicus and Junia and Herodion: the two firſt were converted before him, and were of note among the Apoſtles: either being of the number of the 70 Diſciples, or eminent converts and cloſe followers of Chriſt, or of the Apoſtles in thoſe firſt times. He calls them his fellow priſoners: but if he had called them his priſoners, it had been eaſier to have told when and how. For they were in Chriſt, whilſt he was a perſecutor: but when they were impriſoned ned with him,after his converſion,is hard to find out. Among all that he ſalutes ſo kindly, where is Peter? If he were now at Rome how was he forgotten?

And we came to them to Troas in five daies: Where we abode ſeven daies.

And ſo to Ver. 17. of Chap. XXI.

FRom Philippi after Eaſter, he ſetteth away for Corinth, where he ſtaied ſo little, that he came to Troas within five daies after the company was come thither which had gone before: for ſo are the five daies to be underſtood: not that Paul in five daies went from Philippi to Corinth and Troas, but that his company which was ſet out with him,but ſet directly for Troas, had ſtaied but five daies at Troas, before he came up to them.

There he celebrates the Lords day and the Lords Supper,and preacheth and diſcourſeth all night [a thing not altogether ſtrange in the Jewiſh cuſtoms, Jeruſ. Sota fol. 16.4. R. Mair was teaching profoundly all the night of the Sabbath in the Synagogue of Chamath] So that Eutychus ſleeps and falls and is taken up dead, but recovered by miracle. The change and beginning and end of the Chriſtian Sabbath may be obſerved here.

When he goes now from thence, it is moſt likely it was the time when he left his Cloak, Pooks and Parchments with Carpus, 2 Tim. 4. 13. His Cloak: for he was now going among his own Nation in Judea: and there he was to wear his Jewiſh habit,and he left his Roman garb here, till he ſhould come into thoſe Roman quarters again. It may be,the Parchments were the Originals of thoſe Epiſtles that he had already written: for that he ſent tranſcripts, and reſerved the Original copies, may be collected from theſe paſſages, I Tertius who wrote out this Epiſtle, Rom.16. 22. The ſalutation of me Paul with my own hand,1 Cor. 16.21. Col. 4. 18. which was the token in every Epiſtle, 2 Theſ. 3. 17. for all the Epiſtle beſide was written with another hand.

From Troas by ſeveral journeys he cometh to Miletum: and thither he ſends for the Elders of the Church of Epheſus, which City was near at hand: But who were theſe? Not Timothy and Trophimus, for they were in his company already, and had been with him in his journey hither, but theſe twelve men upon whom he had laid his hands, and beſtowed on them the Holy Ghoſt, and ſo fitted them for the Miniſtry, Acts 19.6. and whomſoever beſides Timothy had ordained into the Miniſtry whilſt he was there.

Although the Epheſian and the reſt of the Aſian Churches, were but in an ill caſe at this time in regard of falſe doctrines and much Apoſtacy that had corrupted and cankared them, yet doth the Apoſtle foreſee that the caſe will be worſe and worſe with them ſtill, and that grievous Wolves ſhould yet break in upon them: And this he concludeth, not only from the boldneſs that he was aſſured falſe teachers would uſe and aſſume to themſelves when he was gone, but from thoſe predictions of Chriſt that had foretold what ſad Apoſtacy ſhould occur, and what falſe teachers ſhould ariſe before the great day of Jeruſalem came, which was now coming on apace.

ACTS Chap. XXI. Ver. 17.

And when we were come to Jeruſalem the Brethren received us gladly, &c.

PAUL is now got to Jeruſalem: And the firſt thing that we have to do about his ſtory there, is to calculate the time and conſider what Year it was when he came thither: and to prove if we can, that it was the ſecond Year of Nero, according as we have ſuperſcribed that Year: for this is of import, as to the fixing of thoſe Chronical Obſervations that we are to take up hereafter.

The common conſent in all times, hath fixed his coming to Jeruſalem and apprehenſion there to this Year, and yet amongſt all that have ſo concluded upon it, there is none that hath given any one clear proof or evidence at all for ſuch an aſſertion. Euſebius, Ado, Caſſiodore, Baronius, Lorinus, and divers others are of this mind, yet whereupon they grounded their opinion is hard to find, nay it is hard to find among many of them, any that goeth about to ſhew any groundwork for it at all. It would therefore ſave a great deal of labour to take their conſent without any more ado, and it might carry good credit with it, to go along with ſo general a tenet upon the word of ſo many Learned men: yet that we may not go altogether led blindfold by others, let theſe thing towards the proof of it be taken into conſideration. And firſt let us draw a Chronicle of Nero's time.

XIV.

Although theſe things affixed to the ſeveral Years of Nero, may ſeem very Heterogeneal to the thing we have in hand, yet we ſhall find them of good uſe when we have firſt cleared their truth and certainty.

1. That Poppæa became Nero's Minion in his 4*th.* Year is apparent by Tacitus Annal. lib. 13. Sect. 12. where he placeth the beginning of their adulterous acquaintance *A.U.C.*811. under the Conſulſhip of Nero III. and Valerius Meſſala.

2. That Nero ſlew his mother Agrippina in his fifth Year, the ſame Tacitus alſo aſſerteth, *lib.*14. *Sect.*1. placing that fact *A.U.C.*812. under the Conſulſhip of C. Vipſanius, and Fonteius Capito.

3. The marrying of Poppæa to Nero, as his Wife, he placeth in his eighth Year. Annal. lib. 14. Sect. 9. viz. A.U.C. 815. under the Conſulſhip of P. Marius, and L. Aſinius: and in the ſame Year he placeth the death of Pallas.

4. The beginning of the Wars of the Jews in Nero's 12*th.* and the entrance of Geſſius Florus into the Government, the Year before, is confirmed under this teſtimony of Joſephus, Antiq. lib. 20. cap. ult. Καὶ δὴ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἔλαβεν ὁ πόλεμος δευτέρῳ μὲν ἔτει τῆς ὑπατείας Φλώρου· ἐνδεκάτῳ δὲ τῆς Νέρωνος ἀρχῆς. Out of which how Baronius can bring the beginning of Florus his Government to be in the tenth of Nero, as he doth, I underſtand not: for if the twelfth Year of Nero were Florus his ſecond, then the eleventh was his firſt.

And now let us take in ſome things more, which we muſt apply to theſe times mentioned, to help us in the inqueſt we are about.

1. Joſephus ſaith, that when Portius Feſtus came into Felix room in the Government of Judea, the chief of the Jews of Cæſarea went to Rome to accuſe Felix; and he had been certainly puniſhed for his unjuſt dealing with the Jews, had not Nero been very favourable to him, at the intreaty of his brother Pallas, who was then very much in Cæſars eſteem. Antiq. lib.20.cap.7.

2. The ſame Joſephus alſo ſpeaking of the Government of Feſtus in Judea, he firſt mentioneth how he found the Country infeſted with rebels and robbers whom he overthrew: then he relateth how King Agrippa built his palace ſo at Hieruſalem, as that it overtopt the Temple Courts: which the Jews diſliking built a counterwall to hinder the proſpect, that it ſhould not view their ſervice and actions in the Temple. At this Agrippa and Feſtus took diſtaſt, and Feſtus commanded that the wall ſhould be pulled down: but the Jews deſired they might ſend Agents to Rome about this matter, which they did. And when Nero heard the caſe, ὃ μόνον συνέγνω πρὸς τὸ παρεχθὲν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνεχώρησεν, οὕτως ἐᾶν τὴν οἰκοδομίαν, τῇ γυναικὶ Ποππαίᾳ, Θεοσεβὴς γὰρ ἦν ὑπὲρ τῶν Ἰουδαίων δεησομένῃ. He did not only pardon the thing done: but he alſo conſented to ſuffer the building ſo to ſtand: vouchſafing this at the intreaty of his Wife Poppæa, for ſhe was devout, &c. Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 8. Obſerve the laſt words, At the intreaty of his Wife Poppæa.

3. The ſame Joſephus again relateth a journey of his own to Rome in theſe words: When I was ſix and twenty years old I went to Rome upon this occaſion. When Felix was Governour of Judea, he ſent certain Prieſts my near acquaintance, and very good men for a ſmall cauſe to Rome to appear before Cæſar. For whoſe deliverance I deſiring to find ſome means went to Rome, and there by the means of a certain Jew, Ποππαίᾳ τῇ τοῦ Καίσαρος γυναικὶ γνωστὸς. I came to be known to Poppæa Cæſars Wife.

Baronius doth revile Joſephus here as if he had forgot his own age: Videas in his [ſaith he] quæ ſuæ ætatis ſunt, ſuo ipſius teſtimonio convinci, annorum ſex turpiter errantem. And wherein? Quia affirmat ſe agentem annum ſupra vigeſimum ſextum ſub Fælice Judæa præſide Romam veniſſe. But Joſephus ſaith no ſuch word. He ſaith indeed that he went to Rome to labour the deliverance of ſome men that Felix had ſent thither in the time of his Government, but that Felix was in his Government when he went thither he ſaith not at all.

And

And now to take up what we have to obſerve upon theſe things that have been ſpoken.

1. It is true indeed, as Tacitus witneſſeth, that Pallas the brother of Felix, who had been Claudius his great favorite, and ſo Nero's alſo in Claudius time, did wane and decreaſe ſomewhat in his favour in a very ſhort time after his entrance into his reign: but he was not utterly laid flat, and out at all, till after Poppæa came into favour and amorouſneſs, who forwarded the death of Agrippina, and the bringing down of thoſe that were of her party as Pallas was. Therefore the power of Pallas with the Emperour ſeemeth to be expired in Nero's fifth year, in which Agrippina was ſlain. And by this account we cannot extend Felix his eſcape for his brother Pallas his ſake, beyond Nero's fourth Year. For conſidering Poppæas prevalency with the Emperour, when once ſhe became his Paramour, and conſidering her deteſtation of Agrippina and her faction of which Pallas was the chief, we cannot caſt Felix his diſcharge for Pallas his ſake, beyond Nero's fourth.

2. Paul lay two years priſoner at Cæſarea under Felix: Acts 24. 27. After two years Portius Feſtus came into Felix room. Many are the conjectures about theſe two years. Baronius ſaith, it was Expleto biennio Neronis. Magiſter Hiſtoriæ Scholaſticæ, ſaith it was Biennium ab accuſatione Felicis a Judæis. A Lapide cares not to think that Biennium hoc inchoandum a præfectura Felicis in Judæa, nam ante illud præfuerat Trachonitidi Batanææ & Gaulonitidi, &c. But it is moſt proper to hold, that theſe two years mean the time of Pauls being a priſoner under Felix from the time of his apprehenſion under Lyſias the chief Captain, till Felix his going out of his Government: and ſo it is held by Beda, Beza, Salmeron, Onuphrius and others. And this is ſo proper and ſuitable to the intent and diſcourſe of Luke, that it needeth no illuſtration or proof of it: and it is moſt agreeable to the Scriptures manner of accounting in all other places.

Theſe two things then being thus concluded on, it will follow that Pauls apprehenſion was in Nero's ſecond, and Felix went out of Office in Nero's fourth, before Poppæa was yet got into her potency. And the accounting of Pauls two years impriſonment under Felix to be thus. At Pentecoſt in Nero's ſecond he is apprehended, and at Pentecoſt in Nero's third he had been a year priſoner: and at Pentecoſt in Nero's fourth his two years are up: and that ſpring it was that Felix went out of Office, and went to Rome to make his anſwer, and Pallas his brother not yet utterly out of favour makes his peace. And now let us draw up the Chronology of Nero's time to the full, according to theſe evidences, and as referreth to our occaſion.

CHRIST.	NERO.

58.	4.	Felix removed. Feſtus cometh in: Paul ſhipped towards Rome, but wintreth by the way. Poppæa in Nero's eye, and becomes his Minion.

ACTS Chap. XXI. from Ver 17. to the end of the Chapter.

PAUL cometh to Jeruſalem at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, when the City was now full of conconflux to that feſtival. He reſorteth inſtantly to James the reſidentiary Apoſtle of the Circumciſion, for holding correſpondency ſake; and there he ſhews him the manner and fruit of his Miniſtry among the Gentiles. Which both by James and the Elders that were with him is well approved of, as to the thing it ſelf: but they certifie him of what complaints they heard from the Jews againſt him, for crying down the rites of Moſes, eſpecially Circumciſion, That thou teacheſt all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forſake Moſes, ſaying, that they ought not to circumciſe their Children, ver. 21.. Now becauſe thouſands of the Jews which believed were yet zealous of the Law, this gave much offence. But did Paul teach thus or not? No doubt he did, and it behoved him ſo to do: nor does, nor can James except againſt the Doctrine: for though it is true that he and Paul and the other Apoſtles permitted compliance with ſome of the Jewiſh rites for peace ſake for a while, as there is an example in this very place, yea Paul himſelf circumciſed Timothy upon that reaſon; yet the uſe of Circumciſion, as theſe that ſtood upon it, uſed it, was utterly inconſiſtent with the Goſpel. Hear this Apoſtles Doctrine, Behold I Paul ſay unto you, that if you be circumciſed, Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing. For I teſtifie again to every man that is circumciſed, that he is a debtor to the whole Law, Gal. 5. 2. A converted Jew would have his Son circumciſed: Paul asks him a reaſon; what can he anſwer, but it looks after ſome juſtification by it? as their own Authors ſpeak their thoughts: He that is circumciſed is perfect. And, He that is circumciſed ſhall not go to Gehinnom. And, I ſaid unto thee, in thy blood live, Ezek. 16. 6. This is the blood of Circumciſion, &c. Tanchum. in Gen. 17. & 18, &c.

They looked indeed upon Circumciſion as an admiſſion into the Covenant: and thereupon the Father of the Child at his Circumciſion conſtantly uſed theſe words, Bleſſed be thou O Lord our God who haſt ſanctified us by his Commandments, and commanded us to bring the Child into the Covenant of our Father Abraham. And they that ſtood by ſaid, As thou haſt brought him into the Covenant, ſo bring him into the Law and into the Bridechamber. Jeruſ. in Beracoth. fol. 13. col. 1. But withall they looked upon this Covenant as a Covenant of works, for, as we obſerved before, they reputed Abraham himſelf ſo juſtified. Good cauſe therefore had Paul to ſtand out againſt the convert Jews Circumciſing their Children, as whereby the Doctrine of Juſtification by faith was utterly enervated and made of no effect. And here by the way let us conceive we heard Paul and one of theſe parents diſputing upon this point. Circumciſe not thy Child, ſaith Paul, for if thou doſt thou laieſt an obligation upon him to obſerve the whole Law: and this may note to us that the Sacrament carried an obligation with it, and obliged an Infant, though he knew not what Law or Obligation ment: Baptiſm is for Obligation as well as this, and a Child capable of the Obligation though he underſtood not what it means. I, but ſaies the Parent, I will not look upon it, as in way to Juſtification, I will only uſe it for the Childs admiſſion into the Covenant of grace. If Infants Baptiſm were not now in uſe for ſuch a purpoſe, let one that denies it, tell me, what Paul had to anſwer.

James urgeth not Paul at all to any publick recantation of his Doctrine, but adviſeth him, by purifying himſelf and Judaizing a little in the Temple, to give ſome publick teſtimony for their ſatisfaction, that he was not ſuch an enemy to Moſes as he was reported: which he agreeth to. For the Temple rites might have better plea, while the Temple ſtood, then Circumciſion, which was none of them. On the ſecond or third day of his Purification, ſome Aſian Jews raiſe a tumult againſt him. It is not ſo properly rendred, And when the ſeven daies were almoſt ended, ver. 27. as rather, And as the ſeven daies were to have been accompliſhed, the computing of theſe twelve daies mentioned Chap. 24, 11. inforce that they ſhould be ſo interpreted.

They found him in the ſecond Court of the Temple the Court of the Women, whither no Heathen came [though they might come into the outer Court, called the mountain of the Houſe] and thither they ſuppoſed and pretended that he had brought a Gentile, Trophimus an Epheſian: For which he is fallen upon with that they called מכות מרדות The rebels beating ſtripes without number, the people falling pell mell upon him. Which was the way [as the Jews records inform us] that the Prieſts were dealt withal, that came into the next court above this, when any of them was deprehended there in their uncleanneſs: they never ſtood upon it, to bring him to judicial trial, but his fellows fell upon him, with the fagot ſticks of the Altar, or what came to hand, and mawled him with blows without meaſure even unto death: And ſo had Paul been ſerved now had not the Roman Commander come and been his reſcue. Yet did he ſuppoſe him an offender, and queſtions him whether he were not that Egyptian that not long before that time had made an inſurrection. Joſephus giveth this ſtory, Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 6. thus. It that time there cometh one to Jeruſalem out of Egypt, pretending himſelf to be a Prophet: and he counſelled the common people, that they ſhould go with him to Mount Olivet, and that there he would ſhew them how at his command the walls of Jeruſalem would fall: But Felix underſtanding this, ſent ſome horſe and foot againſt them, and ſlew 400 of them [our text here ſaies 4000.] and took two hundred priſoners.

ACTS Chap. XXII.

PAUL Apologizeth to the people: telleth his Education, Conſervation and Converſion: and relating how by a Divine Viſion he was appointed to go to the Gentiles, they begin a new commotion, which the chief captain again pacifieth; but yet thinks Paul ſome notable villain, or elſe that there would never have been ſo terrible cries againſt him: He would now have ſcourged him, but that he underſtood he was a Roman: therefore he turns to another courſe, and the next day brings him before the Sanhedrin. The ſitting of that Bench was little at Jeruſalem now: For as we have obſerved, they were unneſted from Jeruſalem divers years ago, and their moſt conſtant reſidence at preſent was at Jabneh: only they were now come up to the Feſtival.

ACTS Chap. XXIII. & XXIV. to Ver. 27.

RAbban Simeon the Son of Rabban Gamaliel, Pauls Maſter, was Preſident of the great Council at this time, for Gamaliel was dead ſome two or three years ago. Of him the Jews have this ſaying in Sotah per. 9. From the time that old Rabban Gamaliel died, the honour of the Law ceaſed; for till then they read and learned the Law ſtanding, but after his death ſitting. Onkelos the Targumiſt of the Law burnt a great quantity of frankincenſe for him at his Obſequies. Juchaſin fol. 53. Whether Rabban Simeon the Preſident were preſent at this Seſſion or no, Ananias the High-prieſt is as buſie as if he had been chief Preſident himſelf: But Paul cares for him as little, as he buſied himſelf much. He calls him whited wall, or arrant painted Hypocrite: And when he was checked for reviling Gods Highprieſt, I know not brethren, ſaith he, that he is Highprieſt: for if I took him for ſuch a one, I would not ſo have ſpoken to him, ſince it is written, Thou ſhalt not ſpeak evil of the Ruler of my People. It is not poſſible that Paul ſhould not know who and what Ananias was: but it is very indifferent, whether we underſtand this, as not owning this man for a lawful Highprieſt, or not owning any lawful Highprieſthood now at all. The man baſe and uſurping; and the Function of the Highprieſthood diſanulled by the great Highprieſt who had accompliſhed all that it typified, and the place of the Highprieſthood being become a common Merchandiſe, obtained by money and favour and diſpatching one another.

By a holy policy he divides the Council, and profeſſing himſelf by education a Phariſee, and of that belief in the point of the Reſurrection, he not only ſets Phariſees and Sadduces to a hot conteſtation between themſelves, but he makes the Phariſees, ſo far as to that opinion, to take his part: It had been poſſible to have ſet the Hillelian and Shammæan party together by the ears, by a bone handſomly caſt between them, for the Council had theſe factions in it, and their feud was as deadly; but Paul could own no article of their diviſions, that was worth his owning, they were ſo trivial and below his cogniſance. It is the confeſſion of the Jeruſalem Gemariſts in Joma fol. 38. col. 3. That the fault of their great ones under the ſecond Temple was love of money, and hatred one of another.

Paul in the hubbub is reſcued again by the Souldiery, and that night by revelation is warranted to appeal to Cæſar, by being informed he muſt go to Rome. A Conſpiracy of a pack of cut-throats to murder him, is prevented, and he is ſent to Cæſarea to Felix, where he lies priſoner two years. By ſuch packing and combining of murderers, it may eaſily be conjectured what temper the Nation was now in. Joſephus his character of it at theſe times is, That the affairs of the Jews grew every day worſe and worſe, and that the Country was full of theeves and Sorcerers, but Felix was daily picking them up to penalty after their deſert; the greater thief, the leſs; for his character yields him no better. Tacitus ſaies enough of him, when he ſpeaks but this, Antonius Felix, per omnem ſævitiam ac libidinem jus regium ſervili ingenio exercuit: Hiſtor. lib. 5. cap. 2. Upon which Joſephus will give you a large comment of his intolerable covetouſneſs, polling, cruelty, ſacriledge, murdering, and all manner of wickedneſs. His injurioufneſs to Paul in the ſtory before us, and the very naming of his wife Druſilla may be brand enough upon him: for her, by inticements and magical tricks, he allured to himſelf from her Husband and married her. And him he kept priſoner two years wrongfully becauſe he would not bribe him. In his pleading before him, he makes him tremble, but it is but a qualm and away.

CHRIST. LVII. NERO. III.

PAUL is a priſoner this year at Cæſarea under Felix. A great City of Jews and Greeks mixtly: the place where the firſt ſpark of Jews Wars kindled afterward. A famous Univerſity of Jews in time, if ſo be it was not ſo at this time.

CHRIST. LVIII. NERO. IV.

ACTS Chap. XXIV. Ver. 27.

PAUL ſtill a priſoner at Ceſarea under Felix for the firſt part of this year: Then cometh Feſtus into the Government, and Felix packeth to Rome to anſwer for his miſdemeanours.

ACTS Chap. XXV. & XXVI.

PAUL anſwereth for himſelf, firſt before Feſtus alone: then before Agrippa and his Siſter Bernice: this Agrippa was his Son whoſe death is related Acts 12. he by the favour of Claudius the Emperour ſucceeded his brother in Law-Uncle Herod [for ſuch relations did that Inceſtuous family find out] in the Kingdom of Chalcis. For Bernice his Siſter had married Herod King of Chalcis her Uncle and his, who was now dead, and this Agrippa ſucceeded him in his Kingdom, being alſo King of Judea. Of this Agrippa, as it is moſt probable, there is frequent mention among the Hebrew Writers: as particularly this, that King Agrippa reading the Law in the latter end of the year of releaſe, as it was injoyned, and coming to thoſe words, Deut. 17.15. Thouſhalt not ſet a ſtranger King over thee which is not of thy brethren, the tears ran down his cheeks [for he was not of the ſeed of Iſrael] which the Congregation obſerving, cried out. Be of good comfort O King Agrippa, thou art our brother. He was of their Religion though not of their blood, and well verſed in all the Laws and Cuſtoms as Paul ſpeaks, Chap. 26.3.

Berenice his Siſter, now a Widdow, lived with him, and that in more familiarity then was for their credit: afterwards ſhe fell into the like familiarity with Titus the Son of Veſpaſian, when he came up to the Jews Wars. There is mention in Jeruſ. in Taanith. fol. 66. col. 1. and again in Megillah fol. 70. col. 3. of the Scribes or learned Jews of Chalcis, againſt whom the people roſe and tumultuated. [In the one place it is written בולקוס in the other בלקוס.] It may be they were of this Agrippa's planting there.

As Paul pleads for himſelf, Feſtus takes him to be beſide himſelf: but Agrippa better acquainted with thoſe kind of things that he ſpake of, was much moved: and concludes that had he not appealed to Cæſar, he might have been quit. What he did in this appeal was not a ſmall thing, and it is very queſtionable whether ever Jew had appealed from their own Sanhedrin, to the Heathen Tribunal before. But for this he had a Divine Warrant.

ACTS Chap. XXVII.

PAUL ſhipped for Rome: and Luke with him, and Ariſtarchus a Theſſalonian. Paul calls him his fellow-priſoner, Coloſ. 4.10. whether now or not till he came to Rome is a queſtion: Trophimus an Epheſian is alſo now with him, Acts 21.29. whom he leaves ſick at Miletum, as he paſſeth by thoſe coaſts of Aſia, Acts 27.2. 2 Tim. 4. 20. and there likewiſe he leaves Timothy. Who elſe of thoſe that went with him to Jeruſalem, Acts 20. 4. were now with him, is uncertain. It was now far in the year, and Winter entring, for the feaſt of expiation was over, ſo that they met with a tempeſtuous journey, and at laſt ſuffer ſhipwrack and ſwim for their lives, and do all eſcape. The Reader by the time of the writing of the ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, which he hath paſſed, will eaſily, ſee that what he ſpeaks there, A day and a night have I been in the deep, 2 Cor. 11.25. cannot be underſtood of his ſhipwrack now, but refers to ſome time a good while ago.

CHRIST. LIX. NERO. V.

ACTS CHAP. XXVIII. from the beginning to Ver. 30.

PAUL and his company are the three winter months in Malta: where he doth some miracles. And when winter was now drawing over, they put to sea again, in an Alexandrian bottom, whose badge was Castor and Pollux: or the Picture of two young men on white horses, with either of them a javelin in his hand, and by him half an egge and a star: whom Heathenish folly and superstition conceited to have been twins begotten by Jupiter, and Deities favourable to those that sailed on the sea. And this seemeth to have been the reason why Luke doth mention this circumstance, because he would intimate the mens superstition, as expecting better sailing under this badge then they had had.

From Melita they sail to Syracuse in Sicilie, and there abide three daies. Form thence to Rhegium in Italy, and from thence to Puteoli: there they find Christians and stay with them seven daies: and then set away for Rome. At Appii Forum about Fifty miles from the City, some of the Roman Christians hearing of their coming, come to meet them: and at the Tres Tabernæ, Thirty three from the City, they met with more: and so they injoy the society of one another some space together as they travel along, which was no small refreshing to Paul, who had desired so much and so long to see them.

SECTION XXVIII.

Ver. 30. And Paul dwelt two whole years in his hired house, and received all that came to him.

31. Preaching the Kingdom of God and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

JULIUS the Centurion that had brought him and the rest of the Prisoners from Judea, had been his friend and favourer, from their first setting out, Chap. 27. 3. and so continued, even to the time of his setling in Rome: obtaining him this liberty, that he might take lodgings of his own, and there he was kept under a restraintless restraint: After three daies he sends for the Chief of the Jews, and laies open his case before them, and upon a day appointed he asserteth and expoundeth the truth and doctrine of the Gospel, whereupon some believe, but others do the rather become his enemies.

His accusers that were come from Judea to lay in his charge against him [for we can hardly suppose otherwise, but that some such were come] would be urgent to get their business dispatched that they might be returning to their own homes again; and so would bring him to trial as soon as they could: and that his trial was reasonable early this year, it appeareth by his own words in the second Epistle to Timothy, where he speaketh of his Answer that he had been at, and requireth Timothy to come to him before winter, 2 Tim. 4. 16.21.

As he appealed to Nero himself, so Nero himself heard his cause, Phil. 1. 13. 2 Tim. 4. 16. [and here it was possible Paul and Seneca might see each other] at which time all that had owned him before, withdrew themselves for fear, and durst not stand by him, or appear with him in this danger.

Tacitus mentioneth a case much like his, which had been tried two years before, namely of Pomponia Græcina a noble Lady of Rome, concerning a strange Religion. Superstitionis externæ rea, mariti judicio permissa. Isque prisco instituto, propinquis coram, de capite famaque conjugis cognovit, & insontem nuntiavit. This that he calleth externa superstitio, cannot well be understood of any Religion, but either Judaism or Christianity: for any Heathen superstition did relish so well with them, that it could hardly have brought her into danger. If her peril of life then were because of Christianity, as very well it might, it was a terrible example that lay before the Christians there: and if it were not, then this trial of Paul being of a doubtful issue and consequent and full of danger, it made poor Pauls friends to shrink aside in this his extremity, and to be to seek when he had most need of them. At my first answer, saith he, none stood with me, but all forsook me. In which words he doth not so much refer to what or how many more answers he was called to [as the postscript of that Epistle seemeth to construe it] as he doth intimate, that even at the very first pinch and appearance of danger, all that should have been his assistants started from him. It may be Demas his imbracing of the present world, 2 Tim. 4. 10. signifieth in this sense, that he forsook Paul, and shifted for himself and sculked to avoid the danger or if it be taken, that he returned to his worldly imployment again, or that he returned to his Judaism again: mean it what it will, we shall see in the story of the next year, that he returned to Paul and to his station again. So that his failing was but as Peters denial of his Master, repented of and recovered. It was a hard case and a great trial with the Apostle, when in so signal an incounter, and so imminent danger of his life, none of the Church that was at Rome, not any of those that were of his own retinue, durst own him, or stand by him in his exigent: but the Lord was with him, and brought him off safe from the Lions mouth: He being assured by this providence of God to him, and for him, in his great danger, that he was reserved for the further benefit of the Church and propagating of the Gospel, applieth himself to that work the best way he can, considering his condition of imprisonment; and whereas he cannot travel up and down to the Churches to preach to them as he had done, he visiteth divers of them with his Epistles: And first he writeth and sendeth it by Crescens, as may be conceived from 2 Tim. 4. 10. For though Demas, and Crescens, and Titus their departure from Paul be reckoned altogether in that verse, yet the reason of their departure cannot be judged to have been alike: for however Demas started upon some carnal respect, yet Crescens and Titus are not so branded, nor will the eminent piety of the later suffer us to have any such opinion of him, and the judging of him doth also help us to judge of Crescens who is joyned with him. The postscript of this Epistle both in the Greek, Syriack, Arabick, and divers other Translations, doth generally date it from Rome: Beza from Antioch: Erasmus from Ephesus, but all upon conjecture: for there is no intimation in the Epistle it self of the time or place of its writing: Beza upon these words in Chap. 1. ver. 2. And all the brethren which are with me, saith thus, Puto sic totum Antiochenæ Ecclesiæ Presbyterium significari, & inde scriptam hanc Epistolam, &c. I think by this he meaneth the whole Presbytery of the Church of Antioch, and that this Epistle was written from thence, at that time that passed between Paul and Barnabas their return into Asia from their first journey forth, and the coming of those troubles to Antioch, Acts 14.28. But that Apostacy in the Churches which the Apostle crieth out against in this Epistle and in others, was not then begun; and moreover it may well be questioned whether the Churches of Galatia were then planted. And the former answer, may likewise be given to the opinion that this Epistle was written from Ephesus: namely that at the time of Pauls being at Ephesus, the Apostacy which ere long did sorely and almost Epidemically infest the Churches, was but then beginning. And this is one reason why I suppose it written from Rome, at this time that we are upon, because that gangrene in the Eastern Churches was now come to ripeness, as it appears by the second Epistle to Timothy, which was written this same year: See 2 Tim. 1. 15.

False teachers had brought back the Galatians from the simplicity of the Gospel, to their old Ceremonious performances again, and to reliance upon the works of the Law for Justification: which miscarriage the Apostle taketh sharply to task in this Epistle. And first he vindicates his Apostleship as no whit inferiour to Peter and James and John the Ministers of the Circumcision, and those that chiefly seemed to be pillars, and he shews how those approved of him and it: And then he most divinely states the nature of the Law, at which was the great stumbling; and especially speaks to that point that they most stood upon, their living in it.

The Lord had laid a stone in Sion, which the Jews could not step over, but stumble at, even to this day: and that is that which is said in Levit. 18. 5. Ezek. 20. 11. and in other places, which the Apostle also toucheth in this Epistle, Chap. 3. 12. from whence they concluded that no living, no justification but by the works of the Law. The Apostle in the third Chapter of this Epistle laies down two conclusions that determine the case, and resolves all into faith. The first is in ver. 17. namely that the Law was not given to cross the Covenant of Grace, but to be subservient to it. The second in ver. 10. that the Law did plainly shew of it self that no man could perform it, but it left a man under the curse. Observe that he saith not, As many as fail of the works of the Law, but As many as are of the works of the Law: shewing that the Law did not only denounce a curse upon all that performed it not, but plainly demonstrated that none could perform it, and so left all under a curse: and these words, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things, &c. conclude both. So that the Law was not given for justification, but to be subservient to the Covenant of Justification: not to cross the Covenant but to serve it, not purposely to leave under the curse, but to shew the curse, and to drive men to get from under it. So that men might live in it, but not by it. It was the way in which men were to go to seek for Justification, but it was not the cause or means whereby they were justified. See Gal. 3. 5. The Jews made the Moral Law cross to the Covenant of Grace, whilst they sought to be justified by works: and they made the Ceremonial

Law

Law croſs the Moral, whileſt they reſolved all duty into Ceremony: and ſo the Law which in it ſelf was holy and pure and good, they turned to death unto themſelves by their abuſe. They might have lived in the Moral Law [had they uſed it aright,] though not by it: for the more a man ſets himſelf to the exact performance of it, the more he ſees he cannot perform it, and therefore he is driven the more to Chriſt: But they reſolved all into Ceremonious performance, and ſo loſt ſincerity toward the Moral, and hereupon the Ceremonial Law good in it ſelf, became to them Statutes not good, and Judgments wherein they could not live, Exek. 20. 25.

From Rome alſo, and reaſonable early in this year, Paul wrote and in it urgeth Timothy to come to him before Winter.

THE EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY;

Timothy was now at Epheſus when this Epiſtle was directed to him, as may be obſerved out of the Epiſtle it ſelf by theſe collections.

1. In that he willeth him to ſalute the houſhold of Oneſiphorus, Chap. 4. 19. who was an Epheſian, Chap. 1. 16, 18.

2. In that he biddeth him take Troas in his way as he comes to him, Chap. 4. 13. which had been the way that Paul himſelf had gone from Epheſus, 2 Cor. 2. 22. and to Epheſus again, Acts 20. 5.

3. In that he warneth him of Alexander, Chap. 4. 14. who was an Epheſian, 1 Tim. 1. 20. Act. 19. 33.

There is one paſſage in this Epiſtle, which hath cauſed ſome to doubt about the time of its writing [for about the place there is no doubt] and that is, what he ſaith, Chap. 4. 6. I am now ready to be offered up, and the time of my departure is at hand: which would make one think, that he was now ready to be martyred, and taken away, and it hath made ſome believe that this was the laſt Epiſtle that ever he wrote: but when we compare his own words again in ver. 17, 18. and Phil. 1. 25. and Philem. ver. 22. it maketh it paſt controverſie that he ſpeaketh not of his ſudden Martyrdoom, but that he is to be underſtood in ſome other ſenſe. But what is that? Baronius giveth this gloſs, The words of Paul concerning his ſpeedy death, ſeem not poſſibly otherwiſe to be underſtood, then that God had revealed it to him, that he ſhould ſuffer death under Nero. For that time might very well ſeem near which was to be fulfilled under the ſame Prince. I, but Nero for his age might have reigned 50 or 60 years after the Apoſtles writing of this Epiſtle, and ſo the laſt words of this gloſs, are but a very poor ſalving: And indeed the reſolution of the difficulty lieth open and conſpicuous in the text it ſelf. Paul looked upon Timothy as the prime and choice man that was to ſucceed him in the work of the Goſpel, when he himſelf ſhould be dead and gone: as being a young man, not only of ſingular qualifications for that work, but of whom there had been ſpecial Propheſies and predictions to ſuch a purpoſe, 1 Tim. 1. 18. as was obſerved before. He exhorts him therefore in this place, to improve all his pains and parts to the utmoſt, to do the work of an Evangeliſt, and to make proof of his Miniſtry to the full, for that he himſelf could not laſt long, being now grown old and worn with travel, and beſides all this, in bonds at preſent, and ſo in continual danger: therefore muſt Timothy be fitting himſelf daily to take his work up when he was gone.

With Timothy he deſires that Mark may come along with him to Rome, whom we obſerved to be at Corinth at Pauls laſt coming thither: and one clauſe in this Epiſtle ſeemeth alſo to ſpeak to that matter: Chap. 4. 20. Eraſtus abode at Corinth, but Trophimus I left at Miletum ſick. Eraſtus abode at Corinth; Why? that Timothy knew without any information, for he was with Paul all along that journey when Eraſtus went to Corinth and ſtaied there. And Trophimus I left at Miletum ſick: Why? Timothy could not but know that too, without Pauls telling him ſo from Rome, Miletum and Epheſus were ſo very near together, nay it is more than probable that Timothy was left at Miletum too when Trophimus was left there. But when was he left? Not when Paul went towards Jeruſalem, and ſent for the Elders of Epheſus to Miletum, Acts 20. for Trophimus went, and was with him at Jeruſalem, Acts 21. 19. But it was when Paul returned from Jeruſalem in bonds to Rome, as hath been ſaid, though it be not particularly mentioned that he touched there. Some would have the word Miletum to be read Mileta, among whom is Beza, who is ever one of the forwardeſt to tax the Text for corrupt, when he cannot clear it. Potius conjicio legendum ἐν Μελίτῃ [ſaith he] quod vocabulum facile fuit in Μιλήτῳ depravare. Luke ſaith plainly, that at Pauls coming away from Judea in his voyage to Rome, it was their reſolution to ſail by the coaſts of Aſia, Act 27. 2. which had been a far fairer ground to have concluded upon, that Paul was at Miletum in that voyage, ſince that was a part of thoſe Aſian coaſts, then to change Miletum into Melita upon no ground at all. And certainly the very ſcope of the Apoſtle in that paſſage will not admit of that change: for he is not telling Timothy of Eraſtus his abode at Corinth, or of Trophimus his ſick ſtay at Miletum, as things unknown to him, but as things very well known, yet mentioned to him as making to the Apoſtles preſent purpoſe: He had ſent for Timothy and Mark to come away to him to Rome, and to forward them to that journey, he doth theſe two things. 1. He ſheweth how all his company was ſcattered from him, ver. 9. 10. and therefore he had need of them in that deſtitution. 2. He telleth how ſupply might be made in their places though they came away, for though Mark ſhould come from Corinth, yet Eraſtus might be a ſupply, for Eraſtus abode there. And Timothy come away from Epheſus, yet Trophimus is there ready to ſupply his place, for Trophimus I left at Miletum ſick.

By Tychicus who was the bearer of this Epiſtle to Timothy, Chap. 4. 12. Paul alſo ſendeth for it is apparent that he was in bonds when he ſent that Epiſtle, Chap. 3. 1. and that he ſent it by Tychicus, Chap. 6. 21. That ye may know mine affairs and how I do, Tychicus a beloved brother, and faithful Miniſter in the Lord, ſhall make known to you all things, whom I have ſent unto you for the ſame purpoſe.

THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS;

In this Epiſtle he addreſſeth himſelf more eſpecially to the convert Gentiles of the Epheſian Church, to eſtabliſh and ſettle them in the truth, againſt that warping and wavering that was now too common: and he ſetteth himſelf to unfold the myſtery of the Goſpel in its full luſter, and diſcovery in a more ſpecial manner, and that eſpecially in the two firſt Chapters, as he himſelf profeſſeth in the third. By revelation God made known unto me the myſtery, as I wrote afore in few words, whereby when ye read ye may underſtand my knowledge in the myſtery of Chriſt, ver. 3, 4.

He ſpeaketh much of the myſtery of the Gentiles calling, and calleth the Jews and Gentiles knit in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Sone of God, A perfect man, and the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt, Chap. 4. 13. In Chap. 5. 26, 27. ſpeaking of Chriſts waſhing the Church, that he might preſent it to himſelf without ſpot or wrinckle, &c. he ſeemeth to allude to the Jews exceeding great curiouſneſs in their waſhings for purification. Maym. in Mikvaoth. per. 1. There muſt be nothing to interpoſe between the perſon that is waſhed and the water: for if there be any thing interpoſing betwixt him and the water, as if any clay or dough ſtick to his fleſh, he is unclean as he was, and his waſhing profits him nothing. And a little after: If there be upon the fleſh of a man or upon a veſſel, any of thoſe things that may interpoſe, as dough, pitch or the like, though it be no more then a grain of muſterdſeed, and he take it to thought, his waſhing profits him nothing.

What he ſaith in ver. 29. So ought Men to love their Wives even as their own bodies, is agreed to even by the Jews doctrine. Our Doctors teach, He that loves his Wife as his own body, and he that honours her more than his own body, and he that maketh his Sons to walk in a right way, &c. of ſuch a one the Scripture ſaith, Thou ſhalt know that peace ſhall be in thy Tabernacle, &c. Alphef. in Gittin per. ult.

CHRIST. LX.

NERO. VI.

WE are now come to the ſecond year of Pauls impriſonment: in which he had the changeable and different occurrences, of loving viſits and ſalutes from ſome Churches abroad, and croſs dealing from ſome ill-willed at home: ſome ſadneſs of heart by the ſickneſs of Epaphroditus near unto death, but comfort and reviving again by his recovery. The Church of Philippi had ſent him to viſit Paul in their name, and to bring him ſome tokens of their love for his ſupport and maintenance in his impriſonment: and the good man fell ſick in Rome very like to die: upon his recovery and return home again, Paul ſendeth by him

THE EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS, written in his name, and in the name of Timothy, who according to his appointment was now come to him. He ſheweth in this Epiſtle, that as there were ſome which preached the Goſpel of ſincerity, ſo were there other that preached of envy and contention, and ſo added affliction to his bonds: He was yet in bonds, but in ſome good hopes of deliverance, as he ſheweth in Chap. 2. 24. for he ſaith he hoped ere long to ſend Timothy to them, and himſelf to come with him: but we ſhall obſerve ere long, that when Paul hath got his liberty, Timothy is got into priſon, and ſo his journey for the preſent ſtopt.

He ſaluteth no Church in the platform of Biſhops and Deacons, but only this: not but that there were Biſhops and Deacons in other Churches as well as here, but it may be, he doth he doth it here the rather, becauſe of the Contribution that the Biſhops and Deacon: had gathered for him and ſent to him: or becauſe he would ſhew the platform of Office and Order in this Church of Philippi, which was purely Gentile, agreeable to that of the believing Jews Churches.

He giveth warning to beware of the heretical and unbelieving Jews, whom he cals dogs and the conciſion: and now the name they uſed to give to the Gentiles [Dogs] is light upon themſelves. The very Talmudiſts ſpeak as evil of that generation in which Meſſias ſhould come as the Scripture doth, 2 Tim. 3. 1, &c. and among other things they ſay thus: When the Son of David cometh, the Synagogues ſhall become ſtews: Galilee ſhall be deſtroyed: Gablah ſhall be deſolate [the Samaritan Verſion of the Pentateuch doth conſtantly render Seir, Gabla] and the men of the border of Iſrael ſhall go from City to City, and the wiſdom of the Scribes ſhall be abominated, and Religious perſons ſhall be ſcorned: And the faces of that generation ſhall be as dogs. Talm. bab. in Sanhedr. fol. 97. He calls them Κατατομὴν The conciſion: The word ſignifies ſuch ſuperſtitious and vain and impious cuttings in the fleſh as Heathens uſed: as 2 King. 18.28, &c. No more doth he make of their Circumciſion: the Greek word is uſed by the LXX. *Levit.*21.5.

He ſpeaketh of one in Philippi whom he calleth his true yokefellow: alluding it may be either to the word חבר by which the Jews did ordinarily expreſs great profeſſors of Religion: חבריא דרבנין a moſt ordinary phraſe in the Jeruſalem Talmud: Or the word זוגות yokes or couples whereby they expreſſed the Preſident and Vicepreſident of the Sanhedrin, thoſe famous couples Shemaiah and Abtalion, Hillel and Shammai, &c. Of whom it is that he ſpeaketh, is undeterminable. Barnabas or Silas might beſt bare the title. Whoſoever it was, it ſeemeth it was ſome worthy perſon who was at this time in that Church, whom he intreats to compoſe ſome differences that were then afoot; and to be helpful in ſome occaſions and caſes that he knew needful. It is not to be doubted but Epaphroditus, had acquainted him particularly with the ſtate of the Church, and he applies his exhortations accordingly.

As the Church of Philippi had ſent Epaphroditus to viſit him, ſo did the Church of Coloſſi ſend Epaphras one of their Miniſters to do the like, Coloſ. 1. 7, 8. whereupon, by Tychicus, who had been the laſt year at Epheſus to fetch Timothy, and returned with him to Rome, Col.4.7. and by Oneſimus a Coloſſian, Col.4.9. Paul and Timothy ſend

THE EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

The naming of Mark now with him, Chap. 4. 10. doth ſtate the time of writing this Epiſtle, and fixeth it to this year; or elſe it would be eaſier for Tychicus his travel, to have ſuppoſed that he brought it the laſt year when he came to Timothy to Epheſus, and Coloſſe was not far off: but the obſerving of Marks being now at Rome, puts the matter out of doubt. And whereas it might be thought more likely, that Epaphras that came with the viſit from the Church, ſhould bring this return of Paul back again, it appeareth by Chap. 4. 12. that he ſtaied ſtill with Paul and was fellow-priſoner now with him, Philem. ver. 23.

The Coloſſians had never ſeen Pauls face, no more had the Laodiceans; for no leſs can be gathered from his own words, Chap. 2. 1. yet had he been a means by ſome of his agents to plant theſe Churches, or at leaſt to afford them plentiful watering. The Apoſtles had ſubordinate Miniſters under them that they imployed to this purpoſe. I know not how the word Helps, 1 Cor. 12. 28. can be better underſtood.

The Laodiceans had ſent him an Epiſtle [as the Corinthians had alſo done, 1 Cor. 7. 1.] and this is that Epiſtle that he ſpeaketh of, Chap. 4. 16. See that ye reade likewiſe the Epiſtle from Laodicea. Not that he had written any Epiſtle from thence which is now loſt, as is conceived by ſome, for he was never there, but it meaneth that Epiſtle which the Laodiceans had ſent to him: Not that he would have it read, as of equal Divine authority with his own, but as a good copy and example to the Coloſſians. If any be not ſatisfied with this conſtruction, we ſhall offer another when we come to the Epiſtles of John, rather then conceive, that any Epiſtle of Paul is loſt, that was once read in the Churches.

Among thoſe whoſe ſalutations he ſends, he nameth Demas: who the laſt year was departed from him, and imbraced, as he thought, the preſent world. 2 Tim.4 10. but now is come in a good man again. The ſparks of grace once kindled, can never be quenched, yea though not diſcernable to the eye of a Paul: which however raked up under the aſhes by vehement temptation or corruption, yet covered with an everlaſting decree, of everlaſting love, are unextinguiſhable. The Act of grace, it is true, may be in a ſwone, and ſeem dead to the eyes of a Paul himſelf, whilſt yet there is the habit in life: I mean that gracious changedneſs, which by regeneration is wrought in the ſoul, the ſtony heart turned into fleſh, which though it may congeal into ice again, yet can never again congeal into into the ſtone it was. Fides qua apprehendens, its hand may ſlip, but fides qua apprehenſa, his hand cannot ſlip that hath laid hold upon it.

By theſe ſame bearers Tychicus and Oneſimus, by whom he ſends the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, he alſo ſends

THE EPISTLE TO PHILEMON.

For he was a Coloſſian, as appeareth by this that Paul calls Oneſimus his ſervant one of the Coloſſians, Col. 4. 9. and Archippus which was Miniſter at Coloſſe, Col. 4. 17. ſeemeth to have been Philemons ſon, or at leaſt to have ſojourned in his houſe, Philem. ver. 2. In this Epiſtle he ſendeth ſalutations from the perſons he did in the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians. Epaphras, Marcus, Ariſtarchus, Demas, Lucas: only there is this difference about two of them, that here he calls Epaphras his fellow-priſoner, which there he did not, and there Ariſtarchus his fellow-priſoner which here he doth not: This doing of the Apoſtle needeth to breed no ſcruple, but it may rather juſtly be inquired how theſe men came priſoners. Ariſtarchus ſet out with Paul from Jeruſalem, and he only is named of all his company, Act. 27. 2. either becauſe he was a priſoner then as Paul was, or becauſe the reſt with Paul were his attendants and Miniſters conſtantly with him, and therefore needed not to be named. Or if Ariſtarchus were not committed to priſon till now, the conſideration of Epaphras his caſe will include his: Epaphras came from Coloſſe but very lately, Col. 1. 7, 8. and how, and for what, is he now got into priſon? For anſwer to this we may properly take in ſomething out of the Roman ſtory. Suetonius in the Life of Nero ſpeaking of thoſe times of his that carried ſome moderation, in which he was not broke out to his extream wickedneſs: and mentioning ſome things that he did and enacted that looked ſomewhat like a Reformation, he ſaith thus: Multa ſub eo & animadverſa ſevere, & coercita, nec minus inſtituta: Adhibitus ſumptibus modus: Publicæ cænæ ad ſportulas redactæ: Interdictum ne quid in popinis coqui, præter legumina, aut olera veniret, cum antea nullum non opſonii genus proponeretur. Afflicti ſuppliciis Chriſtiani, genus hominum ſuperſtitionis novæ & maleficæ. This laſt particular is it that we have to deal with; The Chriſtians were put to puniſhment, a ſort of men of a new Religion, &c. Suet. in Nerone cap. 16.

Tacitus in the Life of the ſame Tyrant telleth of a dreadful fire that befel in Rome in the tenth year of his reign, [of which we ſhall ſpeak when we come there] which common report buzzed and rumored up and down that he had kindled. Abolendo rumori Nero ſubdidit reos, & quæſitiſſimis pœnis affecit, quos per flagitia inviſos, vulgus Chriſtianos appellat. Nero to ſtop that report, brought in as guilty thoſe who were called Chriſtians, and tortured them with exquiſite torments. The author of that name was Chriſt, who in the reign of Tiberius was put to death by Pontius Pilate. Repreſſaque in præſens exitiabilis ſuperſtitio, rurſus erumpebat, non modo per Judæam, originem ejus mali, ſed per urbem etiam; quo cuncta undique atrocia aut pudenda confluunt, celebranturque. Igitur primo correpti qui fatebantur, &c. For the Engliſhing of this, the words repreſſa in præſens will breed ſome diſpute; as doubtful, whether they mean that the Chriſtian Religion was ſuppreſſed by Nero at that time when he inflicted thoſe tortures upon them, pretending them guilty for firing the City, which was in his tenth year, but it brake out again after, for all that ſuppreſſion; or that they mean, that that Religion had been ſuppreſſed in former time, but now by that tenth year of Nero was broken out again, and he falls upon it anew. The words you may wind to whether conſtruction you will, conſtruing them either, That dangerous ſuperſtition ſuppreſſed for the preſent broke out again: or That dangerous ſuperſtition having been ſuppreſſed for a time, was broke out again; or, that had been ſuppreſſed till the preſent: Now though there be this dubiouſneſs in that phraſe, yet the obſervation of theſe things may ſtate it, that there was ſome ſuch ſuppreſſion of Chriſtianity before that open perſecution that broke out in his tenth year. 1. Becauſe Sueton ſpeaks of his afflicting the Chriſtians, as done in his way of Reformation of Religion, and that in his good times when he was not grown a monſter, and not by way of crimination of them, or for the ſalving of his own credit as he did in his tenth year. 2. There is mention of Pomponia Græcina tried for her life, about the beginning of Nero's reign, for matter of Religion as we mentioned before. 3. This impriſonment of Epaphras, and it may be of Ariſtarchus, at this time, and certainly of Timothy preſently after, may alſo confirm it: for what ſhould theſe men be impriſoned for but for Religion? It is very probable therefore that Nero had by ſome Act or Edict ſuppreſſed Chriſtianity, not only at Rome, but alſo in Judæa, as it ſeemeth by that clauſe in Tacitus, Rurſus erumpebat non modo per Judæam, &c. and if ſo, that might be a forwarder of that defection that was ſo general in the Churches of the Jews that had received the Goſpel; they falling to Moſes again, or joyning the adheſion to the Law with the profeſſion of the Goſpel: for thus hiding their Chriſtianity, they might retain their liberty of their Chriſtianity ſuch as it was,

was, the Religion of the Jews not being at all suppressed by him: However, if there were such a suppression at Rome, as it is very like there was, Pauls deliverance from the Lions mouth, was the more remarkable, since he was to answer not only to his accusers about his profession, but before a judge that was prejudiced against it so deeply.

But since we have heard of no stirring at Rome of all this time to such a tune, nor any mention of any imprisoning but only of Paul, how comes the matter to wax so hot now, since Nero's heat against any Christianity seemeth to have been some years, or at least a good while ago? Here we cannot but remember that passage in the Epistle to the Philippians so lately written: Philip. 1. 15, 16. Some preach Christ even of envy and strife, and some also of good will. The one preach Christ of contention not sincerity, supposing to add affliction to my bonds. By which it may be conjectured, that some enemies of Pauls and his companies, taking opportunity of Nero's declaration against Christianity did busle and make ado in preaching the Gospel, aiming at nothing more then this, that hereby the ringleaders in the Gospel Paul and his company [as no doubt they were noted so to be] might be the more narrowly looked after: and this might well be some occasion of the imprisonment of Epaphras and Timothy at this time, and of Aristarchus, if so be he were not a prisoner before.

CHRIST. LXI. NERO. VII.

THIS year is Timothy a prisoner, and Paul himself at liberty, for his two years imprisonment expired the later end of the last year or the beginning of this. You have intimation of this, Heb. 13. 23. where he saith, Know ye, that our brother Timothy is set at liberty: with whom if he come shortly I will see you: For I cannot interpret the word Ἀπολελυμένον otherwise then in reference to restraint; and then we may out of this passage observe that Timothy had been a prisoner, and that the Hebrews had known of his imprisonment, but now he was at liberty, and Paul too, ready to come away with him when he should come. He had written to the Philippians that he hoped shortly to send Timothy to them, Philip. 2. 19. and to Philemon to provide a lodging for him, for he hoped ere long to come into those parts, Philem. ver. 22. By which we may conclude, that upon his inlargement he intended not to have staid long at Rome, or that Timothy at the least should not have been long from them, but that his imprisonment, as it proved, hindred them both. Therefore we may not cast his commitment beyond this year; but how long he lay under restraint we cannot tell, only we may conceive him at liberty the next, for in that year we suppose the writing of the Epistle to the Hebrews which speaks of his inlargement.

In our thoughts about Nero's suppressing Christianity, and these mens bonds thereabout, we may also look with admiration at the wondrous workings of God: observe, that even at these times there was Christianity in Nero's household, Phil. 4. 22.

This year some occurrences befalling in this our own Country of England, though they are besides the argument that we are upon, yet may they not unfitly be taken into mention for Countries sake. Suetonius Paulinus was now General for the Romans here. He assails to take the Isle of Man, Incolis validam & receptaculum perfugarum, saith Tacitus: Strong in the inhabitants and a refuge for fugitives. He bringing on his men near the shore, finds an Army guarding and ready to forbid his landing. Among the men, there were women running up and down; In modum furiarum, veste ferali, crinibus dejectis faces præferebant. Like furies in a dreery garb, with their hair about their ears, and they carried torches. The Roman souldiers for a while stood amazed at such a sight, but at last falling on they enter and destroy them, and possess and Garrison the Island. Excisiq; luci sævis superstitionibus sacri; Nam cruore captivo adolere aras, & fibris hominum consulere Deo fas habebant. And they cut down the groves that were devoted to bloody superstition: For they used to sacrifice captives at their Altars, and to look into their inwards by way of auguration.

It is a remarkable and true saying of Pliny concerning Italy or Rome, That it was a Country Quæ sparsa congregaret imperia, rituſque molliret, & tot populorum discordes feraſque linguas sermonis commercio contraheret ad colloquia, & humanitatem homini daret. Nat. Hist. lib. 3. cap. 5. which in short is this, that it civilized the world, and taught barbarous Nations humanity. A strange assertion, if we consider the barbarous bloodiness and superstitions of the Romans themselves; yet if we look upon the thing it self, it is very true, they being a people of Learning, Discipline and Education, and planting these whersoever they got footing. And this was one means in the Lords providence, whose ways are past finding out, to harrow the worlds ruggedness, and to fit it the better for the sowing of the Gospel. In what temper our Land of Brittain was, as to civility, before they they came in, may be gueſſed by this garb of the Iſle of Man, ſo near relating to it, if we had no more evidence.

Whileſt Suetonius was thus buſied here, he hears of a revolt and rebellion in Brittain, cauſed partly by the cruel exaction of Decimus Catus the Governour, who revived ſome impoſitions that Claudius the Emperour had remitted, partly by the grinding uſury and exactions of Seneca, who having put them, even unwilling, to take vaſt ſums of money of his, to moſt unſufferable uſury, he now called it and the uſe in, with all extremity and mercileſneſs: And partly by an unhappy obſequiouſneſs of Praſutagus King of the Iceni, or at leaſt by an unhappy abuſing of his obſequiouſneſs: For he dying, and leaving Nero and his own two daughters his heirs by Will, the Roman Centurions as in claim to Nero's Legacy, ranſack and catch all they can, and pull his Kingdom all to pieces, and abuſe his wife and two daughters barbarouſly and inhumanely: and ſpare not either his friends, kindred or Nobles. This ſtirs all to commotion, which is eagerly proſecuted by Bondicea or Bunduica the widow of the King deceaſed, in ſo much that they deſtroy the Colony at Camalodunum, the Roman Garriſon and aſſociates at London, and the like at Verulam: in all to the number of 70000 perſons: Suetonius at laſt comes in, and fights them, they being near upon 230000 in arms under Bunduica, he routeth them, ſlays about 80000 of them: Bunduica for vexation poiſons her ſelf: and the Roman deſtroies with fire and ſword all the Towns before him that were of the adverſe party, or adhered to it: Divers prodigies are mentioned by the Hiſtorians, that relate theſe bloody occurrences as preſages of it: as the Sea bloody, ſtrange voices and howlings heard, ſights ſeen in the Thames, of houſes under water, a Colony overturned, &c.

CHRIST. LXII. | NERO. VIII.

PAUL in the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, Chap.4.10. intimateth that Mark, who was then with him at Rome, was likely ere long to come to them into the Eaſt, and he willeth them to receive him as from him, though there had once been diſagreement betwixt Mark and him. Whether Timothy's impriſonment delayed Mark's journey, may be ſome queſtion: for Paul having ſent for them two to come to him together, 2 Tim. 4.11. it is like he could ill part with the one, when the other was made uſeleſs to him by reſtraint: and ſo we have ſome cauſe to ſuppoſe, that while Timothy was in priſon, Mark remained with Paul. However, whenſoever it was that he went for the Eaſt, we have this reaſon to think that Paul wrote and ſent by him

THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS:

And that he having delivered it where Paul had appointed him, went away to Peter to Babylon in Chaldæa, becauſe Peter there, mentioneth Mark now with him, 1 Pet. 3. 15. And this Epiſtle, 2 *Pet.*3.15.

It is obſervable that theſe two great Apoſtles Peter and Paul the ſeveral Miniſters of the Circumciſion and Uncircumciſion, had their interchanged agents: Sylvanus or Silas, Pauls Miniſter, reſident with Peter, and imployed by him to carry his firſt Epiſtle: 1 Pet. 5. 12. And Mark, Peters Miniſter, reſident with Paul, 2 *Tim.*4.11. *Col.*4.10. and, very probably, imployed by him to carry this Epiſtle to the Hebrews. And thus in the interchanged agencies of their Miniſters, the parties with whom they had to deal, might own the joynt agreement of both the Apoſtles.

Although we dare not punctually aſſert either the bearer of this Epiſtle, or the exact time of its writing, yet that it was written and ſent about theſe times that we are upon, may be obſerved by theſe two boundaries that ſhut it up within ſome reaſonable compaſs of the time hereabout. Firſt, A parte ante, or that it could not be written much ſooner then this, may be concluded by this, that Timothy had gone through his impriſonment and was now inlarged before its writing, Heb. 13.23. And ſecondly, A parte poſt, or that it could not be written much after this time, may be obſerved from that paſſage Chap. 12.4. Ye have not yet reſiſted unto blood. For preſently after this bloody times came on.

That it was written by Paul, hath not only the concurrent conſent of all Copies and Tranſlations, but even this proof for it, That none can be named A priſoner, Chap.10.34. and in Italy, Chap.13.24. and in ſo near converſe with Timothy, Chap.13.25. [as the Author of this Epiſtle was] ſo likely as Paul.

His not affixing his name to this, as he had done to his other Epiſtles, doth no more deny it to be his, then the firſt Epiſtle of Johns is denied to be Johns upon the ſame account: especially considering that the name of the Apostle of the uncircumcision, would not sound so well before an Epistle to the Circumcised: and yet the more still, because he sent it by Mark [for so we cannot but suppose] who was a Minister of the Minister of the Circumcision, and who could easily inform them of the Writer.

Unto what part of the Jewish Nation he sendeth the Epistle under the indorsement To the Hebrews, and why that indorsement To the Hebrews rather then To the Jews, may be a useful and a needful Quære. It cannot be imagined but that he sendeth it to be delivered at a certain place within some reasonable compass, because it was impossible for the bearer, whosoever he was, to deliver it to all the Jews dispersion, and because in Chap. 13.23. he saith that when Timothy came, he would come with him, and see them. Therefore the title The Hebrews must determine the place, since there is nothing else to determine it. A double reason may be given why he so stileth them rather then Jews; namely, either because the name Jew was now beginning to become odious; or rather because he would point out the Jews that dwelt in Judea, or the Land of Israel. And this sense doth the Holy Ghost put upon the title the Hebrews, Act.6.1. where it is said, There was a murmuring of the Hellenists against the Hebrews: By The Hellenists meaning the Jews that dwelt in forreign Countries among the Greeks, and by The Hebrews those that dwelt in Judea. And so it is most proper to understand the inscription of this Epistle, namely that Paul directs, and sends it to the believing Jews of Judea: a people that had been much ingaged to him for his care of their poor, getting collections for them all along his travels, and Mark [whom we suppose the bearer of this Epistle] had come in to his attendance, and to the attendance of his Uncle Barnabas, when they had been in Judea to bring almes unto those Churches, Act. 11. & 12.

It is not to be doubted indeed that he intendeth the discourse and matter of this Epistle to the Jews throughout all their dispersion [and therefore Peter writing to the Jews of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia and Asia, applies it as written to them, 2 Pet. 3. 15.] yet doth he indorse it, and send it chiefly to The Hebrews or the Jews of Judea, the principal seat of the Circumcision, as the propereſt center whither to direct it, and from whence it might best diffuse in time to the whole circumference of their dispersion.

He hath to deal in it mainly with those things that the Jewish writers commonly call חוקות תלוות בארץ Ordinances affixed to the Land, or such Ceremonious part of their Religion, as while it stood, was confined to the Land, as Temple, Sacrifice, Priesthood, &c. Therefore it was most proper to direct his speech in its first bent, to those that dwelt in the Land, and were most near to those things, and who in those Apostatizing times that then were, had the neareſt occasion and temptation to draw them back from the purity of the Gospel to those rites again.

Unto that doubtfulness that some have taken up about the Original Tongue of this Epistle, as thinking it very improper that he should write in the Greek Tongue to the Hebrews, especially to the Hebrews in Judea, we need no better satisfaction then what the Hebrews themselves, yea the Hebrews of Judea may give to us, I mean the Jerusalem Gemarists, from several passages that they have about the Greek language.

In Megillah, fol. 71. col. 2. they say thus, There is a tradition from ben Kaphra, God shall inlarge Japhet, and he shall dwell in the tents of Sem: For they shall speak the language of Japhet in the tents of Sem. The Babylon Gemara on the same Treatise fol. 9. col. 2. resolves us, what Tongue of Japhet is meant; for having spoken all along before, of the excellency and dignity of the Greek Tongue it concludes יופיותו של יפת יהא באוהלי שם The very beauty of Japhet shall be in the tents of Sem.

Our men first named, say further thus: Rabbi Jonathan of Beth Gubrin saith, There are four Languages brave for the world to use, and they are these: The Vulgar, the Roman, the Syrian, and the Hebrew, and some also add the Assyrian: Now the question is, What Tongue he means by the Vulgar? Reason will name the Greek as soon as any; and Midras Tilim, makes it plain that this is meant; for fol. 25. col. 4. speaking of this very passage [but alledging it in somewhat different terms] he nameth the Greek which is not here named. Observe then that the Hebrews call the Greek the Vulgar Tongue.

They proceed, ibid. col. 3. It is a tradition. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel saith, In books they permitted not, that they should write, but only in Greek. They searched, and found, that the Law cannot be interpreted compleatly but only in the Greek. One once expounded to them, in the Syriack, out of the Greek. R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Chaijah ben Basaith, Aquila the proselyte interpreted the Law, before R. Eliezer and before R. Joshua. And they extolled him and said, Thou art fairer then the children of men.

And the same Talmud in Sotah fol. 21. col. 2. hath this record. Rabbi Levi went to Cæsarea, and heard them קריין שמע אלוניסתין rehearsing their Phylacteries Hellenistice, or, in the Greek Tongue. A passage very well worth observing: For if in Cæsarea were as learned Schools as any were in the Nation; And if their Phylacteries [pickt sentences out out of the Law] might above all things have challenged their rehearſal in the Hebrew Tongue, as their own writers ſhew, yet they ſay them over in Greek, Paul might very well write to the Hebrews in Judea in the Greek Tongue, when that Tongue was in ſo common a uſe even in an Univerſity of Judea it ſelf.

To theſe teſtimonies for the Greek Tongue, might be added, that which is ſpoken in the Treatiſe Shekalin, per. 3. halac. 2. Upon the three Treaſure Cheſts of the Temple were written Aleph, Beth, Gimel. But Rabbi Iſmael ſaith, It was written upon them in Greek, Alpha, Beta, Gamma: They that hold that this Epiſtle, and the Goſpel of Matthew were written in Hebrew, ſhould conſider how that Tongue was now a ſtranger to all but Scholars, and how God in his providence had diſperſed and planted the Greek Tongue throughout all the world, by the conqueſt of Alexander, and the Grecian Monarchy; and had brought the Old Teſtament into Greek by the Septuagint.

As this Apoſtle in all his Epiſtles uſeth exceeding much of the Jews Dialect, Language, Learning, alluſion and reference to their opinions, traditions and cuſtoms; ſo doth he more ſingularly in this, and he doth moreover in a more peculiar manner apply himſelf, to their manner of argumentation and diſcourſe. For his intent is, if he can, to argue them into eſtabliſhment, againſt that grievous Apoſtacy that was now afoot: ſo many revolting from the purity of the Goſpel, either to a total betaking themſelves to Moſes again, or at leaſt mixing the Ceremonious rites of the Law with the profeſſion of the Goſpel. Comparing his ſtyle here, with the ſtyle of diſcourſe and arguing in the Talmuds, Zohar and Rabboth, and ſuch like older writings of the Jews, you might eaſily tell with whom he is dealing though the Epiſtle were not inſcribed in ſyllables, To the Hebrews: and the very ſtile of it may argue a Scholar of Gamaliel, but now better taught and better improving his learning then that Maſter could teach him.

He firſt begins to prove the Meſſiah to be God, and Jeſus to be he: about the former of which, the Jews miſtook, and about the latter they blaſphemed. In proving the former, he among other places of Scripture, produceth that of Pſal. 102.25. Thou Lord in the beginning haſt laid the foundation of the earth, &c. To which a Jew would be ready to anſwer, I but this is to be underſtood of God the Father; and how could this objection be anſwered? Tes, even by their own conceſſions, upon which he argueth in this place. For they underſtood that in *Gen.*1.2. The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, of the Spirit of Chriſt, and ſo do they interpret it זה רוחו של מלך המשיח This is the Spirit of Meſſias: as their mind is ſpoken in that point by Zohar, Beriſhith Rabba, and divers others. If the Spirit of Chriſt then, was the great agent in the Creation, by their own grant, they could not but grant this allegation to be proper.

He ſheweth Chriſt therefore greater then Angels, as in other regards, ſo into whoſe hands was put the world to come, Chap.2.5. and here the phraſe is uſed in the Jews dialect, for the Kingdom of Meſſias, as we mentioned before.

He proveth him a greater Lawgiver then Moſes, a greater Prieſt then Aaron, and a greater King and Prieſt then Melchiſedek: He ſheweth all the Levitical Oeconomy but a ſhadow, and Chriſt the ſubſtance, and the old Covenant to be aboliſhed, by the coming in of a better: By the old or firſt Covenant meaning the Covenant of peculiarity, or the adminiſtration of the Covenant of Grace ſo, as whereby Iſrael was made a peculiar and diſtinct people. This Covenant of peculiarity they brake as ſoon almoſt as they had obtained it, by making the golden Calf, and thereupon follows the breaking of the two Tables in ſign of it: for though the Law written in the two Tables was Moral, and ſo concerned all the world, yet their writing in Tables of ſtone for Iſrael, and committing them to their keeping, referreth to their peculiarity. To his handling of the fabrick and utenſils of the Tabernacle and contents of the Ark, *Chap.*9. *Talm. Jeruſ. in Shekalim fol.*49. *col.*3,4. and *Sotah fol.*22. *col.*3. may be uſefully applied, for illuſtration. He hinteth the Apoſtaſie now afoot, which was no ſmall induction to him of the writing of this Epiſtle, and ſheweth the deſperate danger of it, Chap. 6. 4, 5, &c. and Chap. 10. 26, 27, &c. In which his touching of it, we may ſee how far ſome had gone in the Goſpel, and yet ſo miſerably far fallen from it, as that ſome of them had had the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, and yet now ſinned willingly and wilfully againſt it. In deſcribing their guilt, one of his paſſages that he uſeth, is but harſhly applied by ſome, Chap. 10. 29. [Hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the Covenant wherewith he was ſanctified an unholy thing:] when they ſay that this horrid Apoſtate wretch, that treads Chriſt under foot, was once ſanctified by the blood of Chriſt: whereas the words mean, Chriſts being ſanctified by the blood of the Covenant, according to the ſame ſenſe that Chriſt is ſaid to be brought again from the dead, by the blood of the Covenant, in this ſame Epiſtle, *Chap.*13.20. And the Apoſtle doth ſet forth the horrid impiety of accounting the blood of the Covenant a common thing, by this, becauſe even the Son of God himſelf was ſanctified by it or ſet apart as Mediator: And ſo ſhould I underſtand the words, He hath trodden under-foot that Son of God, and counted the blood of the Covenant by which he the Son of God was ſanctified, an unholy thing. He magnifieth faith, againſt thoſe works that they ſtood upon and ſought to be juſtified by, and ſheweth that this was the all in all with all the holy men both before the Law and under it. When he gives them caution, Leſt there be any fornicator or profane perſon as Eſau, &c. Chap. 12.16. he doth not only ſpeak according to the common tenet of the Nation, that Eſau was a fornicator, as ſee *Targ. Jeruſ. in Gen.*25. but he ſeemeth to have his eye upon the Nicolaitan doctrine that was now riſe, that taught fornication: to which he ſeemeth alſo to refer, in thoſe words, Chap. 13. 4. Marriage is honourable, &c.

And now henceforward you have no more ſtory of this Apoſtle: what became of him after the writing of this Epiſtle it is impoſſible to find out, by any light that the Scripture holdeth out in this matter. The two laſt verſes but one of this Epiſtle, trace him as far forward as we can any way elſe ſee him, and that is but a little way neither. Know ye that our brother Timothy is ſet at liberty, with whom if he come ſhortly I will ſee you. By which words theſe things may be conjectured. 1. That after his inlargement out of bonds, he left Rome, and preached in Italy. He mentioneth in his Epiſtle to the Romans, his deſire and intent to go preach in Spain, *Rom.*15.24. but that was ſo long ago, that he had now found ſome juſt cauſe [ſo much time intervening] to ſteer his courſe another way. For 2. It appears that when he wrote this Epiſtle to the Hebrews, he intended very ſhortly to ſet for Judea, if ſo be he ſent the Epiſtle to the Jews of Judea as hath been ſhewed moſt probable he did. So that trace him in his intentions and hopes, and you find him purpoſing to go to Philippi, Phil. 2. 23, 24. Nay yet further, to Coloſſe, Philem. ver. 22. Nay yet further into Judea. It is like that the Apoſtacy and wavering that he heard of in the Eaſtern Churches, ſhewed him more need to haſten thither then to go weſtward. 3. He waited a little to ſee whether Timothy now inlarged would come to him in that place of Italy where he now was: which if he did, he intended to bring him along with him: but whether they met and travelled together, or what further became of either of them, we ſhall not go about to trace, leſt ſeeking after them we loſe our ſelves.

CHRIST. LXIII. NERO. IX.

IT hath been obſerved before, how probable it is that Albinus came into the Government of Judea in Feſtus room, in this ninth year of Nero. And if ſo, then was James the Apoſtle who was called James the leſs martyred this year; Joſephus gives the ſtory of this, Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 8. Cæſar, ſaith he, underſtanding the death of Feſtus, ſendeth Albinus governour into Judea. And the King [Agrippa] put Joſeph from the Highprieſthood, and conferred it upon Ananus the ſon of Ananus. Now this Ananus junior was extreme bold and daring, and he was of the ſect of the Saduces, which in judging are moſt cruel of any of the Jews. Ananus therefore being ſuch a one, and thinking he had got a fit opportunity, becauſe Feſtus was dead and Albinus was not yet come; he gets together a Council, and bringing before it James the brother of Jeſus, who was called Chriſt, and ſome others, as tranſgreſſors, he delivered them up to be ſtoned: But thoſe in the City that were more moderate, and beſt ſkilled in the Laws, took this ill, and ſent to the King privately, beſeeching him to charge Ananus that he ſhould do ſo no more. And ſome of them met Albinus as he came from Alexandria, and ſhewed him how it was not lawful for Ananus to call a Council without his conſent. Whereupon he writeth a threatning Letter to Ananus. And King Agrippa for this fact put him from the Highprieſthood when he had held it but three months, and placed Jeſus the ſon of Damneas in his room.

THE EPISTLE OF JAMES.

Although therefore, the certain time of his writing this Epiſtle cannot be diſcovered, yet ſince he died in the year that we are upon, we may, not unproperly, look upon it as written not very long before his death. And that the rather, becauſe by an expreſſion or two he intimates the vengeance of Jeruſalem drawing very near. Chap. 5. 8, 9. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh; and, Behold the Judge ſtandeth before the door. He being the Apoſtle reſidentiary of the Circumciſion in Judea, could not but of all others be chiefly in the eyes of thoſe that maliced the Goſpel there, and the Miniſters of it. So it could not but be in his eye, to obſerve thoſe tokens growing on apace that his Maſter had ſpoken of, as the forerunners and forewarners of that deſtruction coming: Falſe Prophets, Iniquity abounding, Love waxing cold, betraying and undoing one another, that he could not but very ſurely conclude, that the Judge and judgment was not far from the door.

Among

Among other things that our Saviour foretelleth ſhould precede that deſtruction, this was one. *Matth.*24.14. This Goſpel of the Kingdom ſhall be preached in all the world, for a witneſs unto all Nations, and then ſhall the end come. And ſo did the Goſpel reach all the twelve Tribes, as well as other Nations, even the ten Tribes, as well as the other two. Therefore James a Miniſter of the Circumciſion, doth properly direct this Epiſtle to all the twelve Tribes ſcattered abroad.

The whole Nation was at this time, ſome at the very height of unbelief and croſsneſs againſt the Goſpel, and others at the very depth of ſuffering for it: therefore he comforts the one, *Chap.*1. and denounceth their juſt doom againſt the other, Chap 4.& 5. He ſtriveth to beat down four things eſpecially, which were not only unbecoming the Chriſtian profeſſion, but even enemies againſt it. The firſt was, eſtimating men according to their gorgeous outſide, and ſo the poor preachers and profeſſors of the Goſpel were contemned. Secondly, Their having many Maſters or Teachers, whereby errors and ſchiſms were eaſily ſcattered and planted among them, and much miſchief done by unbridled tongues. Thirdly, Their reliance upon their hiſtorical faith, they thinking that enough, and neglecting to bring forth the fruits of a faith ſaving and lively. And laſtly, Their common and vain oaths, to which the Jewiſh Nation, and that by the lenity, and toleration of their own Canons, was exceeding looſe.

In the cloſe of the Epiſtle, he ſpeaketh of the Elders anointing the ſick with oyl, Chap. 5.14. which may receive ſome explication from theſe things obſerved in their own writings.

1. That anointing with oyl was an ordinary medicinal application to the ſick. Talm. Jeruſ. in Beracoth. fol.3. col.1. R. Simeon the ſon of Eleazar permitted R. Meir to mingle wine and oyl, and to anoint the ſick on the Sabbath. And he was once ſick, and we ſought to do ſo to him, but he ſuffered us not.

Id. in Maaſar Sheni. fol. 53. col.3. A tradition. Anointing on the Sabbath is permitted. If his head ake, or if a ſcall come upon it, he anoints with oyl.

Talm. Bab. in Joma fol. 77. 2. If he be ſick, or ſcall be upon his head, he anoints according to his manner, &c.

Now if we take the Apoſtles counſel as referring to this medicinal practice, we may conſtrue it, that he would have this Phyſical adminiſtration to be improved to the beſt advantage, namely that whereas Anointing with oyl was ordinarily uſed to the ſick, by way of Phyſick, he adviſeth that they ſhould ſend for the Elders of the Church to do it; not that the anointing was any more in their hand then in anothers, as to the thing it ſelf, for it was ſtill but a Phyſical application, but that they with the applying of this corporal Phyſick, might alſo pray with and for the patient, and apply the ſpiritual Phyſick of good admonition and comforts to him. Which is much the ſame, as if in our Nation, where this phyſical anointing is not ſo in uſe, a ſick perſon ſhould ſend for the Miniſter at taking of any Phyſick, that he might pray with him and counſel and comfort him: Or

2. It was very common among the Jews to uſe charming and anointing together, of perſons that were ſick of certain maladies: of this the Jeruſ. Talm. ſpeaketh in Schab. fol. 14. col.3. זה שהוא לוחש גותן שמן על גבי ראשו ולוחש A man that one charmeth, he putteth oyl upon his head and charmeth. And a little after, is related what they charmed for, as for an evil eye, ſerpents, ſcorpions, &c. And in col. 4. is mentioned how one charmed over a ſick perſon in the name of Jeſu Pandira. Now this being a common wretched cuſtom to anoint ſome that were ſick and to uſe charming with the anointing, this Apoſtle [ſeeing anointing was an ordinary and good Phyſick, and the good uſe of it not to be extinguiſht for that abuſe] directs them better, namely to get the Elders or Miniſters of the Church to come to the ſick, and to add to the medicinal anointing of him, their godly and fervent prayers for him, far more available and comfortable then all charming and inchanting, as well as far more warrantable and Chriſtian.

CHRIST. XLIV. | NERO. X.

THIS year [C. Lecanius and M. Licinius being Conſuls] befel that ſore fire in Rome, [of which ſome touch was given before] the ſoreſt that ever had befallen the City, and which made ſuch deſolation, That whereas the City was divided into fourteen great Wards [they are the words of Tacitus] only four of the fourteen ſtood ſound: For three were clean burnt down to the ground: and as for the other ſeven they were all tattered and half conſumed, and but a few reliques of houſes remained.

It was commonly thought and talked, that Nero himſelf had the chief hand in kindling and carrying on of this miſchief; inſtigated thereunto either by his own inhumane and barbarous barbarous temper, which delighted in nothing more, then in destrcying; or by a tickling humour he had, to build the City a new, that it might bear his name. He to stop the mouth of the clamor, and to salve his credit, brought the Christians that were in the City, to examination and execution, as if they had been the only, and the all, in the breeding of this mishap. Igitur primo correpti qui fatebantur, deinde indicio eorum, haut perinde in crimine incendii, quam odio humani generis, convicti sunt, &c. Therefore they were first laid hold on, that confessed themselves Christians: and then by their discovery a vast multitude was convicted, not so much for real guilt of kindling that fire, as because of the general hate of men against them. And moreover there were scorns added to their deaths, for they were cast, wrapped in beasts skins to be devoured of dogs, or they were crucified, or burnt, and served for lights by night, when the day was gone. Whereupon they were pitied seeing that they were thus destroyed, not for the publick benefit, but only for one mans cruelty. Thus Tacitus.

What havock may we think this doleful persecution made? As among other Christians at Rome, so particularly among those eminent ones, that Paul in his Epistle thither, saluteth by name, Rom. 16. of whom many, no doubt, were alive till now, and now dispatched. He himself, and Timothy and Luke, with other of his retinue, may well be supposed to have been got away before this storm came, because in several places of his Epistles written a good while ago, as we have observed, he speaketh of his setting away with what speed possible and convenient. How escaped Peter if he now sate Bishop at Rome, as Rome asserteth?

Whether this persecution were circumscribed within the bounds of Rome or Italy, or whether it was carried by the command of the Tyrant through all other Countries [as Vid. Euseb. Eccles. Hist. lib. 2. *c.*24. Oros. *lib.*7. &c.] we need not to be much solicitous to go about to decide: certainly, though it were not inforced by any Edict or command, yet such a copy would be taken for a warrant, especially by those that without either command or copy had been forward enough to do mischief to the professors of the Gospel already, and had taken, nay had made any occasion to undo, or destroy them. The Jews at this mastery were the busiest men of any, and that mystery of iniquity was ever working, but could not strike their full stroke, because something hindred, 2 Thess. 2.6,7. If he that hindred were Claudius, who by his expulsion of the Jews out of Rome, shewed a frown upon the whole Nation, and suffered them not to rage as they would have done, he was taken away about ten years ago; and they felt their chain much slackned at the coming in of Nero: who in his best years, though he broke not out to destroy all before him, as he did afterward, yet was he destructive enough to Christianity, as we have observed, and loose and careless of the administration of affairs, and regarded not how things went, so that he might have his ease, luxury and pleasure, which his Tutors Seneca and Burrhus made but unworthy advantage of. But now that he himsef hath given so visible, bloody and cursed an example, the Jews that stood barking at their chain-end all this while, finding themselves so far let loose as such an example might loose them, which was too far, would fall on without mercy. They had been mischievous enough always against the professors of the Gospel, but from hence forward they exceeded, and the more they grew toward their desolation, the more did the Devil make them bestir themselves, knowing the shortness of his time there.

This tenth of Nero there was a blazing star, horrid lightnings and thunders, and divers monstrous births.

CHRIST. LXV.

NERO. XI.

THIS year [the eleventh of Nero, Silius Nerva and Atticus Vestinus, being Consuls] very many eminent and gallant men of Rome were cut off by the Tyrant, as the last year he had cut off many eminent and worthy Christians. The Christians he destroyed, by a plot laid against them by himself; the Romans for a plot laid by them against him. The names of those that perished, now best known among us, were Seneca the Philosopher, Nero's Tutor, and his nephew the Poet Lucan. Both of them very renowned for their Writings, but both of them very ignominious for a several miscarriage. Seneca for unparalleled covetousness, usury and oppression mentioned before: and Lucan for betraying his own mother. Let him bear Tacitus his brand: Lucanus, Quinctianus, & Senecio diu abnuere. Post, promissa impunitate corrupti, quo tarditatem excusarent, Lucanus Atillam matrem suam, [observe that] Quinctianus Glicium Gallum, Senecio Annium Pollionem amicorum præcipuos nominavere.. Lucan, Quinctianus & Senecio, were long before they would confess any thing: But at last, being corrupted by the promise of impunity, that they might make amends for their slowness, Lucan accused his mother Atilla, &c. Hereupon upon Atilla was wracked one day; and would confeſs nothing: and the next day being carried to the wrack again [for ſhe was ſo disjoynted that ſhe could not go] ſhe made a ſhift as ſhe ſate in the cart to ſtrangle her ſelf: chooſing ſo to dye rather then either to endure the wrack again, or to impeach any. An indeleble blot to her ſon Lucan for ever. Nor did his baſe ſhift ſerve his turn, for he ſuffered death too, by having his veins cut and ſo bleeding to death; which was the end of his Uncle Seneca alſo.

The Wars of the Jews are now drawing on apace [for they began the next year] and the horrid Civil Wars of the Romans are not far off. So that here we may properly take notice of that prediction ready now to take place. Matth. 24. 7, 8, 9. Nation ſhall riſe againſt Nation, and Kingdom againſt Kingdom, &c. All theſe are the beginnings of ſorrows. Then ſhall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and then ſhall they kill you: which Luke hath expreſſed, But before all theſe, ſhall they lay their hands upon you, and perſecute you, Luk. 21. 12. which ſeemeth to carry ſome difference, as if the one Evangeliſt ſhewed, that the perſecution of the Diſciples to death, ſhould be before theſe troubles; and the other, as if they ſhould not be till theſe troubles were begun: But they may be well reconciled by obſerving that in the words that Chriſt is there ſpeaking in both Evangeliſts, there is the intertexture of two ſtories, namely what miſeries ſhould befal the Jewiſh Nation before their ruine, and what miſeries ſhould befal the Diſciples in the middeſt of thoſe miſeries: and ſo the word Then in Matthew, and Before in Luke, are but as a tranſition from the one hiſtory to the other: and yet they are not unſignificant neither, as to the pointing out of the time, the one ſpeaking the beginning of that perſecution foretold, and the other the continuance.

A fitter period of time whence to begin the punctual taking place of that prediction, we can hardly point out, then this very year that we are upon, a center between two critical years: the year before beginning the perſecution of Chriſtians at Rome, and the year following beginning the Wars of the Jews in Judea.

Although therefore we cannot poſitively aſſert the very time of the writing of yet obſerving the Chronical hint of ſome paſſages in it, this year may as fairly lay claim thereunto, as any other year that can be aſſerted. For, to omit that clauſe Chap. 4. 7. The end of all things is at hand [referring to the deſolating of the Jewiſh Commonwealth and Nation] the mention of the fiery trial, ver. 12. and the time now come when Judgment muſt begin at the houſe of God, ver. 17. is but as a comment and accompliſhment of that prediction before alledged, Then ſhall they deliver up to be afflicted, &c. It is true indeed, that the Church had never wanted perſecution ſince the Goſpel aroſe, and ſome for its ſake had ſuffered death, as Steven and ſome at that time, the two Jameſes, and ſome at the time of both their deaths; but in the Countries out of Judea, where the ſtroke of their Sanhedrin could not reach ſo well, nor light ſo heavy, there was tumultuouſneſs indeed enough, and beating and bitterneſs againſt it, but rare effuſion of blood, till the curſed example ſet laſt year by the Tyrant at Rome, and now forward in the confuſions of the Jewiſh Nation; when a madneſs was come upon them among themſelves, and a deſperate fury againſt all that would not be as they were. And that not only in Judea the ſeat of the War, but even through the whole world as far as they durſt, and were able to ſtir. Thoſe words of Dion are very remarkable when ſpeaking of the ſiege of Jeruſalem by Titus, he ſaith, That the Jews that were in forraign Countries, not only within the Roman Empire, but alſo without, did ſend help to their brethren in Judea, lib. 66.

When Cyrus gave leave to the Jews after the ſeventy years captivity to return to their own Country, multitudes of them found themſelves ſo pleaſingly ſeated, and by continuance of time rooted in Babylonia, that they would not remove their habitation, but fixed there. There, in time they grew to ſo great a Nation, and diſtinct a people, that they had רוש גלותא A Prince of the Captivity of their own blood over them, and three famous Univerſities, Nehardea, Pombeditha and Soria, which yielded very many eminent Scholars in the Judaick learning.

In the diviſion of the imployment of the three Miniſters of the Circumciſion, Peter, James and John, Peter's lot fell here, and from Babylon it ſelf the very Center of thoſe parts he ſends this Epiſtle. He directs it to the diſperſed Jews in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia and Bithynia, in which parts the Apoſtacy from the faith had been exceeding prevalent, and accordingly the trouble of thoſe that ſtuck to the faith, the moſt bitter. And in his inſcribing it to the Elect, he ſeemeth to have his eye upon thoſe words of his Maſter about this Apoſtaſie, Matth. 24. 24. They ſhall deceive, if it were poſſible, the very Elect.

Among the many divine leſſons that he reads to them, he teaches them and us who is the Rock upon which the Church is built, Chap. 2. 4, &c. and how accordingly to underſtand ſuper hanc Petram, Matt. 16. He exhorts them with all earneſtneſs to yield obedience to ſuperior powers, Chap. 2. 13, 14. and that the rather becauſe of that ſpirit of the Zelotæ, that walking among the Nation in all parts, urged them not to ſubmit to any Heathen power.

He magnifieth Baptiſm as a badge and pledge of preſervation of thoſe that had received it, and ſtuck to it, from that vengeance that was coming upon that wicked Nation, Chap. 3. 21. It is ſomething a ſtrange recoyling that he makes, leaping back from mention of the death of Chriſt, ver. 18. over all the ſtory of the Old Teſtament, and lighteth on the generation that was ſwept away by the flood: and ſheweth how Chriſts ſpirit preached unto them. Why? had not the ſame Spirit preached in all the times between? Why are not thoſe times named then as well as theſe? Becauſe the Apoſtle doth purpoſely intend to compare that old world then deſtroyed, with the deſtruction of the Jewiſh Nation ſhortly coming: and to ſhew that as Noah and his family were then ſaved by water, ver. 20. ſo, Ἀντίτυπον ὑμᾶς, they that had received Baptiſm were the Antitype to that, and Baptiſm was a pledge and means of their deliverance now, they ſticking cloſely to it. And this very thing John Baptiſt taught in that queſtion, Who hath forwarned you to flee from the wrath to come? Therefore when he calls Συνειδήσεως ἀγαθῆς ἐπερώτημα εἰς θεόν. An asking of a good Conſcience towards or after God, he makes not this its definition, as if none but thoſe ſo qualified were to be baptized, but he characters its difference from Circumciſion, which put away the filth of the fleſh in one ſenſe; and Legal and Phariſaical waſhings which did it in another. His whole compariſon runs to this tenour: The old world was diſobedient to the ſpirit of Chriſt preaching in the mouth of Noah, and therefore they periſhed. The Jews [whoſe ſtate the Scripture alſo calleth an old world] were diſobedient to Chriſt preaching by his Spirit in the mouth of his Apoſtles, and even viſibly and audibly in his own perſon, therefore, they muſt needs periſh: But Noah and his family that harkeneth after God [whilſt others ſaid to the Lord Depart from us, Job 22. 16, 17.] were preſerved by water: Even ſo doth Baptiſm now preſerve us, the Antitype of that figure. For Baptiſm was not barely a waſhing of the body from filth, as the common Legal waſhings were, but it was an owning and asking after God, conſciencioufly, out from a perverſe and wicked generation: and therefore not to be ſtarted or revolted from. This then being one end of Baptiſm, and that end taught to them that aſſumed it, viz. to badge and mark to ſafety from the approaching vengeance, it may very well raiſe an argument for Infants Baptiſm [whereas this text is commonly produced againſt it:] for if theſe parents that came in to be baptized, ſought hereby to flee from the wrath to come, they would be carefull to bring their children under the ſame badge of ſecurity.

When he judgeth thoſe that periſhed in the waters of Noah to be now in priſon, ver. 19. he knew he had the conſent of his Nation in it: for thus they ſay in Sanhedr. per. 10. halac. 3. The generation of the flood have no portion in the world to come: neither ſhall they ſtand up in Judgment; for it is ſaid, My ſpirit ſhall no more judge with man, Gen. 6. 3. Peter teacheth us that the Spirit that ſtrove with the old world, was the Spirit of Meſſias.

He ſends this Epiſtle by Sylvanus, Pauls old attendant, but now with Peter: He ſtiles him, A faithful brother to you, as I ſuppoſe: not as doubting but aſſured. He was to bring this Epiſtle to the Circumciſion, who himſelf had been a Miniſter of the circumciſion: therefore this atteſtation is the more needful and material, ὡς λογίζομαι, I repute him a faithful brother to you of the Circumciſion, and do you alſo ſo repute him.

His naming of Mark with him, calls our thoughts back to what hath been mentioned of Mark heretofore: his being with Paul at Rome, and his coming from him into the Eaſt. To ſuppoſe two Marks, one with Peter and another with Paul, is to breed confuſion where there needeth not, and to conceive that for which the Scripture hath not only no ground, but is plain enough to the contrary: It is eaſily ſeen how John Mark came into familiarity both with Paul and Peter, and other Mark we can find none in the New Teſtament, unleſs of our own invention: His being in theſe later times with Peter and Paul, may turn our thoughts to conſider how his Uncle Barnabas and he parted, ſince Paul and Barnabas parted about him. He it was that wrote the Goſpel, it may be being with Peter, as Luke did the like being with Paul. In his Goſpel he is moſt exact of all the four in obſerving the proper time and ſeries of the ſtories recorded.

CHRIST. LXVI.

NERO. XII.

Προσελάμβανε τὴν ἀρχὴν ὁ πόλεμος δωδεκάτῳ μὲν ἔτει τῆς Νέρωνος ἡγεμονίας. Ἀρτεμισίου μηνός. The Wars of the Jews began in the twelfth year of the reign of Nero, in the month of May. Joseph. de Bell. lib. 2 cap. 25.

If we take a view of the Nation, as it was at the present, and as it had been for thirty or forty years backward, we shall find that besides the ordinary and common wickedness that was among them, they had these four additions of iniquity monstrous and unparalleled, and in which they did, as it were, exceed themselves. 1. In regard that the appearance of the Messias was expected to be about the time that Christ appeared indeed, very many taking advantage of the time and of that expectation, took upon them, some to be Christ, others to be Prophets attending, and relating to his coming, Matth. 24. 24. Upon which Josephus and other Writers of that Nation will give us a very full commentary of experiences. 2. There were multitudes of the Zelotæ, and of the sect of Judas the Galilean, which would not yield any homage or subjection to be due to the Roman power which was now over them: and neither would they now themselves, nor would they suffer others, as far as they could hinder, to submit unto them. 3. The unbelieving Jews were generally sworn enemies and prosecutors of those that believed. And 4. which we have observed before, multitudes of those that had believed and imbraced the Gospell fell away, and became either seduced or the greatest seducers, and brought in horrid heresies and pollutions. So that in these various and malignant distempers of men, there had been continual confusions, tumults, firings, murderings and plunderings among them for many years, and they had been the unquietest and most tumultuous Nation that had been under Heaven, and they had often provoked the Roman power against themselves, yet till this year had they never so visibly and professedly taken up Arms and open War against that power.

The first spark kindled in Cæsarea upon the sea, about an inchroachment that a Gentile there made upon the way that went to the Jews Synagogue; and from thence it grew into a flame so fast through the whole Country [Florus the Governour helping it on] that by the sixteenth of May, his Souldiers by his Commission have plundred Jerusalem, slain 3600. persons: and even Berenice sister to King Agrippa escaped very narrowly with her life.

The Jews and Romans have divers skirmishes: Massada Castle taken and the Roman Garison put to the sword. The Temple and several parts of the Cities made Garisons for several parties, and suffer much by fire and battery. Twenty thousand Jews slain in Cæsarea on a Sabbath: whereupon all the Nation rise about to avenge this slaughter, and in Syria, Phænicea, Samaria, Peræa and all round about, destroy Towns, Cities and persons all before them. Cestius the Governour of Syria rises with his forces, and destroys the Jews again, and their Towns all before him, and on the thirtieth of October enters Jerusalem and fires a good part of the City.

Yet do the Jews give him a brush upon his march away, and cut off above 4000 of his men: with which success they are so fleshed, that they resolve to fight it out, and accordingly platform themselves into the model and posture of a long War: and the Country is only full of Fire, Sword, War and destruction.

The abomination of desolation had now begun to stand in the holy place, Matth. 24. 15. when the Temple is made a Garrison, and filled with slaughter; Antonia, the Castle of the Temple, besieged, taken, and the Roman Garrison put to the sword. The חנויות Tabernæ, or part of the buildings at the East wall of the mountain of the House [the place where the Sanhedrin had once sitten,] fired and burnt down. Jerus. in Peah. fol. 16. col. 3. And in a word, the Temple from this time forwards, never but a Garrison, and full of slaughter and confusion till it be raked up in ashes.

Now it was time for those that were in Judea, who believed Christs prediction, to get into the Mountains, and to shift for themselves, for now begins the tribulation beyond parallel, such as was not since the beginning of the world, nor ever must again, Matth. 24. 21. It is commonly asserted that the Christians fled to Pella a City beyond Jordan: Euseb. Eccles. Hist. lib. 3. cap. 5. which how to reconcile with Josephus, who saith Pella was one of the Cities that the Jews destroyed in avengement of the slaughter of the 20000 in Cæsarea, De Bell. lib. 2. cap. 33. let the Learned find.

About these times therefore we may well conceive to have been the writing of

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PETER.

And that the rather from what he ſpeaks in Chap. 1. ver. 14. I know that I muſt ſhortly put off this tabernacle, as our Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath ſhewed me. In which words, his thoughts reflect upon what Chriſt had ſpoken to John and him about their ends, John 21. where he not only gave intimation to Peter that he ſhould be Martyred, ver. 18. but that he ſhould be ſo, before his coming in Judgment againſt Jeruſalem, which John muſt live to ſee, but he muſt not, ver. 22. He therefore in Babylon, underſtanding how affairs went in Judea and with the Jewiſh Nation all thereabout, and reading therein, from the words of his Maſter, Matth. 24. that the deſolation was drawing on apace, concludes that his time was not long: and therefore improves the time he hath remaining the beſt he can, not only in teaching thoſe amongſt whom he was, but by writing this Epiſtle inſtructeth thoſe that were remote and at diſtance from him; in which he doth more eſpecially give them caution againſt falſe teachers: and characters the terrour of the judgment coming, and exhorts to vigilancy and holineſs.

The firſt character that he gives of the falſe teachers is, that they bring in damnable Hereſies, denying the Lord that bought them, Chap. 2. 1. which he ſpeaketh from Deut. 32. from whence alſo he uſeth other expreſſions, ver. 6. Is not he thy Father that hath bought thee? not meaning that theſe wretches were redeemed by Chriſt, yet became ſuch wretches, as ſome would interpret it; but by buying is meant his buying out of Egypt this people for a peculiar people: which theſe wretches boaſted and ſtood upon, yet by their introducing and practiſing the prophane principles they did, of fornication and communicating with Idols, they denied the true God which bought that people for his peculiar. He calls them ſpots, ver. 13. from Deut. 32. 5. and parallels them with the old world, Sodom, Balaam, nay the very fallen Angels.

He ſets forth the deſtruction of that curſed Nation and their City in thoſe terms that Chriſt had done, Matt. 24. and that the Scripture doth elſewhere, Deut. 32. 22, 23. 24. Jer. 4. 23. namely as the deſtruction of the whole world, The heavens paſſing away, the elements melting, and the earth burnt up, &c. And accordingly he ſpeaks of a new heaven and a new earth, from Iſa. 65. 17. a new ſtate of the Church under the Goſpel among the Gentiles, when this old world of the Jews ſtate ſhould be diſſolved.

He citeth Pauls Epiſtle to the Hebrews, and giveth an honourable teſtimony to that, and to the reſt of his Epiſtles: but acknowledgeth that in ſome places they are hard to be underſtood, and were miſconſtrued by ſome unlearned and unſtable ones to their own ruine; yet neither doth he, nor Paul who was yet alive, and well knew of this wreſting of his Epiſtles, clear or amend thoſe difficulties, but let them alone as they were: for the holy Ghoſt hath ſo penned Scripture as to ſet men to ſtudy.

And here is the laſt that we hear in Scripture of this great Apoſtle Peter. His Martyrdom he apprehends to be near, and it was to be before Jeruſalem was deſtroyed, which was not now full four years to come. We may well conceive him to have been put to death by the Jews in Babylonia where he now was: a madneſs having come upon that Nation in all parts: and a ſingular raging againſt the Goſpel, the devil beſtirring himſelf in them, now he knew their time was ſo ſhort.

THE EPISTLE OF JUDE.

As the ſecond Epiſtle of Peter and this of Jude are very near akin, in ſtyle, matter and ſubject, ſo it is fairly conjecturable in them that they were not far removed in time, ſpeaking both of wicked ones and wickedneſs at the ſame height and ripeneſs. They are one to another as the Propheſie of Obadiah, and Jerem. 49. 14, &c. ſpeaking the ſame thing, uſing the ſame manner of arguing, and oftentimes almoſt the ſame words. It may be Jude ſtands up in his brother James his charge among the Circumciſion of Judea, and directs his Epiſtle to all thoſe that were ſanctified and preſerved in thoſe Apoſtatizing times, as his brother had done to all the twelve Tribes in general.

In citing the ſtory of Michael the Archangel contending with the devil about the body of Moſes, ver. 9. he doth but the ſame that Paul doth in naming Jannes and Jambres, namely alledge a ſtory which was current and owned among the Nation, though there were no ſuch thing in Scripture; and ſo he argueth with them from their own Authors and conceſſions. It is harſh to ſtrain Zech. 3. 1, 2. to ſpeak ſuch a ſtory; when neither the name Michael is mentioned, nor any thing like the body of Moſes or akin to it. But among the Talmudicks there ſeems to be ſomething like the relicks of ſuch a matter, viz. of Michael and the Angel of death diſputing or diſcourſing about fetching away the ſoul of Moſes.

His

His alledging the Propheſie of Enoch, is an arguing of the very like nature, as citing and referring to ſome known and common tradition that they had among them to this purpoſe. [The Book Sepher Jeſher an Hebrew Writer ſpeaketh of Enoch after ſuch a tenour.] And in both theſe he uſeth their own teſtimonies againſt themſelves: as if he ſhould thus have ſpoken at large: Theſe men ſpeak evil of dignities, whereas they have and own a ſtory for current, that even Michael the Archangel did not ſpeak evil of the devil, when he was ſtriving with him about the body of Moſes, &c. And whereas they ſhew and own a Propheſie of Enoch, of God coming in Judgment, &c. why theſe are the very men to whom ſuch a matter is to be applied, &c. It is no ſtrange thing in the New Teſtament, for Chriſt and the Apoſtles to deal and argue with the Jews upon their own conceſſions.

THE THREE EPISTLES OF JOHN.

Among all the Apoſtolick Epiſtles there is none about whoſe time of writing we are ſo far to ſeek as we are about theſe. And it is neither ſatisfactory to remove their place, nor is it ſatisfactory to take their time according to their place; or to conceive them to be written after the Epiſtles of Peter, becauſe they are placed after them. Any conjecture that is to be had of them may beſt be taken from the third Epiſtle.

Gaius, to whom that Epiſtle is directed, by that encomiaſtick character that John giveth of him, ſeemeth to be Gaius the Corinthian, the hoſt of the whole Church, Rom. 16. 23. for ſince he is commended for entertainment and charity both to the Church and ſtrangers, particularly to thoſe who had preached among the Gentiles, taking nothing of them, we know not where to find any other Gaius to whom to affix this character but only this, and we have no reaſon to look after any other. And upon this probability we may obſerve theſe other.

I. That that third Epiſtle was written when thoſe that preached to the Gentiles and took nothing of them, were ſtill abroad upon that imployment, for he urgeth him to bring them forward on their journey, ver. 6. Now under that expreſſion, of taking nothing of the Gentiles, we can underſtand none but Paul and Barnabas and thoſe that were of their ſeveral companies, for the Scripture hath named none other. And if it refer to Paul and his company [for we find not that Barnabas had any thing to do with Gaius] then we muſt conclude that it was written a good while before this time that we are upon: unleſs we will ſuppoſe Paul after his freedom from impriſonment at Rome, was got travelling and preaching in thoſe parts again. But I ſhould rather ſuppoſe that John ſent this third Epiſtle to Gaius to Corinth, by Timothy from Epheſus, who was ſetting away thence for Rome, upon Pauls ſending for him to come to him thither, 2 Tim. 4. 9, 11, 21. In which journey as we have ſhewed before, he was to call at Corinth, and to take Mark along with him, who was there. And of them may Johns advice to Gaius be well underſtood, Whom if thou bring forward on their journey thou ſhalt do well: For for his ſake they went out taking nothing of the Gentiles; Mark with Barnabas, and Timothy with Paul.

II. Before John wrote this Epiſtle to Gaius, he had written another Epiſtle, to ſome Church, it may be that of Corinth, of which Gaius was. I wrote, ſaith he, unto the Church, but Diotrephes who loveth to have the preeminence, receiveth us not. This muſt needs be underſtood of The firſt Epiſtle of John: unleſs we will conceive, unwarrantably [that I may ſay no worſe,] that any of Johns writings are loſt.

III. Upon and with the forementioned ſuppoſal that John ſent his Epiſtle to Gaius by Timothy from Epheſus; we cannot but alſo ſuppoſe that John ſpent ſome time in the Aſian Churches, to which afterward from Patmos he writes his Epiſtles: And if any one be not ſatisfied with that interpretation that was given before, about the Epiſtle from Laodicea, Coloſ. 4. 16. let him rather underſtand it of The firſt Epiſtle of John as written by him from Laodicea, then think it was an Epiſtle written by Paul from Laodicea, and that that Epiſtle is loſt: In both his later Epiſtles he intimateth his hopes and purpoſe ſhortly to come to them: from which we may conſtrue that his intention was to travel from Aſia the leſs where he now was, and from whence he wrote all his three Epiſtles weſtward into Greece, and in this journey you have him got into Patmos, Rev. 1. from whence he writes back to Aſia again.

In all his Epiſtles he exhorteth to love, and conſtancy in the truth, a leſſon moſt needful in thoſe divided and Apoſtatizing times. He giveth notice of many Antichriſts now abroad, and theſe he ſheweth to have been ſuch as had once profeſſed the truth, but were apoſtatized from it: They went out from us, but they were not of us, &c. And this Apoſtacy he calleth The ſin unto death. To ſuch he adviſeth they ſhould not ſo much as ſay God ſpeed: אישר in their vulgar language. Jeruſ. Taamith fol. 64. col. 2. The Rabbins ſaw a holy man of Caphar Immi, and went to him and ſaid אישר God ſpeed, But he anſwered them nothing. Id. in Sheviith fol. 35. 2. & 36. 1. R. Chinna bar Papa & R. Samuel bar bar Nachman, went by a man that was plowing on the ſeventh year [the year of releaſe,] R. Samuel ſaith to him אישר God ſpeed. R. Chinna ſaith, Our maſter did not teach us thus: for it is forbidden to ſay God ſpeed, to one that is plowing on the ſeventh year.

John ſtileth himſelf an Elder, and ſo doth Peter, 1 Pet. 5. 1. not as laying aſide their Apoſtolical power, but as dealing with thoſe to whom they write in a Miniſterial way: and by this very title that they aſſume to themſelves, they cloſely intimate that thenceforward the extraordinary Function and gifts Apoſtolick muſt not be expected, but the Miniſterial, in the ordinary way of Elders or Miniſters, as the title had been long and vulgarly known. And yet when he ſpeaks of Diotrephes and his abuſiveneſs, he then threatens to ſhew his Apoſtolick power, and himſelf A Son of thunder againſt him.

THE REVELATION OF JOHN.

AS it will be eaſily admitted to place this Book laſt of all the New Teſtament, becauſe it ſtands ſo in all Bibles, ſo on the other hand it will be cavilled at, that I have brought in the writing of it ſo ſoon, as before the fall of Jeruſalem, ſince it hath been of old and commonly held, that it was penned in the reign of Domitian, far after theſe times that we are upon: But the reaſons by which I have been induced thereunto, will appear out of ſome paſſages in the Book it ſelf as we go through it.

As God revealed to Daniel the man greatly beloved, the ſtate of his people, and the Monarchies that afflicted them, from his own time, till the coming of Chriſt; ſo doth Chriſt to John the beloved Diſciple, the ſtate of the Church, and ſtory in brief of her chief afflicters, from thence to the end of the world. So that where Daniel ends the Revelation begins, and John hath nothing to do with any of the four Monarchies that he ſpeaketh of, but deals with a fifth [the Roman] that roſe as it were out of the aſhes of thoſe four, and ſwallowed them all up.

The compoſure of the Book is much like Daniels in this, that it repeats one ſtory over and over again, in varied and inlarged expreſſions: and exceeding like Ezekiel's in method and things ſpoken. The ſtyle is very Prophetical, as to the things ſpoken; and very Hebraizing, as to the ſpeaking of them. Exceeding much of the old Prophets language, and matter adduced to intimate new ſtories: and exceeding much of the Jews language, and alluſion to their cuſtoms and opinions, thereby to ſpeak the things more familiarly to be underſtood. And as Ezekiel wrote concerning the ruine of Jeruſalem, when the ruining of it was now begun, ſo I ſuppoſe doth John of the final deſtruction of it, when the Wars and miſeries were now begun, which bred its deſtructions.

REVEL. Chap. I, II, III.

THE three firſt Chapters refer to that preſent time when John wrote: and they contain the ſtory of his obtaining this Revelation, and of the condition of the ſeven Churches of Aſia at that time: declared in the Epiſtles directed to them.

John travelling in the Miniſtry of the Goſpel up and down from Aſia Weſtward, cometh into the Iſle Patmos, in the Icarian Sea [Vid. Strab. lib. 10.] an Iſland about thirty miles compaſs [Plin. lib. 4. cap. 12.] and there on the Lords day he hath theſe viſions, and an Angel interprets to him all he ſaw.

He ſeeth Chriſt clothed like a Prieſt, ποδήρη, *ver.*13. [See the LXX in Exod. 28. 4.] and girded over the paps, as the Prieſts uſed to be, with the curious girdle. His appearance full of Majeſty and glorioufneſs, deſcribed in the terms of Daniel, Chap. 7. 9. & 10. 5, 6. Amongſt other his Divine titles he is called Alpha and Omega, terms ordinarily uſed by the Jews [only uttered in their Hebrew Tongue] to ſignifie the beginning and the end, or the firſt and the laſt. Midr. Tillin. fol. 47. 2. Abraham and Sarah performed all the Law from Aleph to Tau. Marg. tripl. targ. in Deut. 18. 13. He that walks in integrity is as if he performed all the Law from Aleph to Tau.

He directs Epiſtles to be ſent to the ſeven Churches of Aſia: who are golden Candleſticks though very full of corruptions [it is not a ſmall thing that unchurches a Church] and inſcribed to the Angels of the Churches: This phraſe tranſlates שליח עבור Shelichh Tſibbur, the title of the Miniſter in every Synagogue, who took care for the publick reading and expounding of the Law and Prophets: And theſe Epiſtles are ſent accordingly to the Miniſters of the ſeveral Churches, that they might be read openly in their Congregations.

There are ſeven ſeveral Epiſtles to the ſeveral Churches, dictated immediately and ſent by Chriſt, and another general one from John to them all, in which he ſhews the warrant and way of writing thoſe ſeven.

He terms the Holy Ghoſt, the ſeven Spirits, according to the Jews common ſpeech, who from Iſa. 11. 2. ſpeak much of the ſeven Spirits of Meſſias: and ſpeaking of Chriſts coming with clouds, Chap. 1. 7. from Dan. 7. 13. and from the words of Chriſt himſelf, Matth. 24. 30. He at once teacheth that he takes at Daniel, and ſpeaks of Chriſts coming and reigning, when the four Monarchies were deſtroyed, and eſpecially referreth to the firſt moſt viſible evidence of his power and dominion, in coming to deſtroy his enemies the Jewiſh Nation, and their City. And here is one reaſon that induceth me to ſuppoſe this Book written, before that City was deſtroyed.

Coming to read the preſent condition of theſe Aſian Churches in the Epiſtles written to them, we may pertinently think of that ſaying of Paul, 2 Tim. 1. 15. This thou knoweſt that all they that are in Aſia are turned from me: A great Apoſtacy: of which there is too much evidence in theſe Churches, as alſo mention of ſome ſad fruits of it, and means and inſtruments inducing to it. As 1. unbelieving Jews which the Holy Ghoſt all along calls A Synagogue of Satan: with theſe the Church of Smyrna was peſtered, and more eſpecially Pergamus, where their miſchievouſneſs is ſtiled the very throne or ſeat of Satan: and where they had murdered Antipas a faithful Martyr already. 2. Falſe Apoſtles and ſeducers: ſome that pretended Apoſtolick power and commiſſion, and it may be coloured their pretences with Magical wonders, that they might act more Apoſtle like. Theſe the Church of Epheſus was troubled with, but had diſcovered their deluſions and found them liars. 3. Other ſeducers that, it may be, came not in the demonſtration of ſuch deviliſh power, but anſwered that by their horrid deviliſh doctrines, the doctrines of the Nicolaitans, which taught to eat things ſacrificed to Idols, and to commit fornication. In Thyatire a woman ſeducer, cried up this doctrine, a whore and witch, a Jezabel: wherefore ſhe and her children, that is, her Diſciples, are threatned to be deſtroyed by the plague: the vengeance upon the fornicators with Baal Peor.

REVEL CHAP. IV, V.

NOW cometh a ſecond viſion. That before was of things then being, ſee Chap. 1. 19. but this and forward of things to come, Chap. 4. 1. A door open in Heaven, and the voice of a trumpet talking with John out of it.

The ſcene of Johns viſions ſaid to be in Heaven, is according to the ſcheme of the Temple and the Divine glory there. And hence you have mention of the Altar, Candleſticks, Sea of Glaſs [the brazen laver made of the Womens looking Glaſſes] the Ark of the Covenant, and the like. And as at the opening of the Temple doors, a Trumpet ſounded, ſo is the alluſion here. The door in Heaven opened, and a Trumpet calls John to come in and ſee what there. And immediately he was in the Spirit, ver. 2. Why? Was he not in the Spirit before? Chap. 1. 10. and was he not in the Spirit, in ſeeing the door in Heaven opened? &c. But we may obſerve a double degree in rapture: as inſpired men may be conſidered under a double notion: viz. Thoſe that were inſpired with Propheſie or to be Prophets and to preach, and thoſe that were inſpired to be Penmen of Divine Writ, which was higher. John hath both inſpirations or revelations to both ends, both both in the Viſion before, and this: then he was in the Spirit and ſaw the viſion, and was in the Spirit and inſpired to pen what he ſaw, and what to be ſent to the Churches. And in the firſt verſe of this Chapter he is in the Spirit or hath a revelation, and in ver. 2. he is in the Spirit, he is inſpired ſo as to take impreſſion and remembrance of theſe things to write them alſo.

He ſeeth Chriſt inthroned in the middle of his Church, in the ſame Prophetick and viſionary Embleme that Ezekiel had ſeen, Ezek. 1. & 10. and this is a commentary and fulfilling of that ſcene that Daniel ſpeaketh of, Dan. 7. 9, 10, 22. In Ezekiel, the Lord, when Jeruſalem was now to be deſtroyed, and the glory of the Lord that uſed to be there, and the people were to flit into another Land, appeareth ſo inthroned, as ſitting in Judgment and ſlitting away by degrees to another place: as compare Ezek. 1. & 10. well together. So Chriſt here; when the deſtruction of Jeruſalem was now near at hand, and his glory and preſence to remove from that Nation, now given up to unbelief and obduration, to reſide among the Gentiles, he is ſeated upon his throne as Judge and King with glorious attendance, to judge that Nation for their ſins and unbelief, and ſtating the affairs of his Church whither his glory was now removing.

The ſcheme is platformed according to the model of Iſraels Camp. 1. The Tabernacle was in the middle there, ſo is the throne here. 2. There the four ſquadrons of the Camp of Levi next the Tabernacle, ſo here the four living creatures. 3. Then the whole Camp of Iſrael, ſo here twenty four Elders Repreſentatives of the whole Church, built from twelve Tribes and twelve Apoſtles.

In the hand of him that ſate on the Throne was a Book ſealed which no creature could open. This juſtly calls us back to Dan. 12. ver. 4. Where words are ſhut up and a Book ſealed unto the time of the end: and now that that is near drawing on, the Book is here opened.

REVEL. CHAP. VI.

THE opening of the ſix Seals in this Chapter, ſpeaks the ruine and rejection of the Jewiſh Nation, and the deſolation of their City; which is now very near at hand.

The firſt Seal opened, ver. 2. ſhews Chriſt ſetting forth in Battel array and avengement againſt them, as Pſal. 45. 4, 5. And this the New Teſtament ſpeaketh very much and very highly of, one while calling it his coming in clouds, another while his coming in his Kingdom, and ſometime his coming in Power and great Glory, and the like. Becauſe his plagueing and deſtroying of the Nation that crucified him, that ſo much oppoſed and wrought miſchief againſt the Goſpel, was the firſt evidence that he gave in ſight of all the world of his being Chriſt: for till then, he and his Goſpel had been in humility, as I may ſay, as to the eyes of men, he perſecuted whileſt he was on Earth, and they perſecuted after him, and no courſe taken with them that ſo uſed both, but now he awakes, ſhews himſelf, and makes himſelf known by the Judgement that he executeth.

The three next Seals opening, ſhew the means by which he did deſtroy, namely thoſe three ſad plagues that had been threatned ſo oft and ſo ſore by the Prophets, Sword, Famine and Peſtilence. For

The ſecond Seal opened ſends out one upon a red Horſe to take Peace from the Earth, and that men ſhould deſtroy one another; he carried a great Sword, ver. 4.

The third Seals opening ſpeaks of Famine, when Corn for ſcarcity ſhould be weighed like ſpicery in a pair of ballances, ver. 5, 6.

The fourth Seal ſends out one on a pale Horſe whoſe name was Death [the Chaldee very often expreſſeth the Plague or Peſtilence by that word מותא: and ſo it is to be taken Revel. 2. 22.] and Hell or Hades comes after him, ver. 8.

The opening of the fifth Seal reveals a main cauſe of the vengeance, namely the blood of the Saints which had been ſhed, crying, and which was to be required of that generation, Matth. 23. 35, 36. Theſe ſouls are ſaid to cry from under the Altar, either in alluſion to the blood of creatures ſacrificed, poured at the foot of the Altar, or according to the Jews tenet, That all juſt ſouls departed are under the Throne of Glory. Anſwer to their cry is given, that the number of their Brethren that were to be ſlain was not yet fulfilled, and they muſt reſt till that ſhould be, and then avengement in their behalf ſhould come. This ſpeaks ſutable to that which we obſerved lately, that now times were begun of bitter perſecution, an hour of temptation, Rev. 2. 10. & 3. 10. the Jews and Devil raging, till the Lord ſhould ſomething cool that fury by the ruine of that people.

The

The opening of the ſixth Seal, ver. 12, 13. ſhews the deſtruction it ſelf in thoſe borrowed terms that the Scripture uſeth to expreſs it by, namely as if it were the deſtruction of the whole world: as *Matth.*24.29,30. The Sun darkned, the Stars falling, the Heaven departing and the Earth diſſolved, and that concluſion ver. 16. They ſhall ſay to the rocks fall on us, &c. doth not only warrant, but even inforce us to underſtand and conſtrue theſe things in the ſenſe that we do: for Chriſt applies theſe very words to the very ſame thing, Luke 23. 30. And here is another, and, to me, a very ſatisfactory reaſon, why to place the ſhewing of theſe viſions to John, and his writing of this Book before the deſolation of Jeruſalem.

REVEL. CHAP. VII.

IN the end of the former Chapter was contained the intimation of the deſolation of Jeruſalem, and in the beginning of this, the ceaſing of Propheſie, under the ſimilitude of the four winds reſtrained from blowing upon the Earth. Compare Cant. 4. 16. *Ezek.*37.9. only a remnant of Iſrael are ſealed unto ſalvation, and not to periſh by that reſtraint, and with them innumerable Gentiles. Ezekiel helpeth here to confirm the explication that we have given of the Chapter before: for he hath the very like paſſage, upon the firſt deſtruction of the City, Ezek. 9. & 10. 11. Compare the marking in the foreheads here, with *Exod.*28.38. Dan not mentioned among the Tribes in this place: Idolatry firſt began in that Tribe, *Judg.*18, 1 *King.*12.

REVEL. CHAP. VIII.

THE opening of the ſeventh Seal lands us upon a new ſcene: as a new world began when Jeruſalem was deſtroyed and the Jews caſt off. The ſix Seals in the two former Chapters, have ſhewed their ruine, and the appearing of the Church of the Gentiles, and now the ſeven Trumpets under the ſeventh Seal give us a proſpect in general of the times thence forward to the end of all things. I ſay in general, for from the beginning of the twelfth Chapter and forward to the end of the nineteenth they are handled more particularly.

Silence in Heaven for a while, and ſeven Angels with ſeven Trumpets may call our thoughts to Joſhua 6. 4, 10. and intimate that the Prophetick ſtory is now entred upon a new Canaan, or a new ſtage of the Church, as that buſineſs at Jericho was at Iſraels firſt entring on the old: Or it may very properly be looked upon as referring and alluding to the carriage of things at the Temple, ſince this Book doth repreſent things ſo much according to the ſcheme and ſcene of the Temple all along.

And in this very place there is mention of the Altar and Incenſe and Trumpets, which were all Temple appurtenances. It was therefore the cuſtom at the Temple that when the Prieſt went in to the Holy place, the people drew downward from the Porch of the Temple, and there was a ſilence whileſt he was there, [yea though the people were then praying] incomparably beyond what there was at other times of the ſervice, for the Prieſts were blowing with Trumpets or the Levites ſinging: The alluſion then here is plain. When the ſacrifice was laid on the Altar, a Prieſt took coals from the Altar, went in to the Holy place, and offered incenſe upon the Golden Altar that ſtood before the vail, that was before the Ark, and this being done, the Trumpets ſounded over the ſacrifice. Here then is firſt intimation of Chriſts being offered upon the Altar; then his going into the Holy place as Mediator for his people: and then the Trumpets ſounding and declaring his diſpoſals in the world. His taking fire off the Altar and caſting it upon the Earth, ver. 5. is a thing not uſed at the Temple, but ſpoken from Ezek. 10. 2. which betokeneth the ſending of judgment, which the Trumpets ſpeak out.

Theſe ſeven Trumpets, and the ſeven Vials in *Chap.*16. in many things run very parallel, how far they Synchronize, will be beſt conſidered when we come there.

The firſt Trumpet ſounding, brings hail and fire and blood upon the Earth, and deſtroys graſs and trees a third part of them. Fire and hail was the plague of Egypt, Exod. 9.23. but fire and blood, with hail, is a new plague. By theſe ſeemeth to be intimated what plagues ſhould be brought upon the world, by fire, ſword, dreadful tempeſt, unnatural ſeaſons and the like.

The ſecond Trumpet ſounds, and a great burning mountain is caſt into the Sea, and the third part of it becomes blood. The Sea in the Prophetick language, doth ſignifie multitudes of people: as Jerem. 51. 36. 42. And Babylon that was Monarch was a burning mountain in the ſame Chapter, ver. 35. So that the Imperial power ſeemeth to be the mountain here; which made bloody and miſchievous work, not only by the perſecution of Chriſtians, but even among their own people. As Nero at preſent, Vitellius inſtantly after, Domitian, Commodus, and indeed generally all of them either bloodily deſtroy their own people, or at leaſt for their covetouſneſs, ambition, revenge or humour, bring diſquietneſs, oppreſſion, miſery, Wars and Blood, upon all the World, in one place or other.

The third Trumpet, brings the Star Wormwood upon the Rivers and Fountains of waters, which ſeemeth to denote the grievous Hereſies that ſhould be in the Church, which ſhould corrupt and imbitter the pure ſprings of the Scripture and fountains of Truth. A Star in the language of this Book is a Church-man, Chap. 1.20. [Ben Cochab was ſuch a Wormwood Star among the Jews, called moſt properly Ben cozba the lier.] And the phraſe, A Star falling from Heaven, alludes to Iſa. 14. 12. How art thou fallen from Heaven O Lucifer! &c.

The fourth Trumpet ſhews the darkning of the Sun and Moon and Stars for a third part.

By which ſeems to be underſtood the wane and decay, both in the glory of the Church, by ſuperſtition, and of the Empire, by its diviſions within, and enemies from without, and this before the riſing of the Papacy, which appears under the next Trumpet: and theſe things were great advantages to its riſing. The darkning of the heavenly luminaries in the Prophets language ſignifieth the eclipſing of the glory and proſperity of a Kingdom or People, *Iſa.*13.9,10. Joel 2.10. How it was with the Church and Empire in theſe reſpects, before that time that the Papacy appeared, he is a ſtranger to Hiſtory, both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, that remembreth not upon this very hint.

The three Trumpets coming are the Trumpets of Wo, wo, wo: though theſe things paſt were very woful; but thoſe much more that are to come.

REVEL. CHAP. IX.

A Decription of the Papacy under the fifth Trumpet. Another Star falling from Heaven, and that a notable one indeed, the He that hath the Key of the bottomleſs pit committed to him. A vaſt difference from the Keys given Peter, The Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven: The ſetting of theſe in their juſt diſtance and oppoſition will illuſtrate the matter before us. When the world is to come out of darkneſs and Heatheniſm to the knowledge of the Goſpel, Chriſt gives Peter the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, to open the door and let light come in among them: for he firſt preached to the Gentiles, Act. 10. & 15.7. The World under the Papacy returns, as it were, to Heatheniſm again [and not undeſervedly for its contempt of the Goſpel and unproficiency under it] which is very fitly deſcribed by Hell opened, by the Keys of the bottomleſs pit, and darkneſs coming and clouding all. The Claviger or Turnkey is The child of perdition, Abaddon and Apollyon, a deſtroyer and one that is ſurely and ſorely to be deſtroyed. Chittim [Italy or Rome] afflicting and periſhing for ever, Num.24.24. Antichriſt of the ſecond edition, much augmented and inlarged. The Jews the firſt, as we obſerved at the ſecond Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, and this the ſecond, Antichriſt at his full ſtature. It is true indeed that Rome Heathen is one part of him, but obſerve how little a part reputed in compariſon of Rome Papiſh, the Star fallen from Heaven. So that though that did woful things, yet you ſee the firſt wo is fixed here.

The way of his bringing wo upon the Earth, is by filling the World with ſmoke and darkneſs of ignorance and humane traditions and inventions: and out of this ſmoke come his locuſts, of his votary orders. The locuſts deſcribed much like thoſe in Joel 1. for their terror and deſtroying: only their having the faces of men ſpeaks them men-caterpillers: and their Nazarite-like hair long as the hair of women, ſpeaks them votaries; or ſuch as take on them vowed Religion. Their trading is not with graſs or the green things of the Earth as other Locuſts do, but with Men, and they are Locuſts in name, but Scorpions in action, wounding with the ſting of their tails [the teacher of lies is the tail, *Iſa.*9.15.] but not killing: leaving men indeed in a Religion and a profeſſion of Chriſt, but no better then a venomed and dying one. The time of their tormenting is five months, the time of Locuſts ravening ordinarily, from the ſpring well ſhot forth, to harveſt.

This is the firſt wo.

Theſe Locuſts ſtings, mind me of a ſtory or two in the Roman Hiſtory: which let me mention here, though I cannot apply them hither. Dion, in his ſtory of the life of Domitian ſaith thus, About that time divers began to prick many whom they pleaſed, with poyſoned needles, whereof many died, hardly feeling what was done to them. And this was practiſed not only at Rome, but almoſt through all the world.

And again in the life of Commodus. About that time, ſaith he, there was ſo great a mortality, that oft times there died two thouſand in Rome in one day. And many, not only in the City, but alſo through the whole Roman Empire, were killed by miſchievous men, who poyſoning needles pricked others with them: as alſo it had been in Domitians time, and ſo innumerable people died by this means. But there was no greater plague then Commodus himſelf, &c.

The

The ſounding of the ſixth Trumpet begins another wo. Four Angels looſed, which were bound in Euphrates, and come with a terrible Army, and horſes breathing fire and ſmoke and brimſtone, and having ſtings in their tails, &c. The Turks and Mahumetans coming as a plague upon the Eaſtern part of the World, as the Papacy on the Weſtern. Theſe hurt with their tails [falſe doctrine] as well as the other did in the former Trumpet: but theſe have alſo heads in their tails, which the other had not, for theſe hold out another Head and Saviour, Mahomet.

REVEL. CHAP. X.

A Little Book in the hand of Chriſt, ſpeaketh the reſtoring of Religion, and Truth, after all the darkneſs and confuſions mentioned before. The words in ver. 6, 7. do help to ſtate the intent of this Viſion. He ſware by him that liveth for ever, that there ſhould be delay of time no longer, but in the days of the ſeventh Trumpet the myſtery of God ſhould be fulfilled. The myſtery of God is his gathering in of his Elect, more eſpecially of the Gentiles, Rom. 16. 25, 26. Epheſ. 3. 5, 6. and hitherto there had been great hinderance by Rome Heathen, by Hereſies, Papacy, Turciſm, but at laſt Chriſt ſwears, that there ſhould be no more delay: the word χρόνος muſt be taken ſo here: and not unconſonant to the ſignification of the word, and very conſonant to the context, and to the place from whence this verſe is taken: That is Dan. 12. 7. where the Angel is brought in ſwearing, as here, that the trouble of Antiochus and his perſecution and hindrance ſhould be ſo long, and there ſhould be no delay further, but there ſhould be a reſtoring. That place laid to this, and Antiochus looked upon as a figure of Antichriſt, the conſtruction of this place is eaſie. Only the great Angel would have the ſpeech of the ſeven thunders, which refer to theſe times, to be concealed. The Propheſie in general intimates the reſtoring of the Goſpel in theſe later times, which is handled in the next Chapter, but very generally, and very briefly. Johns eating of the little Book, as Ezek. 2. 8. and the words to him, Thou muſt Propheſie again before many People and Nations and Tongues and Kings, do not ſo much infer Johns going abroad after this to preach to many Nations himſelf, as it doth the progreſs of the truth that he preached, through Nations and People, which had been ſuppreſt ſo long: aiming at theſe times when the Goſpel laſt broke out from under Popery. The paſſage is parallel to the laſt words in the Book of Daniel, Go thy way till the end be, for thou ſhalt reſt, and ſtand in the lot, at the end of days. Not that Daniel ſhould live till the end of thoſe miſeries by Antiochus, but that his doctrine, and the truth ſhould ſtand up and be reſtored in thoſe times. The phraſe is ſuch another as when Chriſt telleth his Diſciples that they ſhould ſit on twelve Thrones judging the twelve Tribes of Iſrael, which is not meant of their perſonal ſitting to judge, but that their doctrine ſhould judge and condemn that unbelieving Nation.

REVEL. CHAP. XI.

THE Viſion of this Chapter is in order to the accompliſhing of the myſtery of God, which was ſpoken of Chap. 10. 7. As Ezekiels meaſuring of a new Temple, ſhewed the reſtoring of Religion and of the Lords people, and foretold of the new Jeruſalem and calling of the Gentiles: To the ſame purpoſe is the meaſuring of the Temple here. The Church was under the myſtical Babylon, Chap. 9. as the Jews were under the Eaſtern, when Ezekiel wrote thoſe things; now as that deſcription of the meaſures of the Temple, was a prediction and pledge of their coming forth, ſo this ſpeaketh to the ſame tenor. John is commanded to leave the Court which is without the Temple, forth, and not to meaſure it, Becauſe it was given to the Gentiles, and they ſhould tread the holy City fourty and two moneths. Not in an hoſtile way, but as the flock of the Lord tread his Courts, there worſhipping him: as ſee the phraſe, Iſa. 1. 12. Pſal. 122. 2. and the meaning ſeemeth to be this; Meaſure not the Court of the Gentiles, for their multitudes that come to attend upon the Lord ſhall be boundleſs and numberleſs.

The two and forty moneths: and a thouſand two hundred and ſixty days, ver. 3. and Chap. 12. 6. and a time and times and half a time, Chap. 12. 14. are but borrowed phraſes from Daniel: who ſo expreſſeth the 3 years and an half of Antiochus his perſecution, and treading down Religion, Dan. 7. 25. & 12. 7, 11. and they mean times of trouble, and are uſed to expreſs that, but not any fixed time. The Jews themſelves have learned to make the ſame conſtruction of it, when they ſay Adrianus beſieged Bitter three years and an half, Jeruſ. Taanith fol. 68. col. 4. And this alſo [that comfort might ſtand up againſt miſery] was the time of our Saviours Miniſtry, when he reſtored decaied and ruined Religion, in ſo happy a manner, Dan. 9. 27. And this the Jews alſo have obſerved in that ſaying we have mentioned before, The divine glory ſhall ſtand upon mount Olivet three years and an half, and ſhall preach, &c. So that according to this interpretation of the numbers, the things they are applied unto are facil. The Gentiles ſhall tread the Lords Courts fourty two months, and the two Witneſſes ſhall Propheſie a thouſand two hundred and ſixty days clothed in ſackcloth: Meaning that the Gentiles ſhall worſhip God and attend upon him in a Goſpel Miniſtry [and for that, alluſion is made to the ſpace of time that Chriſt adminiſtred the Goſpel] but this miniſtring and attending ſhall not be without perſecution and trouble [and for intimation of that, alluſion is made to the bitter times of Antiochus.]

Two witneſſes, is a phraſe taken from the Law. [In the mouth of two or of three witneſſes every word ſhall ſtand] and it means all that ſhould bear witneſs to the truth in the times ſpoken of. But more eſpecially the Miniſtry, which is charactered by the picture of Moſes and Elias, the two great Reformers in their ſeveral times: the former, the firſt Miniſter of the Jews, the later of the Gentiles. Theſe are two Olive trees [See Zech. 4. 3. Rom. 11. 17, 24.] and two Candleſticks [See Chap. 1.20.] gracious in themſelves, and having light, and holding it out to others. They muſt finiſh and accompliſh their work that they had to do, and then be overcome by Antichriſt and ſlain.

Their caſe is clearly paralleled with Chriſt their Maſters; by comparing it with which, it is beſt underſtood: He preached three years and ſix months in trouble and ſorrow, ſo they in ſackcloth: He having finiſhed his Miniſtry was ſlain, ſo they. He revived and aſcended, ſo they likewiſe. Now this that eſpecially ſtates the caſe, and the counting of the progreſs of proceedings intended here, is this: That as Chriſt laid the foundation of the Goſpel, and when he having finiſhed his Miniſtry was ſlain, riſen and aſcended, the Goſpel was not extinct with him, but increaſed more and more by the Miniſtry that followed after: So ſeems this that alludes thereunto to be underſtood: As, that the two Witneſſes ſhould mean the firſt Miniſtry, and bearing witneſs to the truth at the firſt breaking of it out of Popery, which was followed with horrid perſecutions and multitudes of Martyrdoms: but theſe firſt Witneſſes having ſo done their Teſtimony, and vaſt numbers of them having ſealed it with their blood, and being gone to Heaven, yet the Goſpel increaſed and ſhook down a part of Rome even at theſe firſt beginnings.

Their dead bodies muſt be caſt in the ſtreets of the great City where our Lord was crucified. The term The great City reſolves that Rome is meant, if there were no other evidence: which ſee explained, Chap. 17.18. And by her power and ſentence our Lord was crucified, and for a quarrel of hers, being accuſed and condemned by Pilate as a Traytor to the Roman power, for ſaying he was a King. This is the rather mentioned, now there is ſpeech of Romes laſt bloodineſs againſt Chriſts Witneſſes: that it might be ſhewed that it perſevered the ſame, to his, that it had been to him, and that to the laſt, and that theſe Witneſſes drunk but of the ſame cup that their Maſter had drunk before them.

She is called ſpiritually [דרך משל as the Jews ſpeak] Sodom and Egypt: Sodom for filthineſs: and Egypt for Idolatry and mercileſneſs. Never did place under Heaven wallow in fleſhly filthineſs, and particularly in the Sodomitick beſtiality, as Rome did about thoſe times that John wrote: and how little it hath been mended under the Papacy there are Records plain enough that ſpeak to her ſhame. He that reads Martial and Juvenal [to name no more] may ſtand and wonder that men ſhould become ſuch beaſts: and it had been better that thoſe Books had been for ever ſmothered in obſcurity then that they ſhould have come to light, were it not only for this, that they and others of the like ſtamp, do give that place her due character, and help us the better to underſtand her deſcription. It is obſervable what Paul ſaith, Rom. 11. 21, 22, 23, 24. that becauſe the Heathen had brutiſh conceptions concerning God, abaſing him, he gave them over to brutiſh abaſing their own bodies by beſtiality, or indeed by what was above beſtial. And ſo he ſhews plainly, that Gods giving up men to ſuch filthineſs, eſpecially Sodomy, was a direct plague for their Idolatrous conceptions of God, and their Idolatry. And to this purpoſe it may be obſerved that when the Holy Ghoſt hath given the ſtory of the worlds becoming Heatheniſh at Babel for and by Idolatry, Gen. 11. he is not long before he brings in mention of this ſin among the Heathen, and fearful vengeance upon it, Gen. 19. Apply this matter to the caſe of Rome and it may be of good information.

The caſting their dead bodies in the ſtreets, ſpeaks the higher ſpite and deteſtation againſt them: and in this particular they are deſcribed different from their Maſter. And as they had propheſied three years and an half, ſo they lay unburied three days and an half: till there was no apparent poſſibility of their recovery. But they revive and go to Heaven: and a tenth part of the City falls by an Earthquake, and ſeven thouſand periſh: but the reſt of that part of the City that fell, who periſhed not, gave glory to God. Nine parts of the City left ſtanding ſtill: whoſe ruine is working ſtill from henceforward, by the Goſpel that theſe Witneſſes had ſet on foot: which brings in the Kingdoms to become the Kingdoms of Chriſt, &c.

REVEL CHAP. XII.

AS Daniel, Chap.2. giveth a general view of the times, from his own days, to the coming of Chriſt, in the mention of the four Monarchies [in the four parts of Nebuchadnezzers Viſionary Image] which ſhould run their date and decay, and come to nothing, before his coming: and then in *Chap.*7. handles the very ſame thing again in another kind of ſcheme, and ſomething plainer: And then in *Chap.*8. & 10. & 11. & 12. doth explain at large, and more particularly, ſome of the moſt material things that he had touched in thoſe generals: So doth our Apocalyptick here, and forward. He hath hitherto given a general ſurvey of the times from his own days to the end: and now he goes over ſome of the chief heads again with explanation.

And firſt he begins with the birth of Chriſt, and the Chriſtian Church: and the machination of the Devil to deſtroy both. The Church of the Jews bringeth forth her chief child, and the Devil ſeeketh to deſtroy him. He is pictured 1. A great red Dragon. Old Pharaoh who ſought to devour new born Iſrael is much of the like character, *Iſa.*27.7. Pſal 74.13, &c. 2. With ſeven heads: So many had the perſecuting Monarchies, Dan. 7. the Lion one, the Bear one, the Leopard four, and the fourth beaſt one. 3. And ten horns, Parallel to the Syrogrecian perſecutors, *Dan.*7.7, &c. 4. With his tail he drew and caſt down the third part of the Stars: As the Tyrant Antiochus had done, Dan. 8. 10. So that by theſe alluſive deſcriptions, phraſes of old ſtories fetched to expreſs new, is ſhewed the acting of the Devil now, by his miſchievous and tyrannical inſtruments, with as much bitterneſs and bloody-mindedneſs as he had done in thoſe. The womans fleeing into the Wilderneſs, alludes to Iſraels getting away into the Wilderneſs from the Dragon Pharaoh, Exod. 14. &c. And her nouriſhing there a thouſand two hundred and ſixty days, ſpeaks Chriſts preſervation of that Church in the bittereſt danger and days, like the days of Antiochus. This Viſion aims at the great oppoſition and oppreſſion the Church and Goſpel underwent from the firſt riſing of it, to the ruine of Jeruſalem: and their preſervation in all that extremity.

The battel betwixt Michael and the Dragon, is of the ſame aim and time with the former; but it ſpeaks thus much further, that the Church is not only preſerved, but the Dragon conquered and caſt to the Earth. Heaven all along in this Book is the Church, the Earth therefore may be properly underſtood of the World, and here more eſpecially of that part of worldly ones, the unbelieving Jews; and that the rather, becauſe the Gentiles here are called the Wilderneſs, as they be alſo in ſeveral other places in Scripture. The Devil therefore is caſt out of the Church by the power of Michael, the Lord Chriſt, that he cannot neſtle there, and he goes into the reſt of the Nation that did not believe: much like the tenor of that parable, Matth. 12. 43, 44, 45. The Woman hath Eagles wings [alluding to *Exod.*19.4.] and gets into the Wilderneſs, the perſecuted Church and Goſpel gets among the Gentiles: The Devil caſts venom as a flood after the Woman-Church, and the Earth ſwallows it up: the unbelieving Jews do as it were drink up all the poyſon of the Devil, and together with raging againſt the Church they grow inraged one againſt another, and againſt the Romans, till they become their own deſtroyers. And indeed though it were a moſt bitter time with the Church while ſhe was among the combuſtions that that Nation had within it ſelf, yet their raging one againſt another the more it increaſed in their particular quarrels, the more it avenged her quarrel, and turned their edge from off her, upon themſelves. The Devil ſeeing this, betakes himſelf to fight againſt the Womans ſeed, the Church of the Gentiles: and the Treatiſe of that begins in the next Chapter.

REVEL. CHAP. XIII.

WHEN Rome hath ſlain Chriſt, and deſtroyed Jeruſalem, Satan gives up his Power and Throne to it; and that deſervedly, as to one moſt like to be his chief and moſt able agent to act his fury. She is deſcribed here, a Beaſt bearing the ſhape of all the four bloody Monarchies, *Dan.*7. in power and cruelty matching, nay incomparably exceeding them all. There is but little reaſon to take Rome for the fourth Monarchy in Daniel; and the ſo taking it, bringeth much disjointing and confuſion, into the interpreting of that Book and this, and into the ſtating of affairs and times ſpoken of in them. The Jews like ſuch a gloſs well, as whereby they do conclude, that the Meſſias is not yet come, becauſe the fourth Monarchy the Romane, ſay they, is not yet utterly deſtroyed. And truly I ſee not how they can conclude leſs, upon ſuch a conceſſion. For it is plain in Daniel, that the four Kingdoms there ſpoken of, muſt come to nothing before the firſt appearing of Meſſias; and that the Romane is not, is moſt plain, ſince this Book makes Rome Heathen and Papal but as one.

The

The Holy Ghoſt by Daniel ſhews the four Monarchies, the afflicters of the Church of the Jews till Meſſias his firſt coming, The Babylonian, The Mede-Perſian, The Grecian, and The Syrogrecian: and John now takes at him, and ſhews a fifth Monarchy the afflicter of the Church of Jews and Gentiles till his ſecond coming. Daniel indeed gives a hint of the Romane, but he clearly diſtinguiſheth him from the other four, when he calls him the Prince that was to come, Dan. 9. 26. beyond and after thoſe four that he had ſpoken of before. Him John deſcribes here, as carrying the character of all thoſe four. A Beaſt with ten horns, ſuch a one had been the Syrogrecian, Dan. 7.7 like a Leopard, as the Grecian was, verſ.6. his feet as a Bears, ſuch the Perſian, verſ. 5. his mouth like a Lion, ſuch the Babylonian, verſ. 4. This therefore could not be any of thoſe, when it was all: and by this deſcription of it by characters of them all, it ſhews the vaſt power and incomparable cruelty and oppreſſion of it equalling them all: nay it infinitely went beyond them put all together, in extent of Dominions, Power, Continuance and Cruelty, both to the Church and to the World: Balaam long before Rome was in being doth ſet it out for the great afflicter, Numb. 24. 24. Ships ſhall come from the coaſts of Chittim, and ſhall afflict Aſſur, and ſhall afflict Eber: That Chittim means Italy or Rome, is granted even by ſome Romaniſts themſelves, it is aſſerted by the Jews, and confirmed by other places of Scripture, and even proved by the very ſenſe and truth of that place. It afflicts both the afflicted and the afflicter Eber and Aſſur: and that hath been the garb of it ſince its firſt being. How may this be read in her own ſtories? In her bloody Conqueſts over all the world: in the titles of honour [but which ſpeak oppreſſion] Britannicus, Germanicus, Africanus, and the like? And to take up all in Epitome, and that you may conjecture ex ungue Leonem, what whole Rome hath done in all her time for ſlaughter, oppreſſion and deſtroying, take but the brief of one of her Commanders Pompey the Great; of whom Pliny ſpeaks to this purpoſe, Nat. Hiſt. lib. 7. cap. 26. He recovered Sicily, ſubdued Africk: ſubjected eight hundred and ſeventy ſix Towns about the Alpes and coaſts of Spain: routed and ſlew 2183000 men. Sunk and took eight hundred and forty ſix Ships: took in one thouſand five hundred and thirty eight fortified places; and triumphed from his Conqueſt of Aſia, Pontus, Armenia, Paphlagonia, Cappadocia, Cilicia, Syria, Judea, Albania, Iberia, Creet and Baſterna. What hath Rome done by all her agents in all her time? And ſhe is this year 1654, two thouſand four hundred and eight years old.

She is deſcribed here, with ſeven heads and ten horns, as the Dragon, whoſe deputed ſhe is, is pictured Chap. 12. 3. the horns crowned with power, and the heads with blaſphemies.

One of his heads had been wounded to death, but his deadly wound was healed: This ſeemeth to mean her Monarchical or Kingly power, which was extinguiſht with the Tarquins, but revived in the Cæſars: and hereby is given intimation from whence to account the beginning of this fifth Monarchy: namely from Romes beginning again to be Monarchical: and we may well take a hint of this from Luke 2. where at the birth of Chriſt all the world is taxed by Cæſar Auguſtus. Not that Monarchical Government is therefore the worſe becauſe thus abuſed by Rome Heathen, no more then Religion is the worſe for being abuſed by Rome Papal.

Another Beaſt ariſeth, like this for power and cruelty, but far beyond him in couſenage and deluſion. Rome Heathen dealt always openly and in down right terms of bloodineſs: profeſſedly ſetting it ſelf to deſtroy Religion: But Rome Papal is a myſtery of iniquity: it goes to work by deceiving, and carrying fair pretences: therefore it is ſaid that it ſpake as a Dragon, but had horns like a Lamb. It revives the Tyranny of Rome Heathen and Imperial, and none muſt thrive before it that will not bear its badge: either ſome mark, or its name, or the number of its name: which number was the number of a man, and his number is ſix hundred and ſixty ſix. In Hebrew numerals, Sethur the name of a man in Numb. 13.13. comes juſt to this number: and which being interpreted ſignifies Hidden or Myſtery: the very inſcription of Rome it ſelf, Chap. 17. 5. In Greek Λατεῖνος fits it, which is the old name of the Roman. And in Genealogical Arithmetick the number of Adonikams family ſuits with it, Ezra 5. 13. which mans name ſignifies, A Lord riſing up.

REVEL. CHAP. XIV.

THE warring 'twixt Michael and his Angels, and the Dragon and his Angels, and the Dragons making war with ſeed of the Woman, Chap. 12. receiveth illuſtration in the thirteenth Chapter, and in the beginning of this. For in Chap. 13. he reſigns his Power and Throne to the Beaſt Rome, and makes him chief leader in his Wars; and his Angels are men that receive his mark. Here the Lamb upon mount Zion is Michael, and his Angels and followers are marked with his Fathers Name in their foreheads as Chap. 7.

And now as in the eighth, ninth, tenth and eleventh Chapters the relation is concerning thoſe things that ſhould be againſt the Church, from henceforth the Propheſie is more eſpecially of things that make for the Church, and againſt her enemies. As 1. The preaching of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, ver. 6, 7. 2. The proclaiming of the ruin of the myſtical Babylon: proclaimed even from its firſt riſing up a perſecutor: as Iſaiah did Propheſie againſt the Eaſtern, even before its tyrannical being. 3. The Miniſtry of the Word giving caution, againſt joyning with the Beaſt and his Image, and the danger and damnation that ſhould follow upon joyning with him, and the torments deſcribed, *ver.*9, 10,11. Here the patience of the Saints tried, *ver.*12. and John by a voice from Heaven commanded to write them bleſſed that die in the Lord from thenceforth, ver. 13. at once ſhewing the bitterneſs of the perſecution cauſed by the Beaſt, that even death ſhould be deſirable to deliver the Saints from that trouble; and incouraging to ſtand out againſt the Beaſt and his Image even to the death.

Theſe bitter dealings againſt the Church, ripen the ſins of the world ready for cutting down: and thereupon Chriſt is deſcribed coming as againſt Egypt, *Iſa.*19.1. riding upon a cloud, and with a ſickle in his hand to reap the Earth. As Joel 3.13. betokening his vengeance againſt his enemies: So the Earth is reaped Harveſt and Vintage and all: This is a general intimation of Gods judgment and vengeance, which is more particularly handled in the pouring out of the Vials, *Chap.*16.

It is obſervable that the word for reaping of the Earth comes out from the Temple; yea though Chriſt have the ſickle in his hand, yet an Angel out of the Temple calls to him to reap: and another Angel comes out of the Temple with a ſickle, and a third out of the Temple calls to him to reap: As this may be underſtood to Doctrinal information, that the cries and urgencies of the Church to Chriſt ſtir him up to avenge them on their enemies, Luke 18.7. ſo the expreſſions may be explained by alluſive application. The putting in of the firſt ſickle, to reap the firſt corn in Judea, was by the word and warrant of the Prieſts and Rulers ſitting in the Temple, and they that were to reap, when they were come to the corn, put not in the ſickle, till the word was given, Reap. The manner and managing of this buſineſs, viz. the reaping of the firſt ſheaf is recorded and related by the Talmud: Menachoth per. 10. and in Toſaphta. ibid. Theſe three men, ſay they, that were appointed by the Sanhedrin to reap, went out into the valley of Kidron, with a great company following them on the firſt day of the Paſſover week when now it grew towards evening, with three ſickles and three baskets. One when they came to the place ſaid to them, On this Sabbath, on this Sabbath, on this Sabbath, In this basket, in this basket, in this basket, With this ſickle, with this ſickle, with this ſickle, Reap: to whom the three anſwer, Well, well, well, I will reap. The other ſays, Reap then. Then they reap, &c. Thus phraſes taken from known cuſtoms, do ſpeak the plainer.

And ſo is the expreſſion taken from common ſpeech and opinion, when it is ſaid in ver. 30. The wine-preſs was troden without the City, and blood came out of the wine-preſs even to the horſe bridles. Here is treading a wine-preſs of blood, as Chriſt treadeth in Edom, Iſa. 63. 1,3. [Edom is the common name by which the Hebrew Writers call the Romans.] The wine-preſs was without the City: alluding to the wine and oyl preſſes which were without Jeruſalem at the foot of mount Olivet. Blood came up to the horſe bridles: An hyperbole by which they expreſſed great ſlaughter and effuſion of blood. So Talm. Jeruſ. in Taanith fol. 69. *col.*1. deſcribing the woful ſlaughter that Hadrian made of the Jews at the deſtruction of the City Bitter ſaith שקע הסוס ברכב ער חוטמו The horſes waded in blood up to the noſtrils, by the ſpace of a thouſand and ſix hundred furlongs. Of that ſpace and extent doth *R. Menahem. on gen. fol.*60. reckon the largeneſs of the Land of Iſrael.

REVEL CHAP. XV.

WHAT was ſpoken in general, in the concluſion of the preceding Chapter, concerning the treading of the Wine preſs of Gods wrath, is here more particularly proſecuted in the ſtory of the ſeven Vials. At the beginning of which John again calls us to reflect upon the ſcheme of the Temple in Heaven: which all along ſpeaks according to the platform of the Temple at Hieruſalem. Here is a Sea of Glaſs mingled with Fire, and Harpers harping by it, &c. ſinging the ſong of Moſes: which as it calls to mind Moſes and the peoples ſinging upon the read Sea ſhore upon their delivery from Egypt, Exod. 15..ſo doth it plainly allude to the muſick at the Temple, by the laver or Sea, and which ſtanding near the Altar was as a Sea of Glaſs mingled with Fire.

Moſes and Iſrael ſing after the deſtruction of Egypt; for their deliverance was by her deſtruction, but thoſe here that have got victory over the Beaſt, ſing before he is deſtroyed, for they are delivered from him and prevail againſt him though he ſtand in his ſtrength, and his deſtruction be not yet come. The Goſpel grew, and Sanguis Martyrum was ſemen Eccleſiæ, do Satan and Antichriſt what they can.

After this ſong The Temple of the Tabernacle of the Teſtimony in Heaven was opened, ver. 5. All the whole building upon Mount Moriah was called the Temple, the Courts and Cloiſters and Chambers, &c. but the very houſe it ſelf, The Holy and Holy of Holies was only and properly The Temple of the Tabernacle of Teſtimony: And the ſong mentioned before, ver. 2. is repreſented as being in the Court, near the Altar and laver, but now the very Houſe it ſelf is opened: Parallel to what is ſpoken Chap. 11. 19. The Temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was ſeen in his Temple, the Ark of his Covenant: The Lord in pouring out vengeance upon Antichriſt, will manifeſt his judgments, as ver. 4. and open his Counſels and Covenant: for while the enemy raged, and raved, and deſtroyed thoſe that would not worſhip him, and when even all the world in a manner did worſhip him, the Lords judgments were hid, and his Covenant with his people, as it were out of ſight, or as if no ſuch thing had been, but when this vengeance ſhall come, then all will be plain.

The ſeven Angels that pour out the ſeven Vials are charactered in the garb of Prieſts, coming out of the Temple, in white linen, and girded over the breaſts, as the Prieſts were. One of the living creatures gives the Vials into their hands: the very ſame ſenſe and carriage with that Ezek. 10. 7.

REVEL. CHAP. XVI.

WERE the Stage where the things of this Book were to be acted, and the time of their acting of as little compaſs as was that of the things of Daniel, one might with more probability allot the ſeveral things mentioned, to their ſeveral times, as the things in him may be done: But ſince the ſcene here is as large as all the World where the Goſpel was to come, and the time as long as time ſhall be; [1600 years paſt already, and how much behind none knoweth] to undertake to apply every thing in this Book to its particular time, place and occaſion, is to run a hazardous undertaking. In ſome places indeed the things are ſo plain, that they ſpeak themſelves, but in many ſo obſcure that he that will venture to bring them to particular application, doth it more upon his own venture, then upon any good textual warrant: And amongſt thoſe obſcurities, theſe Vials are not the leaſt. Take them in a general interpretation [as I believe they are intended] and their meaning is eaſie to be underſtood, but to come to allot them ſeverally to this or that time or place, is but to do that, that when ye have done all you can, will come to no ſurer bottom to reſt upon, then your own conceit and ſuppoſal.

The matter of them is expreſſed as to the moſt part, by alluſion to the plagues of Egypt, as boils, blood, darkneſs, and ſo it clears the thing intended, namely in general to ſhew how the myſtical Egypt, Chap. 11. 8. after all her oppreſſion and perſecution of the Iſrael of God, ſhould at laſt come to receive her juſt reward, as old Egypt had done: and that God would follow her with plagues till he had deſtroyed her. They are ſomewhat like the plagues of the ſeven Trumpets, ſome of which, as we obſerved, did in general ſpeak the ſtate of the World till the riſing of Antichriſt: and theſe Vials may be underſtood as the general deſcription of his plagues and ruine. We obſerved in Chap. 6. and that upon good Scripture ground, that the ſix Seals did all but ſpeak one effect, namely the deſtruction of the Jewiſh Nation, but brought to paſs by ſeveral judgments; and the like interpretation may be made here.

The firſt Vial brings a noiſom Boyl upon the worſhippers of the Beaſt: this was the ſixth plague of Egypt, but here the firſt: for that plague in Egypt came home to Jannes and Jambers the Magicians, that they could not ſtand before Moſes, Exod. 9. 11. And that both both this and all the reſt might be ſhewed to reach home, even to the vericſt deceivers and ringleaders of miſchief in Antichriſtian Egypt, this is juſtly ſet in the firſt rank.

The ſecond and third here, refer to the one plague of Blood in Egypt, and theſe exceed that: For there all the Rivers and Ponds were indeed turned into Blood, but the Egyptians digged for Water about the River to drink, *Exod.*7.24. and found it and it was not turned into Blood: The queſtion and anſwer of Aben Ezra is pertinent. It is ſaid, there was blood throughout all the Land of Egypt: And the Magicians did ſo with their inchantments. Now how could the Magicians turn water into blood, when there was no water left, but all was blood? And he anſwers, Aaron only turned the waters that were above ground into blood, not thoſe that were under ground: but here Sea and Rivers and Fountains, and all are become Blood: ſtill to ſhew how throughly the plagues ſhould come home.

At theſe plagues there is mention of the Angel of the waters, ver. 5. which, ſince all the Angels here are charactered in the garb of Prieſts, as hath been ſaid, may alſo be underſtood as alluding to that Prieſt whoſe office it was to have care of the Waters, and to look that there ſhould be Water enough and fitting for the people to drink, that came up to the three Feſtivals: Among the offices of the Prieſts at the Temple this was one. Maym. in Kele Mikdaſh per. 7. and Nicodemus whom the Talmud ſpeaks of was of this office, Aboth R. Nathan per. 6.

The fourth Vial poured into the Sun brings ſcorching heat; this ſeems to allude to Joſhua's or Deborah's day, when the Stars from Heaven fought: the Sun ſtanding ſtill ſo long did not only give light to Iſrael, but probably heat and faintneſs to the Canaanites, and *Pſal.*121.6. ſeems to refer thither, The Sun ſhall not ſmite thee by day.

As in the fourth they are plagued by the Sun, ſo in the fifth, by want of it. The ſeat of the Beaſt darkned as Pharaohs Throne and Kingdom was: and this darkneſs bringing horror and pains; as Egypt did through dreadful apparitions in the dark.

The drying up of Euphrates for the Kings of the Eaſt, under the ſixth Vial, ſeems to ſpeak much to the tenor of the ſixth Trumpet, the looſing of the four Angels which were bound at Euphrates. Thoſe we conceived the Turks to plague Chriſtendom; theſe we may conceive enemies to plague Antichriſt. The alluſion in the former ſeems to be to the four Kings from beyond Euphrates, that came to ſcourge Canaan, Gen. 14. this to the draining of Euphrates for Cyrus and Darius to take Babylon. For having to treat here of a Babylon, as *ver.*19. the ſcene is beſt repreſented, as being laid at the old Babylon. Now the Hiſtorians that mention the taking of Babylon by Cyrus, tell us it was by draining the great ſtream of Euphrates, by cutting it into many little channels.

The Egyptian plague of Frogs is here tranſlated into another tenour, and that more dangerous; three unclean Spirits like Frogs come out of the mouth of the Dragon, Beaſt, and falſe Prophet: Spirits of Devils working miracles, &c. This is named betwixt the ſixth and ſeventh Vial [though the acting of the deluſions by miracles were all the time of the Beaſt and falſe Prophet] becauſe of the judgment now coming: for though all deluders and deluded received their judgments in their ſeveral ages, yet being here ſpeaking of the laſt judgments of Antichriſt, they are all ſummed together. He is here called the falſe Prophet, as being the great deluder of all. The fruit of all theſe deluſions is to ſet men to fight againſt God: whoſe end is ſet forth by alluſion to the Army of Jabin King of Canaan, Judg. 5.19. broken at the waters of Megiddo. The word Armageddon ſignifies a mountain of men cut in pieces. Here that ſolemn caution is inſerted, Behold I come as a thief: Bleſſed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments: The Prieſt that walked the round of the Temple guards by night, had torches born before him, and if he found any aſleep upon the guard he burnt his clothes with the torches, Middoth per. 1. halac. 2.

The ſeventh Vial concludes the Beaſts deſtruction. The great City is ſaid to be divided into three parts: either as Jeruſalem was, Ezek. 5.11,12. a third part to peſtilence, a third part to the ſword, and a third part to diſperſion, and deſtruction in it: or becauſe there is mention of an Earthquake, this ſpeaks its ruining in general, as Zech. 14.4,5. A tenth part of it fell before, Chap. 11. 13. and now the nine parts remaining fall in a tripartite ruine.

REVEL. CHAP. XVII.

MYSTICAL Babylon pictured with the colours of the old Babylon, Rome ſo called, as being the mother of Idolatry, as Babel was the beginning of Heatheniſm, and the mother of perſecution: Babylon deſtroyed Jeruſalem, ſo did Rome, and made havock of the Church continually.

She is reſembled to a woman deckt with gold, &c. as Iſa. 14.4. ſitting upon a ſeven-headed and ten-horned Beaſt; as *Chap.*13.1. Which Beaſt was and is not and yet is, it ſhall aſcend out of the bottomleſs pit, and ſhall go to perdition. Rome under the Papacy was not the ſame Rome it had been, and yet it was: Not Rome Heathen and Imperial as it had been before, and yet for all evil, Idolatry, perſecution, &c. the ſame Rome to all purpoſes. It is plainly deſcribed as ſitting upon ſeven hills, upon which there is hardly a Roman Poet or Hiſtorian, but makes a clear comment. The ſeven heads denoted alſo ſeven Kings or kinds of Government that had paſſed in that City: Five are fallen, verſ. 10. Kings, Conſuls, Tribunes, Dictators, Triumvirs: and one then was when John wrote, namely Emperors: And one not yet come, Chriſtian Emperors, which continued but a ſhort ſpace before the Beaſt came which was and is not. He is the eight and he of the ſeven: They that hold Rome to be the fourth Monarchy in Daniel, cannot but alſo hold from this place, that that Monarchy is not yet extinct. The ten horns upon the Beaſt in *Dan.*7.24. are ten Kings ariſing and ſucceeding one another in the ſame Kingdom: but here at ver. 12. they are ten ſeveral Kingdoms, all ſubject to the Beaſts both Imperial and Papal, but at laſt ſhall riſe up againſt the myſtical Whore and deſtroy her. It is like there muſt yet be converſion of ſome Kingdoms from the Papacy, before it fall.

REVEL. CHAP. XVIII. XIX. to Verſ. 11.

AN Elegy and a Triumph upon the fall of Babylon: The former *Chap.*18. almoſt verbatim from *Iſa.*13. & 14. & 21. & 34. & Jer. 51. & Ezek. 27. The later alſo, *Chap.*19. the phraſe taken from the Old Teſtament almoſt every word. The triumphant Song begins with Halleluja ſeveral times over. The word is firſt uſed at the later end of Pſal. 104. where deſtruction of the wicked being firſt prayed for, Let the ſinners be conſumed out of the Earth, and let the wicked be no more, he concludes with, Bleſs thou the Lord O my ſoul. Hallelujah.

The obſervation of the peoples ſaying over the great Hallel at the Temple [or their great Song of praiſe] doth illuſtrate this. The Hallel conſiſted of ſeveral Pſalms, viz. from the one hundred and thirteenth to the end of the one hundred and eighteenth, and at very many paſſages in that Song, as the Prieſts ſaid the verſes of the Pſalms, all the people ſtill anſwered Hallelujah: Only here is one thing of ſome difference from their courſe there, for here is Amen Hallelujah, ver.4. whereas It is a tradition That they anſwered not Amen in the Temple at all: What ſaid they then? Bleſſed be the Name of the glory of his Kingdom for ever and ever. Jeruſ. in Beracoth fol. 13. col. 3. But the promiſes of God which are Yea and Amen, being now performed, this is juſtly inſerted; as Chriſt for the ſame cauſe in this Book is called Amen, Chap.3.14.

The marriage of the Lamb is now come, and his Wife is ready, *ver.*7. the Church now compleated.

REVEL. CHAP. XIX. from Ver.11. to the end of the Chapter.

HERE begins a new Viſion, as it appeareth by the firſt words, And I ſaw Heaven opened: and here John begins upon his whole ſubject again, to ſum up in brief what he had been upon before. Obſerve what is ſaid in verſ. 19. I ſaw the Beaſt, and the Kings of the Earth, and their Armies gathered together to make war againſt him that ſate on the Horſe, and againſt his Army: and obſerve withal, that there is the ſtory of the deſtruction of the Beaſt before *Chap.*18. and of the marriage, and marriage Supper of the Lamb before, *Chap.*19.7,8,9. therefore the things mentioned here cannot be thought to occur after thoſe: this therefore is a brief rehearſal of what he had ſpoken from the twelfth Chapter hither, about the battel of Michael and his Angels with the Dragon and his Angels.

REVEL. CHAP. XX.

THE preceding Section ſpake what Chriſt did with the Beaſt and thoſe that carried his mark: he fought againſt them always, and when he ſaw his time, deſtroyed them: here the Holy Ghoſt tells us what he did with the Devil that ſet them on: You heard of Chriſt fighting with the Dragon, Chap. 12. and the Dragon foiled and caſt out, ſets to proſecute the Womans ſeed: but what courſe takes he for that? He reſigns his Throne, and Power, and Authority, to the Beaſt Rome, and it muſt do, and it did his buſineſs for him, Chap. 13. 3. and how throughly it did its maſters work, is ſhewed all along from that place forward. But what becomes of the old Dragon the maſter of miſchief? He ſits by, as it were, and looks on while his game is played, and hiſſes on his Deputy Rome, firſt Imperial, then Papal. They at the laſt receive their due wages for their work, Imperial and Papal go to perdition. But what muſt become of the Dragon that ſet them on? It would be very improper to tell ſo largely of the fearful vengeance and deſtruction upon the agents, and to ſay nothing of the principal and chief mover. That therefore is done here, and this Chapter takes at Chap. 13.3. and tells you what became of the old Dragon after the reſigning of his Throne to the Beaſt: namely that he ſate not at his own quiet as if Michael had nothing to do with him, or let him alone, having ſo much to do with his inſtruments, but that he curbed and deſtroyed both principal and agent, and caſt them both together into the bottomleſs pit.

The Devil had two ways of undoing men; the Church by perſecution, the world by deluſion of Oracles, Idolatry, falſe Miracles, and the like. His managing of the former by his Deputies the former Chapters have related, and how they ſped in his ſervice: and this comes to tell how he ſpeeds about the other. The great Angel Michael, the Lord Chriſt, who hath the key of the bottomleſs pit in his hand, as Chap. 1.18. chains him by the power of the Goſpel, that he ſhould no more deceive the Nations for a thouſand years: Weigh the phraſe, Not deceive the Nations: it is not not perſecute, but not deceive; nor is it the Church, but the Nations. His perſecuting of the Church hath been ſtoried before: and here is told how he is curbed for deceiving the Nations, and indeed when he deputed Rome, and let that looſe for the former, he was chained up as for the later. It is eaſily conſtrued how Satan deceived the Nations, by Idols which are called a lie, *Iſa.*44.20. *Rom.*1.25. by his Oracles in which was no light, *Iſa.*8.20. and by magical miracles, which were meer deluſion. Hence the world for the time of Heatheniſm, is ſaid to be in his Kingdom of darkneſs, Act. 26. 18. Coloſ. 1. 13, &c. Now the ſpreading of the Goſpel through the world ruined all theſe before it, and diſſolved thoſe curſed ſpels and charms of deluſion, and did as it were chain up Satan that he could no more Deceive the Nations Ἔθνη The Heathen as he had done, by theſe deceits: ſo that the words ſpeak the ending of Satans power in Heatheniſm, and the bringing in of the Gentiles to the knowledge of the truth, out of darkneſs and deluſion.

The date of this his chaining up was a thouſand years: Now the Jews counted the days of the Meſſias, a thouſand years, as we touched before. The Babylon Talmud in Sanhedrin in the Chapter Helek doth ſhew their full opinion about the days of Meſſias, and amongſt other things they ſay thus: as Aruch ſpeaks their words in voce צרק It is a tradition of the houſe of Elijah, that the righteous ones that the bleſſed God ſhall raiſe from the dead, they ſhall no more return to their duſt, but thoſe thouſand years that the holy bleſſed God is to renew the world, he will give them wings as Eagles, and they ſhall flee upon the waters. The place in the Talmud is in Sanhedrin fol. 92. where the Text indeed hath not the word thouſand, but the marginal gloſs hath it, and ſhews how to underſtand the thouſand years. And Aruch ſpeaks it as a thing of undeniable knowledge and intertainment. And ſo ſpeaks R. Eliezer in Midras Tillin fol. 4. col. 2. The days of the Meſſias are a thouſand Years.

As John all along this Book doth intimate new ſtories by remembring old ones, and uſeth not only the Old Teſtament phraſe to expreſs them by, but much alluſion to cuſtoms, language and opinion of the Jews, that he might ſpeak, as it were, cloſer to them and nearer their apprehenſions, ſo doth he here and forward. This later end of his Book remembers the later end of the Book of Ezekiel. There is a reſurrection *Ezek.*37. Gog and Magog, Ezek.38. & 39. and a new Jeruſalem, Ezek.40. and forward. So here a reſurrection, *ver.*5. Gog and Magog, ver.8. and a new Jeruſalem, Chap.21. & 22.

There a reſurrection, not of bodies out of the grave, but of Iſrael out of a low captived condition in Babel. There a Gog and Magog, the Syrogrecian perſecutors, Antiochus and his houſe: and then the deſcription of the new Jeruſalem, which as to the place and ſituation was a promiſe of their reſtoring to their own Land, and to have Jeruſalem built again, as it was indeed in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah: but by the glory and largeneſs of it [as it is deſcribed, more in compaſs then all the Land of Canaan,] they were taught to look further, namely at the heavenly or ſpiritual Jeruſalem, the Church through all the World.

Now the Jews according to their allegorical vein, applied theſe things to the days of Chriſt thus: that firſt there ſhould be a reſurrection cauſed by Meſſias of righteous ones, then he to conquer Gog and Magog, and then there muſt come עתיד לבא The brave World to come that they dreamed of: Beſides what they ſpeak to this tenour in the Talmudick Treatiſe laſt cited, there is this paſſage in *Jeruſ. Megillah fol.*73. col. 1. They are applying particular parts of the great Hallel to particular times [what the great Hallel was, we ſhewed a little before.] And that part, ſay they, I love the Lord becauſe he hath heard me, refers to the days of Meſſias: that part, Tye the ſacrifice with cords: to the days of Gog and Magog. And that, Thou art my God and I will praiſe thee: refers to the world to come.

Our Divine Apocalyptick follows Ezekiel with an Allegory too, and in ſome of his expreſſions alludes to ſome of theirs, not as approving them, but as ſpeaking the plainer to them by them: Here is a reſurrection too, but not of bodies neither, for not a word of mention of them, but of ſouls. The ſouls of thoſe that were beheaded for the witneſs of Jeſus, lived and reigned, ver.4. and yet this is called The firſt reſurrection, ver.5.

The meaning of the whole let us take up in parts. There are two main things here intended. Firſt, To ſhew the ruine of the Kingdom of Satan; and ſecondly, The nature of the Kingdom of Chriſt. The Scripture ſpeaks much of Chriſts Kingdom, and his conquering Satan, and his Saints reigning with him; that common place is briefly handled here: That Kingdom was to be eſpecially among the Gentiles, they called in unto the Goſpel. Now among the Gentiles had been Satans Kingdom moſt ſetled and potent, but here Chriſt binds him and caſts him into the bottomleſs pit that he ſhould deceive no more [as a great cheater and ſeducer caſt into priſon] and this done by the coming in of the Goſpel among them. Then as for Chriſts Kingdom I ſaw Thrones, ſaith John, and they ſate upon them, &c. ver. 4. here is Chriſt and his inthroned and reigning. But how do they reign with him? Here John faceth the fooliſh opinion of the Jews of their reigning with the Meſſias in an earthly pomp; and ſhews that the matter is of a far different tenour: that they that ſuffer with him ſhall reign with him, they that ſtick to him, witneſs for him, dye for him, theſe ſhall ſit inthroned with him. And he nameth beheading only of all kinds of deaths, as being the moſt common: uſed both by Jews and Romans alike, as we have obſerved before at Acts 12. out of Sanhedr. per. 7. halac. 3. And the firſt witneſs for Chriſt, John the Baptiſt, died this death. He ſaith that ſuch live and reign with Chriſt the thouſand years, not as if they were all raiſed from the dead at the beginning of the 1000 years, and ſo reign all together with him thoſe years out, as is the conceit of ſome [as abſolute Judaiſm as any is, for matter of Opinion] but that this muſt be expected to be the garb of Chriſts Kingdom all along, ſuffering and ſtanding out againſt ſin, and the mark of the Beaſt and the like: whereas they held it to be a thouſand years of earthly bravery and pompouſneſs.

But the reſt of the dead lived not again until the thouſand years were finiſhed: This is the firſt reſurrection: Not that they lived again when the thouſand years were finiſhed, but it means that they lived not in this time which was the time of living, when Satan was bound, and truth and life came into the world: The Gentiles, before the Goſpel came among them, were dead, in Scripture phraſe, very copiouſly: Epheſ. 2. 1,2. & 4.18. &c. but that revived them, Joh. 5. 25. This is the firſt reſurrection, in and to Chriſts Kingdom: the ſecond is ſpoken of at the twelfth verſe of this Chapter that we are upon. Paul uſeth the ſame expreſſion to ſignifie the ſame thing, namely a raiſing from darkneſs and ſin by the power of the Goſpel, Rom. 11.15. Now when this quickning came among the Gentiles, Satan going down, and Chriſts Kingdom advanced, and the Goſpel bringing in life and light, as Joh. 1.4. thoſe that did not come and ſtick cloſe to Chriſt and bear witneſs to him, but cloſed with the mark of the Beaſt, ſin and ſinful men, theſe were dead ſtill and lived not again till the thouſand years were finiſhed, that is, while they laſted, though that were a time of receiving life.

Bleſſed therefore and holy are they that have part in this firſt reſurrection, for on them the ſecond death hath no power, ver.6. The ſecond death is a phraſe uſed by the Jews. Onkelos renders Deut. 33. 6. thus, Let Reuben live and not die the ſecond death. And Jonathan, Iſa. 65.6. thus, Behold it is written before me, I will not grant them long life, but I will pay them vengeance for their ſins, and deliver their carcaſes to the ſecond death. And *ver.*15. The Lord will ſlay them with the ſecond death.

Obſerve in the Prophet that theſe verſes ſpeak of the ruine and rejection of the Jews, now a curſed people, and given up to the ſecond death: and in Chapter 66. verſ. 29, 30, 31. is told how the Lord would ſend and gather the Gentiles to be his people, and would make them his Prieſts and Levites: And then ſee how fitly this verſe anſwers thoſe. In ſtead of theſe curſed people, theſe are bleſſed and holy, and might might not ſee the ſecond death, and Chriſt makes them Prieſts to himſelf and his Father.

In this paſſage of John ſcorn is put again upon the Jews wild interpretation of the reſurrection in Ezekiel. They take it litterally, think ſome dead were really raiſed out of their graves, came into the Land of Iſrael, begat children, and died a ſecond time: Nay they ſtick not to tell who theſe men were, and who were their children. Talm. Babyl. in Sanhedr. ubi ſupra.

After the thouſand years are expired, Satan is let looſe again, and falls to his old trade of the deceiving the Nations again, ver. 8. Zohar. fol. 72. col. 286. hath this ſaying: It is a tradition, that in the day when judgment is upon the world, and the holy bleſſed God ſits upon the Throne of judgment, then it is found that Satan that deceives high and low, he is found deſtroying the world, and taking away ſouls. When the Papacy began, then Heatheniſm came over the world again, and Satan as looſe and deceiving as ever: then Idolatry, blindneſs, deluding oracularities and miracles as freſh and plenteous as before: from the riſing of the Goſpel among the Gentiles theſe had been beating down, and Satan fettered and impriſoned deeper and deeper every day: and though his agent Rome beſtird it ſelf hard to hold up his Kingdom, by the horrid perſecutions it raiſed, yet ſtill the Goſpel prevailed and laid all flat. But when the Papacy came, then he was looſe again, and his cheatings prevailed and the world became again no better then Heathen. And if you ſhould take the thouſand years fixedly and literally, and begin to count either from the beginning of the Goſpel in the preaching of John, or of Peter to Cornelius the firſt inlet to the Gentiles, or of Paul and Barnabas their being ſent among them, the expiring of them will be in the very depth of Popery; eſpecially begin them from the fall of Jeruſalem, where the date of the Gentiles more peculiarly begins, and they will end upon the times of Pope Hildebrand, when if the Devil were not let looſe, when was he?

He calls the enemies of the Church, eſpecially Antichriſt, Gog and Magog: the title of the Syrogrecian Monarchy, the great perſecutor, Ezek. 38. & 39. [Pliny mentions a place in Cæloſyria that retained the name Magog, lib. 5. cap. 23.] So that John from old ſtories and copies of great troubles tranſcribeth new, uſing known terms from Scripture, and from the Jews language and notions, that he might the better be underſtood: So that this Chapter containeth a brief of all the times from the riſing of the Goſpel among the Gentiles to the end of the world, under theſe two ſums, firſt the beating down of Idolatry and Heatheniſm in the Earth till the World was become Chriſtian, and then the Papacy ariſing doth Heathenize it again. The deſtruction of which is ſet down, verſ. 9. by fire from Heaven, in alluſion to Sodom, or 2 King. 1. 10, 12. and it is ſet cloſe to the end of the World: the Devil and the Beaſt [Rome imperial] and the falſe Prophet [Rome Papal] are caſt into fire and brimſtone, verſ. 10. where John ſpeaks ſo, as to ſhew his method, which we have ſpoken of. The Devil was caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone, where the Beaſt and the falſe Prophet are: He had given the ſtory of the beaſt and falſe Prophet, the Devils agents, and what became of them, Chap. 19. verſ. 20. And now the ſtory of the Devil himſelf: for it was not poſſible to handle theſe two ſtories but apart: and now he brings the confuſion of all the three together, and the confuſion of all with them that bare their mark, and whoſe names were not written in the Book of life.

REVEL. CHAP. XXI.

THE Jeruſalem from above deſcribed. The phraſe is uſed by Paul, Gal. 4. 26. and it is uſed often by the Jews: Zohar fol. 120. col. 478. Rabbi Aba ſaith, Luz is ודועלם עלאה Jeruſalem which is above, which the holy bleſſed God gives for a poſſeſſion, where bleſſings are given by his hand in a pure Land: but to an impure Land no bleſſings to be at all. Compare Revel. 21. 27, & 22. 15. Midras. Till. in Pſal. 122. Jeruſalem is built as a City that is compact together. R. Jochanan ſaith, The holy bleſſed God ſaid, I will not go into Jeruſalem that is above, until I have gone into Jeruſalem that is below, &c.

Ezekiels Jeruſalem, as we obſerved, was of a double ſignification, namely as promiſing the rebuilding of the City after the Captivity, and foretelling of the ſpiritual Jeruſalem, the Church under the Goſpel, and that moſt eſpecially: At that John taketh at here, and that is the Jeruſalem that he deſcribeth. And from Iſa. 65. 17, 18. joyneth the creating new Heavens and a new Earth; and ſo ſtateth the time of building this new Jeruſalem, namely at the coming in of the Goſpel, when all things are made new, 2 Cor. 5. 17. A new People, new Ordinances, new Oeconomy, and the old World of Iſrael diſſolved. Though the deſcription of this new City be placed laſt laſt in the Book, yet the building of it was contemporary with the firſt things mentioned in it about the calling of the Gentiles. When God pitched his Tabernacle amongſt them, as he had done in the midſt of Iſrael, Levit. 26. 11, 12. That Tabernacle is pitched in the fourth and fifth Chapters of this Book: And now all tears wiped away and no more ſorrow, death nor pain, verſ. 4. which if taken litterally could refer to nothing but the happy eſtate in Heaven [of which the glory of this Jeruſalem may indeed be a figure] but here, as the other things are, it is to be taken myſtically or ſpiritually, to mean the taking away the curſe of the Law, and the ſting of death and ſin, &c. No condemnation to be to thoſe that are in Chriſt Jeſus.

The paſſages in deſcribing the City are all in the Prophets phraſe, Ezekiel and Iſaiah: as compare theſe, The Bride the Lambs wife, verſ. 9. Sing O barren [Heathen] that didſt not bear, &c. Thy Maker is thine Husband, thy Redeemer, &c. Iſa. 54. 1, 5.

Verſ. 10. He carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain. Compare Ezek. 40. 2.

That great City holy Jeruſalem, &c. This refers to great dimenſions of Ezekiels Jeruſalem; as alſo to the ſquareneſs, the three gates of a ſide, &c. The glory of it deſcribed from thence, and from Iſa. 58. 8. & 60. 2, 3. & 54. 11, 12, &c. The wall of it twelve thouſand furlongs ſquare, or fifteen hundred miles upon every quarter, Eaſt, Weſt, North and South three thouſand miles about: and fifteen hundred miles high. Wall of ſalvation, Iſa 26. 1. & 60. 14.

The foundations of the walls garniſhed with twelve precious ſtones [ſee Iſa. 54. 11.] as the ſtones in the Ephod or holy Breaſtplate: three upon every ſide, as theſe were three and three in a row: The firſt foundation ſtone here is the Jaſpar, the ſtone of Benjamin, for Pauls ſake the great agent about this building of the Church of the Gentiles: The Jeruſ. Talmud. in Peah, fol. 15. col. 3. ſaith expreſly that the Jaſpar was Benjamins ſtone, for it ſaith, Benjamins Jaſpar was once loſt [out of the Ephod] and they ſaid Who is there that hath another as good as it? Some ſaid, Damah the ſon of Nethina hath one, &c.

And I ſaw no Temple therein, &c. verſ. 22. here this Jeruſalem differs from Ezekiels: that had a Temple, this none: and it is obſervable there, that the platform of the Temple is much of the meaſures and faſhion that the ſecond Temple was of, but the City of a compaſs larger then all the Land: which helpeth to clear what was ſaid before of the double ſignificancy of thoſe things, they promiſed them an earthly Temple, which was built by Zerobabel, but foretold a heavenly Jeruſalem which is deſcribed here.

REVEL CHAP. XXII.

FROM Ezekiel Chap. 47. and from ſeveral paſſages of Scripture beſides, John doth ſtill magnifie the glory, happineſs and holineſs of the new Jeruſalem: Lively waters of clear Doctrine teaching Chriſt and life by him flowing through it continually, Ezek. 7. 1, 9. Cant. 4. 15. The Tree of Life loſt to Adam, and Paradiſe ſhut up againſt him, to keep him from it, here reſtored. Then a curſe, here There ſhall be curſe no more, verſ. 3. See Zech. 14. 11. חרם לא יהיה עוד Anathema non erit amplius, &c. He concludeth, Theſe ſayings are faithful and true, ſo he had ſaid before at the marriage of the Lamb, Chap. 19. 9. and again at his beginning of the ſtory of the new Jeruſalem, Chap. 21. 5. referring to the ſeveral Propheſies that had been of theſe things, and now all thoſe ſayings and Propheſies were come home in truth and faithfulneſs. He is commanded not to ſeal his Book, as Daniel was, Dan. 12. 4. becauſe the time of theſe things was inſtantly beginning, and Chriſts coming to reveal his glory in avengement upon the Jewiſh Nation and caſting them off, and to take in the Gentiles in their ſtead was now at the door, within three and an half or thereabout to come, if we have conjectured the writing of this Book to its proper year. There are two years more of Nero, and one of confuſion in the Roman Empire in the Wars of Otho, Vitellius and Veſpaſian, and the next year after Jeruſalem falls.

And thus if this Book of the Revelation were written laſt of the Books of the New Teſtament, as by the conſent of all it was, then may we ſay, Now was the whole will of God revealed and committed to writing, and from henceforth muſt

Viſion

Viſion and Propheſie and Inſpiration ceaſe for ever. Theſe had been uſed and imparted all along for the drawing up of the mind of God into writing, as alſo the appearing of Angels had been uſed, for the further and further ſtill revealing of his will, and when the full revelation of that was compleated, their appearing, and revelations to men muſt be no more. So that this Revelation to John was the topping up and finiſhing of all revelations. The Lord had promiſed that in the laſt days [of Jeruſalem] he would pour down of his Spirit upon all fleſh, Act. 2. 17. And Chriſt promiſed to his Apoſtles, that he would lead them into all truth, John 16. 12, 13. To look for therefore the giving of thoſe extraordinary gifts of the Spirit beyond the fall of Jeruſalem there is no warrant; and there is no need, ſince when the inſpired penmen had written all that the Holy Ghoſt directed to write, All truth was written.

It is not to be denied indeed, that thoſe that had theſe extraordinary gifts before the fall of Jeruſalem, if they lived after, had them after, for the promoting of theſe ends for which they were given, but there is neither ground nor reaſon whereupon to believe, that they were reſtored to the next generation, or were or are to be imparted to any generation for ever. For as it was in Iſrael at the firſt ſetling of their Church, ſo was it in this caſe in the firſt ſetling of the Goſpel. The firſt fathers of the Sanhedrin in the wilderneſs, were indued with Divine gifts, ſuch as we are ſpeaking of, Numb. 11. 25. but when that generation was expired, thoſe that were to ſucceed in that Function and Imployment, were ſuch as were qualified for it by education, ſtudy and parts acquired. So was it with this firſt age of the Goſpel and the ages ſucceeding. At the firſt diſperſing of the Goſpel, it was abſolutely needful that the firſt planters ſhould be furniſhed with ſuch extraordinary gifts, or elſe it was not poſſible it ſhould be planted. As this may appear by a plain inſtance. Paul comes to a place where the Goſpel had never come, he ſtays a month or two and begets a Church, and then he is to go his way and to leave them: Who now in this Church is fit to be their Miniſter? They being all alike but very children in the Goſpel: but Paul is directed by the Holy Ghoſt to lay his hands upon ſuch and ſuch of them, and that beſtows upon them the gift of Tongues and Propheſying, and now they are able to be Miniſters and to teach the Congregation. But after that generation, when the Goſpel was ſetled in all the world, and committed to writing, and written to be read and ſtudied: then was ſtuddy of the Scriptures the way to inable men to unfold the Scriptures and fit them to be Miniſters to inſtruct others: and Revelations and Inſpirations neither needful nor ſafe to be looked after, nor hopeful to be attained unto. And this was the reaſon why Paul coming but newly out of Epheſus and Crete, when he could have ordained and qualified Miniſters with abilities by the impoſition of his hands, would not do it, but left Timothy and Titus to Ordain, though they could not beſtow thoſe gifts: becauſe he knew the way that the Lord had appointed Miniſters thenceforward to be inabled for the Miniſtry, not by extraordinary infuſions of the Spirit, but by ſerious ſtudy of the Scriptures, not by a miraculous, but by an ordinary Ordination. And accordingly he gives Timothy himſelf counſel to ſtudy, 1 Tim. 4. 13. though he were plentifully indued with theſe extraordinary indowments, 1 Tim. 4. 14. And Paul himſelf had his Books for ſtudy, or he had them to no purpoſe, 2 Tim. 4. 13.

And indeed it had been the way of God, he hath inſtructed his people by a ſtudious and learned Miniſtry, ever ſince he gave a written word to inſtruct them in. 1. Who were the ſtanding Miniſtry of Iſrael all the time from the giving of the Law to the Captivity into Babel? Not Prophets, or thoſe inſpired men [for they were but occaſional Teachers, and there were often long ſpaces of time wherein no Prophet appeared] but the Prieſts and Levites that became Learned in the Law by ſtudy, Deut. 33. 10. Hoſ. 4. 6. Mal. 2. 7. And for this end as hath been touched, they were diſpoſed into forty eight Cities of their own, as ſo many Univerſities, where they ſtudied the Law together, and from thence were ſent out into the ſeveral Synagogues to teach the people: and had the Tithes paid them for their maintenance whileſt they ſtudied in the Univerſities, and for their preaching in the Synagogues. And it may be obſerved that even they that had the prophetick ſpirit did not only ſtudy the Scriptures themſelves, Joſh. 1. 8. Dan. 9. 1. but ſent the people for inſtruction to the Prieſts who were ſtudents and the ſtanding Miniſtry, Hag. 2. 11. Mal. 2. 7. 2. If you conſider the times under the ſecond Temple, then it was utterly impoſſible that the people ſhould be taught but by a ſtudious and learned Miniſtry; for the ſpirit of Propheſie was departed, and the Scriptures were then in an unknown Tongue, to all but Students. And hence they had an interpreter in every Synagogue to render into the Vulgar, what was read in the Law and the Prophets in the Original. So that the Spirit of God inſpired certain perſons whom he pleaſed to be the revealers of his will till he had imparted and committed to writing what he thought fit to reveal under the Old Teſtament, and when he had compleated that, the Holy Ghoſt departed, and ſuch inſpirations ceaſed. And when the Goſpel was to come in, then the Spirit was reſtored again, and beſtowed upon ſeveral perſons for the revealing further of the mind of God, and compleating the work he had to do, for the ſetling of the Goſpel, and penning of the New Teſtament, and that being done, theſe gifts and inſpirations ceaſe, and may no more be expected then we may expect ſome other Goſpel yet to come.

Concerning the FALL of

JERUSALEM,

AND

The Condition of the JEWS in that Land after.

BEING come so near to the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, as that it is but three years and an half and a little more from the time we have concluded with unto it, and having so frequent occasion to mention that destruction, and vengeance upon that Nation, as we have had: It may not be amiss to drive so far further as to take a view of such a spectacle; not that we go about to write the History of their Wars and ruine, which were but to transcribe Josephus, who is in every mans hand, but to take a brief account of the times thither, and of the condition of the Nation in that Land afterward, the History of which is not altogether so obvious as the other: by both which we may not only see the performance of those threatnings of vengeance, that had been so abundantly given: but may the better judge wherein that vengeance did chiefly consist.

CHRIST. LXVII.

NERO. XIII.

IN this thirteenth Year of Nero therefore, Vespasian cometh General into Judea, to undertake that War: A second Nebuchadnezzar; an instrument of the Lord raised up to execute his vengeance upon that Nation, now the Nation of his curse, and to destroy their City and Temple as the other had done. And as several strange occurrences befel that destroyer, recorded in the Book of Daniel, so did divers strange things also befal this, recorded by the Roman Historians with one consent. As Nilus flowing a handful higher on that day that he came into Alexandria, then ever it did in one day before. A Vision that he had in the Temple of Serapis, of his servant Basilides, who was known to be at that instant fourscore miles off sick. And especially his healing of a blind mans eyes by anointing them with his spittle, and curing a lame mans hand, by treading upon it with his foot: To which may be added those that were accounted the presages of his reigning, as a cypress tree in his ground, clean rooted up by the winds over night, grew strait up again, and well in the morning. An Ox came and laid him down at his feet, and laid his neck under his feet, at one time as he sat at meat; and a dog came and brought him a dead mans hand, at another. Now not to dispute whether all these things were true or no, nor by what power they were wrought: certainly they set the man in the eyes of men, as a man of rarity: and as he was designed by God for a singular work, so did these things make him to be a man looked upon as one of some singular omen and fortune.

His work in the Jewish Wars this year was more especially in Galilee: where first coming to Ptolemais, the men of Sipphoris, the greatest City there, come peaceably and yielding to him; and they had done so indeed before to Cestius Gallus. Josephus who afterward wrote the History of these Wars, was now a great party in them, having fortified many Cities and places in Galilee, and being the chiefest that in those parts stood against the Romans. First he finds them work at Jotepata, which indures a very sharp siege, and puts the Romans to very sharp service before it be taken: At last after about fifty days siege Vespasian enters it, July 1. There Josephus himself is taken, and foretels Vespasian that he should be Emperour. Joppa taken presently after, and Tiberias yielded, and Taricheæ taken and 6500 slain there. Gamala gained Octob. 23. and divers other places brought in this year either by ſtorm or ſurrender, which Joſephus recordeth the ſtory of *de Bello lib.*3. through the whole Book: and *lib.*4. to the end of the ninth Chapter which he concludes, Γαλιλαῖα μὲν ὕπως ἐάλω πᾶσα, Thus was all Galilee ſubdued.

CHRIST. LXVIII. NERO. XIV.

VESPASIAN therefore having ſubjected, and ſetled Galilee, he falls this year to work in Judea, and indeed there the Jews fall to bitter work among themſelves. For all the unquiet ſpirits whom the War had proſecuted and hunted from other parts, or whoſe turbulency deſired to be in action, were flocked hither; ſo that Jeruſalem and Judea were filled full of men and trouble: and quickly full of famine, blood and all manner of miſery. The doleful ſtory Joſephus gives at large, as alſo what the Romans did among them this year, *de Bello lib.*4. whither the reader may have recourſe.

This year Nero died by his own hand, to eſcape publick and more ſhameful execution. In him ended the Blood and Family of the Cæſars: And now that myſtery of State was diſcovered, That an Emperour could be made, though not of that Blood, and elſewhere then at Rome: and the miſery of the State accrewed by that diſcovery, when the longeſt ſword did make the Emperour, and the trying which was the longeſt, undid the Empire. The ſouldiery in Spain proclaimed Galba to ſucceed him: againſt whom riſeth up Otho, and cuts him off when he was now reigning, but in his ſeventh month, having only brought the Royalty into his family; and himſelf to miſery and ruine by it. When he was ſlain a common ſouldier cut off his head, and putting his finger into his mouth [for he was bald, and therefore he could not bear it by the hair] he carried it to Otho, who gave it to the ſcum and black guard of the Camp, and they fixing it upon a pole, carried it up and down in deriſion.

CHRIST. LXIX. OTHO.

OTHO was ſcarce ſet in the Throne, when Vitellius riſeth up againſt him: and the determination of this competition was not ſo ſpeedy and unſenſible as was that betwixt Galba and Otho: For Otho ſlew Galba without any noiſe, and when himſelf had but three and twenty aſſociates at his firſt conſpiring againſt him: But the preſent quarrel ſhook a good part of the Empire, with ſidings and preparations; and came to a pitcht battel before it came to an end. Otho's men loſt the field, and when tidings of his defeat came to him, he reſolved to ſtrive no longer, but to render up his Empire and life together, and ſo ſlew himſelf. He reigned if it may be called a reign, but 95 days.

VITELIUS.

VITELLIUS is now Lord of all; who indeed is not Maſter of himſelf. A man of that untemperance and luxury, that few equalled him: and divers that did follow him and his courſe, died of ſurfets. Divers men and Cities were undone by his riotous exceſſes, and the ſouldiers became effeminate by his example. In the time of his reign which ended before this year was out, there were divers prodigies: A Comet: Two Suns at the ſame time, one in the Eaſt, another in the Weſt. The Moon twice eclipſed unnaturally. In the Capitol the footſteps ſeen of many and great Dæmones coming down from thence. And Jupiters Temple opened of its own accord with horrid noiſe. And let this be reckoned for a prodigy too, Maricus a man of an ordinary extraction among the Boii, raiſed a conſiderable number of men, and proclaimed himſelf a God. He was ſoon overthrown and thrown to the wild beaſts, whom when they rent not in pieces, it heightned the peoples opinion in thoughts that he was a God indeed; but Vitellius found another way to put him to death, and ſo his Godſhip was ſpoiled.

There were divers petty mutinies of the Armies, and deſtroying of Towns in Italy and other parts before Veſpaſian ſtird: but when he ſtood up, there were concuſſions that made all the Empire to ſhake, as it had hardly ever done before. He was then in the Eaſt about the Wars of the Jews, as we have touched inſtantly before: And there the Armies in Egypt, Judea and Syria ſwear fealty to him in the month of July. And in a ſhort time all the Provinces even to Achaia did the like. The Legions in Mæſia, Illyricum, Pannonia fall to him, and letters are ſent into Britain and Spain to move them to the like, and they prevail with them.

Vitellius

Vitellius this while, follows his riotous courſes: and marches towards Rome with 60000 men in Arms, but in no diſcipline: and a rabble of Ruffians that were of his roaring humour, exceeding that number. And theſe numbers were made numberleſs, by the conflux of all ſorts of people, out of the City to meet him. Corn was trod down, the ſouldiers quarrelled: the people was abuſed, wounded and ſlain, and they had the face of a War among themſelves. In ſuch a confuſed march they come into the City, and there take up their quarters, but in all looſeneſs, luxury and ſecurity.

At laſt Veſpaſians party breaks into Italy, and gives them a through Alarm: in a ſhort time they come to a battel at Cremona, where that poor Town is ruined, and left as a monument of thoſe combuſtions: and another memorial not to be omitted, A ſon on the one party, killed his father on the other, and perceived and deplored what he had done, as ſoon as he had done it. And thus theſe tumults grew on to that height, that in fine they fight it out in Rome it ſelf, fire the Capitol, plunder the City, ſlay Vitellius, ſubdue his party, and Veſpaſian becomes conqueror and Emperor. Think here of Matth. 24.7.

CHRIST. LXX.

VESPASIAN. I.

VESPASIAN all this while was in Egypt: at Alexandria he receives tydings of his parties ſucceſs, and thither is ſuch conflux of Friends, Ambaſſadors, and Allies to congratulate and homage him, that that City, though the ſecond in the Empire, was little enough to entertain the company gathered thither. Vitellius his fall was in December, the later end of the laſt year; and Veſpaſian did wait in the beginning of this, but till he could ſettle affairs there where he was, and till he might have good weather at Sea, and then he ſets for Italy: and Titus his ſon parting with him at Alexandria, ſets for Judea, to make ſome end of thoſe Wars.

And here we cannot but take in two paſſages for Chronology ſake, which help well to meaſure the time that we are juſt now upon. The one is this of Dion Caſſius, in the life of Veſpaſian. From the death of Nero to the reign of Veſpaſian, there intercurred but one year and two and twenty days. And I write this, leaſt any ſhould miſreckon; giving the whole time to every one that reigned. For they did not ſucceed one another, but one reigned in the time of another: So that their years are not to be counted, by their ſucceeding one another, but according to the exact courſe of the time it ſelf.

The other is out of Joſephus, who once again tells that the fall of Jeruſalem was in the ſecond year of Veſpaſian. De Bell. lib. 6. cap. 47, &c. And yet in recording the ſtory and times of the ſacking of it, he doth plainly place it in that year, that the Roman Annals write Veſpaſians firſt: as it will be obvious to obſerve, to any that peruſeth them and him. His computation therefore muſt be caſt by his own counters: for he accounteth the beginning of his reign from the time that the Armies in the Eaſt proclaimed him, and ſwore fealty to him: which was in July: and in September twelvemonth after Jeruſalem was taken; at which time Veſpaſian was entred indeed upon a ſecond year from the time of his proclaiming; and according to this calculation it is that Joſephus reckoneth: whereas Vitellius was alive and fought it out many months after Veſpaſian was proclaimed: therefore the Roman Faſti do very properly begin his firſt year from the beginning of January, this year that we are upon.

Titus coming into Judea, and there gathering all his forces together, marcheth againſt Jeruſalem, and pitcheth his ſiege againſt it, when now the Paſsover feſtival had' called all the people of the Country in thither: For as the turbulencies and inteſtine commotions in the bowels of the Empire it ſelf the laſt year, had given the Jews ſome reſpite from the Roman Armies, ſo had they given them ſome boldneſs and ſecurity, ſeeing Veſpaſian and his Forces were now forced to turn their faces another way; and they hoped they would hardly have turned towards them again. How much they were deceived, Titus without, and Famine and all miſeries within did ſoon ſhew them. What were the paſſages in this ſiege, and what Famine, Peſtilence, Civil ſlaughters, and various kinds of death the beſieged ſuffered in it, are ſo largely deſcribed by Joſephus, that it were but a needleſs rehearſal to ſpeak of them: The end was, that the Temple and City were raked up in aſhes: eleven hundred thouſand periſhed in the ſiege; almoſt an hundred thouſand taken priſoners, and the Nation ruined from what they had been. That this deſolation is phraſed in Scripture as the deſolating of the whole world, [as we have had occaſion to obſerve divers times by ſeveral paſſages that we have met withal referring thereunto] it will appear no wonder, if we conſider that it was the deſtroying of the old peculiar Covenanted people; of the Lords own habitation, Ordinances, and place choſen by him above, nay alone of all the places of the world, to put his Name there.

A people once higheſt in his favour, now deepeſt in his diſpleaſure: once bleſſed with his greateſt dignations, above any, nay above all the people under Heaven, and now fallen under his heavieſt indignation. A people of his curſe, and who have left their name for a curſe to his choſen. And a new world [as it were] now created, a new people made the Church, a new Oeconomy, and Old things paſt, and all things become new, 2 Cor.5.17.

We are now upon a very remarkable and eminent Period; where ſhould I write an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, I ſhould begin, as at the beginning of a new world: not but that the Calling of the Gentiles had begun before, for the Goſpel was now gone through all the world: and the Jews were alſo given up before as to the generality of them, when the Holy Ghoſt calls them dogs, and a Synagogue of Satan: but their State and Oeconomy was not till now rooted up, nor the Divine Ordinances once planted among them till now extinguiſhed: and their caſting off ſealed by the ruine of their City, diſperſion of their Nation, and their final obduration.

SECTION I.

The Deſolation of the Temple and City.

THE Temple was burnt down, as Joſephus a ſpectator ſetteth the time, Ἡμέρᾳ δεκάτῃ Λώου Μηνὸς, On the tenth day of the month Lous: which he ſaith was a fatal day to the Temple, for it had been burnt down by the Babylonians before on that day, De Bell. lib.6. cap.27. And yet his Countrymen that write in the Hebrew Tongue, fix both theſe fatalities to the ninth day of that month which they call the month Ab; and they account that day fatal for three other ſad occurrences beſides: On the ninth day of the month Ab, ſay they, the decree came out againſt Iſrael in the wilderneſs that they ſhould not enter into the Land: On it was the deſtruction of the firſt Temple, and on it was the deſtruction of the ſecond. On it the great City Bitter was taken, where there were thouſands and ten thouſands of Iſrael, who had a great King over them [Ben Cozba] whom all Iſrael, even their greateſt wiſe men thought to have been Meſſias: But he fell into the hands of the Heathen, and there was great affliction, as there was at the deſtruction of the Sanctuary. And on that day, a day allotted for vengeance, The wicked Turnus Rufus plowed up the place of the Temple, and the places about it, to accompliſh what is ſaid, Sion ſhall become a plowed field. Talm. in Taanith. per. 4. halac. 6. Maymon. in Taanith per. 5.

It is ſtrange men of the ſame Nation, and in a thing ſo ſignal, and of which both parties were ſpectators, ſhould be at ſuch a difference: and yet not a difference neither, if we take Joſephus his report of the whole ſtory, and the other Jews conſtruction of the time. He records that the Cloiſter walks commonly called The Porches of the Temple, were fired on the eighth day, and were burning on the ninth, but that day Titus called a Council of War, and carried it by three voices, that the Temple ſhould be ſpared: but a new buſling of the Jews cauſed it to be fired, though againſt his will, on the next day: Joſeph. ubi ſupr. cap. 22. 23, 24. Now their Kalendar reckons, from the middle day of the three that fire was at it as from a Center: and they ſtate the time thus: It was the time of the evening, when fire was put to the Temple, and it burnt till the going down of the Sun of the next day. And behold what Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai ſaith: If I had not been in that generation I ſhould not have pitched it upon any other day, but the tenth, becauſe the moſt of the Temple was burnt that day. And in the Jeruſalem Talmud it is related that Rabbi, and Joſhua ben Levi faſted for it the ninth and tenth days both. Gloſſ. in Maym. in Taanith per. 5.

Such another diſcrepancy about the time of the firing of the firſt Temple by Nebuchadnezzar, may be obſerved in 2 King. 25. 8, 9. where it is ſaid, that In the fifth month, on the ſeventh day of the month, came Nebuzaradan Captain of the guard, and burnt the Houſe of the Lord. And yet in Jerem. 52. 12. it is ſaid to have been In the fifth month, on the tenth day of the month. Which the Gemariſts in the Babylon Talmud reconcile thus: It cannot be ſaid on the ſeventh day, becauſe it is ſaid On the tenth: Nor can it be ſaid, On the tenth day, becauſe it is ſaid On the ſeventh. How is it then? On the ſeventh the aliens came into the Temple, and eat there and defiled it, the ſeventh, eighth and ninth days, and that day towards night they ſet it on fire: and it burnt all the tenth day, and was the caſe alſo with the ſecond Temple. Taanith fol.29.

The ninth and tenth days of the month Ab on which the Temple was burnt down, was about the two and three and twentieth of our July: and the City was taken and ſacked the eighth day of September following: Joſeph. ubi ſupr. cap. 47. That day being their Sabbath day, Dion fol. 748.

After eleven hundred thouſand deſtroyed and periſhed in the ſiege and ſacking, and ninety ſeven thouſand taken priſoners, Titus commanded City and Temple to be razed to the the ground, only three of the higheſt Towers left ſtanding, Phaſaelus, Hippicus and Mariamme, and the Weſtern Wall of the City: thoſe, that they might remain as monuments of the ſtrength of the place, and thereby of the renown of the Roman Conqueſt: and this, that it might be of ſome uſe to the Roman Garriſon that was left there, which was the tenth Legion. Their chief Captain was Terentius Rufus, a man of exceeding frequent mention in the Hebrew Writers, but his former name a little ſhortned, yet a little added which makes it long enough, for they conſtantly call him טורנוס ר ופוס הרשע Turnus Rufus the wicked one. There are endleſs diſputes betwixt him and R. Akibah mentioned, about the Jews Law and Religion, and when he died R. Akibah married his widdow, now become a Proſeliteſs.

Amongſt thoſe that periſhed in the fate of the City, the names moſt famous were Jochanan, Simeon and Eleazar, the three ringleaders of ſedition, names famous for faction. But the perſon of the beſt rank that periſhed, was Rabban Simeon, the Preſident of the Sanhedrin, a man educated with Paul at the foot of Gamaliel his father. The Sanhedrin had ſitten at Jabneh a long while, but the Feaſt of the Paſsover had now brought them up to Jeruſalem, and there he is caught. The Bab. Talmud in the place lately cited, relates, that he was once in danger, but one of the Roman Commanders was a means of his delivery: But at laſt he was caught and ſlain, and in the Jews Martyrology he is ſet the firſt of הרוגי מלכות The ten ſlain by the Kingdom: meaning ten eminent ones that were put to death by the Romans. All the ten are reckoned by Midras Tillin upon Pſal. 9. fol. 10. col. 3. He forgetteth not, ſaith he, the cry of the poor: that is, he forgetteth not the blood of Iſrael to require it of the Nations: nor the blood of thoſe Righteous ones that were ſlain: viz. Rabban Simeon the ſon Gamaliel, Rabbi Iſmael the ſon of Eliſha, R. Iſhbab the Scribe, R. Hotſpith the Interpreter, R. Joſe, R. Judah ben Baba, R. Judah Hannachtom, R. Simeon ben Azzai, R. Hananiah ben Teradion, and R. Akibah. But the Author of Tſemach David reckoning up theſe, next after Rabban Simeon nameth Ananias the Sagan, or the ſecond Prieſt, and ſaith that he was ſlain at the deſtruction of the City when Rabban Simeon was ſlain. Of this Ananias Sagan there is mention in the Talmud Text ſeveral times: we will take but one inſtance, Shekalim per. 6. halac. 1. There were thirteen worſhippings or bowings in the Temple, but the houſe of Rabban Gamaliel, and the houſe of Ananias Sagan made fourteen. The Sagan was, as it were, Vice-Highprieſt, the next to him in Dignity and Office, and is ſometimes called the Highprieſt, as Luke 3. 2. And it may be this was the man, and bare that title, Act. 23. 2, 4. the enemy of Paul, and whoſe character and doom he reads, that he was a whited wall, and God would ſmite him: accompliſhed when he periſhed in the fall of the City.

We may not omit the calculation of the time that the Jews make further, of the Temples burning: When the firſt Temple was deſtroyed, ſay they, it was the evening on the ninth of Ab, it was the going out of the year of releaſe, and it was the going out of the Sabbath: And ſo was it with the ſecond Temple. Tal. Bab. ubi ſupr. Obſerve, by their confeſſion the Temple was burnt down upon the Lords day, or on the Chriſtian Sabbath. Fire put to it upon their Sabbath, and it burnt all ours: And ſo the City fell upon their Sabbath, as was mentioned out of Dion even now.

SECTION II.

The face and ſtate of the Country after the Cities ruine.

WE will firſt begin at Jeruſalem it ſelf. It was laid ſo deſolate, ὡς μηδὲ πόποτε ἐνοικηθῆναι τὸ παράπαν ἂν φῆναι ἐν τῇ ὄψει τοῖς ἐπελθοῦσι, That travellers by could ſee no ſign that it had been ever inhabited: they are the words of Joſephus De Bell. lib. 7. cap. 1. The Friars there, and the Maps here with us, that point out places ſo punctually, as to tell you Here was Pilates Palace, here the Highprieſts, here the dolorous way, &c. muſt receive more curteſie from your belief, then they can give proof to their aſſertion.

It appears by the conſtant and copious teſtimony of the Jews, that the City and Temple were not only laid flat by fire, ruine, and demoliſhment, but that Turnus Rufus brought a plow over them to make good that Propheſie, Zion ſhall be plowed as a field: The plowman would find but rugged work: They allot it, as obſerved before, to have been on the ſame day of the year, and ſo a twelvemonth at the leaſt muſt intercede.

What the beauty of the place had been, needs no Rhetorick to ſet it forth, nor what the populouſneſs; the Temple, if there had been no other goodly ſtructures, was enough to ſpeak the one, and the multitude of their Synagogues the other: their own records ſum them up to four hundred and threeſcore. R. Phinehas in the name of R. Hoſhaiah ſaith there were 460 Synagogues in Jeruſalem, and every one had a houſe for the Book of the Law for the publick reading of that, and a houſe for the publick teaching and explaining the traditions.

ditions. Jeruſ. Chetub. fol. 35. col. 3. which in Megillah fol. 73. col. 4. and in R. Solomon upon the firſt of Iſaiah are reckoned up to four hundred and fourſcore. But now not one relick left, of Temple, Synagogue, Midraſh, Houſe, or any thing elſe but rubbiſh and deſolation. Her people uſed this cuſtom while ſhe ſtood, that on all other days of the year the unclean walked in the middle of the ſtreet, and the clean by the houſe ſides, and the unclean ſaid unto them, Keep off: But on the days of the Feſtivals, the clean walked in the middle of the ſtreet, and the unclean by the houſe ſides, and then the clean bid Keep off. Jeruſ. Shekalin fol. 51. col. 1. But now where is that company, that niceneſs, nay where are the ſtreets? Titus himſelf ſome time after the deſolation, coming that way, could not but bemoan the fall of ſo brave a City, and curſed the Rebels that had occaſioned ſo fatal a deſtruction: Joſeph. De Bell. lib.7. cap.15.

How the Country near about was waſted with ſo long and terrible a ſiege, and indeed the whole Country with ſo dreadful a War, it is eaſier conceived then expreſſed. Joſephus tells particularly much of it, and this thing for one, That all the timber twelve miles about the City was cut down, and brought in to make forts and engines for the ſiege, lib.6. cap.40.

We may take a view of the whole Country as to the ſurface and ſituation of it in this proſpective of their own: The Land [ſay they] that Iſrael poſſeſſed that came out of Babylon, was theſe three Countries, Judea, Galilee, and Beyond Jordan, and theſe were ſeverally tripartite again. There was Galilee the upper, and Galilee the neather, and the Vale. From Caphar Hananiah upward, all that bears not Sycamores, is Galilee the upper, and from Caphar Hananiah downward, all that doth bear Sycamores is Galilee the lower, and the border of Tiberias is the Vale. And in Judea, there is the Mountanous, and the Plain, and the Vale. And the plain of Lydda is as the plain of the South, and the mountanous thereof as the mountain royal: From Bethoron to the Sea is one Region: Shiviith per. 9. halac. 2. The Jeruſalem Gemariſts do add thus, What is the vale in Galilee? The vale of Genezareth and the adjoyning. What is the mountanous in Judea? This is the mountain royal; and the plain thereof is the plain of the South, and the vale is from Engedi to Jericho. And what is the mountanous beyond Jordan? R. Simeon ben Eleazar ſaith, The hills of Macvar, and Gedor: And the plain thereof Heſhbon, and all her Cities, Dibon, Bamoth Baal, and Beth Baal Meon. And the vale is Beth Haran, and Beth Nimrah. Shevïith fol. 38. col. 4.

It were endleſs to trace the footſteps of the War particularly in all theſe places, let Joſephus be conſulted for that: we may ſay in ſhort, that hardly any conſiderable place eſcaped, but ſuch as were peaceable, or ſuch as were unacceſſible. Of the latter ſort the mountanous of Judah was the chiefeſt place, Joſhua 21. 1. Luke 1. 39. הר המלך The mountain royal, as the Hebrew Writers do commonly call it [a place incredibly populous as they teſtifie, Jeruſ. Taanith fol. 69. col. 1.] Hither Chriſt gives his Diſciples warning before hand to flee, when theſe evils ſhould come, Matth. 24. 16. Which warning we cannot judge but they took, and ſo planted here as in a place of ſafety by his warrant.

Though therefore the Country were extreamly waſted, with ſo long and ſo furious a War, yet was it not utterly waſte, nor the Nation deſtroyed from being a people, though it were deſtroyed from being what it had been. Thoſe places and perſons that had quietly ſubmitted to the Roman power, if they had eſcaped the fury of their own ſeditious ones, were permitted to live in quiet, yea to injoy their own Religion and Laws, they in the mean while demeaning themſelves as peaceable ſubjects, to that power that had brought them under. And for one acknowledgment of that ſubjection, they were injoyned to pay that Didrachma or half ſhekel that they uſually paid to the Temple for their lives, to Jupiter Capitolinus, Xiphil. apud Dionem. pag.748.

Their Sanhedrin continued in the ſame luſtre and ſtate, as it had done for many years before the City fell: and their Synagogues in the ſame poſture, and their Religion in the ſame condition, ſave only thoſe parts of it which were confined to Jeruſalem, which was now in the duſt. And generally the places and people that had eſcaped the War, if they would live quiet, did injoy their quietneſs, as well as men could do in a Land in ſuch a condition as into which it was now brought.

The Sanhedrin ſitting at Jabneh: Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai Preſident.

ALthough Rabban Simeon the Preſident of the Council, was caught in Jeruſalem as in a trap, and ſo loſt his life, yet Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai his Vice-Preſident, and who was alſo then in the City with him, made a ſhift to eſcape. He ſpake and acted for Cæſar as much and as long as he durſt, and when he ſaw he could no longer be in ſafety in the City, he cauſed his Scholars R. Joſhua and R. Eliezer to carry him forth upon a Bier as a dead corps [for a dead corps might not reſt in Jeruſalem all night, and ſo he eſcaped and was brought to Cæſar.] Thus R. Nathan tells the ſtory, Avoth per. 4. This Rabban Jochanan fourty years ago, when the Temple doors flew open of their own accord, foreſaw its ruine in that preſage, and accordingly applied that ſaying of the Prophet Zechary, Open thy doors O Lebanon that the fire may devour thy Cedars. Therefore when he ſaw the enemy now ſo ſtraitly beſieging the City, and ſuch forerunners of ruine apparent, it is no wonder if he uſed all perſwaſion to the people to yield and to ſave their City, as the ſame Author alſo tells us he did, and if he went and gave himſelf up to him that he knew ſhould be Conqueror. Nor needed he any Prophetick ſpirit to foreſee theſe things, but the very ſickly condition and diſtemper of the Nation might plainly enough tell him, that her death could not be far off.

He finding favour with Cæſar, petitioned of him, that the Sanhedrin might repair to its old place Jabneh, and there ſettle, and he obtained it. Jabneh was near unto Joppa upon the Sea coaſt: there is mention of it, 2 *Chron.*26.6. Here had the Sanhedrin ſitten as we have mentioned, many years before the Temple fell, a good part of Gamaliels time, and all Rabban Simeons his ſon.

He ſate Preſident here five years: and theſe are the men of note that ſate with him: Rabban Gamaliel, ſon to Rabban Simeon that was ſlain at the fall of the City: R. Zadok, one who had ſpent his body with extream faſting ſince the Temple doors had opened of their own accord, taking that for an omen of its ruine approaching: R. Eliezer his ſon: R. Judah and R. Joſhua the ſons of Betirah: R. Eliezer ben Hyrcanus the Author of Pirke Eliezer: R. Joſhuah, R. Eliezer ben Erech, R. Iſmael, R. Joſe, R. Simeon ben Nathaniel, R. Akibah, and divers others, who outlived Rabban Jochanan the moſt of them a long time. They made many Decretals in his time, eſpecially about thoſe things that had had immediate reference to the Temple, as ſee Roſh haſhanah per.4. Shekalim per. 1, &c.

SECTION IV.

The Sanhedrin ſtill at Jabneh: Rabban Gamaliel Preſident.

WHEN Rabban Jochanan died, Rabban Gamaliel ſucceeded him in the Preſidency ſeven years. He is commonly called by the Hebrew Writers רבן גמליאל דיבנה Rabban Gamaliel of Jabneh. But for the right ſtating of his Preſidency there, two things are to be obſerved. The firſt is mentioned in Babyl. in Roſh haſhanah fol. 31. 1,2. where all the flittings of the Sanhedrin are reckoned in the Gemara thus: From the room Gazith it flitted to the Taberna [in the mountain of the Temple] from the Taberna into Hieruſalem, from Hieruſalem to Jabneh, from Jabneh to Oſha or Uſha, from Oſha to Shepharaam, from Shepharaam to Beth Shaaraim, from Beth Shaaraim to Tſipporis, and from Tſipporis to Tiberias. Now the marginal Gloſs teacheth us how to underſtand theſe removes. When the Preſident was in any of theſe places, ſaith it, the Sanhedrin was with him, and when he or his ſon went to another place, it went after him. It was at Jabneh in the days of Rabban Jochanan, at Uſha in the days of Rabban Gamaliel, but they returned from Uſha to Jabneh again: but in the days of Rabban Simeon his ſon it went back again [to Uſha.] So that the time that Rabban Gamaliel ſate at Jabneh inſtantly upon Rabban Jochanans death, was not long, but he went to Uſha, and his time at Uſha was not long neither, but to Jabneh again. And as we are to obſerve thus about his time and place, ſo there is a ſecond thing to be taken notice about him, and that is the mixture of his Preſidency.

The Talmudiſts do ſpeak oft בר הושיבו ר׳ אליעזר בן עזריה Of placing R. Eliezer the ſon of Azariah in the Preſidency. Tſemach David ſpeaks it out thus; R. Eliezer ben Azariah was a Prieſt, and was exceeding rich: he was made Preſident in the room of Rabban Gamaliel, but afterward they were joyned in the Preſidency together: which is ſtill obſcure obſcure enough; but the Jeruſalem Gemariſts give the full ſtory in Tuanith ſol. 67. col. 4. in theſe words: A certain ſcholar came and asked R. Joſhua, What is Evening Prayer? He anſwered, A thing Arbitrary. The ſame ſcholar came and asked Rabban Gamaliel, What is Evening Prayer? And he ſaid, A bounden duty. He ſaith to him, But R. Joſhua ſaith it is a thing Arbitrary. He ſaith to him, To morrow when I come into the Congregation, ſtand forth and ask this queſtion: So the ſcholar did ask Rabban Gamaliel, What is Evening Prayer? He anſwered, A bounden duty. How then, ſaith the ſcholar, doth R. Joſhua ſay it is a thing Arbitrary? Rabban Gamaliel ſaith to R. Joſhua, Art thou he that ſaith it is a thing Arbitrary? He anſwered, No. He ſays to him, Stand upon thy feet that they may bear witneſs againſt thee. R. Joſhua ſtood upon his feet, whileſt Rabban ſate and was expounding, ſo that all the Congregation repined at him [for making him to ſtand ſo.] And they ſaid to R. Hotſpith the Interpreter, Diſmiſs the people, and they ſaid to R. Zinnun the Miniſter ſay Begin, and they ſaid all Begin, and ſtood upon their feet too. And they ſaid to him [Rabban Gamaliel] Againſt whom hath not thy miſchief paſſed continually? They went preſently and made R. Eliezer ben Azaria Preſident, who was but ſixteen years old, but very grave. R. Akibah ſate by and took it ill, and ſaid, It is not becauſe he is better ſtudied in the Law then I, that he is thus prefered, but becauſe he is nobler born then I. Happy is the man who hath Anceſtors to priviledge him. Happy is the man that hath a nail to hang upon. And what was the nail that R. Eliezer ben Azaria had? He was the tenth from Ezra. How many benches of ſcholars were there ſitting there then? R. Jacob bar Suſi ſaith, Fourſcore beſides the people that ſtood behind them. R. Joſi ben R. Bon ſaith, Three hundred. Rabban Gamaliel went preſently to every one at his own home and ſought to pacifie him, &c. So that by this it appears how and why Gamaliel was outed of his Preſidency, namely for his pride and paſſion [of which we might ſhew you other examples alſo] but he was reſtored again to be partner in the dignity with R. Eliezer whom they promoted now.

There is exceeding much mention of this Gamaliel in the Talmuds, and he is a very buſie man there: the Reader there meets with him as oft as with any one man whoſoever. He had a ſervant named Tobi very oft ſpoken of, whoſe eye he ſtruck out, and let him go free for it: when he died he much bemoaned and commended him. Beracoth per. 2. halac. 6. Whileſt he ſate at Jabneh, in his curioſity for the exquiſite taking of the new Moons, he had ſcored upon his wall ſeveral forms and appearances of it, and thoſe that came to bear witneſs that they had ſeen the new Moon he brought thither, and asked, How ſaw you it? In this form, or this, or the other, &c. Roſh haſhanah per. 1. hal. 8.

SECTION V.

The Sanhedrin ſtill at Jabneh. R. Akibah Preſident.

THE twelve years of Rabban Jochanan and Rabban Gamaliel, reached from the ſecond year of Veſpaſian, when the Sanhedrin was firſt ſetled at Jabneh, to the ſecond year of Domitian: there begins R. Akibah his Preſidency, and ſate fourty years, namely to the time of the ſacking of the Town Bitter or Beth tar, which the Jews generally fix fifty two years after the fall of the Temple, or at moſt fifty five: So that he ſate all the time of Domitian and Trajan, to the fifth or at moſt the eighth year of Hadrianus.

His time was a troubleſom time with the Jews. In Domitians days, Judaicus fiſcus præter cæteros acerbiſſime actus, Above all others the Jews were plagued with taxes and confiſcations. Sueton in Domit. cap. 12. where he adds, I remember when I was a boy, I was preſent when a man of ninety years old was ſearched before a great company whether he were Circumciſed or no.

In Trajan's time was that horrd inſurrection of the Jews, mentioned by Dion. lib. 68. about Cyrene, where they murdered Romans and Greeks, to the number of two hundred and twenty thouſand; eat their fleſh, devoured their intrails, and dawbed themſelves with their blood: And the like inſurrection they made in Egypt and Cyprus, and murdered to the number of two hundred and fourty thouſand. Tſemach David makes Ben Coziba a chief leader in this buſineſs: who if he were, received his juſt reward in the time of Hadrian. He took on him to be Meſſias; made himſelf a King, ſtamped Coyn of his own: מטבע של בן כוזיבא Jeruſ. Maaſar Sheni fol. 52. col. 4. brought the Romans againſt him, who deſtroyed him and the City Bitter, and multitudes of thouſands of Jews with him. The Jews commonly write it ביתר, but in Jeruſ.

Jeruſ. Taanith. fol. 68. col. 4. it is written ביתחר Beth tar: which properly ſignifies the houſe of ſpies. And there a ſtory is told that makes it no better, of the great ones that had eſcaped at the ruine of Jeruſalem, and dwelt here, and intrapped any man that they ſaw go toward Jeruſalem. Euſebius Hiſt. lib. 4. cap. 6. calls it Bethekа, and ſaith it was not far from Jeruſalem: which Barronius boldly tranſlates Bethlehem. The Jews do character the doleful ſlaughter at this place as the ſaddeſt ſtroke that ever they received, but the fall of Jeruſalem. Rabbi Akibah himſelf periſhed in it, dotingly having become Armour bearer to Ben Coziba, as holding him to be the Meſſias. You may obſerve what kind of a Meſſias they expect.

Dion tells that in this War Severus, whom Hadrian had ſent to quel them, took fifty of their ſtrongeſt Garriſons, and deſtroyed nine hundred fourſcore and five fair Towns. And he alſo deſtroyed all the Olive trees in Judea. Jeruſal. Peah. fol. 20. col. 1. How they themſelves record the ſlaughter at Beth tar, may be ſeen in the Jeruſalem Talmud in Taanith, the place cited above, and the Babylonian in Gittin fol. 57. 2.

Whence their firſt tumultuating took its riſe, is of ſome obſcurity, only it may be reſolved into Gods juſt judgment upon them to ſtir to their own ruine. Yet Spartianus ſpeaking of their ſtirring in the time of Hadrian ſaith, it was becauſe they were forbidden Circumciſion. Moverunt ea tempeſtate & Judæi bellum quod vetabantur mutilare genitalia. In vit. Hadrian. Trajan put a reſtraint upon Chriſtianity and perſecuted it. Plin. Epiſt. lib. 10. ep. 97. It may be he did the like upon Judaiſm, and that might move them to an inſurrection. The horrid Maſſacres that they committed in Cyrene, Egypt and Cyprus might be looked upon as a juſt judgement for his perſecution of Chriſtianity, if multitudes of Chriſtians did not alſo periſh in thoſe ſlaughters, if Ben Coziba were ringleader in them: For Juſtin Martyr, Apol. 2. ſaith, that Barchochebas brought Chriſtians only to torture, unleſs they would deny Chriſt and blaſpheme him. And Euſeb. in Chron. Chocebas the ringleader of the Jews, put to death with all exquiſite torture thoſe Chriſtians that would not aſſiſt him againſt the Romanes. That is worth obſerving which is ſpoken by Jeruſ. Jevamoth. fol. 9. col. 1. There were many that had retracted their foreskin in the days of Ben Coziba, were Circumciſed again: which R. Niſſim ſpeaks out more at large: There were many Circumciſed ones in the days of Ben Coziba, who had retracted their foreskin perforce, in the Town of Bitter, but the hand of Ben Coziba prevailed, and reigned over them two years and an half, and they were Circumciſed again in his days. In Alphef. in Jevam. fol. 428. their retracting their foreskin perforce ſpeaks much like to that which was mentioned before out of Spartianus.

In theſe times alſo [of Trajane I ſuppoſe] there was an Edict againſt the Jews Ordination upon pain of death to him that did Ordain, and him that was Ordained, and ruine of the place where any Ordination ſhould be Talm. Bab. Avodah Zarah. fol. 8. 2.

And from the time of theſe tumults forward that began to take place which is ſpoken in Jeruſ. Sanhed. fol. 24. col. 2. That in the days of R. Simeon ben Jochai [who was now alive] the judging even in pecuniary matters was taken away. In fol. 18. col. 1. This is ſaid to have been in the days of Simeon ben Shetah: but that is a miſtake which is corrected in the place cited.

Upon theſe Wars and Tumults Hadrian forbids the Jews to go to Jeruſalem, or ſo much as to look upon it from any hill where it might be ſeen. Euſeb. hiſt. lib. 4. cap. 6.

Triphon the Jew that hath the long diſpute with Juſtin Martyr, fled from theſe Wars Juſtin. Dial. cum Tryph. he might very well be R. Tarphon, a great aſſociate with R. Akibah, and one much mentioned in the Talmuds.

SECTION VI.

The Sanhedrin at Uſha and Shepharaam אושא ושפרעם. Rabban Simeon Preſident.

THUS did the juſt vengeance of God follow the Nation, but far were they from being rooted out, and as far from laying to heart any plague that light upon them. Beſides R. Akibah, we can hardly name you another of note that periſhed in all thoſe deadly combuſtions, though ſome of them were in the thickeſt of the danger; but reſerved as it ſeemeth as a further plague for the ſeduction of their Nation. Some of their expreſſions about the ſad ſlaughter at Bethtar or Bitter are to this purpoſe: The horſes waded in blood up to the noſtrils: There were ſlain 400000: And Adrian walled a Vineyard of ſixteen miles about with dead bodies a mans height. And there were found the brains of 300 children upon one ſtone, and three cheſts full of tattared Phylacteries containing three buſhels every cheſt. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel ſaith there were 500 Schools, and to the leaſt there belonged 500 Scholars, and they ſaid, If the enemy ſhould come againſt us we could prick out their eyes with our pens: But when it came to it, they folded them all up in their books and burnt them, and there was not one of them left but only I. Not that he reckons himſelf in the number of the children, for he was now well in years, but that none of all that great Univerſity was left but himſelf: And yet beſides the eminent men that we have named, there were R. Meir a great ſpeaker in the Talmud, but moſt commonly againſt the common vote. R. Simeon ben Jochai and Eleazar his ſon, the firſt Authors of the book Zohar. R. Nathan the Author of Avoth. R. Joſi Galileus and his ſon Eliezer. R. Jochanan ben Nuri. Ben Nanas. R. Joſhua ben Korcha. R. Eliezer ben Chaſma: and why ſhould we reckon more when Beriſhith Rabba makes this Summa Totalis on Gen. 25. That R. Akibah had 24000 diſciples. Of ſome decretals made at Uſha, you may read *Jeruſ. in Roſh. haſhan fol.*58. col. 3. Chetub. fol. 28. col. 3.

In theſe times of Hadrian which we are yet upon, Aquila the Proſelyte was in being and in repute. In Jeruſ. Chagig. fol. 77. col. 1, he is introduced diſcourſing with Hadrian about the univerſe being ſupported by a Spirit. In Megil. fol. 71. col. 3. It is ſaid that Aquila the Proſelyte interpreted the Law before R. Eliezer and R. Joſhua, and they highly commended him for it and ſaid, Thou art fairer then the children of men. By which it may be conjectured what a tranſlation this was, when theſe men ſo extolled it. The Jeruſalem Gemariſts do cite his verſion, Megil. fol. 73. col. 2. Succah fol. 53. *col.*4. Joma fol. 41. *col.*1. and ſeveral other places.

Rabban Simeon now Preſident, ſate about thirty years, namely from about the ſixt or eighth of Hadrian, to the fifteenth or ſixteenth or thereabout of Antoninus Pius: the honour and power of that Bench growing low and in the wane every day more then other. This Rabban Simeon you have a great ſpokeſman in the Talmud: his grandfather of the ſame name that died with Jeruſalem, is ſeldom introduced ſpeaking there: Once you have him ſwearing by the Temple, Cherithuth per. 1. halac. 7.

SECTION VII.

The Sanhedrin at Bethſhaarain, Tſipporis and Tiberias. R. Judah Preſident.

UPON the death of Rabban Simeon, his ſon Rabbi Judah ſucceeded him: a man of note equal with, if not above any named before him: he bare not the title of Rabban as his Anceſtors had done for five generations before him, yet had he thoſe appellations that dignified him equal with it: he was called ſometimes eminently Rabbi and no more: ſometime R. Judah the holy: ſometimes our holy Rabbi: ſometime R. Judah the Prince: and oft in the Jeruſ. Talmud. R. Judan. Vid. Jeruſ. Sanhedr. fol. 30. col. 1. where it ſpeaks of all his Titles. There are innumerable ſtories of him, we ſhall only pick up thoſe that are moſt pertinent to our preſent ſubject. Juchaſin. fol. 2. tells us that he was with the Seventy of the Sanhedrin in Bethſhaaraim, Tſipporis and Tiberias, and Tiberias was the tenth and laſt flitting that the Sanhedrin had. How long in Bethſhaaraim is uncertain, and little is mentioned of that place: but Tſipporis צפורי is famous: It was the greateſt City of Galilee, Joſeph. de Bell. lib. 3. cap. 3. a place planted in a fruitful ſituation, for ſixteen miles about it, ſaith Talm. Jeruſ. was a Land flowing with milk and honey. Biccurim fol. 64. *col.*2. Rabbi Judah ſate here ſeventeen years, and he applied that to himſelf, Jacob lived in the Land of Egypt ſeventeen years, and Judah lived in Tſipporis ſeventeen years. There are theſe two memorable ſtories of this place: That a Butcher couſened the Jews here with carcaſes and beaſts torn, and made them eat them, nay he made them eat dogs fleſh. Jeruſ. Trumoth. fol. 45. col. 3. And divers of Tſipporis were glad to wear patches on their faces to disfigure them that they might not be known when inquiſition was made after them. Id. Jevamoth fol. 15. col. 3. and Sotah fol. 23. col. 3. The numerous paſſages about the Doctors and diſputes and Scholaſtick actions in this place would be too tedious to mention, though with the briefeſt touch we could.

From Tſipporis the Sanhedrin removed to Tiberias, upon the brink of the lake of Geneſaret. This was about eight or nine miles from Tſipporis. Id. Sanhed. fol. 21. col. 1. the Jews hold it to be the ſame with Rakkath in Joſh. 19. 35. Megil. fol. 70. col. 1. And that Chammath there mentioned alſo, was a place that joyned to it. Erubbin fol. 23. col. 4. ſo called from the hot bathes there. Bab. Megil. fol. 6. 1. How long Rabbi ſate here is uncertain.

Their Records do make him exceedingly in favour with Antoninus the Emperour, but whether Pius or Philoſophus they name not: it is generally held to be Pius: whetherſoever it was, there are abundance of diſcourſes 'twixt R. Judah and him diſperſed in their Writings: and they ſtick not to tell you, that he became a Proſelyte, and when the Proſelytes of righteouſneſs ſhall come, in the world to come, Antoninus ſhall come in the head of them. Jeruſ. Megil. fol. 74. col. 1. Antoninus Philoſophus or Marcus Aurelius was the likelier to converſe with Scholars. R. Judah outlived them both, and Commodus alſo.

Two famous things, as that Nation reputed it, did this man in his time. Firſt, he gathered up and compiled into one Volume all the traditional Law that had run from hand to hand to his time [the Miſhnah that we have now in our hands] which is the Jews great pandect according to which they live: He ſaw their ſtate wane daily more and more, and though they had now many Learned Schools, yet their Cabbala or great ſtock of traditions, he thought might fail and be loſt, now the Sanhedrin failed, therefore he thought to make ſure work, and committed it to writing, that it might be preſerved to the Nation, and ſo he helped to rule them. And a ſecond thing that he did, was, that he took care that there ſhould be ספרים ומתנימנים Scribes and Teachers of the Traditions in all the Cities in the Land of Iſrael. Jeruſ. Chagigah fol. 76. col. 3. In the ſame Tract, fol. 77. col. it is reported of him that at ſix portions of the Scripture when he came to read them he wept. He compiled the Miſhnah about the year of Chriſt 190, in the later end of the reign of Commodus: or as ſome compute in the year of Chriſt 220, an hundred and fifty years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

SECTION VIII.

The Schools and Learned after the death of Rabbi Judah.

BESIDES the places where the Sanhedrin had ſitten, which yet continued Schools when it was removed, there were divers other places that were great Schools and copiouſly furniſhed with Learned men, both in Galilee and Judea: and hence that diſtinction that the reader of the Jeruſalem Talmud will meet with, of בן דרום and בן גלוד a Southern man and a Galilean. Chagig. fol. 79. col. 3. that is, a Scholar of the one, or of the other. Hence there is mention of R. Jacob דרומיא the Southern man. Erubh. fol. 24. col. 2. and the Elders of the South, ibid. col. 3. R. Joſhuah of the South, Challah fol. 57. col. 2. Of all the places in Judea, next Jabneh and Bitter, Lydda was moſt eminent, where R. Akibah ſate as Preſident of a School, before he was of the Sanhedrin at Jabneh. Roſh haſhanah per halac. 7. and this continued a School all along to theſe times of Rabbi Judah: In Galilee there was Magdala, Chammath, and Cæſarea, if you will reckon that in Galilee, beſides others.

R. Judah left two ſons behind him, Rabban Gamaliel and Rabbi Simeon: Rabban Gamaliel was promoted in his fathers life time: but after R. Judah was dead Rab. Chaninah ſate chief, and that by R. Judahs appointment, and with him were R. Chaiia, R. Hoſhaiah Rabba, R. Joſhua ben Levi, Kaphra, Bar Kaphra, Rabh and Samuel, which two laſt went away to the Univerſity in Babylonia. This generation is the firſt of the Gemariſts, explaining the Miſhnah, and producing the opinions of the Ancients upon it.

After R. Chaninah, who ſate ten years, R. Jochanan was Preſident eighty years. He compiled the Jeruſalem Talmud, as is generally held, in the year of Chriſt two hundred and thirty or thereabout, which was about the middle of the reign of Alexander Mammæa; yet there is that in the Talmud it ſelf that would make you believe that you meet with the name of the Emperour Diocleſian there. Beracoth fol. 6. col. 1. כד סליק דוקליטינוס מלכא להכא When King Docletinus [to ſpeak it according to the letters] came hither, R. Chaiia bar Abba was ſeen getting upon a grave to ſee him. Shevuith fol. 38. col. 4. דיקליטיאנוס אעיק לבני פניים Dicletianus afflicted the men of Paneas, &c. In Kilaim fol. 38. col. 3. and Chetuboth fol. 35. col. 2. They ſay the Land of Iſrael was incompaſſed with ſeven Seas, and the laſt of them they name is ימא דאפמיא The Sea of Apamia. [The Samaritan verſion on Numb. 34. 10, 11. renders Stepham, Apamia.] Now this, they ſay, is the Sea or lake Mahaz: Dicletianus gathered the Rivers and made it. And it might very well be, that Rabbi Jochanan that compiled the Talmud might live beyond the times of Diocletian: but in Trumoth fol. 46. col. 3. this Dicletianus they ſpeak of, is plainly aſſerted to be in the days of Rabbi Judah haccadoſh in this ſtory: The ſons of Rabbi Judah princeps, beat Diclot the ſwine-herd, who afterward was made a King. He comes to Paneas and ſends letters to the Rabbins, See ye be with me at the going forth of the Sabbath, &c. When they come to him, he ſays to them, You deſpiſe the Kingdom: They anſwer him, Diclot the Swine-herd we deſpiſe, but Diocletianus the King we deſpiſe not: which is far from meaning Diocleſian the Emperour. If this were a place to diſpute about the exact time of writing this Talmud, we might alſo take into examination the meaning of דינר גורדינון ſpoken of in Chagigah fol. 79. col. 4. whether it mean Denarius Gordiani or no, but we ſhall not inſiſt upon that here.

After the compiling of this Talmud there is little further mention of the Schools or Scholars of Judea or Galilee [the Univerſities in Babylonia from henceforward bearing all the renown] yet were they not utterly extinct: and out of them at laſt ariſeth the famous R. Hillel grandchild of R. Judah, who ſtated the Jews Almanack into that poſture in which it ſtands at this day: And Hierom had for his help in the Hebrew Tongue a learned man of Tiberias.

SECTION IX.

The poſture and temper of the People.

HAVING taken this brief account of their Scholaſtick and Magiſtratick Hiſtory, as alſo of ſome general occurrences that befel the Nation in theſe times, let us a little obſerve the carriage and temper of the men, for the better diſcerning of the Lords diſpenſing in reference to them, as a people of his curſe, rejection and abhorring. They themſelves little thought it, but were yet as proud and ſelf-confident of their being the only people of God as ever; and unleſs it were in their plague by Ben Coziba, a ſtander by, would hardly think they lay under thoſe curſes that had been ſo oft and ſo terribly denounced againſt them: and it may yet appear the more ſtrange, when we do conſider the ſetled way of their Religion, in which they walked with as much confidence and ſecurity as ever. The Land full of Synagogues, theſe frequented every Sabbath, and the ſecond and fifth days of the week, their paying Tithes, obſerving purifyings, clean and unclean meats and drinks, and in a word, all their Rites, but what unſeparably belonged to the Temple, in as ſetled a courſe as they had done before the Temple fell. But in this very thing was their miſery and the vengeance upon them; and that which they accounted was their happineſs, and with which they ſweetned their Captivity and deſolation of their City, was that very thing that was their unhappineſs and undoing.

A double badge of reprobation they viſibly carried, though themſelves could not ſee it, namely their doting upon their wretched Traditions, and their rancour and enmity againſt the Goſpel, beſides what other brands of a curſe may be read upon them.

He that reads their Talmuds may obſerve this mark of perdition upon them in every page, that the generations after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, were more mad, if poſſible, after their fooliſh and wicked Rites and Traditions, that made Faith and the Word of God of no effect, then the generations before had been. A man that reads there may ſtand amazed to ſee a people of a loſt and languiſhing condition, yet building up of thoſe toies and trifles an airy ſtructure, as if they were building an everlaſting Kingdom. It ſpeaks a palpable blindneſs upon them, that they took ſo little advertiſement by the fall of their City, of the fall of their carnal and beggerly Rites, that they ſet them up more zealouſly then ever before.

Let

Let any man obſerve who they are that make the greateſt noiſe in the Talmuds, and they will ſee this plain: This minds me of a fancy of the great women among them, a ridiculous way that they uſed for the remembrance and mourning for Jeruſalem, namely by wearing a golden Crown upon their heads, wrought in the faſhion of a City, they called עיר זהב The golden City: It is ſpoken of in Jeruſ. Shabb. fol. 7. col. 4. where they are diſputing whether the women might go forth with this Ornament upon their heads on the Sabbath: And there they tell that R. Akibah made a golden City for his wife, and when Rabban Gamaliels ſaw it, ſhe was envious at it: A pretty way of mourning by pride, and to carry Jeruſalem in gold on their heads, when Jeruſalem lies in aſhes under their feet: Much like did they by their Ceremonies and Traditions, when at the ruine of the City they ſhould by right have been all buried in aſhes with it, they inhanced them and made them more high and gallant then ever before.

It is needleſs to inſtance their deriſion and deteſtation of Chriſt and Chriſtianity, their blaſphemy againſt his bleſſed name, their hatred and miſchievouſneſs againſt the profeſſors of it: their Writings proclaim their impiety, and when many of the ancient Fathers have been put to write againſt the Jews, it argues they were buſie and ſtirring as far as they might. They had continual oppoſings among themſelves, yet they all agreed like Simeon and Levi, brethren in evil, to oppoſe, vilifie and blaſphem the Goſpel. Hardly one of the Grandees that we have named, but he had פר פלוגתיה his oppoſite, one or the other that ſtood out in conteſtation of opinion with him: Nay they went ſometimes to it by the ears; as R. Eliezer and R. Joſi are ſo ſtrugling together that they rent the Book of the Law betwixt them. Jeruſ. Shekalim fol. 47. col. 1. and as we obſerved before, the Shammæans and Hillelians fought it to blood and death: Rabban Gamaliel at Jabneh, depoſed R. Akibah from his Rectorſhip at Lydda. Roſh. haſhan. fol. 57. col. 1. And divers ſuch bickerings which ſtill ended in an unanimous conſent to oppoſe Chriſtianity as much as poſſible.

We ſpake before of the commonneſs of Magick amongſt them, one ſingular means whereby they kept their own in deluſion, and whereby they affronted ours. The general expectation of the Nation of Meſſias coming when he did, had this double and contrary effect; That it forwarded thoſe that belonged to God, to believe and receive the Goſpel: and thoſe that did not, it gave incouragement to ſome to take upon them they were Chriſt or ſome great Prophet, and to others it gave ſome perſwaſion to be deluded by them. Theſe deceivers dealt moſt of them with Magick, and that cheat ended not when Jeruſalem ended, though one would have thought that had been a fair term of not further expecting Meſſias, but ſince the people were willing ſtill to be deceived by ſuch expectation, there roſe up deluders ſtill that were willing to deceive them. The Jeruſalem Talmud will furniſh us with variety of examples of this kind, and I cite it the oftner becauſe it was made among theſe men we are ſpeaking of, the Jews in Judæa.

To begin with dreamers and interpreters of dreams, which was a degree of deluſion with them. In Maaſar Sheni fol. 45. col. 2, 3. there is mention of Rabbi Joſi ben Calpatha, of this trade, and R. Iſmael ben Rabbi Joſi, and R. Lazar, and R. Akibah; and there are many dreams recorded that they interpreted: and it ſeemeth by a paſſage in the place, that they taught their Scholars this trick as a piece of their learning: And finding of R. Akibah in this Catalogue, we cannot but think how well Ben Coziba and he were met: for if the one were a cheater in one kind, the other was a deceiver in another. If that of the Apoſtle Jude in his Epiſtle ver. 8. Theſe filthy dreamers, ſhould be conſtrued in this litteral ſenſe, it would find enow in thoſe times to make it good.

In Shabb. fol. 3. col. 2. it ſpeaks of an apparition to one of their religious men that was ſtudying the Law.

Ibid. fol. 8. col. 2, 3. and fol. 14. 3. there is mention of ſeveral charmings, as reading ſome verſes over a wound, laying the Book of the Law or Phylacteries upon a ſick perſon, charming againſt ſerpents and an evil eye, &c. And now we are ſpeaking of an evil eye, or witchery, we may take in that Sanhedr. fol. 18. col. 3. Four and twenty of the School of Rabbi Judah came to Lydda to intercalate the year, and an evil eye came in among them and they all died.

In Sotah fol. 16. col. 2. A ſtory related of R. Meir and an Inchantreſſe, and he proving hard enough for her.

In Sanhedr. fol. 25. col. 4. There are three ſtories of Magical feats done by מינין Hereticks, one at Tiberias and two at Tſipporis, but R. Joſhua outvying one of them, and a fourth at Rome, and he making his part good there too. What may be ment by Hereticks muſt be divided betwixt Samaritans, and ſome wretches that had forſaken forſaken their Judaiſm, and profeſſed Chriſtianity, but were ſuch as the Apoſtle calls falſe Apoſtles.

And to conclude all, the many ſtories they have of Bath kol or a voice from Heaven [moſt commonly coming for the magnifying of ſome of their Doctors, as ſee, Sotah. fol. 24. col. 2.] are either forgeries, or if there were any ſuch ſeeming voices, they were forged upon the anvil of Magick: How can a Nation but carry the viſibe mark of perdition, when vain traditions are their ſtanding Religion, and Magick and Inchantments a common practiſe?

To this kind of legerdemain, we may add another, not altogether indeed of ſo deep a die, yet that which came from the ſame father, and that was, the loud legends they invented of their great Rabbines, thereby to awe the people to the reverence of their Perſons, Memories and Doctrines: and of others devoutly zealous in their doting Religion, of whom they tell ſtrange wonders for the magnifying of it. I ſhall name none for ſhame: theſe are they that do moſt diſgrace their writings, and make them moſt ridiculous.

A laſt thing to be named that they did toward the intayling folly, unbelieve and obduration upon their Nation to all poſterity, is their ingaging them to their Canons and Traditions, as they delivered them: eſpecially to the Miſhnah when Rabbi Judah had publiſhed it, and to the two Talmuds when they came forth, eſpecially the Babylonian, which ſtands as a Standard to all the Nation for her Rule and Religion to this day: they being generally Phariſaicall, and ſcarce a Karaite that we hear of amongſt them.

SECTION X.

How far theſe Jews in the firſt generation of Chriſtianity might infect or infeſt it.

WE need not ſpeak of their croſſing the Goſpel, and perſecuting and miſchieving the profeſſors of it, when it lay in their power; that needs no clearing: A twofold infection, more eſpecially, they diffuſed into the Chriſtian Church, which tainted many, and where it caught proved peſtilential enough, even that which was the leaſt dangerous: and theſe were, that out of this ſink roſe the deſperate hereſies of the firſt Ages of the Goſpel, and from theſe men came the Allegorizing of the Scriptures, which was but one degree leſs profitable, if not leſs deadly then their traditions.

How damnable Hereſies aroſe from among them in the Apoſtles times, we have ſeen copiouſly as we have come along through the Epiſtles, ſome unbelieving Jews and ſome Apoſtates diffuſing poyſon ſo deadly and ſo affluent, that it undid multitudes by backſliding. The venom was of a contrary malignity, yet both extreams met alike in this point, that they proved moſt deadly. The unbelieving Jews ſtanding upon the ſtrictneſs of the Law, preverted divers to turn from the Goſpel, to the preciſe courſe of thier Judaiſm to ſeek Juſtification by works. And the Apoſtatizing, as far misjuding of the liberty of the Goſpel, introduced all manner of licentiouſneſs and heedleſneſs of their ways, as to eat things ſacrificed to Idols, and to commit fornication. Theſe were the moſt notorious, as ſtriking directly at the root of Juſtication by faith, and of holineſs of life: but theſe were not all, but other roots of gall and wormwood growing upon the ſame ſoil, as denying of the reſurrection altogether, as did the Sadducees, or denying the Reſurrection of thoſe that ſtarted from Judaiſm, and worſhipping of Angels, and whatſoever elſe, the Apoſtles ſpeak of this gangreen in their Epiſtles, which though they grew and were at full ripeneſs before Jeruſalem fell, yet did they fade but little when ſhe was down.

As the firſt wretched ſtock of Hereticks that roſe, Simon, Cerinthus, Meander, Elxon, Baſilides, &c. appeared either in Judea, or at leaſt there where there were multitudes of Jews, as Baſilides at Alexandria, ſo the moſt of thoſe damnable opinions that they ſowed, and which grew for a long while after, had ſome root or other in Judaiſm, or received ſome curſed moiſture from thence to nouriſh them. By Judaiſm I here underſtand the body of the Jews Religions though differing within it ſelf, yet all contrary to Chriſtianity. Look upon Paleſtine, and you have it thus ſtocked in the times that we are upon.

1. With

1. With Phariſees of ſeven ſorts, as they be reckoned up, Beracoth fol. 13. col. 2. Sotah. fol. 20. col. 3.
2. With Sadduces, at the leaſt of two ſorts if not more.
3. With Samaritans.
4. With Eſſeans: Baithuſæans you may reckon with Sadduces or Samaritans whether you will. Now the variety, nay contrariety of opinions that was among this mixture, would afford nouriſhment to any evil weed of doctrine that could be ſowed; theſe being as Manaſſeh againſt Ephraim, and Ephraim againſt Manaſſeh, but all againſt the Goſpel. We have mention of the Baithuſæans going about to put a gull upon the Sanhedrin about the great buſineſs of ſtating the beginning of the year, Roſh haſhan fol. 57. col. 4. The Sadduces laughing the Phariſes to ſcorn about waſhing the Candleſticks of the Temple, Chagig. fol. 79. col. 4. The Phariſes and Sadduces croſſing one another in diſputes, Jadaim, per. 4. halec. 7. Aud the Samaritans perpetually at enmity with the Jews in all ſtories. Now all theſe being alike enemies to Chriſtianity, what miſchief might not they ſeverally do in poyſoning and ſeducing thoſe that were not ſound in it? We find the names of ſome arch Hereticks mentioned in the Talmuds, though we cannot ſay they were the ſame men. As דוסתי Doſitheus, Orlah per. 2. halac. 5. אבין Ebion, Jeruſ. Joma. fol. 4. col. 3. סומכוס Symmachus, Jevam. fol. 11. col. 3. Chetub. fol. 25. col. 3. And Papias alſo is a Talmud name, of which name there was one ſo zealous of traditions, Euſeb. Hiſt. lib. 3. cap. 39.

We obſerved at the ſecond Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, that the Jews, partly the unbelieving, and partly the Apoſtatized, were the firſt part of Antichriſt, the miſtery of iniquity that was then working when the Apoſtle wrote: and now we may obſerve how they continued bodied together, as a Corporation of iniquity, in Judea, till the times of Conſtantine the great, the ſucceſſion of their Schools plainly to be read there: as we have ſhewed in little. And when they wanted there, then did they flouriſh in their three Univerſities in Babylonia: and the ſucceſſion of the Schools and names of the larned men known there, not only till the ſigning of the Babylon Talmud which was about the year of Chriſt 500, but even till the other part of the miſtery of iniquity the Papal Antichriſt aroſe at Babylon in the Weſt: And as theſe two parts make one intire body of Antichriſt, and as the latter took at the firſt to do the work that they had done, to deface the truth and oppoſe it, and that under the colour of Religion, ſo did it in great meaſure take his Pandect of Errors from theſe his predeceſſors. Traditions, falſe Miracles, Legends, Ceremonies, Merit, Purgatory, implicit Faith, and divers other things ſo derived from this ſource, as is left by legacy from the one to the other.

A ſecond taint we mentioned that theſe Primitive Jews ſet, not only upon their own poſterity, but too much alſo upon the Church of Chriſt, was the turning of the Scriptures all into Allegory: which as it is well known how it was uſed by divers of the Fathers to their great loſs of time, and little profiting of the Church: ſo it is eaſily to be known from whence it comes, by any that reads Philo Judæus, and the Jewiſh Deruſhim. The Talmuds indeed are for the moſt part, upon diſputes, but ſometimes they bring in how ſuch or ſuch a Doctor did Daraſh, [miſtically expound] ſuch or ſuch a place of Scripture: and then you have directly ſuch ſtuff as this. Philo in his diſcourſe concerning the Theraputæ or Eſſeans, relateth that they had uſed this miſtical kind of expoſition of old. And how near the Chriſtians of Judea that fled from the ruine of Jeruſalem, might be ſuppoſed thenceforward to be planted to the Eſſeni, we might obſerve from Pliny and Mela that place the Eſſeni along the vale that coaſted upon the dead Sea [the old habitation of the Kenites] and from conſidering that the mountains to which Chriſt warns us thoſe that were in Judea, to flee, was, the mountanous of Judea, as was touched.

SECTION XI.

That the Jews for all their ſpite to Chriſtianity, could not impoſe upon us a corrupted Text.

HEre we cannot but clear them, as for mater of fact, of what ſome lay to their charge. [but they do it for their own ends] that they foiſted a corrupt Text of the old Teſtament upon Chriſtians, and ſo befooled them in the very foundation of their Religion: So did their anceſtors by Ptolomy King of Egypt, and ſo what theſe men would have done, if they could, it is eaſie to conjecture, but they did not, they could not ſo impoſe.

1. It

1. It was their great care ſolicitouſneſs, as to themſelves, and their own uſe, to preſerve the Text in all purity and uncorruptneſs; and what our Saviour ſays of not one Iota or one tittle of the Law periſhing, they were of the ſame mind, and indeavoured to maintain and aſſert that for true with all induſtry. It were too long here to ſpeak of the work of the Maſorites for this purpoſe, who altered not, added not, invented not a tittle, but carfully took account of every thing as they found it, and ſo recorded it to poſterity that nothing could be changed. We ſhall only bring in their own expoſitions which will atteſt to this truth to both thoſe words that our Saviour hath, Ἰῶτα ἓν, καὶ μία κεραία: Ἰῶτα ἓν: It is little to be doubted that Chriſt ſpeaking in their language, meaneth the letter Jod, which is far the leaſt of all their letters. And about this letter the Jeruſalem Talmud hath this paſſage: Sanhedr. fo. 20. col. 3. The book of Miſhneh Torah [Deuteronomy] came and proſtrated it ſelf before God, and ſaid unto him: O Lord everlaſting, Thou haſt written thy Law in me. A Teſtament that fails in part, fails in the whole. Behold Solomon ſeeks to root Jod out of me [viz. in לא ירבה נשים He ſhall not multiply wives.] The Holy bleſſed God ſaith to it: Solomon and a thouſand ſuch as he ſhall fail, but a word of thee ſhall not fail. R. Houna in the name of R. Acha ſaid: The Jod that the bleſſed God took from the name of our mother Sarah, was given half of it to Sarah and half to Abraham. There is a tradition of R. Hoſhaiah: Jod came and proſtrated it ſelf before God and ſaid; Lord everlaſting, thou haſt rooted me out from the name of a righteous woman. The holy bleſſed God ſaith to it: Heretofore thou waſt in the name of a woman, and in the end of it, Henceforward thou ſhalt be in the name of a man and in the beginning. This is that which is written, Moſes called the name of Hoſhea, Jehoſhua. Μία κεραία: one Tittle: It moſt properly means thoſe little Apiculi that diſtinguiſh betwixt letters that are very like one to another: You may have the explanation of this in this pretty deſcant of Tanchuma fol. 1. It is written, ſaith he, לא תחללו את שם קדשי You ſhall not prophane my holy Name. He that makes the Cheth ח a He ה deſtroys the world: for he makes this ſenſe, You ſhall not praiſe my holy Name. It is written כל הנשמה תהלל יה Let every thing that hath breath praiſe the Lord: He that makes the He ה a Cheth ח deſtroys the world; for he brings it to this ſenſe, Let every thing that hath breath profane the Lord. It is written יכחשו ליהוה They lyed to the Lord: He that maketh Beth ב Caph כ deſtroyes the world: for he maketh this ſenſe, They lyed like the Lord. It is written אין קדוש כיהוה There is none holy like the Lord. He that makes Caph כ Beth ב deſtroys the world: for he maketh this ſenſe, There is no holineſs in the Lord. It is written יהוה אחד יהוה אלהינו The Lord our God is one Lord. He that makes Daleth ד Reſh ר deſtroys the world: for he bringeth the ſenſe to this, The Lord our God is a ſtrange God, &c. In Chagig. fol. 77. col. 3. they ſpeak more of the letter Jod, and ſo doth Midras Tillin in Pſal. 114. In Deut. 32. 18. this little letter is written leſs then it ſelf in the word חשי, and yet preſerved in that quantity and not altered, and obſerved ſo by the Maſorites.

2. Yet could they not for all their care but have ſome falſe Copies go up and down amongſt them, through heedleſneſs or error of tranſcribers. In Shabb. fol. 15. col. 2. they are diſputing how many faults may be in a part of the Bible, and yet it lawful to read in. The books of Hagiographa, ſay they, If there be two or three faults in every leaf מתקנו וקורא בו He may mend it, and read: The Books of Hagiographa they read not in their Synagouges, as they did the Law and the Prophets, therefore this is to be underſtood of a mans private reading, and of his own Bible, which if faulty, there were true Copies whereby he might mend it and ſo read. Nay in Taanith fol. 68. col. 1. there is mention of a faulty Copy that was laid up in the publick records. They found three books in the Court of the Temple. The book מעוני the book ועטוטי and the book היא In one they found written מעון אלהי קדם and in two it was written מעונה אלהי קדם [Deut. 33. 27.] And they approved the two, and refuſed the one. In one they found written, וישלח את נערי בני ישראל and in two it was written וישלח את ועטוטי בני ישראל [Exod. 24. 5.] They approved the two, and refuſed the other. In one they found written חשע היא and in two it was written אחרת עשרה היא; They approved of the two and refuſed the other. That alteration ועטוטי which is the ſecond mentioned, the Babylonian Gemariſts, and Maſſecheth Sopherim per. 1. ſay was one of the thirteen alterations that the Septuagint made in the Law for Ptolomy King of Egypt. Which ſeems to argue that as they tranſlated the Bible into Greek, in which they made thouſands of alterations from the text, ſo that they copied an Hebrew copy for him, and in that made theſe, and this that was found in the Court of the Temple a tranſcript of that Copy.

3. In every Synagogue they had a true Copy: And it was their care every where to have their Bible as purely authentick as poſſible, as may be ſeen by the curious rules that are given to that purpoſe in Maſſecheth Sopherim newly cited, and Megillah.

For

For this they accounted their treaſure and their glory: And in the reading of the Law and the Prophets in the Synagogue, it was their great care that not a tittle ſhould be read amiſs: and for this purpoſe the Miniſter ſtood over thoſe that read, and overſaw that they read aright: and from this, as Aruch tells us, he was called Chazan, that is Epiſcopus or Overſeer: In Jeruſ. Sotah fol. 21. col. 3. the Samaritans are blamed by the Jews for wilfully corrupting their own Pentateuch. R. Eliezer ben R. Simeon ſaid, I ſaid to the Scribes of the Samaritans, You have falſified your Law, and yet reap no advantage by it: for you have written in your Law, By the plain of Moreh which is Sichem; And was it not manifeſt enough without that addition that it was Sichem? But you conſtrue not, a pari, as we do. It is ſaid here, The plain of Moreh, and it is ſaid elſewhere, The plain of Moreh: there it is no other but Sichem: no more muſt it be here. [The addition cavilled at, which is Sichem, is ſo in the Samaritan Pentateuch now extant, at Deut. 11. 30.] But amongſt all the wickedneſs that Chriſt and his Apoſtles laid to the charge of the Jews, yet you never find them blamed in the leaſt degree for this, that they went about to corrupt the letter of the Text: The ſenſe indeed they ſpoiled with their gloſſes, and ſo made the Word of God of no effect, and this they hear of throughly, but not a word of their ſpoiling the letter of the Text.

4. Had they been never ſo deſirous to have impoſed upon Chriſtians, by falſifying the Text, they could not poſſibly do it: For Firſt, Every Synagogue in the world having the pureſt Copy that poſſibly was to be got, how impoſſible was it ſuch legerdemain ſhould be, when there were ſo many thouſand Copies to diſcover it [unleſs they were all corrupt alike] and multitudes out of the Synagogues, Rulers and People were converted to the Goſpel.

Secondly, As learned men as any they had among them, and that as well underſtood what Text was pure, what corrupt, Joſeph of Arimathea, Nicodemus, Paul, and multitudes of the Prieſts imbraced the Goſpel: and ſo multitudes of pure Copies were in the hands of Chriſtians, upon the firſt riſing of the Goſpel, and multitudes that had ſuch Copies in their hands were converted daily.

5. To which may be added that the ſame power and care of God that preſerves the Church, would preſerve the Scriptures pure to it: and he that did and could preſerve the whole, could preſerve every part, ſo that not ſo much as a tittle ſhould periſh.

SECTION XII.

Concerning the Calling of the Jews.

BY what hath been ſpoken concerning the ſtate of the Jews in their own Land after the fall of their City, it may be obſerved wherein it is that the Lords vengeance upon that Nation doth eſpecially conſiſt, namely in his rejection of them from being his people, and in their obduration. The unſpeakable miſeries and ſlaughter that they indured in the ſiege and ruine of Jeruſalem, ſpeak as dreadful puniſhment as ever fell upon a Nation, and yet this was but ſhort and ſmall, in compariſon of that fearful blindneſs and hardneſs that lies upon them, and hath done for this ſixteen hundred years together. Seventy years in bodily bondage in Babel, did finiſh the puniſhment of their forefathers, for all the Idolatry, bloodſhed and impiety that they had committed: But theſe after above twenty times ſeventy years, under diſperſion and obduration, have now as little appearance of amendment of their hearts and of their condition, as there was ſo many hundred years ago. The ſame blindneſs, the ſame doting upon traditions, the ſame inſiſting upon their own works for ſalvation, the ſame blind confidence that they are Gods only beloved people, the ſame expectation of Meſſias to come, the ſame hatred of Meſſias already come, and the ſame oppoſition againſt the Goſpel is in them ſtill, that was in that firſt generation that crucified the Lord of life. That generation is plainly and often aſſerted by the Holy Ghoſt in the New Teſtament to be Antichriſt, and the very ſame Antichriſtian ſpirit hath continued in all the generations of them, ever ſince, even to this day.

Into the thoughts therefore concerning their Calling after ſo long and ſo extream croſneſs againſt the Goſpel and the Lord of it, I cannot but take theſe things into conſideration. [For though I am unwilling to recede from that charitable opinion of moſt Chriſtians that there ſhall once be a Calling of them home, yet ſee I not how that ſuppoſal of the univerſal Call of the whole Nation, as of one man, which ſome entertain, can be digeſted without ſome allay and mitigation.]

1. That

1. That all Iſrael, both Jews and they of the ten Tribes, have had as full an offer of the Goſpel as any of the Gentiles have had, both in the time of the Apoſtles and ſince. Of the two Tribes there can be no ſcruple: and of the ten, almoſt as little, if their ſin that caſt them off the place of their ſeating when carried out of their own Land, and the carriage of the Goſpel through the whole world, be well conſidered: Now that their refuſing of the Goſpel ſo offered to them, in that manner as they have done, ſhould be followed with ſo univerſal a Call and Converſion, is ſomewhat hard to believe: eſpecially when it is obſerved that the Gentiles deſpiſing the Goſpel are doomed to the everlaſting deprivation of it, and to a worſe condition then Tyre and Zidon.

2. It is true indeed that Gods Covenant with their fathers, is of ſpecial weight and obſervation in this buſineſs, and the Apoſtle toucheth it in this queſtion, Rom. 11. 28. but how is this to be underſtood? God made a twofold Covenant with their fathers, viz. the Covenant of Grace, and the Covenant of Peculiarity; and the later was but a manner of the adminiſtration of the former. The Covenant of Grace was made with Adam, and belongs to all the ſeed of Chriſt, before the Law, under it, and after it, Jews and Gentiles. Now the Oeconomy of Moſes was ſuch an adminiſtration of this Covenant of Grace as made Iſrael a peculiar people. This effect of the Covenant with their fathers, namely that they ſtill are and ever ſhall be Gods peculiar, is their conceit all along, but little warrant for us to hold it, ſince under the Goſpel there is no diſtinction of Jew and Gentile: And as for the other, that many of them yet belong to Election and the Covenant of Grace made with their fathers, it is not to be doubted, which yet doth little make for ſo general a calling.

3. It was a good ſign of the general converſion of the Heathen once to be, in that there were multitudes of them proſelyted daily, before the general Call by the Goſpel came [an hundred three and fifty thouſand in the days of Solomon, and that when Religion was then in a very narrow compaſs:] But of theſe, how few, in compariſon have come in, in all this long time, though they have had incomparably more means and opportunity then ever thoſe had? Their ſin that caſt them off, was more horrid then the ſin that caſt off the Heathen, and ſo their blindneſs and obduration is beyond theirs. And which deſerves obſervation, The ſin of the two Tribes was beyond the ſin of the ten.

4. Since the New Teſtament doth ordinarily ſtile that firſt generation Antichriſt: and ſince, as is apparent, the very ſame ſpirit is in the Nation to this day, I ſee not how we can look upon the converſion of the Jews under a lower notion then the converſion of a brood of Antichriſt. Therefore can I no more look for the general calling of them, then I look for the general call of the Antichriſtian brood of Rome. We ſee indeed by happy experience that ſeveral Nations have fallen off from the Roman Antichriſt, as the Proteſtant Countries that are at this day: but Antichriſt is yet in being and ſtrong, and his end will be, not by converſion, but perdition. So can I not but conceive of the Jewiſh Nation, That although numerous multitudes of them may at the laſt be brought into the Goſpel as the Proteſtant party hath been, yet that to the end numerous multitudes alſo ſhall continue in the Antichriſtian ſpirit of unbelief and oppoſition and blaſpheming: and both parts of Antichriſt, the Roman and this ſo to periſh together. Nor doth this opinion any whit croſs any place of Scripture that is produced about the calling of the Jews, but rather ſettle its ſenſe and explain it: That eminent place of the Apoſtle, Rom. 11. carrieth ſuch a limitation throughout: and the very intent of his diſcourſe ſpeaketh to ſuch a tenour all along: For his drift in that Chapter is not to determine whether all the Jews ſhould be once called, but whether all the Jews were wholly caſt off: and this he ſtates that there is a remnant, ver. 5. that the election hath obtained, but the reſt are blinded, ver. 7. and that blindneſs in part is happened to Iſrael, &c. v. 25. And this is the myſtery that he there ſpeaketh of, and not as ſome would wreſt it, their univerſal converſion. A myſtery indeed that God ſhould caſt off his old Covenanted people, and that they that had always had the light, and only ſeen of all the Nations of the world, ſhould now ſit in darkneſs and be blind, and that the Gentiles by their blindneſs ſhould come to ſee. It is remarkable in this place and others of the Apoſtles Epiſtles, that though the deſtruction of Jeruſalem were the moſt ſignal time, and evidence of Gods caſting them off, yet that they were indeed caſt off long before: as, to ſpare more allegations, may be obſerved in the firſt Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, Ch. 2. ver. 15, 16. which was the firſt Epiſtle that the Apoſtle wrote. Whence punctually to date their rejection, whether from the death of Chriſt, or from the firſt ſending the Goſpel among the Gentiles, is not much material to inquire after here: it is enough for our preſent purpoſe, to obſerve, that they are given for caſt off ſo early in the diſperſion of the Goſpel: So that the Apoſtle doth clearly include their converſion even at that firſt ſpreading of the Goſpel, as well as their converſion in future times. He ſaith, their caſting off was the riches of the Gentiles and the reconciling of the world, and their fulneſs ſhould much more inrich the Gentiles, and be as life from the dead: By their fulneſs not meaning the whole number of their Nation, but the full number of Gods Elect of them when they ſhould be brought in. The caſting off of the Nation inriched the Gentiles, in that they came in to be the Lords people in their ſtead, but much more ſhall it be an inriching to them when the full number of them that belong to God ſhall come in alſo and be joyned to the Gentiles, and help to make their body up. This is apparently the drift of the Apoſtle in thoſe words, which that opinion is exceedingly wide of, that holds that the calling of the Jews ſhall not be till the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in. It is true indeed that he ſaith, that blindneſs in part is happened to Iſrael till that time, v.25. and ſo our Saviour ſaith, that Jeruſalem ſhall be troden down of the Gentiles until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled, Luke 21.24. but this means her final deſolation, and the final blindneſs of that part that is blinded; not that Jeruſalem ſhould be built again when the fulneſs of the Gentiles is come in, which the Jews conceit: nor that then the Jews ſhould be unblindfolded and become a Goſpel Church, as the Gentiles had been: for what a ſtrange world doth ſuch a ſuppoſal imagine? And how often doth the Goſpel gainſay any ſuch diſtinctiveneſs and peculiarity? As we need not to go far for inſtance, that very place of the Apoſtle that is under our hands, doth hold out all along that the Gentiles and the Jews that belong to the election of grace, do make up but one Body. And that very paſſage that is chiefly pleaded for their univerſal Call, And ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, means no other. Therefore though it may be hoped that God hath multitudes of them yet to be brought in, from under their Antichriſtian darkneſs and oppoſition of the Goſpel, yet that they ſhall be generally called, and no Antichriſtian party left behind, and that not till Antichriſt of Rome be fallen and the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in, as ſome circumſtantiate the thing, needeth clearer evidence of Scripture to evince, then yet hath been produced.

MDCLXXXII.

The Epiſtle to the READER.

Gentle Reader,

THE veil of the Sanctuary was ſupported by four pillars, and wrought with great variety of works and colours: So is the Story of the veil of Chriſts fleſh by the four Evangeliſts, and the Texture of it of like variety. For one relateth what another hath omitted, one more largely, what another more brief, one more plain, what another leſs, one before what another after, one after one manner, and another after another: And ſo they bring their ſeveral pieces of Imbroidery, differing in colours, but not in ſubſtance, various in workmanſhip, but not in the ground-work, to conſtitute and make up a perfect and ſacred Tapeſtry and Furniture in the Houſe of the Lord: And carrying ſeveral faces in the manner of their writing and compoſal, like thoſe living Creatures in Ezekiel and the Revelation, yet they ſweetly and Harmoniouſly meet together in the one body and compacture of a perfect Story.

To ſew theſe parcels together into one piece, and ſo to diſpoſe and place them in their proper order, as the continuance and Chronical method of the Hiſtory doth require, is, hic labor hoc opus, a thing of no ſmall pains and difficulty, and yet a thing that with pains and induſtry may be brought to paſs: For in many paſſages and diſlocations the Text hath ſhewed the proper place of ſuch diſlocated parcels, and the proper way and manner to join them where they ſhould be joined, ſo plainly; and in all places it hath hinted this ſo ſurely, though ſometimes more obſcurely, that ſerious ſtudy and mature deliberation, may certainly fix and ſettle them. Divers great and learned Pens have laboured in this work, both Ancient and Modern, both Romiſh and Proteſtant, but hardly any, if any at all, in our own mother Tongue, ſo fully and largely as a Work of this nature doth require: this hath incited me, though the unfitteſt of all others, for a task of ſo much Learning, Judgment, and Seriouſneſs, to attempt this work; and if poſſibly my dimneſs might, to give ſome light and facility to the Hiſtory of the Goſpel, and if my poorneſs could, ſome contribution towards the building of Sion.

The Method that I preſcribed to my ſelf in this undertaking (ſome glimpſe whereof thou maiſt ſee in this preſent Parcel) was, 1. To lay the Text of the Evangeliſts in that order, which the nature and progreſs of the Story doth neceſſarily require. 2. To give a Reaſon of this Order, why the Text is ſo laid, more largely or more briefly, according as the plainneſs, or difficulty of the connexion doth call for it. 3. To give ſome account of the difficulties in the language of the Original, as any came to hand, either being naturally ſo in the Greek it ſelf, or being made difficulties when they were not ſo, by the curioſity, miſconſtruction, or ſelf-end-ſeeking of ſome Expoſitors. 4. And laſtly, to clear and open the ſenſe and meaning of the Text all along as it went, eſpecially where it was of more abſtruſeneſs and obſcurity.

Theſe two laſt things did I aſſay and go on withal a great way in the work, with much largeneſs and copiouſneſs, both concerning the language, and the manner. For, for the firſt, I did not only poiſe the Greek in the ballance of its own Country, and of the Septuagint, but I alſo examined tranſlations in divers languages, produced their ſenſe, and ſhewed cauſe of adhering to, or refuſing of their ſenſe, as I conceived cauſe.

And for the ſecond, I alledged the various Expoſitions and interpretations of Commentators, both ancient and modern, and others that ſpake to ſuch and ſuch places occaſionally, I examined their Expoſitions, and gave the Reader reaſon to refuse or imbrace them as cause required. When seeing the Work in this way likely to rise to vastness of bulk it self, and of trouble to the Reader, I chose to abridg this first part for a trial, and therein having expressed only those things which were most material for the understanding of the Text where it is less plain (for where it is plain enough, why should I spend time and labour about it?) And spoken mine own thoughts upon it, and omitted (unless it be for a taste of what I had done) the glosses and thoughts of others: I now wait for the direction and advice of my learned and loving Friends and Readers, whether to exhibite the other parts that are to follow (by Gods good blessing and assistance) in that large and voluminous method that at the first I prescribed to my self, or in that succiseness that this present parcel holdeth out.

I have partly chosen, and have partly been constrained, to tender this work to publick view by pieces, whereof only this, and this but a small one neither appears at this time. I have chosen so to do, that I might give the world my thoughts upon the Evangelists as the Lord giveth time: for who would defer to do any thing of such a work, till he have done all, since our lives are so short and uncertain, and the work so long and difficult? And I have been constrained thus to do, partly because of mine other occasions, many and urgent, which deny me opportunity to follow that business as such a bulk would require: and partly because of the straits of the times, which have straitned our Presses, that they Print but rarely any thing voluminous. Every year by Gods permission and good assistance, shall yield its piece, till all be finished, if the Lord spare life, health and liberty thereunto.

Divers things were fitting to have been premised to a work of this nature; but because, that if they should all be set before this small piece that we now exhibit, the Preface or Prolegomena would be larger than the Book it self: therefore have I reserved to every piece that shall come forth, its own share and portion. And the things that I have thought upon, and hewed out unto this purpose are these.

1. To fix the certain year of our Saviours birth, as a thing very fit to be looked after, and to shew the certain grounds whereupon to go, that our fixing upon such a year may be warranted and without wavering: This have I premised to this first part, wherein comes the Story and Treatise of our Saviours birth.

2. To give account of all the dislocations of Texts and Stories in the Old Testament, which are exceeding many, to shew where is their proper place and order, and to give the reason of their dislocation: And this being so copious and frequent in the Old Testament, the like will be thought the less strange and uncouth in the New.

3. To make a Chorographical description of the Land of Canaan, and those adjoyning places that we have occasion to look upon as we read the Gospel, a thing of no small necessity, for the clearer understanding of the Story.

4. To make a Topographical description of Jerusalem, and of the Fabrick of the Temple, which will facilitate divers passages in the Gospel, which are of no small obscurity.

5. To give some account and Story of the State and Customs of the Jews in these times when the Gospel began, and was first preached among them, out of their own and other Writers, which things the Evangelists mention not, and yet which conduce not a little to the understanding of the Evangelists.

These as things very necessary for the matter in hand, shall wait severally upon the several parts that shall follow, as the Lord shall please to vouchsafe ability, time, health and safety.

From my Chamber in Westminster, Octob. 1. 1644.

PROLE-

PROLEGOM. I.

The Age of the World at our Saviours birth fixed: the account proved: the chiefeſt difficulties in the Scripture Chronicle reſolved.

IN the Stories of times, the times of the ſtories do challenge ſpecial notice and obſervation; and of all other, that of our Saviours birth, being the fulneſs of time, may beſt, as beſt worthy, make ſuch a challenge. A time, to which all the holy ones that went before it, did bend their eyes and expectation, and a time from which all the Chriſtians that have lived ſince, have dated their Chronical accounts and computation. And yet how unfixed is this time and age of the world, in which ſo great a myſtery came to paſs, and upon which ſo general accounting doth depend, in the various reckonings of learned and induſtrious men? It is not only to be ſeen in their writings, wondered at in regard of the great difference at which they count, but the fixed time is the more to be ſtudied for, upon this very reaſon, becauſe ſuch men do ſo greatly differ among themſelves. The only way to ſettle in ſuch variety, is to take the plain and clear account and reckoning of the Scripture, which hath taken a peculiar care to give an exact and moſt certain Chronicle to this time, and not to rely upon the computation of Olympiades, Conſuls, or any other humane calculation, which it cannot be doubted, muſt of neceſſity leave the deepeſt ſtudent of them in doubting and uncertainty. Now the Scripture carrying on a moſt faithful reckoning of the times, from the beginning of time to this fulneſs of it, hath laid this great, wondrous, and happy occurrence of the birth of the Redeemer in the year of the world, three thouſand nine hundred twenty and eight. Which that we may make good, and fixed among ſo much variety and difference, may the Reader gently have the patience to ſee and to examine the particular ſums by which the Scripture accounteth to make up this total, and to ſtudy upon thoſe ſcruples in the ſeveral parcels where they come that make the account intricate and doubtful, and to judge upon thoſe reſolutions and ſatisfactions that ſhall be tendred for the cleering and untying of thoſe ſcruples.

And, ſurely, though the buſineſs may be ſomething long and difficult, which we ſhall propoſe and lay before him, yet doubt I not, but the profit will fully countervail his labour, when he ſhall not only be reſolved of the certainty of the time, which we now have occaſion, and every Chriſtian hath cauſe to look after, but when he ſhall alſo ſee, (and that, I ſuppoſe, not without admiration) the wondrous and myſterious, and yet always inſtructive ſtile, and manner of accounting uſed by the Holy Ghoſt, in moſt ſacred Majeſtickneſs, and challenging all ſerious ſtudy and reverence; And though alſo this buſineſs may ſeem to be ſomething too Parergon, and excentrick to the main work that we have before us, the Harmonizing of the Evangeliſts, yet ſince a prime thing that we are to inquire after in the very entrance of this ſtory of our Saviours life, is, the fixed and certain time of his birth, the Reader will be pleaſed to excuſe a fault on the right hand, rather then on the left, and to diſpenſe with too much deſire to give ſatisfaction, rather then too little, or with none at all.

Noah at 600 years old ſeeth the Flood, Gen. 7. 11.
Total 1656. which whole year of the World, was taken up with the Flood, viz. from the 17 day of the ſecond Month, or Marheſhvan, Gen. 7. 11. to the 27 day of the ſame month come twelve-month, Gen. 8. 14.

SECTION II.

From the Flood to Terahs death, and the Promiſe then given to Abram, were 427 years, as appeareth Gen. 11. by theſe particulars.

SEM at 2 years after the Flood begat Arphaxad, ver. 10.
Arphaxad at 35 years old begat Salah, ver. 12.
Salah at 30 years old begat Eber, ver. 14.

Nachor at 29 years old begat Terah, ver. 24.
Terah at 130 years old begat Abram.
Abram at 75 years old hath the Promiſe, Gen. 12.4.
Total 427. Which ſum being added to 1656, which was the age of the World at the Flood, amounteth to 2083. and it reſulteth, that the Promiſe was given to Abram in the year of the World 2083.

The promiſe given to Abram Gen. 12. 1. &c. Anno mundi, 2083.

But here is the great queſtion moved, Whether Abram were the eldeſt ſon of Terah, yea or no? If he were, then was he born when Terah was 70 years of age, Gen. 11. 26. and not as this Table layeth it, at his 130. And if he were not his eldeſt ſon, why hath Moſes named him firſt of all his ſons?

Anſwer, Firſt, He was not his eldeſt ſon: for, 1. He marryed his brother Harans daughter [for ſo all men hold Sarah to have been] and ſhe was but ten years younger then himſelf, Gen. 17.17. which was impoſſible, if her Father were younger then he. 2. He is ſaid to be but 75 years old, when he departed out of Haran, Gen. 12.4. And this was after his Fathers death, Act. 7.4. Now had he been born at Terahs 70, he had been 135 years old when his Father died: We muſt therefore compute and reckon backward thus, that ſince he was but 75 years old when his Father died, it muſt needs be concluded that he was born when Terah was 130 as is laid down in the Table.

Anſwer, Secondly, He is reckoned firſt of Terahs ſons, as Sem is of Noahs, not becauſe he was the firſt in time, but the firſt in dignity. For that Sem was not the eldeſt ſon of Noah, is clear by comparing theſe places, Gen. 5.32. Noah was 500 years old when he begat his firſt ſon, and Gen. 7.11. when Noah was ſix hundred years old, was the Flood of waters upon the Earth, and then was one of his ſons an hundred years old: But Sem was not ſo till two years after, Gen. 11.10. And yet is he ever named the firſt of his ſons, Gen. 5.32. & 6.10. & 7.13. & 9.18. & 10.

There are ſome, that not content with this plain, neceſſary, and undeniable explication of the difficulty, do hold that Abram took two journies into Canaan, one before his Fathers death, and another after: whereas Moſes and Steven well compared together, do plainly ſhew the contrary, and fully, and ſufficiently clear the matter under ſcruple: That which hath made men to fall into the miſtake of his two journies into Canaan hath been this, that they have taken the words of God in Act. 7.3. Get thee out of thy Country, &c. and his words in Gen. 12.1. Get thee out of thy Country, &c, to be of the ſame time and ſpoken in the ſame place, whereas there is a vaſt difference in the words themſelves, and ſo was there of the time and place where they were ſpoken. Steven telleth, that while Abraham was in Meſapotamia or Chaldea, as ver. 4. before he dwelt in Horam, God appeared to him, and ſaid unto him, Get thee out of thy Country, and from thy kindred, but not a word of departing from his Fathers houſe, for he took his Father and his whole houſhold along with him, and dwelt with them a good while in Haran, Gen. 11.31. And Terah died in Haran, ver. 32. Then the Lord ſaid unto Abram, for ſo ſhould Gen. 12. 1. be tranſlated, and not, Now the Lord had ſaid: And his ſaying was this, Get thee out of thy Country, and from thy kindred, and from thy Fathers houſe too, for that alſo he now left behind him, namely Nahor and all his Fathers Family, but only Lot and Sarah that were fatherleſs children: And this difference conſidered, as neceſſarily it muſt, it doth make this difficulty which hath coſt ſo much canvaſing ſo eaſie, as a thing needeth not to be more.

SECTION III.

From the promiſe given to Abram upon his Father Terahs death to the delivery of the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, and to the giving of the Law, were 430 years, Exod. 12. 40. Gal. 3. 17.

THIS ſum being joyned to that before of 2083. it maketh the world to be in the two thouſand five hundred and thirteenth year of her age, when Iſrael was delivered and the Law given. The delivery out of Egypt, Anno mundi, 2513.

This ſpace of time of 430 years betwixt the promiſe and the Law, the Divine Wiſdom and Providence caſt into two equal portions, of 215 years before the peoples going down into Egypt, and 215 years of their being there.

The former moyety was taken up in theſe parcels:

Five and twenty years betwixt the giving of the promiſe and the birth of Iſaac, compare Gen. 12. 4. with Gen. 21. 5.

Sixty years betwixt the birth of Iſaac, and the birth of Jacob, Gen. 25. 26.

An hundred and thirty years betwixt the birth of Jacob and Iſraels going into Egypt, Gen. 27. 9.

The latter in theſe:

Ninety five years from their going into Egypt, to the death of Levi.

Forty years from the death of Levi to the birth of Moſes.

Eighty years from the birth of Moſes to their delivery.

SECTION IV.

From the coming of Iſrael out of Egypt, to the laying of the foundation of Solomons Temple, were 480 years, 1 King. 6. 1. and ſeven years was it in building, ver. 38.

SO that joyn theſe 487 that paſſed from the coming out of Egypt to the finiſhing of the Temple, to the 2513 years, of which age the world was when they came out of Egypt, and it will appear that Solomons Temple was finiſhed exactly in the three thouſandth year of the World. Solomons Temple finiſhed, Anno mundi, 3000.

This ſum is made up of theſe many parcels.

Iſrael in the Wilderneſs 40 years.
Joſhua ruled 17 years.
Othniel judged 40 years, Judg. 3. 11.
Ehud judged 80 years, Judg. 3. 30.
Deborah, &c. 40 years, Judg. 5. 31.
Gideon, 40 years, Judg. 8. 28.
Abimelech, 3 years, Judg. 9. 22.
Tolah, 23 years, Judg. 10. 2.
Jair, 22 years, Judg. 10. 3.
Jephtah, 6 years, Judg. 12. 7.
Ibſan, 7 years, Judg. 12. 9.
Elon Judged 10 years, Judg. 12. 11.
Abdon, 8 years, Judg. 12. 14.
Sampſon, 20 years, Judg. 15. 20. & 16. 31.
Eli, 40 years, 1 Sam. 4. 18.
Samuel and Saul, 40 years, Acts 13. 21.
David, 40 years, 1 King. 2. 11.
Solomon, 4 years, 1 King. 6. 1.

Total 480. Now among all theſe parcels, there is no number that hath not a Text to warrant it, but only the date of the Government of Joſhua, which yet cannot be doubted of to have been ſeventeen years; ſeeing that ſo many years only are not ſpecified by expreſs Text of all the 480 mentioned, 1 King. 6. 1. And here alſo may the reader obſerve that the years that are mentioned in the book of Judges, for years of Iſraels oppreſſion, as Judg. 3. 8, 14. &c. are not to be taken for a ſpace of time diſtinct from the time of the Judges, but included in the ſum of their times.

Now it thus falling out, as it is more then apparent, that Solomons Temple was finiſhed and perfected in the year of the world 3000. This belike hath helped to ſtrengthen that Opinion that hath been taken up by ſome, That as the World was ſix days in creating ſo ſhall it be ſix thouſand years in continuance, and then ſhall come the everlaſting Sabbath. And indeed the obſervation could not but pleaſe thoſe that were pleaſed with this opinion: for when they found that the firſt three thouſand years of the World did end, in the perfecting of the earthly Temple, it would make them to conclude the bolder, that the other three thouſand ſhould conclude in the conſummation of the ſpiritual.

SECTION V.

From the finiſhing of Solomons Temple, to the falling away of the ten Tribes, were 30 years.

The falling away of the ten Tribes, Anno mundi 3030.

FOR Solomon reigned 40 years, 1 *King.*11.42. and in the eleventh year of his reign was the Temple finiſhed, 1 *King.*6.38. And ſo count from that year to the expiration of his reign, and the beginning of his ſon Rehoboam, and it will appear eaſily, that the falling away of the ten Tribes was 30 years after the Temple was finiſhed, and in the year of the World 3030.

SECTION VI.

From the falling away of the ten Tribes under Jeroboam, to the captivity of Judah into Babylon, were 390.

THESE are thus reckoned in a groſs ſum by Ezekiel, Chap. 4, 5. *I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity according to the number of days, three hundred and ninety days. So ſhalt thou bear the iniquity of the houſe of Iſrael, ver.*6. And when thou haſt accompliſhed them, lie again on thy right ſide, and thou ſhalt bear the iniquity of the houſe of Judah forty days, I have appointed thee each day for a year.

Now theſe are not to be taken for two different and diſtinct ſums, as if it were 390 years from the falling away of the ten Tribes, to the captiving of the ten Tribes, and 40 years from thence to the captiving of Judah, for it was but 200 years and a little above an half, between the two firſt periods, and above an hundred years between the two laſt: but the forty years are to be reputed and counted within the 390, as the laſt years of them; and marked out ſo ſingularly becauſe of Judahs rebellion in and under ſo clear and powerful preaching of Jeremy, who propheſied ſo long a time among them.

Now for the caſting of theſe 390 years into parcels as the Books of Kings and Chronicles have done them, the ſureſt and cleareſt way, is to make a Chronical table of the collateral Kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael while they laſt together, from year to year, as they will offer themſelves to parallel one another. In which courſe ſome conſiderable ſcruples will ariſe before the Student as he goeth along, which unleſs he ſee and reſolve, he will never be able to make the account right, and which unleſs he frame to himſelf ſuch a Chronical table as is mentioned, he will never ſee nor find out. He will by the very Table, as he goeth along ſee, that ſometimes the years are reckoned compleat, as Rehoboams ſeventeen are counted, 1 King. 15.1. Sometimes current, as Abijams three, 1 King. 15. 1, 2, 9. and Elahs two, 1 King. 16.8. But this will breed no difficulty, ſince it is ordinary in Scripture thus variouſly to compute, and ſince the drawing of his Table will every where ſhew him readily this variety: But theſe things will he find of more obſcurity, and challenging more ſerious ſtudy and conſideration.

Firſt, It is ſaid that Jeroboam reigned two and twenty years, 1 King. 14. 20. and Nadab his Son two years, *Chap.*15.25. yet that Nadab began to reign in the ſecond year of Aſa, which was in the one and twentieth year of Jeroboam, and ſo Nadabs two years fall within the ſum of his fathers two and twenty.

Now the reaſon of this accounting is this: It is ſaid in 2 Chron. 13. 20. that the Lord ſtroke Jeroboam and he died: that is, with ſome ill and languiſhing diſeaſe, that he could not adminiſter nor rule the Kingdom, therefore was he forced to ſubſtitute his ſon Nadab in his life time, and in one and the ſame year both Father and Son died.

Secondly, It is ſaid that Baaſha began to reign in the third year of Aſa, 1 King. 13. 28. and reigned four and twenty years, *ver.*33. then it followeth that he died in the ſix and twentieth year of Aſa, as the Text reckoneth the years current, 1 Kings 16. 8. And yet in the ſix and thirtieth year of Aſa, Baaſha came up and made war againſt Judah, 2 Chron. 16.1. So that this war will ſeem to be made by him nine or ten years after he is dead.

But the reſolution of this from the original is eaſie: For that Text in the Chronicles meaneth not that Baaſha made war againſt Judah in the ſix and thirtieth year of Aſaes reign, but in the ſix and thirtieth year of Aſaes kingdom: that is, ſix and thirty years from the diviſion of the Tribes under Rehoboam: For Rehoboam reigned ſeventeen years. Abijam his ſon three years, and in the ſixteenth year of Aſa was this war made: thirty ſix years in all from the firſt diviſion. The word מלכות therefore ſhould there be rendred the Kingdom, and not the Reign, and the thing were clear. Now the Text dateth this war, not from the time of Aſaes reign, but from the time of the diviſion of the Tribes: becauſe that though they were divided hitherto in regard of their Kings, yet not totally in regard of their converſe and affection, for ſome of the revolted ones affected ſtill the houſe of David: but Baaſha to make the diviſion ſure: buildeth Ramah, that none might go in or out to Aſa King of Judah, and this was as a ſecond diviſion; and therefore the Text reckoneth from the firſt.

Thirdly, It is ſaid, 1 King. 16. 23. that in the one and thirtieth year of Aſa King of Judah, began Omri to reign over Iſrael twelve years, ſix years reigned he in Tirzah. And yet in verſ. 29. it is ſaid, that In the eight and thirtieth year of Aſa, began Ahab the ſon of Omri to reign.

Now how can there poſſibly be twelve years reign betwixt Aſaes thirty firſt and thirty eight?

Anſwer, Omri began to reign as ſoon as ever he had ſlain Zimri, which was in the twenty ſeventh of Aſa: but he was not ſole and entire King till his thirty firſt: For Tibni his competitor and corrival for the Crown, held him in agitation and wars till Aſaes thirty firſt. And then was he overcome, and Omri acknowledged abſolute King by Tibnies ſouldiers, and ſo from thence forward he reigned ſole King in Tirzah.

But yet the doubt remaineth how Omri beginning his monarchy in the thirty firſt of Aſa, and ending it in his thirty eight, can be ſaid to have reigned but ſix years, whereas it was eight current.

Anſwer, The ſix compleat years only are reckoned: for the thirty firſt of Aſa was even ending when Tibni was conquered, and the thirty eight but newly begun when Omri died: Such another kind of reckoning may be obſerved in caſting up the age of Abraham and Iſmael at their Circumciſion, compared with the age of Abraham at Iſmaels death.

Fourthly, The beginning of the reign of Joram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat hath three dates. The firſt in the ſeventeenth year of Jehoſhaphat his father, compare 2 Kings 22. 51. and 2 *King.*1.17. and 2 *King.*3.1.

The ſecond in the fifth year of Joram the ſon of Ahab, 2 King. 8. 16. This was in the two and twentieth year of his father Jehoſhaphat.

And the third at his father Jehoſhaphats death, 2 *Chron.*21.1.

Now the reſolution of this Ambiguity is thus. The firſt time he was made Viceroy, when his father went out of the Land for the recovery of Ramoth Gilead: and becauſe Ahab the King of Iſrael, went with him, Ahaziah his ſon is made Viceroy in that Kingdom alſo.

The ſecond time he was Viceroy again in his Father Jehoſhaphats abſence upon his voyage into Moab with Jehoram, 2 *King.*3. and from this time doth the Text date the fixed beginning of his reign, as is plain, 2 *King.*8.17. 2 *Chron.*21.20. For Jehoſhaphat after this time was little at home, but abroad, either in his own Land, perambulating it, to reduce the people to true Religion, or in Moab to reduce that to ſubjection, 2 *Chron.*19.20.

Fifthly, But a greater doubt meeteth you by far when you come to caſt up the times of his ſon Ahaziah. For whereas Joram was thirty and two years old when he began to reign, and reigned eight years in Jeruſalem, 2 King. 6.17. 2 Chron. 21. 20. and ſo died when he was forty years old; and inſtantly the inhabitants of Jeruſalem ſet Ahaziah upon his throne, who was his youngeſt ſon, yet was this Ahaziah forty two years old when he began to reign, 2 Chron. 22.1. and ſo will prove to be two years older then his father.

Anſwer, The book of Chronicles in this place meaneth not that Ahaziah was ſo old when he began to reign; for the book of Kings telleth plainly that he was but two and twenty, 2 King. 8. 26. but theſe two and forty years have relation to another thing; namely, to the kingdom of the houſe of Omri, and not to the age of Ahaziah. For count from the beginning of the reign of Omri, and you find Ahaziah to enter his reign in the two and fortieth year from thence; as he will readily ſee, that ſhall make ſuch a Chronical Table as is mentioned.

The Original words therefore Ben arbaguim ushethajim ſhanah, are not to be tranſlated as they be, Ahaziah was two and forty years old, but Ahaziah was the ſon of the two and forty years, as Seder Olam hath acutely obſerved long ago.

Now the reaſon why his reign is thus dated differently from all others the Kings of Judah, is, becauſe he in a kind was an impe of the houſe of Omri: for Athaliah his mother, was Ahabs daughter, 2 King. 8. 18. And ſhe both perverted her husband Joram, and brought up this her ſon Ahaziah in the Idolatry of the houſe of Ahab; therefore is not Ahaziah fit to be reckoned by the line of the Kings of Judah, but by the houſe of Omri and Ahab: ſee the Evangeliſt Matthew ſetting a ſpecial mark upon the houſe of Joram, at the notes on *Matth.*1.8.

Sixthly, There is yet one ſcruple more ariſing concerning the beginning of the reign of this Ahaziah. For the ſame book of Kings ſaith, that he began to reign in the twelfth year of Joram the ſon of Ahab, 2 *King.*8.25. and in the eleventh year of Joram the ſon of Ahab, 2 Kings 9. 29.

Anſwer,

Anſwer, The reſolution of this doubt will be eaſie to him that hath ſuch a Chronical Table as we have ſpoken of before his eyes. For there will he ſee that Jehoram reigned one year before his Father Ahabs death: For in the twentieth year of Ahab, which was the ſeventeenth of Jehoſhaphat, did Ahaziah the ſon of Ahab, begin to reign, 1 King. 22.51. being made Viceroy, when his Father went to Ramoth Gilead.

He reigning but that year, Jehoram his ſon was Viceroy or began to rule in his ſtead, the next year, namely in Ahabs one and twentieth. Ahab in his two and twentieth died: and ſo Jehoram became abſolute and intire King, and reigned ſo eleven years: ſo that his reign hath a double reckoning, he reigned as Viceroy twelve years, but as intire King but eleven.

7. Amaziah began to reign in the ſecond year of Joaſh King of Iſrael, 2 *King.*14.1. this was the eight and thirtieth year of his father Joaſh King of Judah, three years current before his death: And the reaſon was, becauſe his father had caſt himſelf into ſo much miſery and miſchief, through his Apoſtaſie and murder of Zacharias, 2 King. 12. 17, 18. 2 *Chron.*24. 23, 24, 25. that he was become unfit and unable to manage the Kingdom.

8. Uzziah or Azariah the ſon of this Amaziah, being but ſixteen years of age in the ſeven and twentieth year of the reign of Jeroboam the ſecond, 2 King. 15.1,2. it appeareth that he was but four years old at his fathers death: Therefore was the Throne empty for eleven years, and the rule managed by ſome as Protectors in the Kings minority.

9. There is alſo an interregnum or vacancy of twenty two years in the Kingdom of Iſrael, between Jeroboam the ſecond, and Zachariah: whereof what the reaſon ſhould be, is not eaſie to determine: whether through wars from abroad, which Jeroboam might have provoked againſt his houſe by the conqueſt of Hamath and Damaſcus, 2 King. 14. 28. or through war at home, as appeareth by the end of Zachariah, 2 King. 15. 10. or through what elſe it was, it is uncertain, but moſt ſure it was that the Throne was ſo long without a King, ſince Jeroboam beginning to reign in the fifteenth year of Amaziah, and reigning forty one years, 1 *King.*14.23. died in the fifteenth of Uzziah; and Zechariah began not to Reign till the eight and thirtieth, 2 Kings 15.8.

10. Hoſhea is ſaid to ſlay Pekah in the twentieth year of Jotham the Son of Uzziah, 2 *King.*15.30. whereas Jotham reigned but ſixteen years in all, 2 *King.*15.33. But the reaſon of this accounting is becauſe of the wickedneſs of Ahaz, in whoſe reign this occurrence was, and the Holy Ghoſt chuſeth rather to reckon by holy Jotham in the duſt, then by wicked Ahaz alive: For in the ſlaughter of Pekah, the Lord avenged upon Pekah the blood-ſhed and miſery he had cauſed in Judah, for he had ſlain of the men thereof 120000 in one day, 2 *Chron.*28.6. Now Ahaz had cauſed this wrath upon the people in withdrawing them from the ways of the Lord, therefore when the Lord avengeth this injury of his people upon Pekah, the time of it is computed from Jotham who was holy and upright, and not from Ahaz who had cauſed the miſchief.

11. There is a ſcruple of no ſmall difficulty about the reckoning of this twentieth year of Jotham, if it once be ſpied out: And that is this; If Pekah began to reign in the two and fiftieth or laſt year of Uzziah, and reigned twenty years, as 2 *King.*15.27. and if Jotham began to reign in the ſecond year of Pekah, 2 King. 15.33. then certainly the twentieth year of Pekah, the year when Hoſhea ſlew him, was but the nineteenth year of Jotham, and not the twentieth.

Anſwer, In this very difficulty, hath the Text fixed the time of Uzziahs becoming Leprous, which elſe-where is not determined: and it ſheweth that it was in the laſt year of his reign, when he aſſayed to offer incenſe in the Temple, and was ſtruck with the Leproſie, a diſeaſe with which the Prieſts who were to be the Judges of it, could not be touched nor infected, and his ſon Jotham was over the houſe judging the land, 2 *King.*15. 5. till the day of his death. Now that laſt year of Uzziah is counted for the firſt of Jotham, in this reckoning that we have in hand, and although he began to reign as abſolute and ſole King in the ſecond year of the Reign of Pekah, yet began he to reign as Viceroy, in the diſeaſedneſs of his father, the year before.

12. It is ſaid Hoſhea the ſon of Elah, began to reign in the twelfth year of Ahaz, 2 King. 17.1. whereas he had ſlain Pekah in the fourth of Ahaz, or the twentieth of Jotham: which ſheweth that he obtained not the Crown immediately upon Pekahs death, but was ſeven or eight years before he could ſettle it quietly upon his head. It is like that Ahaz in this time did diſquiet Iſrael, when his potent enemy Pekah was dead, in revenge of that ſlaughter that he had made in Judah, and that he kept Hoſhea out of the Throne, and for this is called the King of Iſrael, 2 *Chron.*28.19. as well as for walking in the ways of thoſe Kings.

13. It is ſaid that Hezekiah began to reign in the third year of Hoſhea the ſon of Elah, 2 King. 18.1. Now Hoſhea beginning in the twelfth of Ahaz, 2 King. 17.1. it is apparent that Hezekiah began in the fourteenth, and ſo reigned two or three years with his father Ahaz, who reigned ſixteen years, 2 *King.*16.2.

The

The reaſon of this was, becauſe of the wickedneſs of Ahaz, and becauſe of the miſeries and intanglements that his wickedneſs had brought him into, as 2 *Chron.*28.16,17,18. and *Chap.*29.7,8,9. And this ſheweth the zeal of Hezekiah, in the work of Reformation, the more, in that he aſſayed and perfected it ſo much in the very time of his wicked Father.

14. But yet there ariſeth another doubt in the computation of the times of Hezekiah, parallel with the times of Hoſhea; For whereas he began to reign in the third year of Hoſhea, as is clear before, then the ſeventh year of Hoſhea ſhould be counted his fifth year, and yet it is called but his fourth, 2 *King.*18 9.

Anſwer, The beginning of Hezekiahs reign, is of a double date: He began indeed to be Viceroy, and to bear the rule in the third of Hoſhea, which was the 14th year of his father Ahaz, but the time of that year was but ſhort, that he was in the royalty, and he did but little or nothing of note that year, but the next year, which was the fifteenth of Ahaz, and the fourth of Hoſhea, on the very firſt day of the year, or the firſt of Niſan, he began the Reformation, and ſtirred bravely in the reſtoring of Religion, 2 Chron. 29. 3. and therefore that is owned as the moſt remarkable and renowned beginning of his dominion: And ſo the ſeventh of Hoſhea, and his fourth year fall in together. In his ſixth year the ten Tribes are captived, 2 *King.*18.10. And ſo the parallelling of the two Kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael in their Chronical Annals is at an end, and now the times of the Kingdom of Judah lye in an eaſie and continued Chronicle, to the captivity in Babel, without any great ſcruple: Only about thoſe turbulent times of Jehoachaz and Jehoiakim, there is a little difficulty: For there paſſed ſome years between the death of Joſiah, and the reign of Jehoiakim, in troubles and diſtempers, though the Text hath mentioned the three moneths only of Jehoachaz: The groſs ſum of 390 between the diviſion and the burning of the Temple, keepeth all right, and ſheweth how much ſpace this was, when all the other particulars are taken up, as the 480 between the delivery out of Egypt, and building of Solomons Temple do, by the time of the rule of Joſhua, though the Text expreſly hath not determined it.

So that now add theſe 390 years mentioned by Ezekiel, which was the exact ſpace between the falling away of the ten Tribes, and the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, to the 3030 years, of which age the world was when the ten Tribes fell away, and we find that Jeruſalem was deſtroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, and the Babylonians, in the year of the world 3420.

Jeruſalem deſtroyed, Anno mundi, 3420.

SECTION VII.

From the burning of the Temple by Nebuzaradan, 2 King. 25. Jer. 52. to the return from Babel, 2 Chron. 36. 22. Ezra 1.1. were fifty years.

IT hath been no ſmall controverſie among the learned, that have handled the current of theſe times that we are about, where to begin the ſeventy years of the captivity in Babel, ſo renowned in the Scripture, *Jer.*25.11,12. & 29.10. 2 *Chron.*36.21. *Zech.*1.12. For ſince there were three captivities of Hieruſalem by the Babylonian, namely in the third year of Jehoiakim, 2 *Chron.*36.6. *Dan.*1.1. In the year of Jehoiachin, 2 Chron. 36.9,10. and in the eleventh of Zedekiah, 2 King. 25.2,3. Jer. 52. 4, 5. it may very well be queſtioned, where thoſe ſeventy years of captivity did begin, and where thoſe 390 years from the falling away of the ten Tribes ſhould terminate.

To omit varieties of opinions and reaſons that fix theſe periods, ſome here, ſome there; theſe reaſons do plainly and ſufficiently demonſtrate, that the ſeventy years of Judahs captivity in Babel, did begin from the third year of Jehoiakim.

Firſt, Becauſe Daniel that meaſured out the whole ſpace of that captivity, and that giveth account of the ſtate of the people that time, beginneth from thence, *Dan.*1.

Secondly, Becauſe it is moſt proper to begin the ſeventy years captivity by Babel from the very firſt time that any captivity by Babel began.

Thirdly, It is propheſied by Jeremy, *Chap.*25. 11. that not only the Jews, but alſo all Nations round about them ſhould ſerve the King of Babel ſeventy years. So that thoſe ſeventy years are to be counted the time and ſpace of the abſolute Monarchy of Babel, and they are to begin from the beginning of Nebuchadnezzar the firſt Monarch.

Now the beginning of his Monarchy is eaſie to ſettle, viz. in the third of Jehoiakim, from theſe Texts: *Jer.*32.1. & 52. 12. It is true indeed that in Jer. 25. 1. the fourth of Jehoiakim is called his firſt, and ſo it might be very well: for the firſt of Nebuchadnezzar might take up part of two years of his reign, as any one year of the King takes up much time of two Lord Mayors, he entring his year in the Spring, and they in Autumn. Thus do the ſeventy years begin from the beginning of Nebuchadnezzar, but the 390 that we have been ſo long upon do not there end, but they end at this nineteenth, or at the eleventh of Zedekiah, when the City and Temple was utterly ruined, and the captivity entirely entirely conſummate, as the chain of the years drawn out to the length, do really fix it; and as the very intent and ſtile of the Prophet doth the like, who in that ſum doth comprehend the whole time of the peoples being in their own Land, after the revolt under Jeroboam: So that nineteen years compleat out of the ſeventy, muſt we take into that ſum, and ſo there are but fifty years of that captivity to the time of their delivery under Cyrus remaining; which ſum being added to the age of the world, at the burning of the Temple 3420 doth make the world to be 3470 years old at the firſt of Cyrus, when the captivity did return.

The Jews return to Babel Ezra 1.1. Anno mundi 3470.

SECTION VIII.

From the return of the Jews out of Babel, to the death of Chriſt 490 years.

THIS is ſo plain in Dan. 9. in the ſeventy weeks, or ſeventy time ſeven years there mentioned, from the Commandment going forth from Cyrus to reſtore and build Hieruſalem, to the cutting off of the Meſſias, that it needeth as little to confirm it, as to tell that ſeventy times ſeven is four hundred and ninety. For if the Angel ſpeak not of a fixed and certain time in this ſum, he nameth this ſum to no purpoſe in the world, but he doth ſo clearly fix the time, the two termini of its extent, and ſome particular links of it as it paſſed, that nothing can be more clear, evident, and perſpicuous. Now add theſe 490 years, which reach to the death of Chriſt, to the age of the world 3470. at the time when they began, and it reſulteth, that our Saviour died in the year of the world 3960. Out of which ſubduct the two and thirty years of our Saviours life, and it appeareth that he was born in the year of the world 3928. that year being then but newly begun, ſtilo veteri, or according to the account uſed from the beginning of the world, from Tiſri or September: ſo that that year was his firſt year, and 3929 his ſecond year, at the which the wiſe men came to viſit him; 3930 his third year, and ſo 3960 half paſſed, or at Eaſter, his two and thirtieth and an half, at which age he died.

Chriſt born, Anno mundi, 3928.

And now he that deſireth to know the year of the world, which is now paſſing over us this year 1644 will find it to be 5572 years juſt now finiſhed ſince the Creation, and the year 5573 of the worlds age, now newly begun this September at the Æquinox.

Ver. 1. Many have taken in hand. Pſal. 68. 11.

HE condemneth not the undertakings of theſe men, as very many Expoſitors hold he doth; for firſt, he ſaith, they had taken in hand a declaration of thoſe things which were moſt ſurely believed. Secondly, He ſaith, they had done it even as the eye-witneſſes and Miniſters had delivered it. Thirdly, He maketh his own undertaking of the like nature with theirs, when he ſaith, It ſeemed good to me alſo: But he mentioneth theſe their writings as only humane Authorities [undertaken without the injunction of the Holy Ghoſt] which his divine one was to exclude: So the Books of Jaſher, of Gad, of Iddo, of the wars of the Lord, &c. are cited by the Old Teſtament, neither as altogether diſapproved, nor yet approved above humane: In the loſs of them there periſhed none of the Canonical Scriptures, but only the works of men; no more did there in the loſs of theſe.

Verſ. 2. Eye-witneſſes] theſe were the twelve Apoſtles. Miniſters] theſe were the 70 Diſciples. From their Sermons and Relations, many undertook to write Goſpels, of a godly intention and holy zeal. Of which the Evangeliſt here ſpeaking aimeth neither at the Goſpel of Matthew nor Mark, though they were written when he thus ſpeaketh; for the firſt was an eye-witneſs, and one of the twelve, and the other [it is like] a Miniſter or one of the 70. and ſo wrote not from the intelligence of others, as thoſe did of whom the Evangeliſt ſpeaketh, but by their own.

3. All things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made (c).

4. In him was life, and the life was the light of men.

5. And the light ſhined in darkneſs, and the darkneſs comprehend it not.

6. There (d) was a man ſent from God, whoſe name was John.

7. The ſame came for a witneſs, to bear witneſs of the Light, that all men through him might believe.

8. He (e) was not that Light, but was ſent to bear witneſs of that light.

9. That was the true Light, (f) which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

10. He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.

(b) Θεὸς ἦν ὁ λόγος. The Article joined to λόγος ſheweth that that is the Subject, and Θεὸς that wanteth it the Predicate.

(c) Some end the ſentence here, and ſome but begin it, and ſome neither, but bring it a ſtep further: Some point thus: All things were made by him, and without him was nothing made. That which was made in him was life A reading which Chryſoſtom. Hom. 5. in Job. ſaith was uſed by Hereticks, whereby to prove the Holy Ghoſt to be a Creature. And this is the very reading of the vulgar Latin. Others have read it thus: All things were made him, and without him was nothing made which was made in him. And then they began a new ſentence, He was life, &c. A reading conceived to have been uſed by the Manichees, whereby to prove duo principia, a good, and a bad.

(d) From Mal. 3. 1. & 4. 5. And thus dothe two Teſtaments joyn together.

(e) The Baptiſt was a light, John 5. 35. but not that light that was to come: as the light of the three firſt days of the Creation, without the Sun.

(f) It may be either read, which coming into the world, lighteth every man, or as our Engliſh hath it: which latter is approved the true. 1. By the very place where the word comming or ἐρχόμενον lyeth, for it followeth not immediately the word φῶς, but ἄνθρωπον, and ſo being joyned with it, reaſon and the cuſtom of Grammar tell, that it ſhould be conſtrued with it. 2. It is ordinary among the Jews to call men by this Periphraſis בָּאֵי עוֹלָם ſuch as come into the world, which Idiom of the Hebrews the Evangeliſt followeth here. The Syriak readeth as we do.

11. He

11. He came unto (g) his own, and his own (h) received him not.

12. But as many as (h) received him, to them gave he power to become the Sons of God, even to them that believe on his name.

13. Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

14. And the word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, [and we beheld his glory, the glory (i) as of the only begotten of the Father] full of grace and truth.

(g) As it were into his own house, or among his own people, as Joh. 16. 32 & 19. 27. Act. 4. 23. & 21. 6.

(h) In ver. 11 it is Παρέλαβον in v. 12.

it is ἔλαβον, which though they signifie the same thing, yet might some distinction of sense be observed in the distinction of words: For Christ came among the Jews bodily, yet they would not so much as receive him bodily, nor acknowledge him for Messias at all; but coming among the Gentiles by his word and spirit, they received him spiritually.

(i) As : כְּ אמיתה Kimchi in Micol: as Numb. 11. 1. The people became as murmurers, Prov. 10. 20. The heart in the wicked is as little worth: that is very murmurers; very little worth: so here, The very glory of the only begotten.

Reason of the Order.

THE Preface being made, the story is to begin, and that it doth here from Christs Divinity, most Divinely. For whereas the other Evangelists begin their relations no further back, then from the birth or conception of our Saviour, or at the furthest, of his Forerunner; John draws the Reader back to behold him in the Old Testament, in the Creation of the world, and in the promises to the Fathers. And therefore this portion is first to be begun withall, and of it self will justifie its own order. Especially it being considered, that the Person of Christ is first to be treated of, before his actions, and in his Person, the divine nature, [which John here handleth] before the humane.

Harmony and Explanation.

FROM Gen. 1. 1. the Evangelist sheweth that the redemption was to be wrought by him by whom the Creation was, namely, by the Word, or the second Person in the Trinity, as being fittest for that great work: as whereby confusion, both in the external works of the Trinity, as also in the term of Sonship might be avoided: In the external works of the Trinity, when the Creator of man became his Redeemer, and in the term of Sonship, when the Son of God, and the Son of Man were but one and the same person.

Ver. 1. [The Word] He is so called in the Old Testament. First, as the Author of the Creation, Psal. 33. 6. Secondly, as the Author of the Promise, 2 Sam. 7. 21. compared with 1 Chron 17. 19. Thirdly, as the very Subject of the Covenant and Promise it self, Hag. 2. 5. Deut. 30. 12. compared with Rom. 10. 6, 7. So that these things being laid together and well considered, they shew why John calleth the Son of God the Word, rather then by any other name. First, because he would shew that as the world was created by the Son, so it was most fit it should be redeemed. Secondly, that as in him the promise was given, so in him was fit should be the performance. Thirdly, that as he was the Subject of the Covenant in the Old Testament, so also was he the Substance of it in the New.

2 Sam. 7. 21. For thy name's sake; which in 1 Cor. 1. 19. is expressed, for thy servants sake, the title of Christ, Esay 42. 1.

From such places as these forenamed, where the Son of God is called the Word in the Old Testament, it became most familiar and ordinary among the Jews to use this title personally for him. And this may be a second reason deduced from that that was named before, why the Evangelist here useth it, namely as a name most familiarly and comly known amongst his own people. Examples hereof might be alledged out of the Chaldee Paraphrast, even by hundreds: It will suffice to alledge some few, Gen. 28. 20, 21. If the word of the Lord will be my help, &c. The word of the Lord shall be my God, Exod. 19. 17. Moses brought forth the People to meet the word of the Lord, Esai. 1. 14. Your appointed Feasts my word abominateth, and ver. 16. Put away the evil of your doings from before my word, and Chap. 45. 2. My word shall go before thee, &c. So Esay 48. 11. & 49. 5. 15. & 51. 5. Jer. 24. 6. & 27. 5. 18. & 29. 14. 23. Hos. 1. 7. 9. Zach. 2. 5. and in hundreds of other places: And so likewise in some of the writings of the Talmudists, and Philo Judæus in lib. De mundi opificio, explaineth this title.

This term, and in this sense also, was got even among the Heathen: for so Mercury Trismegistus useth it often in Pimandro: as, The will of God contained his word. And, God with his word produced another intellect, which is a fiery God, and a Divine Spirit. And again, The word of God compacted the pure workmanship of nature. And, The working intellect together with the Word.

So likewise Orpheus, as he is alledged by Justin Martyr.

Οὐρανὸν ὁρκίζω σὲ Θεῦ μετὰ σὸν ἔργον,
Αὐδὴν ὁρκίζω σὲ Πατρὸς, &c.

I adjure thee by the Heaven, &c. I adjure thee by the word of the Father.

But Mahomet, in his Alcaron goeth yet further. Eiſe or Jeſus (ſaith he) is the word of God, and this being the word of God, is reputed among the Saracens as the proper name of Jeſus Chriſt, ſo that no other man is called by this name, but Jeſus only, whom in Arabick they call Eiſe. Sam. Maroch. lib. de advent. Meſſiæ cap. 27. Druſ. in præter. in loc.

* Prov. 8. 27, 30.

* And the word was with God, &c.] The Evangeliſt goeth not about ſo much, immediately to ſhew the eternity of the word, or of the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity, as he doth to declare how requiſite it was that that Perſon ſhould be incarnate rather then the firſt or the third, becauſe by him the Creation was wrought, and anſwerably by him it was fitteſt ſhould be the redemption, &c. Therefore the words in the beginning, have not reference to the words eternal being, but to his giving of being to the Creature: For as they are Moſes his own Phraſe, Gen. 1. 1. ſo are they to be taken in his ſenſe, and further back then the Creation it is not poſſible to bring his words, and by thoſe of his muſt theſe be underſtood. They trace not therefore his Divinity beyond the Creation, nor yet do they find it to have begun there, but this they ſay only, that then the word, was, and by him were all things made. And this was enough for the anſwering of Ebion and Cerinthus, which held that Chriſt was not before the Virgin Mary: And this being concluded, that the word was in the beginning, and created all things, his eternal being before the Creation will readily infer it ſelf.

The Evangeliſt uſeth this manner of ſpeech, The word with God.

Firſt, to ſhew the ſubſiſtence of the Son of himſelf, and his coexiſtence with the Father; his ſubſiſtence, he was, his co-exiſtence, He was with God. Secondly, the diſtinction of the perſons, He was with God, and the unity of the Eſſence, he was God. Thirdly, the relation between the Father and the Son; The Son is ſaid to be with the Father, as children are apud Patrem, but not e contra. Fourthly, the Phraſe, He was with God, is in Antitheſis, or oppoſition to that that is ſaid afterward, The word dwelt among us; And this doth illuſtrate the doctrine and benefit of the incarnation the more, when it ſhall be obſerved, that he that in the beginning was the word, and was with God, and was the Creator, did in the fulneſs of time, become fleſh, and dwell with men, and became their Redeemer.

[And the word was God] God in the clauſe next preceding is taken perſonally for God the Father, but here eſſentially for the Godhead.

Moſes all along the Story of the Creation called God Elohim, by a word plural, to denote the diſtinction of Perſons; but at laſt, in Gen. 2. 4. he calleth him Jehovah Elohim, to ſignifie alſo the unity of Eſſence. So David when he had ſpoken of the Lord and his word, 2 Sam. 7. 21. and the Lord and his Servant, 1 Chron. 17. 19. He preſently concludeth, that there is but one God, though thoſe titles might ſeem to make them more. There is none like thee, neither is there any God beſides thee, ver. 22. So the Evangeliſt here, when he hath named The Word, and God, and the word being with God, as two perſons diſtinct one from another, leſt this diſtinction ſhould breed the ſuppoſal of difference, and the mention of more perſons, the ſurmiſal of more Gods, he preventeth betimes, and ſtoppeth all ſuch miſconſtructions by ſaying, The Word was God.

Ver. 2. [The ſame was in the beginning with God] He had ſaid, the ſame thing immediately before, but not in the ſame reſpect. For there he ſpake of the words coexiſtency with the Father, as he explaineth himſelf after it, The word was God; but here he ſpeaketh of the words co-working with the Father in the works of the Creation, and accordingly explaineth himſelf after alſo, By him were all things made.

Ver. 3. [By him were all things made] Not as an inſtrumental cauſe only, as the Aſians pleaded, but as the efficient; For ſo the word By often importeth. 1 Cor. 1. 9. 1 Theſ. 5. 24. 2 Cor. 1. 1. Prov. 8. 15, 16. Epheſ. 1. 1. Col. 1. 1. And ſo may ἐν be underſtood, Col. 1. 16.

[And without him was nothing made that was made.] In this place there hath been great difference of readings, as was obſerved before, as ſee Chryſ. in loc. Vulg. lat. Alcum. in loc. &c. but Ignatius Martyr, Epiſt. ad Antioch. Tatianus in Harmon: Chryſoſtome in loc. and other of the ancients, and the Arabick, Syriack, Italian, Spaniſh, French, Dutch, and all Latine tranſlations that are not wedded to the vulgar, read as we do; and ſo the very ſenſe of the place requireth to read: And ſo ſome of the Romaniſts themſelves read, forſaking their own vulgar: as the Rhemiſts in margin: Maldonat. &c. For how crabbed, harſh and ſtrained a ſenſe the beſt is, that can be made of their reading; ſee in Alcuin: in loc. Victorin: adverſus Arium. lib. 3. Aquin. per. 1. quæſt. 18. art. 4.

Concerning the repetition of this, it being the ſame in effect with that before, All things were made by him; obſerve, that firſt, it is to heighten the expreſſion, or to enforce the ſenſe: for ſo the Hebrews uſually do by an affirmative and negative in the ſame ſentence, as 2 King. 20. 15. Jer. 38. 25. Lam. 3. 2. Secondly, that the two diſtinct clauſes may ſeem to diſtinguiſh of the Creatures, and in the affirmative to underſtand the viſible Creatures, which Moſes had taught evidently were made by the Word; and in the negative, the inviſible, of which there might be the more doubt, whether they were made by him or no, becauſe Moſes hath made no ſuch plain expreſſion. Or, thirdly, that the affirmative may mean the Words creating of all things, and the negative his diſpoſal and ordering of all things; χωρὶς αὐτοῦ ἐγένετο οὐδὲ ἓν ὃ γέγονεν, without him was nothing that hath been; either created, or diſpoſed, as Job. 5. 17.

Ver. 4. [In him was * life] This hath alluſion to Adams naming his wife Eve, or life, upon the apprehenſion of the Promiſe given him after his fall, Gen. 3. 15. * Deut. 30. 20. Pſ. 66. 9. Prov. 4. 13. Joh. 5. 24 & 6. 35. & 20. 31. Col. 3. 3, 4. 1 Joh. 5. 12.

And the Evangeliſt having conſidered the Word in the former verſe, as the Author of Nature, he cometh now to treat of him as the Author of Grace: there, as the Creator: here, as the Redeemer. For having related there, that by him all things were made, and amongſt all things man received his natural life and being: he goeth on now to ſhew, that by the ſame Word alſo, man when he was fallen and periſhed, and had incurred the penalty of dying the death, he re-obtained a new and a better life, namely by Faith, and laying hold upon him in the promiſe, as Hab. 2. 4.

[And the life was the light * of men] The life of the promiſe was the light that ſhone in the world, and to which all the Patriachs and Prophets, and all the holy Men of God, that lived before the fulfilling of it, had an eye and reſpect as to a light ſhining in a dark place, and whereby they guided all their devotions, and whereto they aimed all their actions: And this light then ſhone, and yet ſhineth in all the types, ſhadowes, figures, and predictions of the Law, and of the Prophets, as we daily read them, and that darkneſs *and myſtical cloudineſs which lay over them, did not comprehend it, but that it gave ſome ſhine in that obſcureneſs; And yet did they not reach to that brightneſs of revealing of Chriſt, but that it was neceſſary that the Goſpel ſhould be Preached: the beginning of which is mentioned in the very next verſe, namely the Preaching of John. * Eph. 5. 14; 1 Pet. 2. 9. 1 Joh. 2. 8. φαίνει. * See Iſa. 25. 7; & 32. 3 & 9. 30. 2 Cor. 3. 13. Heb. 12. 18.

Ver. 6. [There was a man ſent, &c.] Here may the Reader look back, and ſee the method and intention of the Evangeliſt, and the reaſon why he calleth him by this name the Word, rather then any other. For firſt, he was the Word by whom all things, and among them man, were created. Secondly, The Word, by which man, being fallen, was recovered and obtained life. Thirdly, The Word of light, direction, and conſolation to the holy Patriarchs. Fourthly, The Word of promiſe, in the darkneſs of the Law and Prophets: And he is now come to be the Word incarnate, and the publiſher of the Goſpel, which began from John, Mark 1. 1. And thus hath the Evangeliſt made the whole Old Teſtament, no other then a vailed Goſpel, ſpeaking of Chriſt, though ſomewhat obſcurely, from the beginning to the end. As in the Creation ver. 3. In the promiſe, ver. 4. In the expectation of the Fathers, ibid. Fifthly, In the darkneſs of the Law and Prophets, ver. 5. And ſixthly, in the neceſſity of a clearer revelation of him by his own comming, ibid.

Ver. 7. [To bear witneſs of the light, &c.] The light in this verſe, and thoſe that follow, is taken perſonally for Chriſt himſelf, whereas in ver. 4, 5. it is taken vertually only there, for the light that flowed from Chriſt, and therefore it is ſaid that light was in him: here for Chriſt the light it ſelf, for ſo is he called, ver. 9. See Iſai. 10. 17. and 42. 6. & 49. 6. Mic. 7. 6. Num. 24. 17. Pſal. 84. 1. Mal. 4. 2. &c. For firſt, Chriſt revealeth the Father and his will, Joh. 1. 18. & 16. 25. and whatſoever maketh manifeſt is light, Epheſ. 5. 13. Secondly, He is the brightneſs of the glory, and expreſs image of the Father, Heb. 1. 3. who is a light without any darkneſs at all, 1 Joh. 1. 5. Thridly, He inlightneth the hearts of his by Faith, Epheſ. 5. 14. Fourthly, Chriſt held out in the Goſpel, filled the world full of the light of knowledge, in compariſon of what it was under the Law, Iſai. 11. 9. Pſal. 19. 3.

[That all might believe] The word All joyneth the Gentiles with the Jews, which hitherto had been ſecluded: And in the ſame ſenſe is Chriſts Lightning of every one that commeth into the world, כל באי עולם ver. 9. to be underſtood for his general and univerſal inlightning of the world, with the ſhining of the Goſpel: For there is a compariſon made here by the Evangeliſt, betwixt the light of the promiſe under the Law, and the light of the Goſpel and Chriſt in it.

Ver. 10. [He was in the world.] Not vertually and inviſibly only, in his power and providence, but even viſibly, ſenſibly, and apparently, in audible voice and conſpicuous ſhape, before he came in humane nature, as Gen. 15. and 18. and 32. Exod. 3. Joſh. 6. yea, even to the ſight and hearing of wicked and heathen men, Gen. 4. and 20. and 21. and 31. Dan. 3. 24, 25. Exod. 14.

Ver. 11. [He came among his own] This ſpeaketh of his incarnation, and of his own Nation the Jews, amongſt whom he came and converſed in humane fleſh, yet they refuſed him. They were his own by choice, Deut. 7. 6. by purchaſe, Exod. 19. 4, 5. by Covenant, Deut. 26. 18. and by kindred, Heb. 2. 16.

Ver. 12.

Ver. 12. [* Power to become the Sons of God] The people of the Church, are called the Sons of God, Gen. 6. 2. And after the diſperſion at Babel [where the Heathen became the Sons of men, Gen. 11. 5.] this title was appropriated only to the Jews, Exod. 4. 22. Hoſ. 11. 1. But now when the Jews, Chriſts own people, ſhould not receive him when he ſo came amongſt them, this priviledge ſhould be conferred upon what Heathen or Gentiles ſo ever ſhould receive him, that they ſhould be henceforward, as the Jews had been hitherto, the Sons of God, or the Church of Chriſt.

* Or Priviledge, dignity, or licence, as Ἐξουσία is uſed 1 Cor. 8. 9. and 9. 5, 6. Acts 5. 4. Mat. 7. 29. Ἐξουσία μαθόντων; Ariſt. Lth. 8.

[That believeth on his Name.] That is, In, or On him: For the Name of God in Scripture, doth often ſtand for God himſelf, as Pſal. 71. 1. Mic. 6. 9. Act. 3. 16. &c. For God is without any mixture or compoſition, but a moſt pure and ſimple eſſence, and therefore his name and himſelf are not two ſeveral things, as they be in the creatures, but one and the ſame, R. Menahem or Exod. 60.

Ver. 13. [Which are born not of blood.] Greek, Not of bloods in the plural number. That is not of the kindred, deſcent, or continued Pedegree from the Patriarchal line, or the blood of Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, and ſucceſſively: For John the Evangeliſt ſpeaketh much to the ſame tenor here, that John the Baptiſt doth, Mat. 3. 9. That Chriſt would adopt the Heathen for the Sons of God, as the Jews had been, though they had no relation at all to the Jewiſh blood or ſtock.

[Nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man.] The Evangeliſt hath traced Moſes all along from the beginning of the Chapter, and ſo he doth here. He uſed the Phraſe of the Sons of God, in the Verſe preceding, from Gen. 6. 2. And this Clauſe that we have in hand, he ſeemeth to take from the very next Verſe after; My Spirit ſhall no more ſtrive with man, becauſe he alſo is fleſh: Where, as Moſes by fleſh, underſtandeth the brood of Cain, men that followed the ſwing of luſt, ſenſuality, and their own corruption: and by Man, the Family of Seth, or Adam, that was regulated by Religion and reaſon, till that Family grew alſo fleſhly like the other: ſo doth John here the like. For having in the next foregoing words, excluded one main thing (that was much ſtood upon) from any claim or challenge, towards the adopting of the Sons of God, or forwarding of the new birth, and that is deſcent from Abraham, and from thoſe holy men ſucceſſively, that had the promiſe: So doth he here as much for two other, which only can put in for title to the ſame; and thoſe are, firſt, the will of the fleſh, or ability of nature; Secondly, the will of man, or power of morality.

Apollinaris from this clauſe, the word became fleſh, would wickedly conclude, that the word aſſumed not an humane ſoul but only humane fleſh, and that the Godhead ſerved that fleſh inſtead of a reaſonable ſoul Confuted, Luke 5. 52. Mat. 26. 38.

Ver. 14. [And the word became Fleſh,] Now hath the Evangeliſt brought us to the great Myſtery of the Incarnation, in the deſcription of which may be obſerved; Firſt, the two terms, the word, and Fleſh, expreſſing Chriſts two natures; and the word was made, or became, their hypoſtatical union. Secondly, the word fleſh is rather uſed by the Evangeliſt, then the word man; though oftentimes they ſignifie but the ſame thing, as Gen. 6. 12. Pſal. 65. 2. Iſa. 40. 5, 6.

Firſt, to make the difference and diſtinction of the two natures in Chriſt, the more conſpicuous; and that according to the common ſpeech of the Jews, who ſet fleſh and blood in oppoſition to God, as Matth. 16. 17. Gal. 1. 16.

Secondly, to magnifie the mercy of God in Chriſts incarnation, the more, in that fleſh being in its own nature, ſo far diſtant from the nature of God; yet that he thus brought theſe two natures together, as of them to make but one perſon for the reconciling of man and himſelf together.

Thirdly, to confirm the truth of Chriſts humanity, againſt future Hereſies, which have held that he had not a true and real humane body, but only Fantaſtical, or of the air.

Fourthly, to explain what he ſaid before, that Believers became the Sons of God; that is, not by any change of their bodily ſubſtances, but by participation of divine grace: for Chriſt on the contrary, became the Son of Man, by aſſuming of fleſh, and not by changing into it.

Fifthly, to ſhew the Plaiſter fitly applyed unto the Sore, and the Phyſick to the Diſeaſe; for whereas in us, that is, in our fleſh, there dwelleth no good, but ſin, death, and corruption; he took upon him this very nature, which we have ſo corrupted, ſequeſtring only the corruption from it, that in the nature he might heal the corruption.

Sixthly, he ſaith, he was made or became fleſh, and not he was made man, leſt it ſhould be conceived that Chriſt aſſumed a perſon; for he took not the perſon of any man in particular, but the nature of man in general.

[Was made fleſh.] Not by alteration, but aſſumption; not by turning of the Godhead into fleſh, but by taking of the Manhood into God; not by leaving what he was before, that is, to be God, but by taking on him what he was not before; that is, to be man.

And the Evangeliſt ſaith rather, He was made fleſh, then he aſſumed it. i. e. that he might ſet out the truth and myſtery of the Incarnation to the life, both for the hypoſtatical tical union of the two natures, and their inſeparablity, being ſo united. For, firſt, whereas Neſtorius ſaid, that the word was not that man that was conceived and born of the Virgin Mary; but that the Virgin indeed brought forth a man, and he having obtained grace in all kind of vertue, had the word of God united unto him, which gave him power againſt unclean Spirits; And ſo he made two ſeveral Sons, and two ſeveral perſons of the two natures: his Hereſie is plainly and ſtrongly confuted by this phraſe, he was made fleſh, which by the other, he aſſumed it, might have had more pretext and colour. Secondly, whereas Eutyches, Valentius, and others averred, that Chriſt had not a true humane body, but only a body in appearance: This alſo confuteth them home, and taketh away all probability of any ſuch thing, which the word aſſumed might have left more doubtful; ſince we know that Angels aſſumed bodies, and thoſe bodies were not truly humane: So that in this manner of ſpeech, The word was made fleſh, is evidently taught: Firſt, that there are two diſtinct natures in Chriſt, the God-head, and the Man-hood; for he ſaith not, the word was turned into, but was made, or became fleſh. Secondly, that theſe two natures do not conſtitute two perſons, but only one Chriſt, for he ſaith, he was made fleſh, and not aſſumed it. Thirdly, that this union is hypoſtatical, or perſonal; for he ſaith, the word was made fleſh, and not joyned to it. And laſtly, that this union is indiſſoluble and never to be ſeparated: For Angels in aſſumed bodies laid them by again, and were parted from them, but the word being made fleſh, the union is perſonal, and not to be diſſolved.

[And dwelt among us, &c.] That is, among us his Diſciples: for ſo the next clauſe, we ſaw his glory, importeth: And this Evangeliſt ſpeaketh the ſame thing more at large, 1 Joh. 1. 1.

[Full of grace and truth.] For theſe words follow next in Grammatical conſtruction and connection; lying thus. And the word became fleſh, and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth. The reaſon of the Parentheſis, and we ſaw his glory, may ſeem to be: Firſt, becauſe he would explain what he meant by Us, before he left it, viz. us Diſciples, that ſaw his glory. Secondly, becauſe the Apoſtles beheld not the very fulneſs of his grace and truth, till they had beheld the fulneſs of that glory, which he ſhewed on earth.

[Grace and truth.] As the Soul hath tow noble faculties, the underſtanding and the will, the objects of which are, verum & bonum, [truth and goodneſs:] ſo the whole tenor of Scripture doth run upon theſe two, and they are indeed the ſum of all, as Pſal. 25. 10. and 40. 12. and 36. 5. and 138. 2. Hoſ. 2. 19. &c. Now Chriſt being the ſubſtance of the promiſes, which had the original from grace, and their performance in truth; they being in him yea, and in him Amen; the Evangeliſt ſaying, that he dwelt among us, full of grace and truth; holdeth out, that he was the performance and accompliſhment of all the promiſes of grace, and the truth of all the types and prophecies before the Law, and under it, that tended to ſuch a purpoſe; and in him was the fulneſs of that mercy and truth, that the Patriarchs, Prophets, and holy men looked after, and he the whole tenor, ſcope, and ſubject of the Scriptures.

SECTION III.

S. LUKE CHAP. I.

The Conception and Birth of John the Baptiſt, and of Chriſt, foretold by the Angel Gabriel, &c.

Ver. 5.

THere was in the days of †Herod the King of Judea, a certain Prieſt named Zacharias, of the courſe of Abiah, and his wife was of (a) the Daughters of Aaron, and her name was (b) Elizabeth.

† Herod written with Cheth in the beginning, ſignifieth fear or trembling, as the trembling cowardiſe of Gedeons ſouldiers, named the well Harod, Judg. 7. 1. &c. But the Syr. & Arab write this with He.

6. And they were (c) both righteous before God, walking in all the Commandements and Ordinances of the Lord blameleſs.

7. And they had no child, becauſe that (d) Elizabeth was barren, and they were both now (e) well ſtriken in years.

8. And it came to paſs that while he executed the Prieſts Office (f) before God in the order of his courſe.

(a) John Baptiſt of the Prieſtly line, both by Father and Mother.
(b) The Seventy call wife of Aaron, the firſt Prieſt by the ſame name, Exod. 6. 23.
(c) Such couples were Abraham and Sarah, Iſaac and Rebeccah, Elkanah and Hannah; both righteous, and a long time childleſs.
(d) Throughout the Scripture, want of Children is aſcribed to the woman.
(e) An Hebraiſme, as Gen. 18. 11. 1 Kings 1. 1. &c.
(f) The Worſhip of God in the Temple was ſaid to be before him, Exod. 23. 17. Lev. 1. 3. 11. And the ark being the repreſentation of Chriſt, is called his face, Pſal. 105. 4. yea, even God himſelf, Pſal. 132. 5.

9. Ac-

9. According to the custome of the Priests Office, his lot was to burn Incense, when he went into the Temple of the Lord.

10. And the whole multitude of the people were praying without, at the time of Incense.

¶ Compare the appearing of the Angel Gabriel to Daniel, about the time of Incense, Dan. 9. 21.

11. And there appeared unto him an ¶ Angel of the Lord, standing on the right side of the Altar of Incense.

12. And when Zacharias saw him (g) he was troubled (h) and fear fell upon him.

13. But the Angel said unto him, fear not Zacharias, for thy prayer is heard, and thy wife Elizabeth shall bear thee a Son, and thou shalt call his name † John.

(g) Τεταράχθη, used by the LXX to express Pharaohs trouble upon his dream, Gen. 41 8. and his Servants upon theirs, Gen. 40.

14. And thou shalt have (i) joy, and gladness; and (k) many shall rejoyce at his birth.

15. For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor (l) strong drink; and he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, ¶ even from his Mothers womb.

16. And many of the Children of Israel, shall he turn to the Lord their God.

17. And he shall go before in the spirit and power of (m) Elias, to turn the hearts of the Fathers to the Children, and the disobedient ¶ to the wisdom of the just, to make ready a people, prepared for the Lord.

c Compare Judg. 6. 22. & 13. 22. Dan. 8. 17. Job. 4. 15.

18. And Zacharias said unto the Angel, whereby shall I know this for (n) I am an old man, and my wife well stricken in years.

(i) As Gen. 15. 12.

19. And the Angel answering, said unto him, I am (o) Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God: and (p) am sent to speak unto thee, and to shew thee these glad tidings.

† John, the same with Jehohanan to frequent in the Old Testament, as 1 Chr. 3. 15. & 6. 9. & 12. 12. & 26. 3. and 2 Chron. 17. 15 & 23. 1. and 28. 12. Jer. 40. 8.

20. And (q) behold thou shalt be dumb, and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed; because thou believest not my words, which shall be fulfilled (r) in their season.

21. And the people waited for Zacharias, and marvelled that he tarried so long in the Temple.

22. And when he came out * he could not speak unto them; and they perceived that he had seen a Vision in the Temple: for he beckened unto them, and remained speechless.

23. And it came to pass, that as soon as the days of his ministration were accomplished, he departed to his own house.

24. And after those days, his wife Elizabeth conceived, and hid her self ¶ five months; saying.

(l) שכרות Job 3. 22. The Arab. addeth thou shalt have great joy.

25. Thus hath the Lord dealt with me in the days wherein he looked * on me to take away my reproach among men.

(k) As Gen. 21. 6

26. And IN THE SIXTH MONTH, the Angel Gabriel was sent from God, unto a City of (s) Galilee, named Nazareth.

Σικερα: of the Heb. שכר used by the LXX for it, Lev. 10 9. Numb. 6. 3. Deut. 14. 26. & 29. 5. Judg. 13. 4. and 28. 7. &c. which sometimes signifieth Wine; as Num. 28. 7. but most commonly any thing that will cause drunkenness. Wine of fourty days old, is called Shekar; saith R. Menahem. on Lev. 10. and so the Chaldee paraphraseth it, Numb. 6. 3. and 28. 7. Deut. 14. 26. & 29. 5. Judg. 13. 4. But, any thing that will make one drunk, is called Shekar, whether it be made of Corn, Honey, or Fruits. Ab. Ezr. on Lev. 10. 9. and in Michol. Bructuli his Italian, and the French express it by Cervisia, Ale or Bear.

27. To a Virgin espoused to a Man, whose Name was † Joseph, of the house of David: and the Virgins Name was * Mary.

28. And the Angel came in unto her, and said, Haile, thou that art highly favoured; the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women.

29. And when she saw him, she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind, what manner of salutation this should be.

30. And the Angel said unto her, Fear not Mary, for thou hast (v) found favour with God.

31. And behold (t) thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son and shalt call his name Jesus.

(u) As Gen. 18. 12.

(o) Dan. 8. 26. & 9. 21.

(p) This relateth to his assuming a visible shape.

(q) So a sign is given to Ahaz with a Behold! Isa. 7. 14. compare Ezek. 3. 26.

(r) Τις καιρὸν: Mat. 2. 23. as εἰς χρόνον πολλὸν, Acts 8. 23.

* At the first burning of Incense, the Priests miscarried, Lev. 10. and thus that right which the Jews value for the highest of all legal offerings, beginneth with ignorance, and concludeth with unbelief. Prophecy was struck dumb a great while ago, and now is the Priesthood so, as well as it.

¶ Observe the same space, Gen 7. 24. if cast into months, and Rev. 9. 5.

* So read also the Syrian and Arab. though the words on me, be not expressed in the original unless included in the preposition, in ἐπ' ἐμοὶ.

(s) See 1 King. 9. 11. Isa. 9. 1. and in the LXX: in Joel 3. 4. Ezek. 47. 8

† This calleth to remembrance the old renowned Patriarch Joseph, Gen. 37. both of them were sent into Egypt, and both by dreams; and there the one nourished his Father, and the other his Redeemer: There were also of this name Joseph of Arimathea, and Joseph surnamed Justus.

* Gr. Mariam, by which word the LXX render the name of Moses sister, Exod. 15. &c. The name plainly and properly signifieth both their rebellion, and their bitter affliction; for the wickedness of Israel in Egypt had brought them into great misery, when Miriam was so named.

(v) Gen. 6. 9.

(t) He useth the common manner of speech among the Hebrews, as Gen. 4. 1. &c. to shew the true conception, and real birth of our Saviour; Confuting that Heresie, That he came through the Virgins womb, as through a Conduit Pipe, without partaking of her nature: And that, That he was not really born, but fantastically only, and in appearance. These words refer to Isa. 7. 14.

32. He ſhall be great, and (2) ſhall be called the Son of (3) the moſt Higheſt; and the (4) Lord God ſhall give unto him the throne of his Father David.
33. And he ſhall reign over (5) the houſe of Jacob for ever; and of his Kingdom (6) there ſhall be no end.
34. Then ſaid Mary unto the Angel, (7) How ſhall this be, ſeeing I (8) know not a man?
35. And the Angel anſwered and ſaid unto her, The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee; and the power of the Higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee. Therefore alſo that holy thing which ſhall be born (9) of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God.
36. And behold thy (10) Couſen Elizabeth, ſhe hath alſo conceived a Son in her old age; and this is the ſixth month with her who was called barren.
37. (11) For with God nothing is impoſſible.
38. And Mary ſaid, Behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word; and the Angel departed from her.
39. And Mary aroſe in thoſe days, and went into the hill Countrey with haſte, into a City of (12) Judah.
40. And entred into the houſe of Zacharias, and ſaluted Elizabeth.
41. And it came to paſs that when Elizabeth heard the ſalutation of Mary, the babe (13) leaped in her womb, and Elizabeth was filled with the holy Ghoſt.
42. And ſhe ſpake out with a loud voice, and ſaid, Bleſſed art thou among women, and (14) bleſſed is the fruit of thy womb.
43. And whence is this to me, that the mother of (15) my Lord ſhould come to me?
44. For lo, as ſoon as the voice of thy ſalutation ſounded in mine ears, the Babe leaped in my womb for joy.
45. And bleſſed is (16) ſhe that believed (17) for there ſhall be (18) a performance of thoſe things which were told her from the Lord.
46. And (19) Mary ſaid, My ſoul doth magnify the Lord;
47. And my ſpirit hath rejoyced in God my Saviour:
48. For he hath regarded the low eſtate of his hand-maiden: for behold from henceforth all generations ſhall call me bleſſed.
49. For he that is (20) mighty hath done to me great things, and holy is his name.
50. And his mercy is on them that fear him, from generation to generation *
51. He hath ſhewed ſtrength with (21) his arm; he hath ſcattered the proud (22) in the imagination of their hearts.

(7) How, in Scripture is ſometime a ſtrong aſſeveration, or negation, Lam 1. 1. Gen. 29. 9. and 44. 34. ſometime a queſtion of doubting, as John 6. 52. and 3. 5. And ſometime a queſtion of ignorance only, without diffidence; or a queſtion deſiring information, or reſolution, as John 7. 15. Luke 20. 44. And ſo is it here; for the Virgin believeth the thing. Ver. 45. but deſired to be ſatisfied of the manner, for ſhe ſaith not, How can, but How ſhall this be.

(8) A modeſt Phraſe for carnal copulation. Firſt uſed of Adam, preſently after the relation of his eating of the tree of knowledge, Gen. 4. 1. as if it would ſhew, that all the knowledge he gained by that was but carnal, he knew his wife; and experimental of misery, they knew they were naked.
(9) Born of thee; ſo read the Syr. Arab. Juſtin Martyr, in Dial. Nazianz. Orat. 59. Aponius in Cantic. Titus in Loc &c. but ſome Copies dangerouſly want it; as the Text of Theophylact. H. Steven, 1604 of Amſterdam, 16. 2. Eraſmus, &c.
(10) The certain bond of their kindred cannot be determined: but Elizabeth or her Mother might be ſiſter to Maries father or mother, or Maries mothers mother might be ſo to her or hers, or to Zacharie or his. However it ſheweth, that Chriſts and John the Baptiſt were neerly allyed according to the fleſh; yet John knew him not till he was revealed to him by the Spirit. (11) Gen. 18. 11.
(12) The diviſion of Judea, is famous and frequent, into the mountains, the plain, and the South; Numb. 13. 30 Jer. 32. 44. &c. The South lay towards Sin and Amalek, from the inlets into the Land, at the utmoſt part of the dead Sea; having the Philiſtines upon the weſt. This part reacht to the riſing of the mountains, not far below Hebron: and there the mountains began, and ran along Northward to, and beyond Jeruſalem, having the flat or the plain of Jordan skirting up all along upon their Eaſtſide, till Samaria and Galilee brought in another denomination.
(13) Greek ἐσκίρτησε: The ſame to ſome with Ἀσκαλίζω; which with Phyſitians Importeth the childs ſtirring in the womb, as every live child doth, more or leſs; but this is a word of an higher activity and motion. Plato in Pol. 9. uſeth it to expreſs the laſcivious fancies of men or women in their dreams; when that part of the Soul, ſaith he, which is rational, gentle, and maſter of reaſon, is laid aſleep, then the other, which is beſtial and brutiſh, being puffed up with meats and drinks σκιρτᾷ, leapeth, or friſketh, and putting away ſleep from it, doth ſeek to ſatisfie its own deſires.

(15) Τῦ κυρίυ μȣ̃ this here tranſlates, not יהוה but אדוני, as Pſal. 110. 1.
(16) Vulg. Lat. Bleſſed art thou that didſt believe, miſtaking as Janſenius conceiveth, the Grammatical ſpirit in Αυτῆ, and reading it, Αυτῆ.
(17) Or, That there ſhall be a performance; for ſo doth the Hebrew כי also ſignifie. as Job 3. 12. : כי ארנק That I might ſuck, ſo Pſal. 11. 3. The wicked bend their bow, &c. That the foundations may be deſtroyed, which the righteous hath made.
(18) Τελείωσις ſometimes is uſed for ſetting apart to holy uſe, as in the LXX, Exod. 29. and chriſtian Writers uſe it ſometimes for Baptiſm and Martyrdom; becauſe they conſecrate men to God. It is uſed of Chriſt, Heb. 2. 10.
(19) Ludolphus upon this place, obſerveth to little purpoſe, that the Virgin is found in Scripture ſpeaking but ſeven times.
(20) ὁ Δυνατὸς, The mighty one. A full and proper ſenſe of the word Elohim; which the LXX indeed, and the New Teſtament after them have conſtantly expreſſed by Θεὸς, becauſe of the myſtery of the Trinity included in it. Gibbor applied to God, is δυνατὸς in the LXX. Pſal. 24. 8.

(23) Ἀντελάβετο, uſed by the LXX, Iſa. 41. 9. from which verſe this ſeemeth to be taken. Ἀντίλημψις, is an Arm, Pſal. 83 9. and a Shield, Pſal. 89. 18.
(24) Greek; To remember, Syr. and Arab. And remembreth his mercy.

55. As he ſpake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his ſeed (25) for ever.
56. And Mary abode with her about three months, and returned to her own houſe.

(25) This hath ſo good dependance upon ſeveral words that it is hard to fix it. Firſt, as he ſpake for ever or in all ages, to our Fathers. Secondly, to the ſeed of Abraham, which ſhall laſt for ever. Thirdly, He hath for ever remembred his mercy. Fourthly that mercy which is for ever. Fifthly, which is to be ſhewed to Abraham, and to his ſeed for ever, and this laſt, or the two laſt together, are moſt proper.

Reaſon and Order.

THE Order of this Section requireth not much confirmation, for it will plead for it ſelf.

After the Divine Nature of Chriſt is handled, as in the Section preceding, his humane is to be conſidered next: and ſo is it here: And firſt the manner of his conception, but the conception of his forerunner John the Baptiſt, orderly deſcribed and declared before.

Harmony and Explanation.

Ver. 5. In the days of Herod.

THE Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah, or the Lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come, Gen. 49. 10.

The words are to be read diſcretively, Or rather then And, ſhewing that when the Scepter ceaſed, the Law-giver ſucceeded, and when both were gone, then Meſſias ſhould appear.

The Scepter continued in the hand of Judah, till the captivity into Babylon, and then it departed, and being once fallen, it was never recovered, till he came to whom it belonged. This Jeremy told expreſly even at the very time, when it was in failing, Jer. 22. 30. Write Coniah childleſs, for no man of his ſeed ſhall proſper, ſitting upon the Throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah. And ſo did Ezekiel even juſt then, when Nebucadnezzar was ſetting himſelf to fetch it away, Ezek. 21. 27. &c. Remove the Diadem, and take off the Crown, &c. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it ſhall be no more, until he come whoſe right it is, and I will give it him.

After their return out of that captivity; the Law-giver, or the high Court of the Seventy Elders, ſate at the Helm and ruled the State, till the uſurpation of the Aſmonean or Maccabean family diſtempered all. Their Ambition brought in a Crown, and that, Civil wars, and thoſe the Romans, who ſubdued the Nation, and ſet Herod King over them. He was the Son of Antipater, of the race of Edom, or of the ſeed of Eſau, a generation that had been an enemy to the Jews continually, but never ruled over them till now, ſo that now were fulfilled the words of Iſaac to his Son Eſau. Thou ſhalt ſerve thy brother Jacob, but it ſhall come to paſs when thou ſhalt have the dominion, thou ſhalt break his yoke from off thy neck. Gen. 27. 40.

Herod was bloody, like the root of which he came, which perſecuted his Brother, even in the womb, and among other his cruelties, which were very horrible and very many, he ſlew the Sanhedrin, or the bench of the LXX Judges. And then was the Law-giver departed from between Judahs feet, as the Scepter was out his hand long before: And then might the Jews cry out, as it is recorded they did, though upon another occaſion. Woe unto us, for the Scepter is departed from Judah, and the Law-giver from between his feet, and yet is not the Son of David come.

§ There was a certain Prieſt named Zacharias.

Of this name, there had been a famous Prieſt, and a famous Prophet in old time before. Zacharias the Son of Jehojada, before the captivity, 2 Chron. 24. And Zacharias the Son of Barachias after, Zach. 1. 1. And conſonant it was, that he in whom Prieſthood, and Prophecy ſhould be ſtruck dumb, and even at their period, becauſe the great Prieſt and Prophet was ſo near at hand, ſhould bear the ſame name with them, in whom Prieſthood and Prophecy had in ſome manner ceaſed before.

§ Of

§ Of † the course of Abia.

† Ἐφημερία used by the LXX, 1 Chr 9. 33 to translate לשכת the chambers of the Temple, if it be not mis-written.

The Priests were divided by David into four and twenty courses, 1 Chron. 24. Not, but that there had been courses before of them, but because there had not been so many. For reason it self will tell us, that since they were all bound to the Sanctuary, and withall were so very many in number, they could not serve there mixedly and confusedly, but must need have some distinction and order: some of the Jews say they were divided into eight courses by Moses, four of Eleazar, and four Ithamar. But for this they have no ground to shew at all. Others that they were divided into sixteen by him, namely, eight and eight of either family. And of the division it self, there seemeth to be some probability in the Text, but not of the divider. For speaking of Davids distinguishing them, because they were grown more numerous, it saith, 1 Chro. 24. 6.

ביתֿאב אחד אחוז לאלעזר ואחוז אחוז לאיתמר which importeth thus much, that there was one principal household added to every course of Eleazar more than was before, and so they became sixteen, but of Ithamar were only taken those which were used before, which were only eight, and thus did they rise to four and twenty. See R. Solomon & Dav. Kimchi in loc.

These courses thus newly increased by David for number, and thus newly ranked by lot for order, and both for the service of the Temple, when it should be built; it is but little to be doubted, but that they began their round, when the service of the Temple did first begin; which round began on the Sabbath, next after the Feast of Tabernacles, about the two and twentieth day of the month Tisri, 2 Chron. 7. For on the three and twentieth day, Solomon dismissed all the people to their own houses, ver. 10. after he had kept the Feast of Tabernacles seven days before according to the Law, beginning on the fifteenth day of the month, and concluding on the one and twentieth day, Lev. 23. and the next day after, or the two and twentieth day, was a solemn assembly, and that year (as it may be conceived) the Sabbath day. Now in the week of the Feast, so great was the company of the Congregation, and so many the multitude of the Sacrifices, that no single course was able to undergo the service, but then (as also at the other two great Festivals) all the courses served indifferently, (and so had they done at the Temples dedication, 2 Chron. 5. 11.) and on the next Sabbath, the course of Jehojarib or the first began.

They changed every week, comming in on the Sabbath, and on the next going out, 2 Kings 11. 7. 2 Chron. 23. 4. So that by the time of the passover, they were just gon about; and from thence they began their second round again: In the eighth course of which second round; for so was the course of Abia, 1 Chron. 24. 10. Zacharias heareth the glad tidings of the birth of Christs forerunner; just about the same time of the year, that Sarah did of the fixed time of the birth of Isaac, toward the middle of the Summer, Gen. 18.

But that the Reader may have a full and perfect view of the revolution of these courses: and because he will have frequent occasion in his reading of the Evangelists, to have his eye upon the passing of the year of the Jews; let it not be tedious to interpose a Kalendar, or Almanack of it, here at the very entrance; with an account of the courses of the Priests used every week at the Temple, the Lessons out of the Law and the Prophets, used every Sabbath in the Synagogues; and their Festivals great and lesser, as they lighted in their seasons; that whensoever hereafter in his Progress in this sacred History of the Gospel, he shall have occasion to look after any of these, they may be here ready before his eyes.

The Jews reckoned their year by Lunary months, as is more then apparent; by the words that signified a month amongst them, as חדש and ירח and by several Stories in the Scripture; and in this their reckoning, saith, * Rabbi Solomon, one month was full, and another wanting; that is, one consisting of thirty days, and another only of nine and twenty: This computation made their years to fall eleven days short of the year of the Sun. And this the Holy Ghost seemeth to hint and to hit upon, when in reckoning the time of Noahs being in his Arke, he bringeth him in on the seventeenth day of the second month, Gen. 7. 11. and bringeth him out on the seven and twentieth day of the same month on the next year, Gen. 8. 14. and yet intendeth him there but an exact and compleat year of the Sun, but reckoned only by Lunary months.

* On Gen. 7.

Now these eleven days, which the year of the Sun out stretched the year of the Moon, on every third year made up a month of three and thirty days; which the Jews laid after the month Adar, or the last month; and called it Veadar, or Adar, over again.

But not to insist upon any curious inquiry into their embolimism, or intercalation, nor how the twelve Stewards of Solomon, and the four and twenty courses of the Priests, made out their Service, those in the Court, and these in the Temple, on that additional month of the leap year; which is not a discourse for the present purpose: we will take up the year in its common and ordinary course and circle; and suppose [A] the Dominical, or Sabbath day Letter, and trace the courses of the Priests, and the lessons of the Law and Prophets, according thereunto.

Now these lessons of the Law and Prophets began their round, one Sabbath before the courses of the Priests; the first Parashah, or Section of Genesis, being read at the Feast of Tabernacles: and by the next Feast of Tabernacles, or the next year, all the Law was read over, be the year Leap year, or no: For if it were the ordinary year, the Sections in the latter end of Deuteronomy, were made fewer and longer; but if the intercalary, or Bissextile, then were they broke into more, according to the number of the Sabbaths of that year; that by the Feast of Tabernacles, Deuteronomy might be finished, and Genesis might be begun on again.

Whether these Lessons or Sections of the Law were appointed and set out by Moses, or by Ezra, or by some other; and how the like in the Prophets came to be parallel'd with them; or to be read instead of them; when the persecution of Antiochus forbad the reading of the Law; is not a time and place to dispute here; only if the Reader shall observe the Harmony between the two portions that were read at one time, he will see that the choice of them was of more then ordinary and common discretion: And sometimes the taking notice of the portions themselves, will help to clear and satisfie some obscurities, which otherwise it were not possible to clear and satisfie, as some examples will be given in their places.

Thus, or not far from this form went the Jewish year and the courses of the Priests in it: And thus the Lections of the Law and Prophets, along with both: and hence may be collected in some reasonable measure, the time of the year when John Baptist was born, which hath been so long not a little mistaken.

Vers. 6. Walking in all the Commandments and Ordinances.

In all the Commandments of the moral Law, and Ordinances of the Ceremonial: and the word * blameless, expresseth their behaviour in the Judicial: And thus the Text sheweth us a man, as accomplished for the righteousness according to the Law, as a man could be; and yet that we might see, that a man is not justified by that, but by Faith; the same man is presently after checked and struck dumb, because he did not believe.

* Ἄμεμπτοι used by the LXX for תמים: *Gen.*7.1. and for ועיר Job. 1.1.

Greek, Δικαιώματα: which the Romanists translate, Justifications: and of the word would make no small advantage.

Whereas, first, the LXX most commonly translate the Hebrew word חקים and חקות by it, as above twenty times, in Psal. 119. and this Hebrew word we know signifieth no such thing as Justifications. Rab. Solomon on Numb. 19. giveth a notation of it unto another sense. Because (saith he) Satan and the people of the World would be questioning with Israel, what is this, or that Commandment, and what reason is there in it? Why? It is חקה, a statute or an ordinance decreed by God; and it is not for thee to question it: See also Rab. Menahem on the same place: And to what sense the Chaldee renders it in Psal. 119. and elsewhere.

Secondly, The common Greek useth it most commonly in the sense of our Translation: as might be shewed out of Aristotle Ethic. 5. Dion Cassius Rom. Hist. lib. 58. & 61. and other Authors.

Thirdly, As the LXX render חקים or חקות, by this Greek word; so the Arabick doth this Greek word by that again: making them to sound to one and the same sense, and that חקים importeth Ordinances, none can deny.

Fourthly, It will be very hard to produce any Heathen Author, or any place in all the LXX, that use the word Δικαίωμα for Justification. In *Deut.*24.13. a place as likely to have found it in as any, if they would have taken it in that sense, they have so far refused it, that they use a word, no kin at all unto it.

Vers. 9. According to the Custom.

This may be taken two ways, either for the custom of burning Incense; or for that, that these courses used, in choosing out of their company to burn it, which was by lot; And this latter is more proper: for it needeth not to tell, that it was the custom of the Priests, to burn Incense; for this was known well enough from the Law, to be an essential part of their function; but the Text would tell us how Zachary came to do this piece of service; namely, by the customary lot. So that by the custom of the Priesthood, is properly meant the custom of the Priests. The High Priest burnt Incense when he would, the other Priests by lot; and one and the same Priest burnt not Incense twice in all his days, Abarbin in Pentateuch. fol. 241.

§. His lot was to burn Incense.

Sense and reason doth more bind us to understand casting of Lots for this purpose, then the Grammatical construction, or literal strictness of the word; for though it signifie, obtaining a thing by lot, yet not always by lot only, but even by any other means, as Act. 1. 17. Judas ἔλαχε τ κλῆρον, obtained the lot of his ministration. And so Julian in Misopogone. Anacreon, τευφὴν ἔλαχεν ἐν μεσῶν, fortitus est ludere, vel deliciari, &c. But undeniable reason telleth, that it must of necessity be understood of obtaining by lot in this place.

For the Priests, in every one of the twenty four courses, were exceeding many. For Josephus relateth, that they were thousands in every course. And this are we sure of from evident Scripture, that at the crowning of Joash, when an insurrection by Athaliah was feared. The Priests of two courses only are reputed as a Guard sufficient for the King, and about the Temple, 2 *King.*11.5,6,7. And when Uzziah would have burned Incense, there were eighty Priests ready to with-hold him, 2 *Chron.*26.17. So that among so great a multitude, therein but one man being only permitted to burn incense, it was necessary that he should be chosen from among them by lot, and the lot at this time fell to Zacharias.

§. To

§. To burn Incense entring into the Temple of the Lord.

This his entring into the Temple, was not going into the most Holy place; nor was this his burning of Incense, upon the day of expiation, but it was according to the daily Service of the Temple, which required that Incense should be burned, every morning and evening in the Holy place without the vail, Exod. 30. 6, 7, 8. The High Priest indeed once every year offered Incense within the vail, on the day of expiation, Lev. 16 29,30. but neither was Zacharias High Priest, nor was this any such service. For, first, Luke when he speaketh of the High Priest, he useth to call him by that title, as Chap. 3.2. Acts 4. 6. &c. but in all this large Story of Zacharias, he never termeth him other then an ordinary Priest. Secondly, Zachary was of one of the twenty four courses: but the High Priest was of no course at all; and if he had, doubtless he had been of the first: but Zachary was of the eight. Zacharias at this time came to burn Incense by lot: but the High Priest came to do it in the most Holy place, by succession. Fourthly, There was no Altar of Incense in the most Holy place, but there was one where Zacharias ministred. Fifthly, If these courses began their round, either with the beginning of the Service of the Temple; or with the beginning of the year Ecclesiastical, or with the beginning of the year Civil, or from any of the three Festivals; then was it not possible that the eighth course should light any whit near the Feast of expiation: And where to begin them but from some of these, who can imagine? Sixthly, It was not so very consonant that John the Baptist should be born a High Priest, which bare the fullest resemblance of the Office of our Saviour; but a Priest of an inferior rank, because a servant to the High. The misconstruction of Zacharies offering of Incense, gave first occasion to the general and long continued mistake of the time of our Saviours Birth.

Vers. 10. And the whole multitude of the people.

There were constantly in the Temple at the hour of prayer, First, The Priests of that course that then served. Secondly, The Levites that served under the Priests. Thirdly, The men of the Station, as the Rabins call them; that is, certain men that were to represent the whole Congregation, in putting their hands upon the heads of the Sacrifices. Fourthly, Those whom devotion moved to leave their other imployments, for that time, and to be present at the service of God. All these might amount to a great number indeed; but the Text in naming the whole multitude of people, seemeth to have some further meaning; as if it would intimate, that this was not upon an ordinary day of the week, but upon the Sabbath day, when the Congregation was full: Not only of the Priests of the seventh course, that went that day out of their service; but also of all the multitude of the City, which were tied that day in a more special manner, to the publick worship.

Upon this day, [if we might conclude it to be a Sabbath] the portions of the Law and the Prophets, which were read in the Synagogues, were excellently agreeable to the thing that was now in hand; namely, the Law of the Nazarites, Numb. 6. and the conception of Sampson, like this of the Baptist, Judg. 13.

§. Were praying without.

When the burnt Offering began in the Temple, the Trumpeters and Singers began to sound and sing, and the whole Congregation to pray and worship: and all this continued untill the burnt Offering was finished, 2 Chron. 29. 27, 28. Then the Priest took a Censer full of coals from off the Altar, Lev. 16. 12. [for by the custom of that day, may be guessed the custom of the rest in this ordinary circumstance] and went into the Holy place, and burnt it upon the Altar, Exod. 30.7. In the mean time the people in the outer Court were imployed in prayer, 2 Chron. 29. 29. And on the day of expiation they were in fear while the High Priest was within, till he came out in peace, and then there was great joy among them, because they were accepted. R. Tanchum on Ex. 33.

Ver. 11. [And there appeared an Angel, &c.] As there were two great mysteries to be shewed in the birth of Christ; First, That God should become a man: And secondly, That a Virgin should become a Mother: So the Lord to make way for the belief of these two, when they should be exhibited, did use two Harbingers or preparatives, as if it were of old and of long time before. First, Apparition of Angels in humane shape. Secondly, Womens bearing children, that were old and barren. For it would be the easier believed, that the invisible God might converse visibly among men, in humane flesh, when it was so ordinarily seen, that the invisible Angels did so in humane shapes. And it would not be so very incredible, that a Virgin might bear a child, though she were not come come to it by the courſe of nature, and though ſhe had not known a man; when it had been ſo often known that old women had done the ſame, though they were paſt child-bearing by nature, and even paſt the knowledge of man. And this was the main reaſon why want of children, is always in Scripture imputed to the defect of the women, that the miracle appearing the more viſible in them, it might prepare belief the better for this.

As theſe two types and fore-runners of thoſe two great myſteries, were exhibited ſo often in the Old Teſtament, that they might prepare credit, and entertainment for the other when they ſhould be exhibited in the birth of Chriſt: ſo was it moſt fit that they ſhould be declared in the birth of him that was to be Chriſts forerunner indeed, and when the myſteries they aimed at were ſo near to be revealed.

[On the right ſide of the Altar of Incenſe.] On the North ſide of it. On Zacharies right hand, and on the right ſide of the houſe: as Ezek. 10. 3. compare Zach. 3. 1. Pſal. 109. 6. 31. & 142.4. The appearing of an Angel in the Sanctuary, with a meſſage from God, was a thing ever hardly ſeen or heard of before: and it ſheweth how Urim and Thummim, the ordinary way of Gods revealing his mind in that place, was now ceaſed. For God uſed to reveal his will to the Prieſt by a ſoft voice from off the Ark, but now both Ark and Oracle were quite gone, and the loſs the leſſer, when the true Ark of the Covenant and the Oracle of the will of God our Saviour Chriſt, was ſo near at hand. The ſecond Temple wanted five things which were in the firſt, as the Jews obſerve upon the want of the Letter ה in the word אבבר; Hag. 1. 8. namely, Firſt, The Ark. Secondly, Urim and Thummim. Thirdly, The fire from Heaven. Fourthly, The divine preſence, or cloud of glory. And fifthly, The Holy Ghoſt, or the ſpirit of Propheſie and power of miracles, Maſſec. Jom. Yet was the glory of that houſe to be greater then the glory of the firſt, becauſe of the preſence of Chriſt in it.

Verſ. 13. [Thy prayer is heard, &c.] Not that he was now praying for a child; [for his age made him incredulous of having a child, when the Angel told him of one, and then it is not like he would pray for one] and in this place, and at this time he was a perſon repreſentative of the whole people, and therefore was not to make a private prayer for himſelf: but either the prayers which he had before made to that purpoſe, were now come into remembrance, or rather he was now praying for the delivery of Iſrael, the remiſſion of their ſins, and the coming of Chriſt, in which they without were joyning with him; and this his prayer, the Angel tells him, is ſo ready to be anſwered, that his wife ſhould preſently conceive a Son that ſhould preach remiſſion, convert the people, and go before the face of Chriſt. And now O ye Prieſts, beſeech God that he will be gracious unto you, Mal. 1. 9. And ſo was Zacharias the Prieſt at this time doing. And the Angel ſaid unto him, Thy prayer is heard, and thy wife ſhall bear a Son, and thou ſhalt call his name John: this Name being interpreted, importeth gracious, as *Eſa.*30. 18,19.

Verſ. 16. [And many of the Children of Iſrael ſhall he turn.] Many of Iſrael ſhall return when they ſhall ſee ſigns of redemption. Whereupon it is ſaid, He ſaw that there was no man, &c. Eſa.59.16. D. Kimch. in loc.

Verſ. 17. [In the power and ſpirit of Elias.] John the Baptiſt did ſo nearly repreſent Elias, that he beareth his very name, *Mal.*4. Matth. 11. 14.

Firſt, They both came when Religion was even periſhed and decaying. Secondly, They both reſtored it, in an excellent meaſure. Thirdly, They were both perſecuted for it. Elias by Ahab and Jezabel: John by Herod and Herodias. Fourthly, They both converſed much in the Wilderneſs. Fifthly, They agreed in auſterity of life. Sixthly, In the wearing of a hairy garment, and a leathern girdle, 2 King. 1.8. *Matth.*3: 4. Seventhly, Both of them had Heaven opened to them near Jordan. To which two parallels more might be added, if theſe two opinions of the Jews concerning Elias might be believed.

Firſt, That he was of the Tribe of Levi [for they take him to be Phinehas; as ſee R. Lev. Gerſh. on 1 King. 17.] Secondly, That he reſtored circumciſion when it was decayed; from thoſe words in 1 King. 19. 14. They have forſaken thy Covenant.

[To turn the hearts of the fathers to the children.] That is, The hearts of the Jews to the Gentiles.

For, firſt, the hatred of a Jew againſt a Gentile was deadly; and it was a ſpecial work of the Goſpel, and conſequently of John, that began to Preach it, to bring both theſe to imbrace Chriſt, and for, and in him to imbrace one another.

Secondly, Experience it ſelf confirmeth this expoſition; for, as the Goſpel belonged to the Gentiles as well as the Jews, and as John came for a witneſs that all through him might believe, ſo did he convert and baptize Roman Souldiers as well as Jewiſh Phariſees.

Thirdly, Baptiſm, at its firſt inſtitution, was the Sacrament for admiſſion of Heathens only, to the Church and true Religion: when therefore, the Jews alſo begin to deſire it, and and to conſent to the Heathens in the undertaking of it, then was the heart of the fathers turned to the children.

Fourthly, It is the common and conſtant uſe of the Prophets, to ſtile the Church of the Gentiles by the name of children to the Church of the Jews, as Iſa. 54. 5,6,13. & 60. 4, 9. & 62. 5. & 66. 12, 13.

Fifthly, The Talmud expounding theſe words in Malachi, ſeemeth to underſtand them of ſuch a communion or reconciliation, as is ſpoken of, Vid. R. Sol. in loc. Malach. Herod, ſaith Joſephus Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 7. ſlew John the Baptiſt being a good man, and injoyning the Jews that exerciſing vertue, and uſing right dealing one towards another, and piety towards God, they ſhould ἐν βαπτισμῷ συνιέναι, convene or knit together in Baptiſm.

[And the diſobedient, &c.] In Malachi it is, And the hearts of the children to the fathers. But, firſt, the Holy Ghoſt is not ſo punctual to cite the very letter of the Prophet, as to give the ſenſe. Secondly, It was not very long after the Baptizing and Preaching of John, that the Jews ceaſed to be a Church and Nation; nay, even in the time of John himſelf, they ſhewed themſelves enemies to the Goſpel and the profeſſors of it, [as concerning the general or the greateſt part of them] therefore he ſaith not, that the heart of the children the Gentiles, ſhould be turned to their fathers the Jews, which ſhould ceaſe to be fathers, and ſhould ceaſe to be a people, but to the wiſdom of the righteous ones.

[The diſobedient.] As in this clauſe he refuſeth to uſe the term of Fathers for the reaſon mentioned, ſo doth he alſo of the correlative children, becauſe of his refuſing that. And yet he coucheth the ſenſe of that title under the word diſobedient, which word in its moſt proper and natural ſignification reflecteth upon untowardly children, diſobedient to their parents. As therefore by his omitting to call the Jews fathers, he inſinuateth their oppoſition againſt the Goſpel, ſo by terming the Gentiles diſobedient in ſtead of children, he ſheweth what they were before they imbraced it.

[In the wiſdom of the righteous.] For ſo is it in the Greek, ἐν in, and not to. Wiſdom in Scripture, is often taken for Religion: As Pſal. 111. 10. Deut. 4 6. &c. and ſo is it to be underſtood here. And this Wiſdom is not to be held the terminus ad quem, or the ultimate end to which theſe diſobedient Gentiles were to be converted; but in this wiſdom, or religion, unto God. For, firſt, let the two clauſes of this ſpeech be laid in Antitheſis, or oppoſition one to another [as naturally indeed they lie, the one aiming at the Jews as the proper ſubject, and the other at the Gentiles] and it appeareth plainly that two ſeveral acts were to be performed by the Baptiſt, as concerning the Jews and their converſion; Firſt, That he ſhould turn their hearts or affections to God, as in the verſe preceding, He ſhall turn many of the children of Iſrael to the Lord their God: And ſecondly, That he ſhould turn their hearts and affections alſo to the Gentiles, whom they hated before, as here, He ſhall turn the hearts of the Fathers to the children.

Secondly, According therefore to this double work of John upon the Jews in that part of the Angels ſpeech, muſt the like duplicity be looked for in this that concerneth the Gentiles, and to be underſtood, though it be not expreſſed. For the Angel in this part purpoſely changeth his ſtile, and neither calleth the Gentiles children, but diſobedient, becauſe they were generally ſo before the coming of Chriſt, nor the Jews Fathers, becauſe they ceaſed to be ſo ſhortly after: nor mentioneth he the Gentiles turning to God, but includeth it, partly becauſe he had ſet that as the chiefeſt work and bent of the Baptiſt of all, to go before the Lord, and turn men to him: and partly he includeth it in this phraſe, In the wiſdom of the righteous.

Thirdly, It is not without divine reaſon that the hearts of the Gentiles are not ſaid to be turned to the Jews, as on the contrary it was ſaid of the Jews to the Gentiles, but that they ſhould be turned in the wiſdom of the righteous; For the enmity, feud, and deteſtation that was betwixt Jew and Gentile, and Gentile and Jew, proceeded not from the ſame cauſe and Original. The Jew abhorred the Gentile, not of ignorance, but of ſcorn and jealouſie, partly becauſe they ſtood upon their own dignity of being the people of God, which the other were not, and partly becauſe they were provoked with ſuſpition, that the other ſhould be the people of God when they ſhould not. And therefore, when the reconciliation is to be wrought between them, it is ſaid that their hearts or affections ſhould be turned to them, for they were point blank or diametrically againſt them before. But a Gentile abhorred a Jew out of ignorance, becauſe of his Religion: hating him as a man ſeparate from and contrary to all men: and accounting that to be ſingular and ſenſeleſs ſuperſtition, which was indeed the divine command and wiſdom of God; and not ſo much deteſting his perſon for it ſelf, as for his religion and profeſſion. Therefore when the Gentiles muſt be brought to affect and to unite to the Jews, it muſt be in the wiſdom of the righteous, or in the underſtanding, knowledge, and imbracing of that religion, which the righteous ones profeſſed, which the Gentiles till they knew and underſtood what it meant, accounted but vanity, ſingularity, and fooliſhneſs.

Ver.18. [Whereby ſhall I know this ?] The Jew requireth a ſign, 1 *Cor.*1.22. And his ſo doing in theſe times when miracles had been ceaſed ſo long a time, ſheweth his doubting to be the more: and the appearing of an Angel, when ſuch apparitions were as rare as Miracles, ſhould have made it to have been the leſs. For after the death of Zachary and Malachi, and thoſe later Prophets, the Holy Ghoſt departed from Iſrael and went up: and ceaſed to exhibite his familiarity among them, in Viſion, Propheſie, and the work of Miracles; So that this apparition of the Angel, and this ſign given to Zachary, and wonders done in the birth of the Baptiſt, were as the very entrance and beginning of the reſtoring of thoſe gifts, and the very dawning to that glorious day of ſuch things as was now to follow.

[For I am old.] The very ſame was the doubt of Sarah, *Gen.*18.12. And here, firſt, the diſtruſt of Zachary doth ſhew the more, in that he that was a Prieſt and ſhould have inſtructed others, was himſelf to ſeek in one of the firſt elements, and Catechiſtical principles of Religion, concerning the Almighty power, and All-ſufficiency of God. Secondly, The very place where the meſſage came to him, being the place of Gods immediate Oracles, and the time, being the time of his praying, and who could have wiſhed for a better return of his prayers? Do aggravate his unbelief.

Ver. 19. [I am Gabriel.] It ſignifieth, A man of God: being taken in the ſame form of conſtruction with Malchizedek. He breaketh out to utter his name, which Angels at other times [and it may be himſelf] had refuſed to do, becauſe he would recal Zacharies thoughts to the book of Daniel, and convince his heſitation by that very Scripture, Dan. 9.

[That ſtand before God.] That is, that miniſter to him, as Dan. 7. 10. 1 Sam. 16. 22. 2 King. 5. 25. &c. Therefore thoſe that from this phraſe would collect that Gabriel is an Arch-angel, or one of the prime order of Angels, do build but upon a very ſandy foundation.

Ver. 20. [Behold thou ſhalt be dumb.] The ſign given, is in Zachary himſelf, and not in any thing without him: partly, becauſe his doubting aroſe from the conſideration of himſelf, and partly, that he might carry about him a puniſhment for his diffidence, as well as a ſign for his confirmation.

Now his puniſhment was twofold, deafneſs and dumbneſs both; for becauſe he had not hearkned to the Angels ſpeech, he was ſtruck deaf; and becauſe he had gain-ſaid it, he was made dumb. For, firſt, the Greek κωφὸς, ver. 22. and the word חרשא by which the Syrian rendreth it, do ſignifie both deaf and dumb. And ſecondly, in ver. 62. it is ſaid, They made ſigns to him, which had not needed, if he could have heard.

Ἀνθ' ὧν οὐκ ἐπίστευσας: This latter clauſe of the verſe might not unfitly be rendred thus. Thou ſhalt be dumb, &c. until the day that theſe things for which thou haſt not believed my words, ſhall be performed: And thus is his dumbneſs limited or extended, the clearer, till the accompliſhing of the things of which he doubted.

Ver. 22. [He could not ſpeak to them.] The Prieſt at the diſmiſſion of the people, when the ſervice of the Temple was finiſhed, was to pronounce the bleſſing in Numb. 6. 24, 25, 26. Which when Zachary is now to do, he is ſpeechleſs, and cannot perform it: for the Levitical Prieſthood is now growing dumb, and he that was to bleſs indeed, namely Chriſt, is near at hand.

Ver. 23. [Aſſoon as the days of his Miniſtration were accompliſhed.] The dumb and deaf Prieſt officiateth in that ſervice which the lot had caſt upon him, a certain time, either more or leſs, after he was faln under this double imperfection.

For, firſt, neither of theſe are named among thoſe defects and blemiſhes that ſecluded from the ſervice in the Sanctuary.

Secondly, The Prieſthood of the Law conſiſted mainly and chiefly of manual actions or offices for the hands; as offering, ſprinkling, waving, and ſuch others [to which ſenſe the Targums expound The works of Levies hands, Deut. 33.11.] and ſo it might the better be ſpeechleſs: But the Miniſtry of the Goſpel cannot admit of dumbneſs, becauſe it conſiſteth of Preaching, and for that purpoſe was furniſhed and indowed at the beginning and entrance of it, with the gift of Tongues.

Ver. 24. [Elizabeth hid her ſelf, ſaying, &c.] This her retiredneſs and hiding of her ſelf, proceeded partly from devotion, and partly from reſpect of the child that ſhe had conceived: For, the words, or thoughts that proceed from her at this her retiring, muſt needs ſhew the reaſon why ſhe did it: Now, ſhe ſaid, Becauſe the Lord hath done thus to me, when he looked upon me to take away my reproach: where two diſtinct things are plainly remarkable:

Firſt, Gods taking away her reproach, by giving her a child after ſo long barrenneſs: this is not the thing that ſhe hideth for, but,

Secondly,

Secondly, His dealing thus with her when he would take that reproach away, as to give her such a child, that was to be of so eminent a calling and so great a Prophet: And for this it was that she betook her self to this retiring and recluseveness, partly that she might ply her devotion so much the closer upon so great a benefit, and chiefly that she might sequester from all occasions of uncleanness, or defiling, since she carried one in her womb, that was to be so strict a Nazarite. As see the like, Judg. 13.14.

This, Emphatical, and giveth a clear resolution of this place, which hath scrupled many into strange and harsh expositions, for not observing it: as that she should hide her self for fear that she should not prove with child: Others, that she did it for shame, lest she should be reputed lascivious, for being with child, &c. Judicett lector.

Vers. 26. [And in the sixth month.] This sixth month from the conception of the Baptist, was the tenth month of the months of the year, or the month Tebeth, which answereth to part of our December; the time at which a long error hath laid the nativity: At the very same time of the year, Esther another Virgin had been promoted to honour and royalty by Ahasuerus, Esth. 16.17.

[Unto a City of Galilee.] Out of Galilee ariseth no Prophet, the Jews said once in the scorn of our Saviour, slanderously and very falsly, Joh. 7.52. For out of Galilee arose the renowned Prophet Jonah: of Gath Hepher, 2 King. 14.25. in the Tribe of Zebulon, Josh. 19.13. And in Galilee was much of the converse of Elias, but especially of Elisha at Shunem, 2 King. 4.8. in the Tribe of Issachar, Josh. 19.18. And all these three famous Prophets of the Gentiles. And no place could be fitter for the bringing forth of Christ and his Apostles, that were to be the Converters of the Gentiles, then Galilee of the Gentiles.

[Nazaret.] See 2 King. 17.9. the tower of Nozarim: which if Chorography would suffer, might be understood of this City, which was built like a watch-tower on the top of a steep hill, Luke 4.29. Nazaret, in the Arabick Tongue, signifieth Help; in the Hebr. a Branch, by which name our Saviour is called, Esa. 11.1.

Vers. 27. [To a Virgin.] Rabbi Oshua the Son of Levi said, Israel was comforted in a Virgin; as saith Jeremy, The Lord createth a new thing in the earth; A Virgin shall compass a Man, Jer. 31.21. Bereshh. Rabb. See also Lyra and Gloss. interlin. in loc.

Vers. 28. [Highly favoured.] κεχαριτωμένη: This word is used by the Greek Scholiast, in Psal. 18.26. עם חסיד תתחסר: Μετὰ κεχαριτωμένου χαριτώσῃ; and the word from which it is derived, in Ephes. 1. 6. ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς, &c. which let the indifferent Reader view, and judge of the propriety of our English translation here, in comparison of the vulgar Latine. The Virgin had obtained the highest earthly favour that ever mortal did or must do, to be the mother of the Redeemer; and the Holy Ghost useth a singular word to express so much.

Superstition is ever too officious; but it hath shewed it self more so to the Virgin Mary, then to any other. For as it hath deified her now she is in Heaven; so hath it magnified her in all her actions, while she was upon the earth. So that no relation, or story that concerneth her, but it hath strained it to the utmost extremity, to wring out of it her praises, though very often to a senseless, and too often to a blasphemous issue: As in this story of the annuntiation, there is not a word nor tittle that it thinketh will with all its shaping serve for such a purpose, but it taketh advantage to patch up her Encomions, where there is no use nor need, nor indeed any truth of, and in such a thing. This word that is under hand κεχαριτωμένη bears the bell that ringeth lowdest with them to such a tune. For having translated it in their vulgar Latine, Gratia plena, or full of grace; they hence infer, that she had all the seven gifts of the Spirit, and all the Theological and moral vertues, and such a fulness of the graces of the Holy Ghost, as none ever had the like.

Whereas, first, The use of Scripture is, when it speaketh of fulness of grace, to express it by another phrase, as Joh. 1.14. Act. 6.5. &c.

Secondly, The Angel himself explaineth this word, in the sense of our translation, for favour received, and not for grace inherent, Vers. 30. Thou hast found favour with God.

Thirdly, And so doth the Virgin her self also descant upon the same thing, throughout her Song.

Fourthly, Joseph her husband suspected her for an adultress, Matth. 1. 18. which he could never have done, if he had ever seen so infinite fulness of grace in her, as the Romanists have spied, and he was the likelier to have espied it of the two.

Fifthly, Compare her with other renowned women, and what difference, but only this great favour of being the mother of the Messias? They had the spirit of Prophesie as well as she; they had the spirit of sanctification as well as she: and she no more immunity from sin and death then they.

Sixthly, She was one of the number of those, that would have taken off Christ from preaching; Mark 3. and this argued not such a fulness of grace.

Seventhly, See Jansenius, one of their own side, expounding this word according to our reading of it: in loc.

[The Lord is with thee.] Many understand this of the Incarnation it self, or of the Lords being in her womb. Whereas, first, This is to take a common manner of speech, out of the common manner of interpreting it. Secondly, The Lord was not at this very instant, inſtant, come in that manner into her womb. But the words only mean, the Lords being with her in regard of that favour and reſpect, which he was about to ſhew her, as *Judg.*6.12. And this among other things ſheweth how ſenſeleſs Popery is in its Ave Maries, uſing theſe words for a Prayer, and if occaſion ſerve for it, for a charm: As firſt, Turning a Salutation into a Prayer: Secondly, In fitting theſe words of an Angel, that was ſent, and that ſpake them upon a ſpecial meſſage, to the mouth of every perſon, and for every occaſion. Thirdly, In applying theſe words to her now ſhe is in Heaven, which ſuited with her only while ſhe was upon Earth. As firſt, to ſay, full of grace, to her that is full of glory: And ſecondly, to ſay, The Lord is with thee, to her that is with the Lord.

[Bleſſed art thou among women.] Not above, but among them. See *Gen.*30.13. Judg. 5. 24.

Verſ.29. [And when ſhe ſaw him.] So readeth the Syrian, Arabick, and generally all other tranſlations, but only the vulgar Latin; that ſwarving, as it is to be ſuſpected, wilfully, from the truth of the Original, that hereby there might be the greater plea and colour for the Virgins familiarity with Angels: Whereas indeed apparition of Angels, till this very occaſion to Zachary and the Virgin, was either exceeding rare, or juſt none at all.

What manner of ſalutation, &c. Judge how Superſtition ſtraineth the Text to the Virgin Maries praiſes, when it infers from hence, that ſhe had never been ſaluted by a man in all her life before: An opinion and gloſs not worth the examining.

Verſ.31. [Behold thou ſhalt conceive, &c.] From *Eſa.*7.14. the Angel giveth her to underſtand, that ſhe is the Virgin ſpoken of in that place: and of her apprehenſion of this, ariſeth her queſtion, *Verſ.*4.

[And ſhalt call his Name.] This followeth the ſame Propheſie ſtill, and is one of the ſignifications of the word וקראת; for it hath more then one.

For, firſt, it denoteth the third perſon feminine, as *Deut.*31.29. וקראת אתכם הרעה, and ſo it is to be taken in that Propheſie. And ſhe ſhall call his Name Immanuel.

Secondly, It betokeneth alſo the ſecond perſon, as the Chaldee, the Lxx, and the other two Greek tranſlations render it, and the Angel here; And thou ſhalt call.

Thirdly, It is alſo applied to the third perſon plural, as in the Greek, *Matth.*1.23. and in the Chaldee, *Eſa.*60.18.

[Jeſus.] The ſame with Jehoſhua in Hebrew, as *Act.*7.45. *Heb.*4.8. and Joſhua in Chaldee, Ezra 2.2. Theſe were two renowned ones before; the one whereof brought the people into Canaan, after the death of Moſes; and the other, that brought them thither out of Babel, and ſo were both lively figures of our Jeſus, that bringeth his people to the heavenly Canaan.

Verſ. 32. [The Son of the Higheſt] From 2 Sam. 7. 14. as it is explained, Heb. 1.5. the Angel now draweth the Virgin to remember that glorious promiſe made to David, as the words following, concerning an eternal Throne and Kingdom, do evince; and upon the rumination upon that to reflect upon her ſelf, and to conſider that ſhe was of the ſeed of David; and ſo he leadeth her on by degrees to believe and entertain what he was relating to her.

[Shall give unto him the Throne.] *Pſal.*2.7,8,9. *Ezek.*21.27. *Dan.*7.14. &c.

Verſ. 33. [He ſhall reign over the houſe of Jacob.] This term, the houſe of Jacob includeth; Firſt, All the twelve tribes, which the word Iſrael could not have done. Secondly, The Heathens and Gentiles alſo, for of ſuch the houſe and family of Jacob was full.

Verſ.34. [Seeing I know not a man.] Theſe words, ſay the Rhemiſts, declare that ſhe had now vowed Virginity to God: For if ſhe might have known a man, and ſo have had a child, ſhe would never have asked how ſhall this be done: And Janſenius goeth yet further: From theſe words, ſaith he, it doth not only follow that ſhe hath vowed, but this ſeemeth alſo to follow from them, that her vow was approved of God: See alſo *Aquin. part.*3. *quæſt.*28. *art.*4. Baron. in apparatu ad Annal. &c.

Anſw. Firſt, Among the Jews, marriage was not held a thing indifferent, or at their own liberty to chooſe or refuſe, but a binding command; and the firſt of the 613. as it is found ranked in the Pentateuch, with the threefold Targum, at Gen. 1. 28. and Paul ſeemeth to allude to that opinion of theirs, when ſpeaking of this ſubject, he ſaith, Præceptum non habeo, 1 *Cor.*7.6.

Secondly, Among the vows that they made to God, Virginity never came in the number. Jephtha's was heedleſs, and might have been revoked, as the Chaldee Paraphraſt, and Rabbi Solomon well conceive; and David Kimchi is of a mind, that he was puniſhed for not redeeming it according to *Lev.*27.

Thirdly, To die childleſs, was a reproach among men, Luke 1.25. and to live unmarried, was a ſhame to women, *Pſal.*78.63. Their Virgins were not praiſed; that is, were not married. Now what a gulf is there between vowing perpetual Virginity, and accounting it a ſhame, diſhonour, and reproach?

Fourthly,

Fourthly, If Mary had vowed Virginity, why ſhould ſhe marry? Or when ſhe was married, why ſhould ſhe vow Virginity? For ſome hold that her vow was made before her eſpouſals, and ſome after.

Fifthly, It was utterly unneceſſary that ſhe ſhould be any ſuch a votal, it was enough that ſhe was a Virgin.

Sixthly, It is a moſt improper phraſe, to ſay, I know not a man, and to mean, I never muſt know him: and in every place where it is uſed concerning Virgins, why may it not be ſo underſtood, as well as here?

Seventhly, While the Romaniſt goeth about, with this gloſs to extol her Virginity, he abaſeth her judgment and belief: For if ſhe meant thus, ſhe inferreth, that either this child muſt be begotten by the mixture of man, which ſheweth her ignorance; or that he could not be begotten without, which ſheweth her unbelief.

Eighthly, She uttereth not theſe words in diffidence, as Zachary had done, when he ſaid, how ſhall I know this; but in deſire to be ſatisfied in the myſtery, or the manner, as ſhe was in the matter. She underſtood that the Angel ſpake of the birth of the Meſſias; ſhe knew that he ſhould be born of a Virgin; ſhe perceived that ſhe was pointed out for that Virgin; and believing all this ſhe deſired to be reſolved how ſo great a thing ſhould come to paſs.

Verſ.35. [The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, &c.] The Angel ſatisfieth the Virgins queſtion, with a threefold anſwer. Firſt, Inſtructing her in the manner of the performance. Secondly, Furniſhing her with an example of much like nature in her Coſin Elizabeth. Thirdly, Confirming her from the power of God, to which nothing is impoſſible. Now, whereas, this unreſtrained power of God was the only cauſe of ſuch examples, as the childing of Elizabeth, and other barren women; in this birth of the Virgin, ſomething more, and of more extraordinarineſs is to be looked after. In it therefore two actions are expreſſed to concur, Firſt, The Holy Ghoſt his coming upon the Virgin; Secondly, The power of the moſt High overſhaddowing her: and two fruits or conſequents of theſe two actions anſwerable to them: Firſt, The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, therefore that that is born of thee ſhall be holy. Secondly, The power of the moſt High ſhall overſhadow thee, therefore that that is born of thee ſhall be called the Son of God.

The coming of the Holy Ghoſt upon her, was, Firſt, In the gift of Propheſie, whereby ſhe was both informed of the very inſtant, when the conception was wrought, and alſo more fully of the myſtery of the Incarnation then before.

Secondly, He did prepare and ſanctifie ſo much of her fleſh and blood or ſeed, as to conſtitute the body of our Saviour: The work was the work of the whole Trinity, but aſcribed more ſingularly to the Holy Ghoſt: firſt, becauſe of the ſanctifying of that ſeed, and clearing it of original taint; for ſanctification is the work of the Holy Ghoſt: Secondly, For the avoiding of that dangerous conſequence, which might have followed among men of corrupt minds, who might have opinionated, if the conception of the Meſſias in the womb had been aſcribed to the Father, that the Son had had no other manner of generation of him.

[The power of the moſt High] His operating power ſupplying the want of the vigour and imbraces of the maſculine Parent. For to that the word overſhaddow ſeemeth to have alluſion: being a modeſt phraſe whereby the Hebrews expreſſed the imbraces of the man in the act of generation, as Ruth 3. 9. Spread the skirt of thy garment over thine handmaid.

[Therefore that holy thing.] This title and Epithet, firſt, not only ſheweth the purity and immaculateneſs of the humane nature of Chriſt; but alſo, ſecondly, it being applied to the preceding part by way of conſequence, as was touched before, it ſheweth that none ever was born thus immaculate, but Chriſt alone, becauſe none had ever ſuch a way and means of conception, but only he.

Ver.36. [Thy Coſin Elizabeth hath conceived a Son.] As he had informed the Virgin of the birth of the Meſſias of her ſelf, ſo doth he alſo of the birth of his fore-runner, of her Couſin Elizabeth. For that he intended not barely to inform her onely that her Couſin had conceived a Child, but that he heightens her thoughts, to think of him as Chriſts fore-runner, may be ſuppoſed upon theſe obſervations: Firſt, That he ſaith A Son, and not a Child. Secondly, That ſuch ſtrangely born Sons were ever of ſome remarkable and renowned eminency. Thirdly, That if he had purpoſed only to ſhew her the poſſibility of her conceiving by the example of the power of God in other women, he might have mentioned Sarah, Hannah, and others of thoſe ancient ones, and it had been enough.

Verſ.39. [And Mary aroſe, &c. And went with haſte into the hill Country, into a City of Juda.] This City was Hebron. For unto the ſons of Aaron, Joſhua gave the City of Arba, which is Hebron, in the hill country of Judah. Joſh. 21.11. And Zacharias being a ſon of Aaron, and dwelling in the hill Country of Juda, it were ſenſeleſs to ſeek for his houſe in any other place then Hebron. This place had been excellently renowned in ancient time:

Here

Here was the promiſe given of Iſaac: here was the inſtitution of Circumciſion: here Abraham had his firſt land, and David his firſt Crown: and here lay interred the three couples, Abraham and Sarah, Iſaac and Rebecca, Jacob and Leah: and as antiquity hath held, Adam and Eve. Now there are many reaſons given by Expoſitors, of Maries haſting hither after the Meſſage of the Angel: As, either to know the truth of what was told her about Elizabeth, or to congratulate and rejoyce with her, or to miniſter to her in her great belliedneſs, or that the Baptiſt in Elizabeths womb might be ſanctified by the preſence of Chriſt in hers, &c.

But I cannot but conceive this to be the very reaſon indeed, That ſhe might there conceive the Meſſias, where ſo many types, figures, and things relating to him, had gone before, namely in Hebron. For, Firſt, This ſuited ſingularly with the Harmony and Conſent, which God uſeth in his works, that the promiſe ſhould begin to take place by the conception of Meſſias, even among thoſe Patriarchs to whom the promiſe was firſt given. Secondly, A kind of neceſſity ſeemeth to lie upon it, that this Shiloh of the Tribe of Judah, and the ſeed of David, ſhould be conceived in a City of Juda, and of David, as he was to be born in another City that belonged to them both. Thirdly, The Evangeliſts ſo punctually deſcribing this City, ſeemeth rather to refer to Chriſt then John, who being of the Prieſts might indifferently have been born in any of the Tribes whatſoever. Only the Holy Ghoſt giveth us to obſerve this which may not be paſſed, That John that ſhould bring in Baptiſm in ſtead of Circumciſion, was born in that very place where Circumciſion was firſt ordained, in the City Hebron. It is generally held indeed that the Virgin conceived in Nazaret, and in the very inſtant of the Angels talking with her, but whether there be not as much probability for this opinion, as for that, I refer to the equal and judicious Reader.

Ver.40. [And ſaluted Elizabeth.] This ſeemeth to have been at ſome diſtance, and a wall or floor between: as conſider ſeriouſly on ver.42.44.

Ver.41. [The babe leaped.] Ἐσκίρτησε: This word is uſed by the LXX. for Jacobs and Eſaus ſtirring in the womb, Gen. 25. 22. And the leaping of the mountains at the giving of the Law.

Elizabeth in ver.44. addeth, The babe leaped Ἐν ἀγαλλιάσει: Not that he knew what he did when he leaped, any more then they, but that either this was the firſt time, or this time was extraordinary. The word Ἀγαλλίασις ſignifieth outward geſticulation or exultation as well as inward joy, yea, though there be no inward joy at all: as Pſalm 65. 13. Ἀγαλλίασιν οἱ βουνοὶ περιζώσονται, the little hills ſhall be girded with exultation: And ſo is it to be underſtood here: The babe in my womb leaped with extraordinary geſticulation or exultation: and ἐν to ſignifie the manner of the thing done, and not the cauſe of the doing.

Ver.45. [And bleſſed is ſhe that believed.] Elizabeth in this clauſe ſeemeth to have an eye to her own husbands unbelief, and the puniſhment that befel him for the ſame. He, a Man, a Prieſt, aged, learned, eminent, and the meſſage to him of more appearing poſſibility: and Mary, a Woman, mean, unlearned, and of a private condition, and the tidings to her moſt incredible, both to nature, and reaſon, and yet ſhe believed, and he did not.

Ver.48. [He hath regarded the low eſtate.] Ἐπέβλεψεν: is uſed by the LXX, 2 Sam. 9.8. and *Pſal.*25.16. and importeth a look of pity and compaſſion, and not of obſervation of deſert, as the Papiſts would have it here: For ſome of them render this clauſe thus, He hath looked on mine humility with approbation; and others give this gloſs upon it: Becauſe of her humility, ſhe deſerved to be exalted, and by it ſhe was primely diſpoſed to conceive and bear the only begotten Son of God: But firſt, the word Ἐπέβλεψεν, as it is ſaid before, in the LXX, who muſt beſt help us to interpret, it ſignifieth a look of another nature. Secondly, Ταπείνωσις ſignifieth not the vertue of humility or the lowlineſs of mind, but the ſtate of a low and poor condition, and ſo is it rendred here by the Syrian, Arabick, Spaniſh, French, Deodates, Italian, Dutch, and all Latines that are not wedded to the vulgar: And ſo is it uſed by the LXX, *Gen.*16.11. & 41.52. 1 *Sam.*1.11. and ſo again by the New Teſtament, *Act.*8.33. compared with the Original in *Iſa.*53.8. And ſo prophane and heathen Authors diſtinguiſh betwixt ταπείνωσις & ταπεινοφροσύνη, by the former underſtanding as we do here, and by the latter the vertue of humility. Thirdly, The ſame word in a manner, or one of the ſame root, in *ver.*52. is oppoſed to Δυνάστας, and inevitably beareth the ſenſe we follow. Fourthly, If the Virgin ſpake in the ſenſe the Romaniſts would have her, He hath looked upon my lowlineſs to give it its deſert, ſhe would prove to be intolerably proud in the valuing of her humility.

[All generations ſhall call me bleſſed.] As *Gen.*30.13. Not only thou oh Coſin Elizabeth, and the Jewiſh Nation that expect the Meſſias, but even all the world, and all ſucceſſions of ages among the Heathen, ſhall come to the knowledge and confeſſion of Chriſt, and account me bleſſed in the favour that I have received.

Ver. 51. [He hath ſcattered the proud, &c.] If the Virgin aim theſe words, and thoſe of the ſame tenour that follow, at any particular perſons, as ſome conceive ſhe doth, and meaneth the Devils, or the Phariſees, or the Jews, it might as well be conceived, that ſhe hath reſpect to the four tyrannous and perſecuting Monarchies in the Book of Daniel, which were now deſtroyed, as much as to any thing elſe: But ſince the very ſame words in a manner, are to be found in the ſong of Hannah, 1 Sam. 2. they warrant us to interpret them not ſo reſtrictively, as to any one particular example, but of the general and ordinary dealing of God in the world, with the wicked.

SECTION III.

S. MATTHEW. CHAP. I

THE (a) Book (b) of the generation of Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of David, the Son of Abraham.

2. Abraham begat Iſaac, and Iſaac begat Jacob, and Jacob begat (c) Judas and his brethren.

3. And Judas begat Phares, and Zara of Tamar; and Phares begat Eſrom, and Eſrom begat Aram.

4. And (d) Aram begat Aminadab, and Aminadab begat Naaſſon, and Naaſſon begat (e) Salmon.

5. And Salmon begat (f) Boos of Racab, and Boos begat Obed of Ruth, and Obed begat Jeſſe.

6. And Jeſſe begat (g) David the King, and David the King begat Solomon, of her that had been the wife of Urias.

7. And Solomon begat Roboam, and Roboam begat (h) Abia, and Abia begat (i) Aſa.

8. And Aſa begat Joſaphat, and Joſaphat begat Joram, and Joram begat Ozias.

9. And Ozias begat Joatham, and Joatham begat Achas, and Achas begat Ezechias.

10. And Ezechias begat Manaſſes, and Manaſſes begat Amon, and Amon begat Joſias.

11. And Joſias begat (k) Jechonias and his brethren, about the time they were carried away into Babylon.

12. And after they were brought to Babylon, Jechonias begat Salathiel, and Salathiel begat Zorobabel.

13. And Zorobabel begat Abiud, and Abiud begat Eliakim, and Eliakim begat Azor.

14. And Azor begat Sadoc, and Sadoc begat Achim, and Achim begat Eliud.

15. And Eliud begat Eleazar, and Eleazar begat Matthan, and Matthan began Jacob.

16. And Jacob begat Joſeph the Husband of Mary, of whom was born Jeſus, who is called Chriſt.

17. So all the generations from Abraham to David, are fourteen generations: and from David until the (l) carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations: and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Chriſt, are fourteen generations.

18. Now the birth of Jeſus Chriſt was on this wiſe: when as his Mother Mary was eſpouſed to Joſeph (before they came together) ſhe was found with child of the Holy Ghoſt.

19. Then Joſeph her Husband being a juſt man, and not willing (m) to make her a pul like example, was minded to put her away privily.

(a) Gen. 5. 1. (b) It might be underſtood, The Book of the Hiſtory, as generation is taken, Gen. 2. 4. and 37. 2. and ſo it might be the title, not of this Chapter only, but of the whole book. But ſince the Evangeliſts intention is to ſet down Chriſts alliance to the Royal line by his Father Joſeph, the phraſe muſt be underſtood accordingly: and ſo the Chaldee uſeth the very Greek word to tranſlate משפחת The Family of Ram. Jeb 22. 2. See a third ſenſe of γενεσις in Jam. 1. 23. & 3. 6.

(c) Judas for Jehudah in Hebrew: for the Greek cannot utter [h] before a vowel in the middle of a word nor after one in the end: therefore in the middle it leaveth out, as in Joſaphat, Joram, and this word Juda; and in the end it changeth it to [s] as in this, and may other words in this Chapter.

(d) Or Ram. 1 Chron. 2. 8. Ruth 4. 19.

(e) Called Salma, Ruth 4. 20.

(f) He is held by the Jews to be Ipſan, Judg. 12. 8.

(g) David, in the Arabick, ſignifieth a worm: to which he may ſeem to allude, Pſal. 22. 6.

(h) Reheboam, in naming this his Son Avi-jah, which ſignifieth, God is my father, ſeemeth to have had his eye upon the promiſe to David, I will be his Father, 2 Sam. 7. 14. which becauſe he imbraced not by a lively Faith, but challenged only by a preſumptuous uſurpation, for he walked not in the ways of David; therefore doth the text elſewhere conceal the name of God, in the name of his Son, and calleth him Abijam, My father is a Stay; For ſo unconſtant in good was Reheboam, as Jam. 1. 6. being a child at forty years old, 2 Chron. 13. 17.

(i) The Arabick readeth it Aſaph.

(k) Called Conias, Jer. 22. 24. For God by taking away the firſt ſyllable of his name, ſheweth that he will not eſtabliſh the throne, or race of Solomon any more upon it: as his Father Jehoiakim bel ke in ſo naming him had preſumed. The Jews delighted to joyn the name Jehovah, to their own names, but ſomewhat ſhortned. For in the beginning of the name, it was but Jeho; as Jeho-ſhaphat, Jehoram, &c. And in the end, it was Jahu; as Mica-jahu, Eli-jahu. And ſometime in the very ſame name it was ſet before, or after indifferently, as Jeho-achaz, 2 Chron. 21. 17. Is Ahaz-jahu, 2 Chron. 22. 1. So Jehoiachin, 2 King. 24. 8. is Jechon-jahu, 1 Chron. 3. 16.

(l) The Captivity of the Jews into Babel, was but Μετοικεσια, a flitting of their Families: (As Ariſteas ſaith of Ptol. Lagus his captiving them, τους μεν μετοικισας, τους δ' ηχμαλωτευσε.) for they returned ere long to their own home again: But the ten Tribes carried by Shalmanezar, are ſaid to be, εν Ασσυριοις in the LXX, 2 Kings 18. 11. in a perpetual departure from their own houſes; And they, and all the reſt of the Nation, are at this day εν διασπορᾳ, in a diſperſion, without any home of their own at all, Joan 7. 35. Jam. 1. 1. 1 Pet. 1. 1.

(m) Παραδειγματισαι. It hath been thought (ſaith Gellius) that there ought to be three cauſes in puniſhing of offences. The firſt, [Νουθεσια, κολασις or παρρησια] is when puniſhment is uſed for caſtigation, or amendment of him that hath offended. The ſecond [called παιδεια] is, when puniſhment is uſed, that the dignity, and honour of him that hath been wronged, may be maintained. The third [which is called Παραδειγμα] is when puniſhment is inflicted for examples ſake, that others by the fear of the known puniſhment may be deterred from the like offences. Noct. Att. lib. 6. cap. 14.

20. But while he thought on theſe things, the Angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream, ſaying, Joſeph thou Son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy Wife; for that which is conceived in her, is of the Holy Ghoſt.

21. And ſhe ſhall bring forth a Son, and thou ſhalt call his name Jeſus: for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſinnes.

22. Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken of the Lord by the Prophet, ſaying,

23. Behold, a Virgin ſhall be with Child, and ſhall bring forth a Son, and ſhall call his Name Emanuel, which being interpreted, is, God with us.

24. Then Joſeph being raiſed from ſleep, did as the Angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife.

25. And knew her not until ſhe had brought forth her firſt born Son, and he called his name Jeſus.

Reaſon of the Order.

AFter Mary hath been three months abſent from Joſeph [as in the laſt verſe of the Section preceding] upon her return he perceiveth her to be with child, for which he intendeth ſecretly to put her away; as Tamar after three months, is deſcried to be in the ſame caſe, and Judah reſolveth, publikely to put her to death, Gen. 38. 24.

This being conſidered, it is plain to ſee how properly the eighteenth verſe of this chapter followeth in order of time, after the laſt verſe of the Section next going before.

Now ſince the Evangeliſt hath begun with the genealogy, that alſo muſt here be taken in; and that the rather, becauſe he hath placed it in the forefront of his Goſpel, for ſpecial reaſon. Firſt, that he might make way for the underſtanding of thoſe words of the Angel, Joſeph thou Son of David, Verſe 20. Secondly, that the title which the wiſemen give to our Saviour might be cleared, when they call him King of the Jews, Chap. 2. 2. Thirdly, that his being the true and right Meſſias might be approved, by ſhewing that according to the promiſes and Prophecies made before concerning him, he was deſcended of the ſeed of Abraham, and the ſtock of David. For the two firſt and main things that the Jews would inquire after concerning our Saviour, to try whether he were the true Meſſias, or no, would be theſe. Firſt, whether he were of the houſe of David. Secondly, whether he were born in Bethlehem; and ſo we find them queſtioning about him, Joh. 7. 42. In this regard it was neceſſary, that Mathew an Hebrew, writing his Goſpel for the Hebrews, ſhould at the very firſt entrance of it, give them ſatisfaction in theſe two particulars: which he doth accordingly, ſhewing his deſcent from David in this Chapter, and his birth in Bethlehem, in the next Chapter following.

The laſt verſe of this Section and Chapter, He knew her not, till ſhe had brought forth her firſt-born Son, &c. may ſeem to interrupt the right order of the ſtory, and to bring in Chriſts birth before its time, if we lay it here. But ſince the Evangeliſt will ſay no more of it, but only this; and becauſe we deſire to break the text into as few peeces as poſſible, this ſhall be let to lie where it doth, without any tranſpoſition, and we will imagine the two next Sections to be expoſitions at large, upon what this verſe doth but ſpeak in brief.

Harmony and Explanation.

PUblike Regiſters of the Tribe of Judah, and of the other Tribes that adhered to it, were reſerved even in the Captivity and forward; as may be collected by the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah: And from Lukes telling that Anna was of the Tribe of Aſer, and Pauls, that himſelf was of the Tribe of Benjamin.

From one of theſe doth Matthew fetch the latter end of his genealogy, and Luke from another the beginning of his, having then the civil records to avouch for them, if they ſhould be queſtioned, which the Jews now wanting, do unjuſtly cavil.

[The Son of David, the Son of Abraham] Jeſus Chriſt is to be applyed unto both, thus: Jeſus Chriſt the Son of David, Jeſus Chriſt the Son of Abraham: as ſee the like phraſe, Gen. 36. 3. Aholibamah the Daughter of Anah, the Daughter of Zibeon: that is thus to be underſtood, Aholibamah the Daughter of Anah, Aholibamah the Daughter of Zibeon: as that Chapter maketh it moſt clear. And there is the like, and far more largely, Luke 3. 32. &c.

Now Abraham and David are named, rather then any other, Firſt, becauſe one of them was father of the Jewiſh Nation, and the other the firſt in the Kingdom, of which Nation and Kingdom, all Prophecies had told that Chriſt ſhould come. Secondly, becauſe the promiſe of Chriſt was made to theſe two in plainer termes, then to any other.

David is firſt named, firſt becauſe the promiſe to him was freſher in memory, plainer, and more explicate: ſecondly, becauſe the deſcent of the Meſſias from David, was the main thing thing the Jews looked after in him: thirdly, the Holy Ghoſt doth hereby, as it were beforehand, anſwer the impious diſtinction, ſo frequent among the Rabbines, of Meſſias ben Joſeph, and Meſſias ben David.

Ver. 2. [Judas and his brethren] His Brethren are added from Gen. 49. 8. to comfort the diſperſed Tribes that were not yet returned out of Captivity as Judah was, in their equal intereſt in Chriſt as well as he, as Hoſ. 1. 11.

Ver. 3. [Phares and Zara] He nameth Zara, becauſe he would bring in their Mother Tamar. Iſmael and Eſau, the one a brother to Iſaac, the other a twin to Jacob, are not named, becauſe they were both wicked, but the brethren of Juda, and the twin to Phares are named, becauſe they are both good. At the birth of Jacob and Eſau it is ſaid תומים twins, with the letter א wanting, becauſe Eſau one of them was evill: But at the birth of Phares and Zara it is ſaid תאומים with that letter ſupplyed, becauſe both of them were good, R. Sol. in Gen. 25. and 38.

[Of Thamar] Four women are named in this genealogy, women once of notorious infamy, Tamar inceſtuous, Rahab an harlot, Ruth an Heathen, and Bathſheba an Adultereſs: To ſhew that Chriſt came to heal all ſores, when he recured ſuch ſinners, and that he deſpiſed not our ſhame, when he ſhamed not to deſcend of ſuch Parents.

Ver. 5. [Rahab] It can little be doubted but that he meaneth her, mentioned Joſh. 2. Now the Jews, [belike to deface the truth of Mathew, who from ancient Records, averreth her for the wife of Salmon] have broached this tenet, that ſhe was married unto Joſhua, vid. Kimki in loc.

Ver. 8. [Joram begat Ozias.] Here *three deſcents are omitted, namely, Ahaziah, Joaſh, and Amaziah] as compare 2 Chron. 3. 2 Kings 8. But it is moſt divinely done, from the threatning of the ſecond Commandement, Thou ſhalt not commit Idolatry, for I viſit the ſins of the Fathers upon the children to the third and Fourth Generation. Joram committed Idolatry like the houſe of Ahab, for the daughter of Ahab was his wife, 2 King. 8. 18. Therefore it is juſt with God to viſit that ſin upon his children: in ſign of which he blotteth them out of this line to the fourth generation: So is it the manner of Scripture, very often to leave out mens names out of certain ſtories and Records, to ſhew a diſtaſte at ſome evil in them. So all Cains poſterity is blotted out of the Book of the Chronicles, as it was out of the world by the Flood. So Simeon is omitted in Moſes bleſſing, Deut. 33. for his cruelty at Shechem, and to Joſeph. So Dan, at the ſealing of the Lords people, Rev. 7. becauſe of Idolatry begun in his Tribe, Judg. 18. and ſo Joab, from among Davids worthies, 2 Sam. 23. becauſe of his bloodineſs to Amaſa and Abner. Such another cloſe intimation of Gods diſpleaſure at this wickedneſs of Joram; is to be ſeen, 2 Chron. 22. 1, 2. where the reign of his Son Ahaziah is not dated according to the cuſtom and manner of the other Kings of Judah, but by the ſtile of the continuance of the houſe of Omri, into which Family his Father had married, and was become ſo prophane as to worſhip their Idols. The Son of the two and forty years was Ahaziah when he began to reign. That is, of the laſt of the two and forty, of the houſe of Omri, in which it fell, and Ahaziah with it.

 The ſeed of the wicked ſhall be cut off*, Pſal. 37. 28. See the letter ע, which is the laſt letter of זרע the ſeed and of רשע the wicked, cut out of that Acroſtical, and Alphabetical Pſalm at that very place.

Ver. 11. [Joſias begat Jechonias] So readeth the Syrian, Arabrick, and the moſt and beſt Greek Copies: And ſo the Evangeliſt himſelf requireth that it be read, to make fourteen generations from David to the Captivity into Babel. And ſo readeth D. Kimchi, on 1 Chron. 3. 15. Joſias indeed begat Joachim, and Joachim begat Jechonias, but he that was neither fit to be lamented, nor to be buried like one of the Kings of Judah, Jerem. 22. 18, 19. was much more unfit to come into the Line of the Kings of Judah, that leadeth to Chriſt.

Ver. 12. [Jechonias begat Salathiel.] Jechonias was Father to Salathiel, as Baaſha was to Ahab, 1 King. 20. 34. not by generation, but by predeceſſion. For Jechonias in very deed was childleſs, Jer. 22. 30. and the natural Father of Salathiel was Neri, Luke 3. 27. yet he is ſaid to beget him, becauſe he declared and owned him for his next heir and Succeſſor; As God is ſaid to beget Chriſt on the day of his Reſurrection, Pſal. 2. 7. Act. 13. 33. that is, declared him thereby to be his Son, Rom. 1. 4.

The Scripture affecteth to ſpeak ſhort in relating of Stories, that are well known before: as to ſpare more, you may find an example far harſher than this, in 1 Chron. 1. 36. where Timna the Concubine of Eliphaz is named as Eliphaz his Son.

And in 1 Chron. 3. 16. Zedechia the Uncle of Jechoniah is called his Son, becauſe he ſucceeded him in the Roialty.

The Jews in their Talmud, give this rule for a fundamental point: That there is no King to be for Irael, but of the houſe of David, and of the ſeed of Solomon only: And he that ſeparateth againſt this Family, denyeth the Name of the bleſſed God, and the words of his Prophets that are ſpoken in truth. Sanhedr. Perek. 10. & R. Samuel in Ner. Mitſvah. fol. 153.

With which opinion, although Matthew ſeem to comply at the firſt appearance, in that he deriveth our Saviour from Solomon, becauſe of the Hebrews for whom he wrote, which looked for him from thence, yet the carnal ſenſe of it, which aimeth only at the earthly Kingdom of the Meſſias, and at the exact deſcent from Solomon, he cloſely confuteth to the eyes of the intelligent Reader by theſe two things. Firſt, in that he bringeth the Line along to Jechonias, in whom the ſeed of Solomon and the regal dignity alſo with it failed. Secondly, in that he deriveth the intereſt of Chriſt in that dignity, if it were any, only by Joſeph, which according to the fleſh, had no relation at all to him, ſave the marriage of his Mother.

The Jews to diſgrace the Goſpel of S. Luke, do hold that Jechonias was the natural Father of Salathiel, and that upon his repentance in Babel God gave him Children, as Aſſir and Salathiel. D. Kimchi on 1 Chron. 3. But God had ſworn, Jer. 22. 28. and he will not repent, Pſal. 110. 4. that he ſhould die childleſs to the Throne and his repentance could no more repeal this Oath of God, then the prayer of Moſes did the decree of his not entring into the Land.

[And Salathiel begat Zerobabel.] Salathiel begat Pedaiah, and Pedaiah begat Zorobabel, 1 Chron. 3. 18.,19. But becauſe, when the maſculine Line of Solomons houſe failed in Jechonias, the dignity turning over to the Line of Nathan, firſt ſetled upon Salathiel, but firſt ſhewed it ſelf eminent in Zorobabel, therefore conſtantly, when mention is made of Zorobabel, he is not called the Son of Pedaiah a man of no action but obſcure, but the Son of Salathiel, in whom the honour of that Family began. For Jechonias was a ſignet plucked off, Jer. 22. 24. and Zorobabel was ſet on again in his ſtead, Hag. 2. 23.

Ver. 13. [And Zorobabel begat Abiud] Among the children of Zorobabel mentioneth 1 Chron. 3. 19, 20. there is no memorial either of Abiud, his Son named here, or of Rheſa his Son named by St. Luke. But as in Scripture it is ordinary for one man to have ſeveral names, ſo is it to be underſtood of theſe. The eldeſt Son then of Zorobabel, to whom the honour lately faln upon that houſe was to deſcend, was called Meſullam. Either in memorial of Solomon, the glory of whoſe houſe was transferred to him [and ſo he alſo calleth a daughter of his Shelomith, the name by which the wife of Solomon is called, Cant. 6. 13. as being but the feminine of Shelomoh.] Or from the ſignificancy of the word which importeth requited. For whereas Jeconias was alſo called Shallum, that is, finiſhed, becauſe the race and line of Solomon did end in him, when a recompence of the failing of that, is made by the ſucceſſion of Salathiel in its ſtead, well might Zorobabel, in whom it firſt ſhewed, call his Son Meſhullam or requited. Or from their peaceable building and inhabiting Jeruſalem, after their return from Babel. The Son Meſhullam was called alſo Abiud, in remembrance of his Fathers glory: And his ſecond brother Hannaniah, was alſo called Rheſa, that is, The chief, or principal, becauſe of Chriſts deſcending from him. Theſe things we have now but by conjecture, but that we may take the bolder, becauſe the Text in the place alledged in the Chronicles, hath ſet theſe two Sons of Zorobabel apart and diſtinct from the reſt of their brethren, as if for ſome ſpecial thing more remarkable then they. But there is no doubt but the Evangeliſts in naming them by theſe names, had warranty from known and common Records to juſtifie them in it.

Ver. 17. [Fourteen generations] In every one of theſe ſeveral fourteens, they were under a ſeveral and diſtinct manner of Government, and the end of each fourteen produced ſome alteration in their ſtate. In the firſt, they were under Prophets: in the ſecond under Kings: and in the third, under Haſmonean Prieſts. The firſt fourteen brought their ſtate to glory in the Kingdom of David: The ſecond, to miſery in the Captivity of Babylon: and the third to glory again in the Kingdom of Chriſt.

The firſt begins with Abraham that recived the promiſe, and ends in David, that received it again with greater clearneſs. The ſecond begins with the building of the Temple, and ends in the deſtruction of it. The third begins with their peeping out of miſery in Babel, and ends in the accompliſhed delivery by Chriſt.

The ſecond that terminateth in the peoples captiving into Babel, fixeth not no Jehoiakim, in whom the captivity began; nor in Zedekiah, in whom it was conſummate; but in Jechonias, who was in the middle ſpace between. And from the ſame date doth Ezekiel count and reckon the captivity through all his book, as Chap. 8. 1. & 20. 1. & 26. 1. & 29. 1. & 31. 1. & 32. 1. & 40. 1.

The whole ſum of the three fourteens, is the renowned number of two and forty: the number of the knops, and flowers, and branches of the Candleſtick; of the journeys and ſtations of Iſrael betwixt Egypt and Canaan, Numb. 33. of the children of Bethel, 2 King. 2. 24. And ſee Rev. 11. 2. & 13. 5.

Verſ. 18. [Before they came together, &c.] That is to dwell together in the ſame houſe. Nay, it is very probable, that as yet they dwelt not in the ſame Town, but Joſeph in Capernaum, and Mary in Nazeret.

Verſ. 19. [To make her a publick example] παραδειγματίσαι: A word uſed by the LXX, Numb. 25. 4. Ezek. 28. 17. &c. And by the New Teſtament, Heb. 6. 6. And ever, ſaith, Eraſmus, in an evil ſenſe. Brucioli hath ſtrangely tranſlated this clauſe, Non lo volendo Publicare: and divers of the Papiſts have more ſtrangely expounded it, as non volens traducere, not willing to take her to himſelf, or to his own houſe: and why? Becauſe he thought thought himſelf unworthy of her ſociety: and becauſe the brightneſs of her face was ſuch, that he could not look upon it: And he thought it more poſſible for a woman to conceive without a man, then for Mary to ſin.

And thus will they make Joſeph to divorce his wife, or at leaſt to uſe unkindly, for her too great excellencies.

*[To put her away privily] The Law bound him not to bring her, either to ſhame by trial before the Prieſt, Numb. 6. or to puniſhment by the ſentence of the Judges. The adultereſs indeed was to be put to death, if ſhe were accuſed, proſecuted, and convicted; but to accuſe and proſecute her, the Law bound not, but upon deprehenſion in the very act, Joh. 8. 4. 5. Deut. 22. 22. Numb. 25. 8. If a man took a wife, and hated her, Deut. 22. 13. he might bring her to tryal, and upon conviction to puniſhment: but if he love her for all his ſuſpicion, and will connive at her fault, and not ſeek her death, he is a liberty to connive and tolerated by the Law ſo to do, and blameleſs if he did it, as Judg. 19. 2, 3. But if a couple were deprehended in the act of Adultery, then muſt there be no connivence, Deut. 22. 22. explaining, Levit. 20. 10. And the caſe of the unbetrothed Damoſel, Deut. 22. 28. explaining the caſe of the betrothed.

And thus is the queſtion eaſily anſwered, which hath ſo toiled many expoſitors: How Joſeph can be ſaid to be juſt when in this very matter that is now in hand he violateth: It is anſwered by denying that he violated the Law: For that tolerated him thus to do.

* Ἀπολῦσαι; to divorce her, as Mat. 5. 31. & 19. 7. Mark 10. 4. Luk. 16. 18. Eraſm. Voluit clanculum ab ea diſcedere; And ſo Bruciolì, Lo volſe ocultamente laſciare: making Joſeph a patient in the divorce, rather then an agent, or rather divorcing himſelf, then her.

Verſ. 21. [Jeſus, for he ſhall ſave] Rabenn haccadoſh ſaith, Becauſe Meſſias ſhall ſave men, he ſhall be called Joſhua. But the Heathen of another Nation, which ſhall imbrace the belief of him, ſhall call his name Jeſus: And this is intimated, in Gen. 49. Chi jabbo ſhiloh: until Shiloh come. Vid. Galatin. lib. 3. cap. 20.

Verſ. 23. [Behold a Virgin] The Jews ſeek to elude this Prophecy of Iſaiah by expounding it, either of the Prophets wife, as Iſa. 8. 3. or of the Kings wife; and from Prov. 30. 19. they plead that Almah doth not ſtrictly ſignifie a virgin, but a woman that hath known a man.

Anſw. 1. There are three words in the Hebrew, that ſignifie and betoken Virginity, but, this moſt properly: Firſt, נערה ſignifieth a Virgin, but not always: for it properly denoteth a young woman; yea, though ſhe be not a virgin, but hath been touched. Secondly, Bethulah is the common word uſed to denote Virginity; yet as Galatine obſerveth out of Prov. 30. it ſeemeth ſometime to be taken otherwiſe. But thirdly, Almah properly importeth a young Virgin, and not at all one touched: So that Naarah ſignifieth any young Woman, though ſhe be not a Virgin: Bethulah, a Virgin though ſhe be not young; but Almah importeth youth and virginity both.

Secondly, the LXX in the place of Iſaiah cited, tranſlate the word παρθένος: which denoteth no otherwiſe then a Virgin.

Thirdly, it is given for a ſign to Ahaz, that Almah ſhould bear a Son: now for one that had known a man to do ſo, were no ſign at all. See Galatine lib. 7. cap. 15.

[They ſhall call his name Emmanuel] Nomen naturæ, not impoſitionis, they ſhall own him for God in our nature, and not denominate him Emmanuel for his impoſed name: See the like Phraſe, Eſa. 60. 18. Ezek. 48. 35.

[Which is being interpreted] Firſt, this, and other paſſages of the ſame nature in this Evangeliſt, argue ſtrongly, that Matthew wrote not his Goſpel in the Hebrew tongue, as is very commonly held: For, firſt, then had this word needed no interpretation, and it had been very hard to have interpreted it, but by the ſame word again. Secondly, the Jews in thoſe times that Matthew wrote, underſtood not the Hebrew tongue in its purity, but had degenerated into the uſe and ſpeech of the Syrian. Thirdly, Jonathan Ben Uzziel tranſlated the Prophets out of Hebrew into Chaldee, a little before the coming of Chriſt; and Onkelos did as much by the Law a little after, and both did ſo, becauſe the Jews could not at that time underſtand or read the Bible in its own Hebrew tongue: and how improper then was it for Matthew to write his Goſpel in that language. Fourthly, all the world that uſed the Old Teſtament at thoſe times, unleſs it were ſuch as had gained the Hebrew tongue by ſtudy, uſed it in the tranſlation of the LXX, or the Greek, and it was requiſite that the Pen-men of the New Teſtament ſhould write in that language, and according to their ſtile [as Paul writing for, and to Romans, and Matthew and he to Hebrews] that their quotations out of the Old Teſtament might be examined by the Greek Bible. Fifthly, let thoſe that hold the opinion we are confuting, but ſeriouſly conſider that Chriſt calleth himſelf by the name of two Greek letters, and why; Rev. 1. 8.

Verſ. 25. [He knew her not till ſhe had brought forth] This properly falleth in order at Luke 2. 7. and there ſhall it be taken up again.

S. LUKE CHAP. I.

The Birth and Circumcision of John the Baptist, and the tongue of his Father restored, &c.

Vers. 57.

NOW Elizabeths (a) full time came that she should be delivered, and she brought forth a Son.

58. And (b) her neighbours, and her cousins heard how the Lord had (c) shewed great mercy upon her, and they rejoyced with her.

59. And it came to pass on the eighth day, they came to circumcise the child, and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his Father.

60. And his Mother answered and said, Not so, but he shall be called John.

61. And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name.

62. And they made signs to his Father, how he would have him called.

63. And he asked for (d) a writing table, and wrote saying, His name is John, and they marvailed all.

64. And his mouth was (e) opened immediately, and his tongue looſed, and he spake, and praised God.

65. And fear came on all that dwelt round about them, and all these sayings were noised abroad through out all the hill Country of Judea.

66. And all they that had heard them, (f) laid them up in their hearts, saying, What manner of child shall this be? (g) and the hand of the Lord was with him.

67. And his Father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophecied, saying.

68. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for he hath visited and redeemed his people:

69. And hath raised up a horn of salvation for us, in the house of his servant David.

70. As he spake by the (h) mouth of his holy Prophets, which have been since the World began.

71. (i) That we should be delivered from our enemies, and from the hands of (k) them that hate us.

72. (l) To perform the mercy promised to our fore-fathers, and to remember his holy Covenant,

73. (m) The oath which he sware to our father Abraham,

74. (n) That he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might serve him without fear,

75. In holiness and righteousness before him all the days of our life.

76. And thou child shalt be called the Prophet of the most Highest, for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord, to prepare his ways.

77. To give knowledge of salvation unto his people, by the remission of their sins.

78. Through † the tender mercy of our God, whereby the day spring from an high hath visited us.

79. To give light to them that sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death; to guide our feet into the way of peace.

80. And the child grew, and waxed strong in Spirit, and was in the desert, till the day of his shewing unto Israel.

(a) Though she conceived her chi'd above the course of nature, yet his time in the womb was according to it.

(b) Hebron was inhabited by Aaronites: but the fields and villages about with children of Juda, Josh. 21. 11. These two are Elizabeths neighbours and cousins.

(c) Greek, Had magnified mercy: הגדיל חסדו as in Psal. 18. 50. the Hebr. and LXX and Psal. 126. 2.

(d) Vulg. Pugillarem. of which see Plin. lib. 13. cap. 11. Ἐν δέλτοισιν ἐμοῖς ἐπὶ γένασι δοῦναι, Batrachom.

(e) פתח in Hebrew signifieth both to open and to unloose, and so the loosing of his tongue, which is not expressed in the Greek, totidem verbis, is implied in the word Ἀνεῴχθη, by an Hebraisme.

(f) See Gen. 37. 11. Prov. 2. 1. & 3. 1. & 7. 1.

(g) Vulg. For the hand of the Lord was with him: contrary to the Orig. Arab. and Syr.

(h) [By the mouth] that is, by the mouths one number for another, as tree for trees, Gen. 3. 1. frog for frogs, Exod. 9. 2. &c. yet is the observation of Albertus magnus, ingenuous and true. All the Prophets spake of Christ, uno ore, things so agreable, as if they had all spoken with one mouth.

(i) In the orig. it is only Σωτηρίαν, Salvation or deliverance, and so in the Arab. and Vulg. Lat. now it may be read either in apposition to κέρας, in vers. 69. He hath raised up an horn of salvation, namely, salvation from our enemies, or in subsequence to the verb he spake, vers. 70. He spake by the mouth of his holy Prophets of Salvation: and this is the more genuine and proper, Beza.

(k) Two Phrases used to heighten the sense, 2 Sam. 22. 18. 41. Psal. 44. 10. & 68. 1. & 89. 23. & 106. 10.

(l) לעשות חסד, as Josh. 2. 12. 2 Sam. 9. 1. &c. The Syr. reads conjunctively, And he hath shewed mercy, and so doth the Arab. the other clause, And he hath remembred.

(m) Ὅρκον: In the Accusative case, either in apposition to Cornu Salutis, vers. 69. as Tollet, or κατὰ understood, as Calvin, or following the Verb To performe in vers. 72. As the Syr. and an old English, or that the Verb μνησθῆναι governeth two cases, Διαθήκης and ὅρκον.

(n) Τοῦ δοῦναι ἡμῖν: This clause standeth in the Orig. and in all translations in the end of the vers. preceding, See Syr. Arab. Vulg. France, Spain, Dutch, Diodate, Vatab. Erasm. Beza, &c.

† Greek: The Bowels of mercy.

Reason

Reaſon of the Order.

THE order of this Section may be briefly contrived, and illuſtrated, thus. Elizabeth when Mary cometh to her, was about ſix months gone with child, Luke 1: 26. 36. and about nine months when ſhe departed from her, verſ. 56. She coming to her own houſe, is ſuſpected by Joſeph to have played the harlot; and is in danger of a ſecret divorce: while theſe things are thus paſſing betwixt them two at Nazaret, the time of Elizabeths delivery is fully come.

Harmony and Eplanation.

Verſe 59. They came to circumciſe the Child.

IN Hebron, and about the time of Eaſter, was circumciſion firſt ordained, Gen. 17. And in the ſame place, and at the ſame time of the year, was John Baptiſt born and circumciſed; who was to bring in Baptiſm in ſtead of Circumciſion: as may be apparent by obſerving the time of the Angel Gabriels appearing, and meſſage to his father Zacharias, in the preceding Kalendar, and it ſhall be to the full explained and proved hereafter, when we come to treat of the time of our Saviours birth.

§ And they called his name Zacharias.

A thing hardly to be paralſel'd again in all the Scripture, that a child ſhould be named by the name of his father: an extraordinary action, in an extraordinary caſe.

Becauſe Abraham and Sarah had their new names given them at the giving of circumciſion; therefore did after-times reſerve this cuſtom to name their Children at their circumciſing.

The name was ſometime given to the child by the mother, but that was ever at the birth, and it was upon ſome weighty and ſpecial reaſon, as Gen. 29. 32, 33, 34, 35. and 30. 6, 7. &c. 1 Sam. 4. 21. 1 Chron. 4. 29. and ſometimes by the ſtanders by at the birth, as Gen. 38. 29. and 25. 25. Ruth 4. 18. but the Father at the Circumciſion, had ſtill the caſting voice, whether the name ſhould be ſo, or no; as appeareth by Jacobs changing Ben-oni into Benjamin. Now Zacharie being dumb, and the mother having given it no name at the birth, the perſons preſent undertake to call it by the name of the Father.

And now is he in circumciſing, that is the man appointed to be the firſt overthrow of Circumciſion, by bringing in Baptiſm inſtead of it.

R. Solomon from the Talmud in Sanhedrin, expoundeth Jerem. 25. 10. I will take from them the ſound of the milſtones, and the light of the candle, to this ſenſe. The ſound of the milſtones, ſignifieth the Feaſt at a Circumciſion; becauſe they ground or bruiſed Spices, for the healing of the ſore; and the light of the Candle, ſignieth the Feaſt it ſelf. Thus do they confeſs a decay of Circumciſion to be foretold by the Prophet, and yet they ſtick not to deny moſt ſtiffly, that Circumciſion muſt ever decay.

Verſ. 63. [He wrote ſaying] That is, expreſſing, or To this purpoſe, as Exod. 18. 6. And Jethro ſaid to Moſes, I Jethro come unto thee: That is, he ſignified ſo much by Letter; as the ſerious viewing of the ſtory will neceſſarily evince. And ſo 2 King. 5. 6. And he brought the Letter to the King of Iſrael, ſaying; not that Naaman that brought the Letter, ſpake the words that follow, but the Letter it ſelf ſpake them.

[John] The Lord hath been gracious. A name moſt fit for him that was to be the firſt Preacher of the Kingdom of grace, and to point out him that was grace it ſelf. Rabbi Jochanan ſayd, what is the name of the Meſſias? Some ſaid Haninah, Grace, as it is ſaid, I will not give you Haninah, that is, the Meſſias who ſhall be called gracious, Jer. 16. 13. Talmud bab. in Peſach. cap. 4.

Verſ. 64. [And his mouth was opened] Infidelity had cloſed his mouth, and now faith or believing doth open it again: And herein, may this caſe of Zachary be fitly compared with the like of Moſes, Exod. 4. For he for diſtruſt is in danger of his life, as Zachary for the ſame fault is ſtruk dumb: but upon the circumciſing of his child, and recovery of his faith, the danger is removed; as Zacharies dumbneſs is at ſuch a time and occaſion; as Pſal. 116. 10. He believeth, and therefore doth he ſpeak. And the tongue of the dumb doth ſing, Eſa. 35. 6.

[And his tongue] Our Engliſh hath added looſed for illuſtration, as alſo hath the French; and ſome ſay it is found in ſome Copies, λυθεὶσα. But firſt, no ſuch word is expreſſed either in the Syrian, Arabick, Vulgar Latine, Italian, Eraſmus, or other Tranſlators. Nor ſecondly, needeth there any ſuch word to make a perfect ſenſe, but it may well help the ſimple and vulgar capacity, what our Engliſh hath added.

Verſ. 66.

Verſ. 66. [I laid them up in their hearts] It could not but affect all that heard of this ſtrange birth of the Baptiſt with wonder and amazement, and ſingular obſervation, both in regard that ſo many and great miracles were wrought in this time, when miracles were ſo much abated and decayed: as alſo in conſideration, that there was never birth before that had ſo many concomitants of wonder and miraculouſneſs, as the birth of this child. Not of Iſaac the glorious Patriach, not of Moſes the great Prophet, nor of any other whatſoever, that had been in former times.

[And the hand of the Lord was with him] Either the ſpecial favour and aſſiſtance of the Lord, as Ezra 7.6. and 8.22,&c. or the gift of Prophecy at capable years, as 1 Sam. 3. 19. for ſo the hand of the Lord doth ſignifie, Ezek. 1. 3. & 37. 1. & 40. 1. Pſal. 80. 17. 1 Chron. 28. 19.

Verſ. 68. [Redeemed] Greek, Ἐποίησε λύτρωσιν, He hath made or wrought redemption: In the very phraſe implying a price paid, for ſo the word λύτρωσις importeth. It is uſed again, Chapter 2. 38. and by the LXX, Pſal. 111. 9. and 130. 7. and by Theodotion for ſatisfaction, Prov. 6. 35.

Verſ. 69. [An horn of Salvation] Pſal. 18. 1. 2 Sam. 22. 3.

Verſ. 70. [Which have been ſince the World began] Adams calling his wives name Eve, or life, in apprehenſion of the promiſe of the ſeed of the woman, that ſhould break the head of the Serpent: Eves calling her Sons name Cain, a purchaſe; becauſe ſhe had obtained a man, even the Lord, or the Lord to become a man; and her naming her other Son Seth, or ſetled, &c. theſe were Prophecies that ſpake of Chriſt, from the beginning of the world.

Verſ. 71. [That we ſhould be ſaved from our enemies] This hath ſweet reference to the promiſe given at the beginning of the World; from which time he had traced Prophecies in the verſe preceding. I will put enmity betwixt thee and the woman, and between thy ſeed, and her ſeed: He ſhall break thine head, Gen. 3.15. Where in the former words of the verſe, I will ſet enmity, &c. there is an expreſſion who are our enemies; namely, the Serpent and his ſeed: and in the latter, he ſhall break thine head; there is an intimation how we ſhall be ſaved; namely, by Chriſts breaking the head and power of Satan. So that the former verſe and this being laid together, they ariſe unto this ſenſe, that all the Prophets from Adam and upward, had their eye upon the promiſe in that garden, and ſpake of ſalvation and delivered by Chriſt, by his breaking the head, and deſtroying the kingdom of the Devil.

Verſ. 76. [The Prophet of the Higheſt] As Aaron to Moſes, Exod. 7. 1. Prophecy had been now very long decayed, and but little thereof had been under the ſecond Temple: it is now reviving in an extraordinary manner: and this child is to be the firſt of this race of Prophets that is in riſing, and to be the Harbinger of Chriſt himſelf.

Verſ. 77. [To give knowledge of ſalvation by remiſſion, &c.] The knowledge of ſalvation that the Law held forth at the firſt view, was by legal righteouſneſs, and abſolute performance of what was commanded: but John who was to begin the Goſpel, brought in another Doctrine, and gave the people knowledge of ſalvation by another way; namely, by the remiſſion of ſins, as Rom. 4. 6, 7. And this is the tenor of the Goſpel.

Verſ. 78. [The day ſpring from an high] Greek: Ἀνατολὴ, uſed by the LXX to tranſlate צמח, The branch, Eſa. 4. 2. Jer. 23.5. Zech. 3. 9. & 6. 12. the name of Chriſt, and ſo it may be underſtood of Chriſts perſonal coming and appearance amongſt men: as God is ſaid to have viſited Sarah, Gen. 21. 1. that is, not only in merciful dealing with her, as to give her a child, but alſo in perſonally coming unto her in viſible appearance, as Chapter 18. 14. At the time appointed I will return, &c. Or it may be taken in connexion to the ſenſe of the Verſes preceding: That after the defect of Prophecy, the dawning of that gift, and after the darkneſs of the Doctrine of Salvation, as it was in the Law, the day-ſpring of it from an high came now to viſit us, in the brightneſs of the Goſpel.

Verſ. 80. [And was in the deſerts] Of Ziph and Maon, 1 Sam. 23.14. 25. which were places not far from Hebron, where John was born; Joſh. 15. 54, 55. His education was not in the Schools at Jeruſalem, but in theſe plain Country Towns and Villages in the Wilderneſs.

[Till the day of his ſhewing unto Iſrael] That is, when at thirty years of age he was to be brought to the Sanctuary ſervice; Numb. 4.3. to which he did not apply himſelf as the cuſtom was, but betook himſelf to another courſe.

CHRIST born; publiſhed to the Shepherds; rejoyced in by Angels; circumciſed; preſented in the Temple; confeſſed by Simeon and Anna.

Reaſon of the Order.

THE dependence of the beginning of this Section upon the end of that that went before, doth even prove and confirm it ſelf. For after the ſtory of the birth of Chriſts forerunner, and the relation of what happened and befel at that time, what could be expected to come next in order, but the birth of Chriſt himſelf? Eſpecially, ſince none of the Evangeliſts mention any thing that came between.

Harmony and Explanation.

Ships ſhall come from the coaſts of Chittim, and ſhall afflict Aſhur, and ſhall afflict Heber, Numb. 24. 24.

THAT by Chittim is meant Italy, or the Romans, it is not only the general opinion of the Jews, as may be ſeen in their Targums, and in other writers, but of the moſt Chriſtians alſo, yea of the Romaniſts themſelves, whom the latter part of the verſe doth ſo nearly pinch: As ſee their vulgar Latine, and Lyranus upon the place.

This Propheſie was fulfilled when the power of Rome firſt ſet her foot upon the neck of the Hebrews by the conqueſt of Pompey: but eſpecially when ſhe tyrannized over Chriſt, the chief child of Eber, even before, and at his birth, as in this ſtory, but chiefly in condemning him to death, as in the ſtory of his paſſion.

As Jacob had before told that the Jews at Meſſias his coming ſhould be under the Subjection of a Forain Nation, ſo doth Balaam in this Propheſie ſhew who that Nation ſhould be. And this the more ancient and more honeſt Jews took notice of, and reſolved that Chriſt ſhould come in the time of the Roman Empire, and near to the deſtruction of the Temple by it: So in the Talmud they queſtion What is the name of Meſſias? Some anſwer, Hhevara Leprous, and he ſitteth among the poor in the gates of Rome carrying their ſickneſſes, Sanhedrin.

The Chaldee Paraphraſt likewiſe on Eſa. 11.4. readeth thus, With the ſpeech of his lips ſhall Meſſias ſlay Romulus the wicked one: or the wicked Roman, ſhewing at once his opinion of Chriſts coming in the time of the Romans, and alſo of the Romans being ὁ πονηρὸς, the wicked one, after a ſingular manner. Auguſtus was the ſecond Emperor of the Romans, or rather, the firſt that was intire Monarch: for Julius Cæſar his Uncle and Predeceſſor, had hardly injoyed any Monarchical government at all, nor did Auguſtus of many years neither: till he had outed Lepidus, and overcome Anthony, which were copartners with him in the dominion.

(a) Dion.
(b) Sueton.

His name Auguſtus was given to him for his worthy adminiſtration of the Commonwealth: For before-time he was called (a) Cæpias, and (b) Thurinus, and Octavianus, and had like to have been named Romulus, as a ſecond founder of the City, but by the advice of Munacius Plancus he was named Auguſtus, which importeth Sacredneſs and reverence.

5. Shall

§ That all the world ſhould be Taxed.

To ſo vaſt an extent was the Roman Empire now grown, from Parthia to England, and they two alſo included, that it was a world rather then one dominion: And ſo did their own Authors boaſt it in thoſe times: as, Cæſar Regit omnia terris: Diviſum imperium cum Jove: Totum circumſpicit orbem: Terrarum orbis imperium, and ſuch like ſpeeches uſual among them, both in Poeſie and Proſe. This huge and unweldy body, of ſo large and ſpacious a dominion, Auguſtus had now reduced to the healthful temper of peace and quietneſs: which is the more remarkable, by how much the more wars had been more frequent, and more bloody but a little before. For never had that Empire felt ſo great diſtemper within it ſelf, as it had done of latter times, in the civil wars betwixt Sylla and Marius, betwixt Julius and Pompey, betwixt Auguſtus and Antony: not to mention the continual wars that it had abroad. It had not been very long before this time that the Evangeliſt ſpeaketh of, when both Rome it ſelf, and the reſt of the world was at that pitiful plight that Polybius ſpeaketh of, That the Romans were forced to ſend to Ptolomy, King of Egypt, for a ſupply of corn, becauſe there was a great ſcarcity and dearth among them. For in Italy all their corn was deſtroyed even to the gates of Rome, by the Souldiers, and abroad there was no help nor ſupply to be had, there being wars in all parts of the world. But now is there an univerſal Peace, not only in the Roman Empire [ſo that the Temple of Janus was ſhut up, which it never uſed to be when any wars at all were ſtirring] but if we will believe Crantzius, even in thoſe parts and Countries, where the Roman power had not yet ſet her foot; as Denmark, Norway, and thoſe Northern Climates, there was ſo great a peace, that in ſome places there, Money and Jewels were hung up by the high way, and there was neither Theif nor Enemy to take them away. Such times became the coming of Shiloh the Peaceable one, *Iſa.*6. 9. And ſuch a beginning was befitting the Goſpel of Peace.

Virgil, Ovid, Florus.

Περὶ Πρεσβειῶν, cap.2.

Auguſtus having brought the Empire under this quiet obedience, like a politick Prince will have it all taxed, and brought into the Subſidy Book, that he might know the extent of his command, of his ſtrength and of his revenues.

And thus we ſee and may obſerve Rome come to its intire and abſolute Monarchy but at this time, and the ſtate and power that ſhould perſecute Chriſt in his Members to the end of the world, beginning and born as it were, at the very ſame time when Chriſt himſelf.

Auguſtus, as (c) Tacitus recordeth of him, did cauſe an account to be taken of all the Empire, and himſelf had a Book and Record of it written out with his own hand. Opes publice continebantur: quantum civium ſociorumque in armis: quot claſſes, regna, Provinciæ, tributa aut vectigalia, & neceſſitates ac largitiones, quæ cuncta, ſua manu perſcripſerat Auguſtus: which contained the publick revenue, the number of Citizens or confederates in the Armies: what Shipping: Kingdoms: Provinces: Tributes or Subſidies: and relief money, and beneficences. Dion alſo in the life of Auguſtus, and much alſo about this time, mentioneth a tax laid by him upon thoſe that dwelt in Italy, whoſe eſtates were not leſs then five thouſand Seſterces: and poorer then theſe he taxed not.

Ver.2. This taxing was firſt made when Cyrenius was Governour of Syria.

The Tax is dated by the time of Cyrenius his Governing of Syria: Firſt, Becauſe Judea was annexed to Syria, as a member of it: and in naming the one, the other is included. Secondly, Hereby the loſs and want of the Scepter and Law-giver in the Tribe of Judah is the better ſeen, for the ſubjection of the Jews by this is ſhewed to be in the third degree. They ſubject to Herod, Herod to Cyrenius, and Cyrenius to Auguſtus. Thirdly, From Syria had Iſrael had their greateſt afflictions, that ever they had in their own Land; as by Gog and Magog, *Ezek.*38. or the houſe of the North, *Dan.*11. And Luke deriving the taxing of the Jews from Syria, calleth thoſe things to mind: and layeth as it were the laſt verſe of *Dan.*11. and the firſt of *Dan.*12. together.

The taxing is ſaid firſt to be made in his time: As firſt, Denying that ever there was ſuch an univerſal taxation in the Empire before, for the Empire was never in that caſe of univerſal quietneſs to be taxed before: And ſecondly, Importing the taxes of that Country that followed after: [Auguſtus at this very time laying the platform, ſubjection and ſubmiſſion of the Empire for ſucceeding poſterities:] And here, [let it be ſaid again] in exact propriety beginneth the Roman Monarchy: and is far from being any of the four mentioned, *Dan.*2. or 7.

Joſephus (c) mentioneth Cyrenius his coming into Syria, after Archelaus his death, To do juſtice and to aſſeſs and tax every mans goods, and he came into Judea, which was now annexed to Syria, and did ſo there: Now Archelaus reigned after Herod, *Matth.*2. and reigned till (d) Antiq. lib. 18. cap 1.

(d) Antiq. lib. 17. cap. 15. Christ was about ten years old, for ten years he reigned, as saith the same (d) Josephus: and therefore either Cyrenius came twice into Syria to lay taxations, as Funccius concludeth, or else Josephus faileth here, as he doth not seldom elsewhere in Chronology.

Ver. 3. And all went to be taxed.

This taxing was first by Kingdoms and Countries, then by Cities and Towns, and then by poll: First, Kingdoms and Provinces were divided one from another. Secondly, Cities and Towns in every Kingdom and Province, were also particularized, and notice given that every one should repair to the place to which by stock and descent they did belong. Thirdly, The people being thus convened in their several Cities, their names were taken and inrolled, and so the Greek word here used doth signifie in the neerest propriety. Then did they make profession of Subjection to the Roman Empire, either by some set form of words, or at least by payment of some certain sum of money which was laid upon every poll.

And now, first, are the Jews entring under the yoke of that subjection which they never cast off again, but it pressed them into a final desolation even to this day. Secondly, They had voluntarily brought this misery upon themselves in calling in the Romans in their civil wars. Thirdly, No spark of their former freedom and authority is left among them, for their King and Law-giver is clean gone. Fourthly, They are now to be inrolled, and registred for vassals to all succeeding generations. Fifthly, They must now leave their own occasions, and many of them their own houses to attend their own bondage and misery: And thus It is in the words of our Rabbins, if thou see a generation that hath many afflictions, then look for the Redeemer: from *Isa.*59.17,18. *Jer.*30.6,7, &c. D. Kimch. in Isa. 59.

Ver. 4. And Joseph also went up from Galilee, &c.

Whether it were for the fear of Herod that had a murderous spite at the stock of David, or for the more commodiousnes for his trade, or for whatsoever else it was that Joseph a Bethlehemite became a resident in Galilee, surely it was the wondrous disposal of the Lord that a decree from Rome should bring him now from Galilee to Bethlehem, that the Propheſie of Christs being born in that place might take effect.

Ver. 7. She brought forth his first born.

This is to be understood according to the propriety and Phrase of the Law, agreeable to which it speaketh. Now the Law speaking of the first-born, regardeth not whether any were born after or no, but only that none was born before. As Hur is called the first-born of Ephrata, 1 *Chron.*2.5. and yet no mention of any child that she had after: So Christ is here called the first-born, not as though she had any children besides, but to shew that in him was fulfilled what was typified by the first-born under the Law, who was as King, Priest, and Prophet, in the Family, and holy to the Lord.

And so likewise in that speech of Matthew, chap. 1.25. He knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born: it implieth not that he knew her after, for the word till inforceth no such thing, as see the Geneva notes upon the place; but the Evangelists intention is to clear the birth and generation of Christ from any carnal mixture of Joseph and Mary, before he was born.

And here it is not unseasonable to look a little narrowly into the time of our Saviours birth, namely, the time of the year, at which he was born, as we have done into the year it self, or the time of the world, heretofore.

The year of the world, as we observed then, was, 3928.

The year of Augustus is neither so necessary to seek, nor so easie to find: partly, because there is some difference among Historians about the number of the years of his Reign, and partly because there may be some about the year of Tiberius, in which Christ was Baptized, from which we should count backward: For though it be said that John came Baptizing in his fifteenth year, *Luk.*3.1. yet may it be questionable, whether he Baptized Christ in that year or no: But not to swarve from the most common consent of Roman Historians, that say that Augustus Reigned six and fifty years, and of Christians that hold that Christ was baptized in the fifteenth of Tiberius, then may it be readily concluded that he was born in the forty second of Augustus.

The time of the year at which he was born, hath been much mistaken, being concluded upon, at the latter end of December: This mistake did first arise by another: for it being misunderstood that Zacharias was the High Priest, and that he was in Sancto Sanctorum, on the expiation day, when the Angel Gabriel appeared unto him, they could do no leſs then conclude, that John was born in the middle of Summer, and Chriſt in the middle of Winter. A time very unfit for people to travail to their ſeveral Cities to be taxed, but far more unfit for Shepherds to lye abroad in the fields all night.

For finding out therefore the true and right time of his Nativity, theſe things are to be taken into conſideration.

Firſt, That the time that Chriſt lived here upon the earth, was two and thirty years and a half, exactly: And ſo long did David reign in Jeruſalem, 2 *Sam.*5.4,5.

This time was divided into two unequal parts: twenty nine years compleat he ſpent as a private man before he was baptized, for it is ſaid, he began to be thirty, or was entring upon this thirtieth at his Baptiſm, Luke 3.23. And three years and an half from his Baptiſm to his death: This ſum was preciſely told of by the Angel Gabriel, Dan. 9. 27. In half that week ſhall he cauſe ſacrifice and oblation to ceaſe: And is plainly parcelled out by Paſsovers and other circumſtances of time, *Matth.*4.2. *Joh.*1.29. 35.44. & 2.1.13. & 5.1. & 6.4. & 13.1.

Secondly, That the time of Chriſts death was at Eaſter, or their Paſsover, as is moſt plain by all the Evangeliſts.

Thirdly, That he living juſt two and thirty years and a half, and dying at Eaſter; it muſt needs follow that he was born about the middle of the month Tiſri; which anſwereth to part of our September: And it is not only probable, but alſo neceſſary, if he lived thirty two years and a half exactly; that then as he died upon the fifteenth day of the month Abib, or at the Paſsover; ſo that he was born about the fifteenth day of Tiſri, at the Feaſt of Tabernacles: a month and a Feaſt, that had been exceedingly renowned in ancient times. In this month the World had begun, and ſin had entred into it. In this month were all the Fathers born before the Flood, as the Jews aver, and reaſon confirms it. From this month began the circle of the year from the Creation, to the redemption out of Egypt. From this month began the typical year of Jubile in the ages after. And in this month were the three famous Feaſts of Trumpets, of Expiation, and of Tabernacles. And like glorious things may be obſerved upon the Feaſt of Tabernacles it ſelf: At that very time did Iſrael fall upon the making of the Tabernacle in the wilderneſs, *Exod.*35. At this very time was the conſecration of the Temple, 1 King. 1. 8, 2. And at this very time was our Saviour born, and began to carry the Tabernacle of his fleſh; and at this very time was he Baptized, and began the Miniſtery of the Goſpel. So that here appeareth one addition more to the preſent miſery and ſubjection of the Jews at the time of this tax; that not only they muſt leave all their occaſions, to wait upon their own taxing, and promote their own bondage, but that they muſt neglect a main part of the ſervice of God, the Feaſt of Expiation, and the Feaſt of Tabernacles, as Zech. 14.16,17. to attend the Conqueror, and their own thraldom.

And now, it being conſidered that John the Baptiſt was but half a year older then our Saviour, it will be obſervable how the four points of the year, as it may be ſo ſaid, were renowned with their conception and nativity. John conceived at the Summer Solſtice, and our Saviour at the Winter. John born at the vernal Equinox, and our Saviour at the Autumnal.

§. And wrapped him in ſwadling cloaths.

This paſſage is one ground-work whereupon Expoſitors conclude that Chriſt was born without pain to his mother: for that ſhe performed the Midwives part her ſelf, and none to help her. A ſecond is this, That he was born without his Mothers pain, becauſe he was conceived without her pleaſure. A third Argument may be fetched from the bleſſing of propagation given to our firſt Parents in the Garden. And a fourth from the example of the delivery of the Hebrew women in Egypt: For firſt, When God gave this bleſſing to Adam and Eve in their innocency, increaſe and multiply, Gen. 1. 28. it inabled them to beget children agreeable to their own perfection; that is, holy, righteous, and without any ſymptoms or conſequents of ſin, either in themſelves, or in the mothers. But they never begat any child thus, becauſe of their ſudden fall. What, did this firſt bleſſing then utterly fail, and never take effect, in its proper ſenſe and full extent? Could ſuch emphatical words of God to man in innocency, fall to the ground without performance? No, they took place in the ſecond Adam, who was born according to the full extent and intent of that bleſſing to our innocent parents; in perfect holineſs and righteouſneſs, and without pain to his mother. Secondly, If the Hebrew women in Egypt had ſo quick and eaſie a delivery, as that they were not like to other women: much more may we think the travail and delivery of the Virgin to have been quick, lively, miraculous and painleſs; as Eſa. 66.7. Before her pain came, ſhe was delivered of a man child.

§. Becauſe

§. Becauſe there was no room for them in the Inn.

At the return out of Babylon, the children of Bethlehem were a hundred twenty three perſons, Ezra 2.21. Now that being four hundred and fifty years paſt, and ſomewhat above; to what a multitude might the ſtock or breed of that City be grown by this time of Chriſts birth? This multitude preſſing together to their own City, according to the Emperors edict, the weakeſt go to the walls, and Joſeph and Mary are excluded out of the Inn: and thus the free-woman and her Son, are caſt out of doors, as the bond-woman and her Son had been, *Gen.*21.

Verſ. 8. And there were Shepherds, &c.

The Patriarchs to whom Chriſt was more eſpecially promiſed, were of this vocation, *Gen.*47.3. eſpecially Abraham and David, to whom the promiſe was more clearly made; peculiarly David who was feeding Sheep near to Bethlehem, when he was taken a Father and type of Chriſt, 1 *Sam.*16.11,12. And it doth illuſtrate the exactneſs of the performance the more, and doth Harmonize with the giving of it the better, when to Shepherds it is firſt revealed, as to Shepherds it was firſt promiſed. Compare this with the Viſions of Jacob and Moſes with their flocks, *Gen.*31.10. *Exod.*3.3. and of Sampſons mother in the field.

§. Keeping watch over the flock by night.

Greek, [Keeping the watches of the night.] For the night was divided by the Jews into four watches of three hours a piece. The firſt, or beginning of watches, is mentioned, *Lam.*2.19. The ſecond, and third, Luke 12.38. The fourth, *Matth.*14.25. this was called alſo the morning watch, *Exod.*14.24. Howbeit, the Talmud, from *Judg.*7.19. divideth it only into three. Be it the one or the other, theſe Shepherds it ſeemeth obſerved ſuch an order, as that they watched by courſe, while others ſlept: or not to take it ſo very ſtrictly, they lay now in the fields, and watched their flocks all night, which had been in a manner impoſſible to have done, in the deep of winter, at which time our Kalendar hath placed Chriſts Nativity.

Verſ. 9. The glory of the Lord ſhone, &c.

That is an exceeding great glory, for ſo do the Hebrews heighten their expreſſions, as Cedars of the Lord, that is, goodly Cedars: Such an exceeding great glory ſhone about Paul, *Act.*26.13. That at noon day, this in the dead of the night.

Verſ. 13. A multitude of the Heavenly hoſt, &c.

It might not unproperly be rendred, The multitude; as importing that all the Quire of Angels, or the whole multitude of that Celeſtial Militia, was now knit together in a conſort, for the praiſes and acknowledgment of Chriſt: according to that of the Apoſtle, *Heb.*1.6. When he bringeth in the firſt-begotten into the world, he ſaith, And let all the Angels of God worſhip him. And thus as all the Angels ſang at the beginning of the old World, or at the Creation, Job 38.7. So do they at the beginning of the new, and of the redemption.

Angels are called the Heavenly hoſt, 1 King. 22.19. Joh. 25.3. And in this ſenſe, Rab. Menahem underſtandeth, *Gen.*2.1. Thus were the Heavens and the Earth finiſhed, and all their Hoſt, that is, ſaith he, the Angels whoſe Creation Moſes nameth not elſewhere.

Verſ. 14. Glory to God in the Higheſt, &c.

The laſt words of this verſe, the Vulgar Latine readeth, to men of good will; contrary to the Syrian, Arabick, and to the ancient Greek Copies, as appeareth by Greg. Nazianzen, Orat. 42. Andreas Jeruſolomitanus, in Orat. de Salutatione Angeli, &c.

The whole Verſe is but one Propoſition or Axiom, in which the laſt clauſe of all is the ſubject, and the two former are predicated of it. And it lieth in this ſenſe, The good will of God to men ſhewed in the Incarnation of our Saviour, when God himſelf diſdained not to take the nature of man, is glory to him in the Higheſt, and is peace upon the Earth: And that this is the genuine and proper meaning and poſture of the words, may be obſerved; Firſt, By the conjunction καὶ, And, put between, Glory to God, and Peace on Earth,

Earth, and none between them, and good will. And ſecondly, the very ſenſe and matter it ſelf inforceth this conſtruction: For firſt, Εὐδοκία ἐν ἀνθρώποις beareth the ſame ſenſe here, that Εὐδοκία ἐν χριστῷ doth, Matth. 3.17. & 17.5. of Gods good-will, or well-pleaſedneſs with men. Now, ſecondly, this well-pleaſedneſs of his with men, was expreſſed and evidenced at this time, in the birth of our Saviour, in that God had aſſumed the nature of men, and it had never been ſo cleared and demonſtrated before. So that, thirdly, the birth of Chriſt being the occaſion of the Angels ſinging this ſong, the good will of God towards men revealed, in this his birth, muſt needs be the ſubject of their Song. And then fourthly, the other two things expreſſed in the two other clauſes, glory on High, and peace on Earth, muſt needs be underſtood as Predicates; ſeeing that being laid, to this expreſſion of God of his good will towards men, they are but as fruits and conſequences of it. And this reading and conſtruction, how facil and plain is it, in compariſon of theſe intricacies and obſcurities, that thoſe readings bring with them, that either break the verſe into three diſtinct axioms, or into two, or that read Εὐδοκίας, in the Genitive caſe, or Εὐδοκίᾳ, in the Dative, as may be ſeen in Expoſitors.

Now how the good-will, and well-pleaſedneſs of God towards men, exhibited and ſhewed in the incarnation and birth of our Saviour, did glorifie God in the higheſt, in all his attributes, of wiſdom, truth, juſtice, power, mercy, &c. And how it wrought peace on earth, betwixt man and himſelf, and man and Angels, and man and man, and man and his own conſcience, might be ſhewed at large, if we were common-placing in ſtead of commenting.

Ver. 21. And when eight days were accompliſhed for the circumciſing, &c.

It was neceſſary that Chriſt ſhould be circumciſed, that he might both bear the badge of a child of Abraham, and have upon him an obligation to the keeping of the Law: For he that was circumciſed was a debtor to the whole Law, Gal. 5.3.

Ver. 22. And when the days of her purification, &c.

At forty days old, Levit. 12.1,2,3,4. the Lord cometh to his own Temple: and by an old man, and an old woman, is proclaimed both to young and old, that expected redemption. Herod had heard no tidings of him as yet, by the Wiſmen, for otherwiſe this had been an opportunity for him to have put in practice his bloody and malicious intent. Mary is purified according to the cuſtom of the Law, although ſhe had contracted no pollution, by her childing and bringing forth; partly, that Chriſt in nothing might be wanting to the Law, and partly, that this might be an occaſion, for the firſt publick declaration of him, by Simeon and Anna.

Ver. 25. A man whoſe name was Simeon.

This Simeon ſeemeth to be he whom the Jewiſh Authors name for the ſon of Hillel: and who was the firſt that bare the title of Rabban, the higheſt title that was given to their Doctors, and which was given but to ſeven of them.

Hillel was the famous head or principal of that School that is ſo renowned in the Jewiſh Authors by the name of Beth Hillel. Out of which [as they relate] there came thouſands of Scholars, but fourſcore eſpecially of moſt renown. Hillel the old they are the words of the Talmud) had fourſcore Scholars. Thirty of them were fit, in whom the divine Majeſty ſhould reſt, as it did on Moſes: Thirty of them were worthy for whom the Sun ſhould ſtand ſtill, as it did for Joſhua: and twenty were of a middle rank between. The greateſt of them all, was Jonathan ben Uzziel, that Paraphraſed the Prophets in the Chaldee Tongue, and the loweſt of them was Johannan the ſon of Zaccai.

Such a Father had this our Simeon, and ſo renowned, but himſelf infinitely more renowned, in the thing that is now in hand, and in his having the Saviour of the world in his arms and heart: Now this is the Genealogy of this man, as it is Recorded by the Jews themſelves: Hillel begat Simeon, who was firſt titled Rabban. Rabban Simeon begat Rabban Gamaliel, the Tutor of Paul. Rabban Gamaliel begat Rabban Simeon the ſecond. Rabban Simeon the ſecond, begat Rabban Gamaliel the ſecond. Rabban Gamaliel begat Rabban Simeon the third. Rabban Simeon the third, begat Rabbi Juda the holy. Rabbi Juda begat Rabban Gamaliel the third.

Theſe ſix Rabbans were of the line of Hillel, beſides whom there was a ſeventh, that bare the ſame title, of another ſtock, Rabban Johanan ben Zaccai.

But it may be juſtly queſtioned, if Simeon were the man we ſuppoſe, namely the Son of Hillel, and the Father of Gamaliel, and if he were ſo holy and devout a man, and confeſſed Chriſt, as this Evangeliſt relateth of him, how came it to paſs that his Son Gamaliel was was ſo far contrary, as appeareth by the education of Paul, in Phariſaical righteouſneſs, and perſecution of the Truth?

Anſw. Firſt, It is no ſtrange thing for holy Fathers to have wicked Children: witneſs Eli, David, Joſaphat, and common experience.

Secondly, It was thirty years from Simeons acknowledging of Chriſt, to Gamaliels education of Paul, or little leſs, and ſo much time might wear out the notice of his Fathers action, if he had taken any notice of it: eſpecially, his Father dying ſhortly after he had made ſo glorious a confeſſion.

§. Waiting for the conſolation of Iſrael.

It is an Article of the Jewiſh Creed, To believe the coming of the Meſſias, and to wait and wait for his coming, although he defer it: which fooliſhly they do even to this day, after ſixteen hundred years expired ſince he came. But Simeons expectation is neither ſo vain nor ſo uncertain: For, beſides the general expectation of the whole Nation, that the Meſſias ſhould appear about that time, Luke 19. 11. he had it by a ſpecial and aſſured revelation, *ver.*26.

The coming of Chriſt, is called The conſolation of Iſrael, from *Iſa.*49.13. & 52.9. & 66. 13. Jer. 31. 13. Zech. 1.17. and ſuch like places, which the Jews do not only apply to the coming of the Meſſias, but alſo in their Talmud, queſtioning what his name ſhould be when as he came, ſome conclude it to be Menahem, The Comforter, from Lam. 1. 16. In Sanhedr.

* As *Pſal.*89.48 and to ſee corruption. Pſal. 16 10.

Ver. 26. *That he ſhould not ſee * death before he had ſeen the Lords Chriſt.*

This was the time when the Nation expected that Meſſias ſhould appear, Luke 19.11. and began to look for redemption near at hand, Luke 2.38. The Angel Gabriel to Daniel, and he to the people had ſo determinately pointed out the time, Dan. 9. 26, 27. that not only Jews of all Nations are gathered to Jeruſalem, againſt the expiring of that Propheſie, *Act.*2. but alſo all the Eaſt was poſſeſſed with an opinion of a Prince to riſe about theſe times, of ſupereminent honour, glory, and dominion. Baron. in Appar. &c. Sueton. Virgil, &c.

Simeon having learned the time with the reſt of the ſtudious of the Nation, out of the Scripture, hath the certainty of it ſealed up to him by the ſpirit of Propheſie, which aſſured him that the time of ſo great expectation was ſo near at hand, that he though he were old, yet ſhould not die, till he had ſeen what he deſired: And thus Propheſie, that was departed from Iſrael ſo long ago, is returning and dawning to it again, to be as the morning Star, to tell that the Sun of righteouſneſs would riſe ere long.

Ver. 35. Yea a ſword ſhall pierce through thine own ſoul alſo.

Theſe words ſeem to be of the ſame tenor and intent with thoſe of our Saviour to Peter, *Joh.*21.18. and to tell Mary of her ſuffering martyrdom for Chriſt and the Goſpel, as thoſe do of his. For Simeon having in the preceding verſe related, how Chriſt both in his perſon and in the Goſpel, ſhould be as a ſign to be ſpoken againſt, perſecuted, and oppoſed, yea, ſaith he, and thou his Mother alſo, for his and the Goſpels ſake, ſhalt drink of the ſame cup, and partake of the ſame lot, for the ſword of perſecution ſhall go through thy life alſo (for ſo the word ψυχὴ doth often ſignifie.)

§. That the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed.

This clauſe is linked to the latter end of the verſe preceding, and reacheth beyond the Parentheſis that lieth before it, and in conjuncture with the clauſe before that, it maketh this ſenſe, that Chriſts being ſet up for a ſign to be ſpoken againſt, or perſecution for the Goſpels ſake, ſhould detect many mens tempers and affections, which were not deſcried nor revealed before, and diſcover what malignity, or ſincerity to him and to his cauſe, is in their hearts, as *Matth.*13.21. and as it is at this day.

Verſ. 36. The daughter of Phanuel, of the Tribe of Aſer.

Hannah a Widdow indeed, as 1 Tim. 5. 3, 5. that is, not by divorce, but by the death of her husband, and now of above an hundred years of age, is choſen alſo, and actuated by the Holy Ghoſt, to give teſtimony of Chriſt as Simeon had done, that out of the mouth of two ſuch witneſſes, of either ſex one, the thing might be eſtabliſhed, and the party witneſſed unto, might be the more taken notice of. Her Father Phanuel is named, as either either being a noted and well known man in those times, or for the significancy of his name, made good in her, in that she now beholdeth the Lord face to face, as Gen. 32.30,31. And thus the New Testament doth by this Prophetess, as the Old Testament doth by divers of the Prophets, in naming her and her Father with her, as Isa. 1. 1. Jer. 1. 1. Joel 1. 1. &c. Phanuel her Father was a Galilean, for in Galilee lay the Tribe of Aser, and from thence cometh a Prophetess now, to declare and publish the great Prophet, that must once appear thence to the wonder of the Nation.

Ver. 37. Which departed not from the Temple.

Her constant continuance there might be, either because she was a poor Widow, and so maintained upon the foundation, or because she was a Prophetess, and so lodged in some of the buildings or chambers belonging to the Temple. For so might women do, as 2 Chron. 22. 11, 12.

SECTION VII.

S. MATTHEW. CHAP. II.

Christ at two years old is visited and honoured by the Wisemen: The Children of Bethlehem murthered. Herod dyeth soon after. Christ returneth out of Egypt.

NOw when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of (a) Judea, in the days of Herod the King, behold there came (b) Wisemen from the East to Jerusalem.

2. Saying, where is he that is born King of the Jews? For we have seen his Star in the East, and are come to worship him.

3. When Herod the King had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.

4. And when he had gathered all the chief Priests and (c) Scribes of the people together, he demanded of them, where Christ should be born?

5. They said unto him, in Bethlehem of Judea: For thus it is written by the Prophet.

6. And thou Bethlehem (d) in the Land of Juda, art not the (e) least among the Princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governour, that shall rule my people Israel.

7. Then Herod, when he had privily called the Wisemen, enquired diligently of them, what time the Star appeared.

8. And he sent them to (f) Bethlehem, and said, Go and search diligently for the young child, and when ye have found him; bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also.

9. When they had heard the King, they departed, and lo the Star which they saw in the East, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was.

10. When they saw the Star, they rejoyced with (g) exceeding great joy.

11. And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his Mother, and fell down and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts (h) Gold, and Frankincense, and Myrrhe.

12. And being warned of God in a dream, that they should not return to Herod; they departed into their own Country another away.

13. And when they were departed, behold, the Angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise and take the young child, and his Mother and flee into Egypt; and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young Child to destroy him.

14. When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt.

15. And was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the Prophet, saying, Out of Egypt have I called my Son.

16. Then Herod when he saw that he was mocked of the Wisemen, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the Coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time he had diligently inquired of the Wisemen.

17. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremie the Prophet, saying,

18. In (i) Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation and weeping and great mourning; Rachel mourning for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not.

(a) Vulg. of Juda: and this is conceived by Jerom to be the better reading: because it is so written, ver. 6. But in this verse the Evangelist telleth, it was in Bethlehem of Judea, to distinguish it from Bethlehem in Galilee, Josh. 19. 15. and in ver. 6 he saith, it was in the land of Judah, to distinguish it from the lot of Benjamin.

(b) [wisemen] Gr. Μάγοι, which word is reserved by the Syr. Arab. Ital. and generally by all Latines, the French readeth it Sages, in the sense of our English.

(c) Γραμματεῖς, in the LXX, Exod. 5. 6. Josh. 1. 10 2 Sam. 8. 17. Jer. 36. 10. Ezr. 4. 8. and 7. 12. And Γραμματοεισαγωγεῖς, Deut. 1. 15.

(d) Γῆ Ἰούδα: for ἐν Γῇ, as John 1. 4. the Preposition is understood.

(e) the LXX, in Mic. 5. use ὀλιγοστός, speaking of smalness of number; but Matthew, ἐλάχιστος, speaking of smalness of bulk, or dignity.

(f) Bethlehem distant from Jerusalem 35 furlongs, Just. Mart. Apol. 2. Four miles, and almost an half.

(g) As שושׂ אשׂישׂ Isa. 61. 10.

(h) Gold and Frankincense they shall bring in Marchandize and also for a present to the King Messias, and for the house of the Lord, D. Kimc. on Esa. 60. 6.

(i) Rama was the birth place of Samuel, 1 Sam. 1. 19. &c.

19. But when Herod was dead, behold, an Angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joseph in Egypt.

20. Saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and go into the Land of Israel: for (k) they are dead which ſought the young childs life.

(k) Compare Exod. 4. 19.

21. And he aroſe, and took the young child and his mother, and came into the Land of Israel.

22. But when he heard that Archelaus did reign in Judea, in the room of his Father Herod; he was afraid to go thither: notwithſtanding, being warned of God in a dream, he turned aſide into the parts of Galilee.

23. And he came and dwelt in a City calleth Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken by the Prophets; He ſhall be called a Nazarite.

Reaſon of the Order.

TO confirm and prove the Order of this Section and Story, requireth ſome labour, becauſe of an opinion ancient, and current among men, that croſſeth the laying of it in this place. It hath been generally held, and believed, almoſt of every one that the Wiſemen came to Chriſt when he was but thirteen days old, and it is written in red Letters in the Kalendar, as if it were a golden truth, by the title of Epiphany, at the ſixth of January. An opinion which if it were as true as it is common, it were readily known where to place this Story of the Wiſemens coming; namely, between the Circumciſion of our Saviour, and his Preſentation in the Temple, betwixt Ver. 21 and 22 of Luke 2.

But upon ſerious and impartial examination of this opinion, theſe rubs and unliklehoods lie in the way, and make it as incredible for the improbability, as it ſeemeth venerable for its antiquity.

Firſt, to omit the length of their journey from their own Country to Bethlehem, their preparation for ſo long a journy before they ſet out, and their ſtay at Jeruſalem by the way [for I cannot think that all that paſſed there while they were there, was done in an inſtant.]

Secondly, how utterly improbable it is, that after all this hubbub at Jeruſalem upon the Wiſemens queſtion, where is the King of the Jews? And after Herods curious ſcrutiny and inquiry where the child ſhould be, and after his implacable indignation upon the Wiſemens deluding or mocking of him as he did conceive, that the child that he had thus eagerly hunted after, ſhould after all this ſtirring and ſearching come to Jeruſalem, as it were into his very mouth, and there be publikely proclaimed by Simeon and Anna in the Temple, to be the very ſame that the Wiſemen and Herod, though with different intentions, looked after; For firſt, it is to be obſerved, that it was ſeven and twenty days from the time that this opinion bringeth the Wiſemen to Bethlehem, to the time that Joſeph and Mary brought Jeſus to the Temple; now it is not imaginable, but that in all this time Joſeph, that was but at ſo few miles diſtance, ſhould hear what was done at Jeruſalem upon the Wiſemens coming thither [if ſo be they told him not themſelves] and how Herod took the matter, when he miſſed of their unexpected return. Secondly, for ought that can be found in the text to the contrary, it may be well ſuppoſed that they had their divine warning not to return again to Herod, while they were at Bethlehem, and Joſeph might well be acquainted by them with it. Thirdly, it is not to be doubted but they had diſpatched what they did at Bethlehem in far leſs time then ſeven and twenty days: and ſurely of all men they will not deny this, that will bring them out either of Arabia, or Perſia, to Bethlehem in half the time] And as little to be doubted that Herod in the compaſs of ſo much time, ſaw the diſappointment of his expectation of the Wiſemens return, and breaketh out into choler againſt the poor Infants of Bethlehem. Fourthly, now all theſe things being laid together, how ſenſeleſs a thing will it be, to make Joſeph to bring the child for whom all this buſineſs was, under the Tyrants noſe? Fifthly, or if Joſeph did not know of all theſe things, [which is almoſt impoſſible] yet how is it imaginable that Chriſt ſhould have eſcaped the Tyrant, being at Jeruſalem, and ſo publikely acknowledged and ſpoken of? It is true indeed that he might have been ſheltered by the divine power, but we ſee by his flight into Egypt, that it was not the will of God to uſe that miraculous means of his preſervation as yet, but another.

Thirdly, and which is the reaſon that hath moved me to lay this Story after our Saviours preſentation in the Temple: yea, and to ſuppoſe him to be two years old, or thereabout, when the Wiſemen came; becauſe the text ſaith in plain terms, That Herod ſent and ſlew the children from two years old and under; according to the time that he had diligently inquired of the Wiſemen: Now his inquiry was of the time of the Stars appearing, ver. 7. and he ſlew from two years old and under, according to the time that he had inquired, and therefore how can it be thought otherwiſe, then that it was two years or thereabout ſince the ſtar appeared, and conſequently ſo long ſince Chriſt was born? But that this may appear paſt all exception, and that the opinions that bring the Wiſemen to Chriſt before his preſentationin the Temple [for there are two ſeveral ones to that purpoſe, that of the thirteenth day mentioned before; and another of ſome that hold they came not ſo ſoon as on that day, but yet within the forty days of Maries lying in, or before her Purification] let it not be too tedious to the Reader, to take a view of all the Arguments that are, or can be uſed, for ought I yet underſtand, either for the confirmation of the two opinions, which we refuſe, viz. of the Wiſemens coming before Chriſt was forty days old, or for the overthrow of this which we imbrace, that he was two years old, or thereabout.

Object. 1. The very word γεννηθεὶς in Verſe 1. doth import that his birth was but newly paſt, being of that nature, as to ſignifie a thing but very lately done, or even in doing.

Anſw. This Grammatical obſervation is not conſtantly and currently true. For μνησθεὶς, Mat. 1. 18. a word of the very ſame tenſe and form, yet ſignifieth it a thing done above a quarter of a year before, and the word it ſelf γεννηθέντα, in our daily Creed, and παρωδίνται, &c. ſpeak of things paſt ſixteen hundred years ago.

Object. 2. The Star appeared two years before our Saviours birth, but the Wiſemen came not to him, till thirtheen days after.

Anſw. This Argument is uſed by ſome, but thoſe but a few; not conſidering how impoſible it was, that the Wiſemen ſhould know the exact time or his birth, but by the time of the Stars appearing. And it is not only the general opinion even of all, but alſo dictated by reaſon it ſelf, that the Star was not the Harbinger of his birth, much leſs ſo long before; but the concomitant and attendant upon it.

Object. 3. The Wiſemen came, while Mary lay in at Bethlehem, but Herod, either in policy, or for ſome other occaſion, deferred the murder of the children till two years after.

Anſw. This both the Text and common ſenſe contradicteth. For firſt, in Reaſon: what policy could there be in deferring, when the longer he forbear, the harder it would be for him to find him, for whom he ſought? Secondly, the Text telleth, that as ſoon as he ſaw himſelf mocked by the Wiſemen, he fell to the murdering of the children: and he might ſee whether he were mocked by them, or not, within a ſhort ſpace after their departure from him at Jeruſalem.

Object. 4. In that ſpeech of the Evangeliſt, Herod ſlew all the male children, from two years old and under, according to the time that he had inquired of the Wiſemen: the latter words, according to the time that he had inquired, have relation to the words, and under; and to the words from two years old. For this ſeemeth to be added by the Evangeliſt to this purpoſe, that he might ſignifie, that all under two years old were not ſlain; but only thoſe that were thereabout, and which were born before the Stars appearing, and not after. For he thought not that this royal child was born after it appeared. But all that were about two years old he ſlew; leſt if happily Chriſt had been born before it appeared, or miraculouſly grown, above the quality of ſuch an age, he might have eſcaped out of his hands. And therefore as he dilated his murther for place, comprehending the coaſts of Bethlehem under the cruelty, as well as the Town it ſelf; ſo alſo did he it for a time, ſlaying thoſe that were born, before the Stars appearing, as well as at it.

Anſ. This, as Baronius confeſſeth, is a new found gloſs upon that Text, and he took himſelf for the inventor of it, till he met with it in Janſenius, who like a great wit had jumped with him; Both ſtraining the utmoſt of their invention to gild over their Kalendar tenet, of the Wiſemens coming on the thirteenth day. But firſt to omit the ſtrange ſhape and uncouthneſs of this Expoſition, which eaſily ſheweth it ſelf to any eye that is not bleered with prejudice and partiality: As alſo, ſecondly, their confident ſcrutiny and knowledge of Herods thoughts: Let it but, thirdly, be weighed in the ballance of indifferency; what colour of ſenſe, or equality of policy can be ſeen in this carriage of Herod, to ſlay all that were born two years before the Star, and none of a day after or very few? For might he not ſuſpect that the Star was a fore-runner of the birth, as well as a conſequent; and that Chriſt might be born a week or fortnight after it, as well as before? Judge therefore how theſe men that hold, and that truly, that it appeared but juſt at Chriſts birth can handſomely ſtitch that opinion and this together.

Object. 5. But the Wiſemen found Chriſt at Bethlehem, and what ſhould he do there at two years old? For St. Luke alſo ſaith, Chap. 2. 29. that when Joſeph and Mary had performed all things according to the Law, [he meaneth at the time of her purification, when Chriſt was now but forty days old] they departed to Nazareth. So that if the Wiſemen came after theſe forty days, they muſt have found Chriſt at Nazareth, and not at Bethlehem.

Anſw. And firſt, to the queſtion, How came to be at Bethlehem at two years old? An anſwer hath been framed to this long ago, by ſome few that have been of this opinion that we imbrace; namely, that ſome of the three feſtivals in which every male was to appear before the Lord, drew his Parents, and him with them to Jeruſalem, and they took Bethlehem in the way, and there the Wiſemen find him. A reſolution with which if there were no other to be had, one might reſt ſatisfied reaſonably well; yet a more ſerious ſearching into the Text, will give a more warrantable reaſon, and better aſſurance then this, which is but one mans ſuppoſal. And that is this, that as the parents of Jeſus knew that it was neceſſary that he ſhould be born in Bethlehem, becauſe of the Prophecy that had told of it before; ſo alſo did they think it as neceſſary that he ſhould live and be brought up there, becauſe of his alliance to the houſe of David: And from thence they durſt not remove him, till they had ſpecial warrant, and warrant they had none, till the Angel diſmiſs them into Egypt. This is not a groping of their thoughts, only by ſurmiſal, as was theirs of Herods mentioned before, but there is plain and evident demonſtration for it in the text: for when Joſeph in Egypt was commanded by an Angel after the death of Herod, to return to the Land of Iſrael, it is ſaid, He was afraid to go into Judea, when he heard that Archelaus reigned in ſtead of Herod. Now what ſhould he do in Judea? Or why ſhould he rather think of going thither, then into his own Country Galilee? But that he thought of returning to Bethlehem again, from whence he had come; ſuppoſing that the education of the Meſſias had been confined thither, as well as his birth: But being warned and warranted by an Angel in a dream, he then departed into Nazareth, verſe 22. By which words it is apparent, not only that he durſt not go to his own home till he had divine commiſſion; but alſo that he had never been in Nazareth ſince Chriſt was born, till this his coming out of Egypt, otherwiſe he would have addreſſed his thoughts thither, and not to Judea.

And by this are we to expound the text of Luke alledged, when they had performed all things according to the Law, they departed to their own City Nazareth: namely, that he ſpeaketh briefly, in what he ſaw Matthew had handled at large before: and not ſo much intending to ſhew Chriſts quick departure into Galilee, after his preſentation in the Temple, as to draw you to look for him in Galilee, at the next ſtory following, which fell out very many years after. And that ſuch brief tranſitions are no ſtrange thing in Scripture, might be ſhewed at large, but more eſpecially in the Evangeliſt St. Luke, that we have in hand: as to ſpare more; in Chap. 4. 14. He bringeth our Saviour, as it were from the Pinnacle of the Temple, into Galilee; as if his journey thither, had been the firſt thing he did: whereas he returned with the Devil into the Wilderneſs again; and from thence came to John at Jordan, before he ſet for Galilee. And Acts 9. 18, 19. &c. where under theſe few words, Saul was converted and baptized, preached in Damaſcus a good ſeaſon, was laid in wait for, and eſcaped over the wall, and went to Jeruſalem; he hath comprehended a ſtory of him of three years, and hath omitted his journey from Damaſcus into Arabia, and to Damaſcus again, before he ſet for Jeruſalem; as Paul himſelf hath parcelled it out, Gal. 1.

Object. 6. But why ſhould the Wiſemen ſtay ſo long after they had ſeen the Star, as not to come to Jeruſalem, and to Chriſt of two years after?

Anſ. So did Moſes lie within a days journey or little more of his wife and children, Exod. 18. &c. a whole twelve month together within a few days, and yet they came not at all together, not for the diſtance of the places where they were, but becauſe of the divine diſpoſal of the Lord, for a ſpecial reaſon.

And ſo was it with theſe men: It was not the diſtance of their Country from Judea, were it either Arabia or Perſia; nay, had it been the utmoſt India, that kept them away ſo long; for they might have travelled it in half the time; but it was the divine diſpenſation of the Lord, that detained them back for ſo long a time, partly that Chriſts ſtay in Bethlehem may leave no excuſe behind, if they would not know him, but chiefly that the child and Mother might gather ſome competent ſtrength againſt their flight, which God foreſaw would follow upon the Wiſemens coming.

Harmony and Explanation.

Verſ. 1, In the days of Herod the King.

THIS Herod was the Son of Antipater an Edomite or of the ſeed of Eſau, as was ſaid before, although Nicholas Damaſcen (for which Joſephus correcteth him) averr that he was of the race of the chief of the Jews that came up out of Babylon. His Father Antipater growing into acquaintance and favour with Julius Cæſar, had the government of Judea committed to him. And he again ſubſtituteth his ſon Phaſaelus in the rule of Jeruſalem, and of the Country thereabout; and his other Son Herod, who is here ſpoken of, in the ruling of Galilee. Herod by his proweſs and policy indear'd himſelf to the ſucceeding Rulers of the Romane State, but more eſpeciall [by obſervance and promiſes] miſes] to Antonius, and by his means to Auguſtus, whilſt they two kept correſpondency in the ſwaying of the Empire: Theſe two by the conſent of the Senate make him King of Judea, a man compoſed, as if they were his four elements, of fawning, policy, cruelty, and unconſcionableneſs. Of whoſe life and actions Joſephus, Egeſippus, and others have diſcourſed at large, and it is not ſeaſonable to inſiſt upon them here. This only is not impertinent to inquire after, what year it was of the reign of Herod, when this ſtory of the Wiſemens coming to Bethlehem, and the butchery upon the children there fell out, that it may be ſeen how long our Saviour was in Egypt, before his return upon the tyrants death, and how ſoon it was that the Lord overtook this and the other cruelties of the tyrant with deſerved vengeance.

Joſephus Antiq. lib. 14. cap. 26. hath placed the beginning of Herods reign, under the hundreth eighty and fourth Olympiad, and under the Conſulſhip of C. Domitius Calvinus II. and C. Aſinius Pollio, and hath ſummed the length of it to four and thirty years from the death of Antigonus his competitor, and ſeven and thirty from the Romans firſt declaring of him King. Antiq. lib. 17. cap. 10. And with this reckoning of the years of his reign, agreeth Egeſippus de Excid. Jeroſol. lib. 1. cap. 45. and ſo doth Euſebius in his Chronicle for the latter ſum of ſeven and thirty, but differeth far from the beginning of his reign, placing it under the laſt year of Olympiad 186. eight years at leaſt after the time prefixed by Joſephus. And reaſon he hath indeed to differ from his beginning. For if Herod began his reign in the Conſulſhip of the men fore-named, and reigned but thirty and ſeven years from thence, it will reſult in the concluſion, that he dyed the year before our Saviour was born, as may be eaſily caſt by the Catalogue or number of Conſuls from Cn. Domitius and Aſinius Pollio, which was after the building of the City, Anno 714 to Cornelius Lentulus and Valerius Meſſalinus, under whom our Saviour was born, which was Anno urbis 751. So that this account of years that Joſephus hath given, though it be true for the number, yet can it not be ſo from that beginning from whence he hath dated them. What ſhall we ſay then, by beginning the thirty ſeven years of his reign, from the time that he was King intire, and ſans corrival in the Kingdom, by the death of Antigonus, the laſt ſpark of the Aſmonean fire? Why, herein alſo I find Dion differing from Joſephus, and Euſebius from them both. For, whereas Joſephus hath related that the ſacking of Jeruſalem by Socius, and the death of Antigonus, were under the Conſulſhip of M. Agrippa, and Canidius, or Caninius Gallus, which was Anno urbis conditæ, 717. Dion in his Roman Hiſtory, lib. 49. hath placed the crucifying of Antigonus, and the making of Herod King by Antony, under the Conſulſhip of Claudius and Norbanus, which was Anno V. C. 716. or a year before. And Euſebius hath ſtill laid Herods beginning a year or two after.

Baronius hath found out a date different from all theſe, namely, that Herods years of his Reign are to be begun from the time that he received his Crown from the hands of Auguſtus, after his victory of Antony, at the battle at Actium; Cæſar being then in Rhodes, of which ſtory Joſephus maketh mention, Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 10. Auguſtus being then a third time Conſul, and Valerius Meſſala Corvinus his partner. By which account it will follow that our Saviour was born in the nine and twentieth year of Herods reign, and that Herod lived till he was about nine years old. Which opinion though it beſt ſuited to the ſalving of other paſſages of Joſephus in Chronologie about this time, yet it ſeemeth to be ſomething too corroſive an application, and a remedy very harſh, upon theſe reſpects.

Firſt, Becauſe by this account of his, both about the Wiſemens coming and Herods death, he will have Chriſt to be nine years in Egypt, or thereabout, or according to our reckoning, ſeven years or little under: Now, in his baniſhment from his own Country, the means of his Parents and of his own ſubſiſtence in a forreign Land for ſo long a time, is ſo hard to imagine, that it will breed another and no leſs a ſcruple then that in hand.

Secondly, the tranſition of St. Luke from his preſenting in the Temple, to his coming into Nazareth will ſeem a great deal the more harſh, if eight or nine years are to be taken in between, eſpecially with ſuch as Baronius himſelf, who will have nothing to come between at all.

Thirdly, by this opinion muſt our Saviour be ninteen years old and more, at the death of Auguſtus, and then how could he be, but beginning to be thirty in the fifteenth of Tiberius, Luke 3. For ſuppoſe with the Cardinal that he was nine years old at the death of Herod, then was he ninteen at the baniſhment of Archelaus, who reigned ten years, as appeareth by Joſephus, Antiq. lib. 17. cap. 15. After Archelaus was removed from his kingdom, the ſame Joſephus nameth Cyrenius, and Coponius, as rulers and diſpoſers of Judea for a ſeaſon. And after Coponius, Marchus Ambibuchus was Ruler, and after him Annius Rufus, and then dyed Auguſtus. Now lay all theſe together, and it will follow that our Saviour could not be leſs then above twenty years old, at the death of Auguſtus, whereas it is moſt plain by the Goſpel that he was but about fifteen. Let us therefore take theſe parcels backward, and as they confute the opinion under queſtion, ſo do they help to ſettle and reſolve the queſtion in hand. For grant that Coponius, Ambibuchus, and Rufus ruled their ſingle years apiece, after the exile of Archelaus (as it is moſt like they did, and more then years apiece they could not do, all things well laid together) and take before them the ten years current of Archelaus, and we have thirteen years backward of our Saviours fifteen at the death of *Auguſtus*s and this doth bring us to his two years of age or thereabout; which was the time when the Wiſemen came to him. So that ſince Archelaus began to reign, when Chriſt was not very much above two years old, for that he was ſomething above, [it may be ſome months] the time that Archelaus, wanted of ten years reign compleat, will allow, and that he could not be more then ſuch a ſpace above, the premiſes well ponderated will conclude, it will readily and plainly follow, that our Saviours birth was in the five and thirtieth year of Herod; and this murder of the children of Bethlehem, in his ſeven and thirtieth; but a month or two, or ſuch a ſpace before his death. Now whereas ſome ſtick not to ſay, that he was ſtruck with the wound of death that very night that the children were ſlain, and dyed not many days or hours after, in that we cannot be ſo punctual; but that he lived not many months after, is more then probable, by the collections and computations mentioned, well weighed, and laid together.

§ Wiſemen.

That is, Sorcerers, or Magicians, and ſo might it not unfitly be tranſlated. For firſt, though Magus and Magia, admit of a gentle conſtruction, and be often taken, not only in an harmleſs, but in a laudable ſenſe in prophane Authors, yet are they never ſo in Scripture; and by the Idiom and propriety of that, muſt the word be expounded; and not by Forreign and Heathen Language and acceptation. It is true indeed, that among the Perſians the Magi have been renowned for men of excellent wiſdom and skill in natural, and in other things, and that none were admitted to reign among them, unleſs he were well verſed in the learning of the Magi; and that Plato, Tully, Philo, Pliny and others, do extol Magia, or Magick, to be the very height and perfection of Philoſophy: But the Scripture, who is ever the ſure Expoſitor of it ſelf, doth never take the word, but in the worſe ſenſe, for the Deviliſh and damnable practice and practicers of ſorcery and unlawful arts, as Acts 8. 9. Simon Μαγών: Acts 13. 8. Elymas ὁ Μάγος.

And the Babylonian אַשָּׁפִים or Wizards, are ſo called by the Greek of Daniel, whoſoever traſlated it, whether the LXX, or Theodotion, or who elſe ſoever, Dan. 1. 20. & 2. 2. &c. Now it is againſt ſenſe and reaſon to refuſe the ſenſe of Scripture, for a Scripture word, and to fetch the intepretation of it from Perſia, Plato, Pliny, and I know not whence.

2. It doth the more ſet forth the luſtre and glory of the birth of Chriſt, and the power of himſelf and kingdom, by ſuppoſing that theſe men that had been hitherto devoted to the arts, ſervice, and converſe of the Devil, ſhould now forſake them, and him, and their own delight, and their old profeſſion, and dedicate themſelves, travailes and gifts, to a child unknown, far off, and but poorly born.

3. Nor is this opinion but newly minted, but it carrieth with it the paſſeport and priviledge of antiquity. For Ignatius Martyr in his Epiſtle to the Epheſians, ſpeaking concerning the Wiſemens Star, ſaith thus, Ἔνθεν ἐμωράνετο σοφία κοσμική, γοητεία ὕβλος ἦν, καὶ γέλως ἡ Μαγία: Then the wiſdom of this world grew fooliſh, Sorcery a toy, and Magick a deriſion: perſonating the men in both their contrary profeſſions and devotedneſs, Deviliſh and Divine, to Satan and Chriſt. So likewiſe Juſtin Martyr in his Dialogue with Trypho, ſpeaking of theſe ſame men, and how they were qualified and affected before they came to Chriſt, he ſaith, they were ἐσκυλευμένοι ὑπὸ πάσας κακὰς πράξεις τὰς ἐνεργουμένας ὑπὸ τοῦ δαιμονίου ἐκείνου, captived or led away as a prey by the Devil to all evill actions. And ſo Theophylact the mouth of Chryſoſtome, They were, ſaith he, adverſaries or enemies to God, and devoted to Devils in a more ſpecial manner: And to this ſenſe doth the Goſpel of Mathew in Hebrew render the word, whoſoever tranſlated it. But to ſpare more, thoſe fathers confeſs their opinion to be the ſame with theſe; [and thoſe neither mean ones, nor a few] which hold, ſome of them, that theſe Magi had obtained their knowledge concerning the King of the Jews, from Sybilla Erythræa, and others from Balaam, to whom they hold that they ſtood in relation not only of Nation and kindred, but alſo of the ſame profeſſion and art of Wizardy and Magick.

§ From the Eaſt.

This doth ſomething confirm the foregoing opinion of their being Magicians, if it need any more confirmation. For that the Eaſt was infamous for Sorceries, auguries and incantations is apparent by Eſa. 2. 6. as it is underſtood by the LXX, by R. Solomon, D. Kimchi and even approved by the context it ſelf: But what Country of the Eaſt this was, whence theſe men came, is as hard to determine, as it was what manner of men they were.

Divers

Divers have aſſerted that they were of Chaldea, minding, it ſeemeth, rather the ſtricteſt and worſt ſenſe; of both the words Chaldeus and Magus, which ſignifie both one and the ſame ungodly profeſſion, then the letter of text, and of other Scriptures. For it plainly telleth that theſe came from the Eaſt, and all the Prophets that have ſpoken of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans, have fetched thoſe deſtroyers from the North, as Jer. 1.

Others therefore do hold them for Perſians, and that chiefly becauſe the word Magus, is thought to be originally a Perſian word.

But firſt, as was ſaid before, the Scripture word is to be interpreted according to the Scripture Idiom, and ſo it confineth them to Perſia no more then to any other Country. Secondly, if it ſhould be averred, that the Perſian Magi grew renowned from a family of that name, or from ſome Anceſtor that was called Mag or Mago, rather then from any relation that the word hath to the depth of Learning, or any notation for a great Scholar: I ſuppoſe it would be hard to prove the contrary; eſpecially ſince in Babylonia, there was * Rab. Mag, or the great Mag, and in Carthage, Mago, two Noblemen or Princes, and for ought we know, no great Scholars neither, of the very ſame name. * Jer. 39. 3.

More probable therefore and plauſible is their opinion [though it leave the Reader in a Bivium of irreſolution] that holdeth theſe men either for Arabians, or Meſopotamians about Haran: but their reſolution the beſt of all, that bring them from Arabia: and of this mind is Juſtin Martyr very confidently, in ſo much that he applieth a Prophecy thereto, namely, Eſa. 8. 4. about the breaking of the ſtrength of Damaſcus.

For firſt, Arabia is full Eaſtward from Judea, and the inhabitants thereof are conſtantly called men of the Eaſt, as Gen. 25. 6. Judg. 6. 3. Job. 1. 3.

Secondly, the gifts or preſents that the Wiſemen offered Chriſt, were native commodities of the Land of Arabia, as gold of Sheba, Pſal. 72. 15. Frankincenſe from Seba, or Saba, as in the verſe, Sua Thura Sabæi, and Myrrhe from thereabouts, as appeareth in ſtories: ann it is more probable to think that they would bring the choice commodities of their own Country, as Jacob ſent to Joſeph, then of another.

Thirdly, to conceive theſe men for Arabians, doth very well ſort and harmonize with ſome conſiderable things in Scripture: As 1. the firſt Proſelite to the Jewiſh Church that we find mentioned in Scripture, was Jethro an Arabian, and of the ſeed of Abraham: And ſo if we hold theſe firſt Proſelytes to Chriſt, it ſuiteth very fitly. 2. it agreeth alſo with that Prophetick Pſalm mentioned before, namely, Pſal. 71. 3. With the rule and dominion, and homage that David and Solomon, Types of Chriſt, had over and from that Country. For, 4. much of Arabia was the Land of Canaan, as well as Judea: for the heedfull eye that ſhall but ſeriouſly look upon the Nations, that planted there at the firſt, will find that the whole Country was inhabited by the two ſons of Ham, Cuſh, and Canaan: and in after time that the ſeed of Abraham diſpoſſeſſed them, and dwelt in their ſteads, not by any uſurpation or injuſtice, but upon the promiſe made to Abraham of Canaans Land, and upon juſt title by his victory over the four Kings, which having but lately ſubdued thoſe Lands, were ſubdued by him, and with the conqueſt the right and challenge to that land fell to Abraham. And hence it was that David and Solomon dilated their dominion over theſe Countreys even to Euphrates, and then was the promiſe to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, concerning their children poſſeſſing the Land of Canaan, fulfilled to the utmoſt extent. Now it is more likely to bring theſe firſt fruits of the Gentiles to do homage to the King of the Jews, from a Country which did as much to David and Solomon who were types of him, then from a Forreign Nation: and to conceive that they were of the ſeed of Abraham, rather then of another race.

Verſ. 2. Saying, Where is he that is born of the King of the Jews? for we have ſeen his Star in the Eaſt, &c.

The expoſition of this Verſe will be made up, by the reſolution and anſwer of theſe three queſtions. 1. What was this Star that the Wiſemen ſaw? 2. Where it was that they ſaw it? And 3. how upon the ſight of it they could conclude that it did relate to a King of the Jews? To omit the various gueſſes and ſurmiſes that are made, for the ſatisfaction of the firſt Quære, it ſeemeth to me, that this Star which theſe Magicians ſaw at the birth of Chriſt, was nothing elſe but that glorious and miraculous light that ſhone about the Bethlehem Sheepherds, when the Angel came upon them with the tydings of the birth of a Saviour, Luk. 2. 9. And that theſe wizards being that night abroad [belike at their ſtudy of Aſtrology] beheld it at diſtance, and to them it ſeemed, being ſo far off, like a new and uncouth, and a wondrous Star: And the words in the Eaſt, do mean the place of the men, and not of the Star, and are to receive this conſtruction, we being in the Eaſt have ſeen his Star: Not it in the Eaſt part of Heaven, but they being in the Eaſt part of the Earth:

And

And their beholding it to be in the Land of Judea, might the more readily bring them to think it betokened the birth of the King of the Jews.

And thus are the three queſtions reſolved together, if the ground-work whereupon all is built, be but firm and ſolid, viz. that the light or the glory of the Lord that ſhone about the Shepherds, was that which the Wiſemen then ſuppoſed and do now call a Star; Upon which let us look a little, and ſee what probability there may be that it was ſo.

Firſt, then it is paſt doubting, that the Shepherds ſaw the glory of the Lord ſhine round about them, and the Wiſemen, the new Star ſhine at a diſtance from them, at one and the ſame time, namely, at the time of our Saviours birth; For ſince both theſe things were to both theſe parties as a meſſenger to impart unto them the tydings of the birth of Chriſt, no reaſon can be given or ſuppoſed why they ſhould not appear to them both, to do this meſſage to them at the very time when he was born: Now the Sheepherds at Bethlehem, and the Magicians in Arabia, ſeeing on the very ſame night, a light that was to tell them of the very ſame thing, what reaſon have we to think that it was not one and the ſame light?

Secondly, to conceive that the Wiſemens Star appeared to them in the Eaſt part of Heaven, maketh the matter far more difficult to reſolve, how they came to know that it denoted a King of the Jews, then by ſuppoſing that that they ſaw it hanging over the very Center or middle of the Land of the Jews. For though we cannot but acknowledge that the ſpirit of God was their chief intelligencer and inſtructer in this matter, and ſo could have taught them ſo much whereſoever they had ſeen the Star appear, yet can we not but think, that it was a likelier way to read this leſſon to them, by ſetting this light upon the very place where the King that it betokened was born, rather then in the Eaſt part of Heaven, where it might ſeem to denote ſomething among the Indians, rather then among the Jews.

Thirdly, we know it by experience, that a great light or fire that happeneth in any place in the night, be it never ſo great in it ſelf, or in the eyes of thoſe that are in the place where it is, yet to thoſe that are a great diſtance off, it ſeemeth but as a Star or ſuch a thing. And that it might not be ſo with the Wiſemen in this matter, there is neither Analogy of Faith, probability in reaſon, evidence in Scripture, or any thing I know of will deny.

And laſtly, it is not to be omitted without weighing, that as ſoon as the Wiſemen after their conference with Herod, were gone out of Jeruſalem to ſet for Bethlehem, the Star ſhewed it ſelf to them again. It appeareth now nearer to them, to conduct them to the place where the Child now was, as it had appeared at greater diſtance at his birth, to ſignifie to them that he was born: Then they ſaw it over or in Judea, which directed them to hearken to Jeruſalem: now they ſee it at Jeruſalem almoſt over their heads, to direct them to Jeruſalem.

Verſ. 3. He was troubled and all Jeruſalem with him.

Herod for fear of the loſs of his Kingdom, and Jeruſalem for fear of the diſturbance of their State. For he having been ſo long the King of Judea, as ſeven and thirty years, and having laid the foundation of a ſucceſſive royalty to his family, in ſo much policy and cruelty as he had done, how would this make him to ſtartle, to hear of a King newly born unto the Nation, whoſe ſubjection his thoughts and endeavours had promiſed to his own children, and to have the certainty of the thing confirmed from Heaven, by a wondrous and miraculous light? And how muſt it needs perplex the Jews alſo, to hear of a new King over them, beſides Herod who was ſet over them by their Lords the Romans? For how ill would the Romans take it that their determination and decree of Herods reigning over Judea, ſhould be ſo affronted, as that a new King ſhould riſe among them? and what could follow upon this, but the Roman Armies, and the Jews miſery? Or if they underſtood this King to be Meſſias [as the Nation now looked for his coming] yet could it not chooſe but breed ſome perplexity in them, partly to think of the rareneſs of the matter, and chiefly of their being in ſubjection to ſo potent a Nation as the Romans, when their deliverer ſhould appear.

Verſ. 4. All the chief Prieſts.

Since there was properly but one high Prieſt at once among the Jews, by the chief Prieſts ſo often mentioned in the Goſpel ſome have underſtood thoſe High Prieſts that by the Roman Governours, or otherwiſe were turned out of their Office, as about theſe times that matter was ordinary. So Joſephus recorded that Valerius Gratus firſt made Iſmael High Prieſt in ſtead of Ananus: then depoſeth him and maketh Eleazar, Ananus his Son: him again he depoſeth, and maketh Simon Fitz Kamithus; and in his room again he ſetteth Joſeph, ſurnamed Caiaphas: which Caiaphas was alſo removed by Vitellius, and Jonathan

Jonathan Fitz Ananus placed in his ſtead. And theſe men thus turned out of Office, are called (as they ſuppoſe) both here and elſewhere the chief Prieſts. But their opinion is far more warrantable and agreeable to truth that by the chief Prieſts underſtand the ſeveral heads of the families, or the chief of the four and twenty courſes, into which David had divided and ordered the Prieſts, 1 Chron. 24. which are therefore called chief Prieſts, not ſo much for Primacy or Superiority that they had in their Eccleſiaſtical function above the reſt of the Clergy; as 1. becauſe they were heads of their houſes; And 2. becauſe they were of the great Councel, and made a third part of the ſeventy Elders.

§. And Scribes of the people.

He calleth them Scribes of the people, to diſtinguiſh them from the Secretaries or Clerks of particular men, as Baruch was the Scribe of Jeremy, and Seraiah the Scribe or Secretary of David, 2 *Sam.*8.17. But theſe of whom mention is here, and ſo very frequently in the Goſpel elſewhere, were not ſuch private or peculiar Clerks, but they were the publick Scribes or Clerks of the people: and this their Office or function conſiſted in two particulars.

Firſt, They were the men that took upon them to copy the Bible for thoſe that deſired to have a copy. For ſo great and various is the accuracy and exactneſs of the Scripture Text in the myſtical and profound ſignificances of Letters, Vowels and Accents, that it was not fit that every one ſhould offer to tranſcribe the Original, or that every vulgar pen ſhould copy things of ſo ſublime ſpeculation: Therefore there was a peculiar and ſpecial order of learned men among the Jews, whoſe Office it was to take care of the preſervation of the purity of the Text, in all Bibles that ſhould be copied out, that no corrupion or error ſhould creep into the Original of the Sacred Writ, and theſe were called the Scribes of the people, or their Scriveners or Writers of the copy of the Bible. And hence is it that there is ſo frequent mention in the Rabbins of Tikkun Sopherim, The correction, or direction of the Scribes, or their peculiar and ſpecial diſpoſing of the Text, which the Maſſoreth at the beginning of the book of Numbers obſerveth to have been in eighteen places, which are reckoned there. Theſe Scribes may be conceived to have been either Prieſts or Levites, or both, the men of that Tribe being the chiefeſt Students in the Scriptures; and being bound by their calling to be able to inſtruct the people in the ſame, *Deut.*33.10. *Mal.*2.7.

They had eight and forty Univerſities as it were, belonging to that Tribe, for the education of the Clergy in the knowledge of the Law and the Prophets, *Joſh.*21. and from among the learned of thoſe Students, were ſome ſet apart for this Office, which required profound Learning and skill; namely, to be the Copiers of the Bible when any copy was to be taken, or at leaſt to take care that all copies that ſhould be tranſcribed, ſhould be pure and without corruption.

Secondly, Theſe alſo were the publick and common preachers of the people, being more conſtant Pulpit men, then any other of the Clergy; taking on them, not only to be the preſervers and providers for the purity of the Text, but alſo the moſt conſtant and common explainers and expounders of it in Sermons. Therefore it is ſaid of our Saviour, that he taught as one that had authority, and not as the Scribes, *Mat.*7.29. where the Scribes are rather mentioned then any other order, becauſe they were the greateſt and moſt ordinary Preachers. And our Saviour himſelf, in Mark 12.25. How ſay the Scribes, that Chriſt is the Son of David? Inſtancing in the Scribes only [whereas the Phariſees, Sadduces, and even all the Nation of the Jews held the ſame opinion] becauſe the Scribes were the men that were ofteſt in the Pulpit, and preached more then any other; and ſo this Doctrine was heard more from them then others.

And thus was Ezra a ready Scribe in the Law of Moſes, *Ezr.*7.6. both for the copying and preſerving pure the Text of the Scripture, and alſo for the expounding of it by his Sermons. And ſuch a one is the Scribe that our Saviour ſpeaketh of, that is inſtructed to the Kingdom of Heaven, that bringeth out of his treaſure inſtructions out of the New Teſtament and old, *Mat.*13.52. The Chaldee Paraphraſt on *Jer.*6.13. & 8.10. and in other places in ſtead of The Prophet, readeth the Scribe, taking as it ſeemeth the Prophet in the ſame ſenſe that Paul doth Prophecying, 1 *Theſ.*5.20. 1 *Cor.*14.5. &c. for the Preacher, and making the Text ſpeak in the ſame tenor that it doth here, the Prieſts and the Scribes.

In the Story of our Saviours arraignment, and elſwhere in the New Teſtament there is mention of the chief Prieſts, and Scribes, and Elders, Mat. 26.3. Mark 15.1. importing that the Great Councel conſiſted of theſe three ſorts of men. The chief Prieſts of the ſeed of Aaron, the Scribes of the Tribe of Levi, and the elders of the people meer lay men: Theſe were all deeply and extraordinarily verſed and learned in the Law, but the practiſe of this their learning had ſome difference, as the civil, common and canon: 1. The Elders judged the people and matters of debate and controverſie, but inſtructed not the people by way of preaching or miniſtery. The chief Prieſts judged and inſtructed, but it was more by resolving questions and doubts that were proposed to them, as our Saviour asked them questions, Luke 2.46. *Hag.*2.11. *Mal.*2.7. then by common preaching Homilies or Sermons. The Scribes were they that were the Preachers or Lecturers, and taught the people from the pulpit, as well as determined upon doubts and debates: And to this triple division of the great and Seraphical Doctors of the Jews, St. Paul seemeth to allude, in 1 *Cor.*1.20. Where is the wise? Where is the Scribe, where is the questionist, or disputer of this world? By the first meaning the Elders of the people, and by the last, the chief Priests.

5. He demanded of them where Christ should be born.

The High Priests were rightly consulted, say the Rhemists, in question of their Law and Religion: for whom should Herod ask, but those that were most likely to give him an answer? But the latter end of their note carrieth a snare with it to intrap the simple: And be they never so ill, say they, they are often forced to say the truth by priviledge of their function: They think they have an undeniable groundwork for this their Doctrine from the prophecying of *Caiaphas, Joh.*11.51. as their notes plead there, ascribing that his prophecying to his Priesthood, and order, whereas the Text ascribeth it to the year and season. This he spake not of himself, but being High Priest that year he prophesied: where the emphasis lieth not in the words being High Priest, but in the words, that year, which was the year of sending down of the gifts of the Spirit, in a measure and manner, never known before or after.

Vers. 6. And thou Bethlehem in the land of Juda, &c.

There is no small difference in this quotation of the Scribes or of the Evangelist, or indeed of both, from the letter of the Text of the Prophet from whom they cite it; nor doth this difference rise by the Evangelists following the translation of the LXX, as oft there doth, for it differeth much from the letter of the LXX also, but it is upon some special reason. Which disagreement that we may reconcile, and the reason of which that we may see the better, we will take up the verse verbatim, and the differences as they come to hand, one by one.

First then, whereas Saint Matthew readeth, Thou Bethlehem in the land of Juda, the Hebrew hath it only, Thou Bethlehem Ephrata, without any mention of the land of Juda at all, and so the Chaldee, and so the LXX, but only with the addition of one word, Thou Bethlehem the house of Ephrata, art the least, &c.

Answ. First, There are that give this general answer to all the differences in this quotation, that the Scribes and the Evangelist tye not themselves to the very words of the Prophet, but only think it enough to render his sense. And this answer might be very well entertained, and give good satisfaction, especially, since that in allegations from the Old Testament, it is usual with the New so to do, but that the difference between the Text and the quotation is so great, that it is not only diverse, but even contrary. Some therefore,

Secondly, Conceive, that the Scribes could alledge the Text no better without the book, and that the Evangelist hath set it down in their own words, for the just shame of those great Doctors, that were no better versed in the Scripture, then to alledge a place in words so very far different from the Text. But he that hath been any whit versed in the writings of the Jews, will find their Rabbins or Doctors to be too nimble textualists to miss in a Text of so great use and import: especially if he shall but consider to what an height of learning they were now come, by the tutorage and pains of the two great Doctors of the Chair, Shammai and Hillel, who had filled all the Nation with learned men the like had not been before.

Thirdly, Whereas some talk of a Syriack Edition which the Jews used at that time more then the Hebrew, and which had this Text of Micah as the Evangelist hath cited it, and that he cited it according to that Edition which was most in use; here are two things presumed upon which it is impossible ever to make good. For who ever read in any Jew of a Syrian Edition of the Prophets besides the Chaldee Paraphrast? Who we are sure readeth not thus: or what Christian ever saw such an Edition, that he could tell that it did so read? For this particular therefore in hand, it is to be answered, that the Scribes or the Evangelists, or both, did thus differently quote the Prophet, neither through forgetfulness, nor through the misleading of an erroneous Edition, but purposely, and upon a rational intent.

For, first, though Ephratah had been the surname of Bethlehem, in ancient time, as Gen. 35.19. Ruth 4. 11. and in the times of the Prophet Micah, yet it is no wonder if that title of it were now out of use, and especially out of the knowledge of this irreligious King.

King. For the seventy years captivity, and the alterations of the State, did alter the face of the Country, and might easily blot out of use and remembrance such an additional title of a Town as this.

Secondly, This surname of the Town was taken up in memorial of a woman, as appeareth, 1 *Chron.*2.19. and when the discourse concerning Christ, and where he should be born, was in hand and agitation, it was more pregnant to bring his birth-place to have reference to Juda from whom Herod [though he were ignorant in other particulars concerning his birth] knew he should descend, then to a woman and a title which it is like that he had never heard of before. So that this, that in the Scribes might at the first seem to be a mis-allegation of the Prophet through some mistake, being precisely looked upon, with respect had to the times when the Propheſie was given, and when it is now cited, and to the several persons to whom it will shew to be so quoted upon very sound wisdom and profound reason, these words, in the land of Juda, being used by them for necessary illustration, in stead of the word Ephrata, not as proposing it for the purer Text of the Prophet, but as more sutable, by way of Exposition, for the capacity and apprehension of Herod.

In Micahs time the name Ephratah was common, but in after times it may be it was disused. Howsoever, Micah propheſied to the Jews, to whom this title Ephratah was familiar, and it is like had the Scribes spoken to Jews too, they would have retained that title, but to Herod who was not so punctually acquainted with it, it was not proper to bring a phrase that he could not understand, or that was uncouth to him, therefore they explain it by one that was familiar both to him and the whole Nation, Bethlehem in the Land of Juda.

This clause is far further from Micahs Text then the other, for whereas here is a very strong and Emphatical negation οὐδαμῶς ἐλαχίστη εἶ, in the Prophet there is none at all, either in the Hebrew, in the LXX. or in the Chaldee Paraphrast. And indeed the Text and the quotation are one clean contrary to another; in Micah, Though thou be little, but in Matthew, Thou art not the least. Towards the reconciling of which difference, it will be necessary in the first place, to take a serious survey of the Prophets Text, and then upon the true interpretation of it, to lay this allegation to it, and to see how they do agree. The words in the Hebrew, whereupon the main doubt riseth, are but these two צעיר להיות: which our English rendreth Though thou be little. The Septuagint, Thou art the least to be among the thousands: but using a differing word to signifie the least, from that used here: Some books, saith Nobilius, and the other Scholiast upon the LXX. read, Art not the least, as Hierome, Tertullian and Cyprian: but this their reading I suspect rather to be taken from this quotation of the Gospel, then found by them in the Text of Micah. The vulgar Latine, Thou art little among the thousands, &c. The Italian of Brucioli, and the French, Being little to be, or to be accounted. And much to the same tenour with our English, Aben Ezra, and David Kimchi. Rabbi Solom sheweth his construction of it in this gloss, It were fit thou shouldest be the least among the families of Juda, because of the prophaneness of Ruth the Moabitess that was in thee, yet out of thee shall come, &c. Jansenius saith, a reconciliation might be made between the Prophet and the Evangelist, by reading the Prophets Text by way of interrogation, And thou Bethlehem art thou the least? Which answereth in sense to thou art not. But to all these interpretations alledged, this one thing may be opposed, that the Hebrew word צעיר cannot properly agree with the word Bethlehem, according to the Syntax of Substantive and Adjective; because they are of two different genders, as the Grammarian will easily observe, and cannot but confess. For Bethlehem is of the feminine gender, as are all the names of Cities, and צעיר of another, as it plainly appeareth by its termination. To construe them therefore together, as Substantive and Adjective, as it is unwarrantable by the Grammar, so doth it make a sense utterly irreconcileable with this of the Evangelist. To which might be added also, that these words being thus conjoyned and construed together, do make but an harsh sense and construction among themselves, amounting to this, Thou Bethlehem in being little, out of thee shall come a Ruler.

Their Interpretation therefore is rather to be imbraced, that take צעיר in the Neuter Gender, as it pleadeth it self to be, by its very termination [the Masculine and Neuter in the Hebrew being indifferently taken the one for the other] and do read it thus: And thou Bethlehem Ephrata, it is a small thing to be among the Princes of Juda, out of thee shall come a Ruler, &c. As meaning this, That it is the least of thine honour that thou art reckoned among the Princes of Juda, as equal with them, for thou hast a dignity above this, and above them all in that out of thee shall come a Ruler, which shall feed my people. And to this sense and tenour should I interpret the Chaldee Paraphrase, though I know know indeed that it is generally conſtrued another way: Chizgner havetha leithmannaah: And thou Bethlehem Ephratah, art within a little to be ſuperiour, or perfect, among the thouſands of Judah, &c. As let the learned in the language judge whether the words in the Chaldee will not bear that ſenſe: eſpecially the ſenſe of the firſt word Chizgner, being looked into the Chaldee, in *Pſal.*2.12. & 73.2. *Hoſ.*1.4. and in other places.

The Text of the Prophet then being rendred in this interpretation, this allegation of the Evangeliſt will be found, not to have any contrariety to it at all, but to ſpeak, though not in the very ſame words, yet to the very ſame tenor and purpoſe: For while the one ſaith, It is a ſmall thing that thou art among the Princes of Judah, and the other, Thou art not the leaſt among them, they both fall into the ſame ſenſe, or at leaſt into no diſagreement of ſenſe at all. For if it were to be reputed a ſmall honour to Bethlehem, to be reckoned in equality with the other Princes of Judah, in compariſon of a greater honour that ſhe was to have, in the birth of the Meſſias; it muſt readily follow what this quotation of the Evangeliſt inferreth; namely, that ſhe was not the leaſt among them. And thus doth the Evangeliſt expreſs the Prophets mind, though he tie not his expreſſion to his very words, alledging his Text to its cleareſt ſenſe, and to the eaſier apprehenſion of the hearer. It is a juſt exception indeed that Janſenius taketh at this interpretation, becauſe that the Scripture uſeth not to expreſs this ſenſe, It is a ſmall thing, by the word Tſagnir, but by Megnat, as *Eſa.*7.13. *Gen.*30.15. and in other places: But as it is true, that it often uſeth Megnat for that expreſſion; ſo it is moſt true, that it uſeth not that word alone, but others alſo: As Tikton, in 2 *Sam.*7.19. and Nakel, in Eſa. 49.6. and why not Tſagnir then as well here?

§. Among the Princes of Juda.

In Micah it is, among the thouſands of Juda: and ſo it is tranſlated by the LXX, the Chaldee, the Vulgar, and unanimouſly by all other Tranſlators: ſo that here is yet another difficulty and difference in this allegation, the Evangeliſt ſtill ſwerving from the Text he citeth. By the thouſands of Juda, Rabbi Solomon underſtandeth the families, and Dav. Kimchi, the Cities; The word is once uſed in the very propriety of that ſenſe in which the Prophet taketh it here, Judg. 6.15. My thouſand, ſaith Gideon, is poor in Manaſſeh: which St. Auſtin, and R. Eſaiah expound that he was Captain of a thouſand; Levi Gerſhom, that his father was Captain; but the Chaldee, and other Rabbins underſtand it of the thouſand in which his family was numbred and inrolled. Howſoever it is underſtood, it is apparent by this and other places laid unto it, that the ſeveral Tribes of the children of Iſrael were divided into their ſeveral thouſands, and that theſe thouſands were inrolled to this or that City, to which they had relation by habitation, or by inheritance: Villages that were not ſo populous, were reduced into hundreds, but Cities into one or more thouſands, according as they were in bigneſs and multitude, Amos 5.3. The City that went out by a thouſand, ſhall leave an hundred, and that which went out by an hundred, ſhall leave ten: The Villages were juſtly reputed of an inferiour rank, but the Cities that afforded their thouſands were accounted Princes: and ſo may the Prophet be underſtood, and ſo the Evangeliſt reconciled to him. Now the reaſon of their difference in words, though they both redound to the ſame ſenſe may be given theſe.

Firſt, Becauſe the queſtion in agitation was about the birth of a King, and the place, where now in anſwer to ſuch a Quære, it was fitter to ſpeak of Princes then thouſands, for where ſhould a King be looked for but among Princes?

Secondly, The Hebrew word אלפי uſed by the Prophet, doth ſignifie, both thouſands, and Princes indifferently, and ſo David Kimchi upon that place in the book of Judges cited even now alledgeth; There are, ſaith he, that interpret Alphi [which our Engliſh readeth my thouſand] as it were my Father, even as the word Alluph, whoſe ſignification is Prince or Lord.

The Evangeliſt therefore finding the word in the Prophet of this indifferency, uſeth it in that ſenſe which beſt ſuited with the preſent occaſion, both in regard of the queſtion propoſed, as alſo thirdly, in regard of the manner of Chriſts coming: For it was both the expectation of the Jews, and the fear of Herod, that he would come with a conquering and victorious temporal Sword, and reſtore them to a pompous Earthly State, and expel him out of his Kingdom. Now for the Evangeliſt to have directed in this quoration, to look for Chriſt among the thouſands of Juda, had backed theſe Opinions, for the term ſoundeth of War, and it had been a direction where likelier to find an earthly Warrier, then the Prince of Peace, among the thouſands, or among the Militia. And therefore he qualifieth the term to the beſt ſatisfaction of Herod and the People; Among the Princes. There is that ſaith it might be conſtrued, In Princes, and not among them, and the meaning to be this, Thou Bethlehem art not the leaſt in the Princes of Juda, that is, in breeding or bringing them forth: but this reliſheth more of wit then ſolidity, and agreeth better with the Latin, then with the Greek Original.

§. For

§. For out of thee ſhall come a Governor.

The Chaldee readeth it in the Prophet, Out of thee ſhall come Meſſias; and ſo is it expounded by Rabbi Solomon, and David Kimchi. And therefore that is moſt true which is inferred by Lyranus, that thoſe Catholicks that interpret it of Ezekiah, do more judaize then the Jews themſelves. Some Jews indeed, ſaith Theophylact, do apply this to Zorobabel, but as he anſwereth, it is like that Zorobabel was born in Babel, and not in Bethlehem: And St. Matthew hath plainly taught both Jews and Gentiles to underſtand it in another ſenſe. But here again doth he differ from the Letter of the Prophet, but cometh ſo near the ſenſe, that the difference is as no difference at all.

Verſ. 7. Herod privily called the Wiſemen.

[Privily.] For had the Jews heard of his pretences [they had ſo long been acquainted with his policy, tyranny, and ambition] they could readily have deſcried his miſchievouſneſs, and ſpoiled his bloody contrival, by better information given to the wiſemen.

§. Enquired diligently of them the time when the Star appeared.

Had they taken their journy inſtantly upon the Stars appearing, Herod could eaſily have computed the time by the length of their journy: but by this his enquiry, it is apparent that they had told him of its appearance at ſome good ſpace before, which in ver. 16. is plainly reſolved to be two years, by the Wiſemens own acknowledgment and reſolution.

Verſ. 11. Gold, and Frankincenſe, and Myrrhe.

The myſterious application of theſe preſents, as Myrrham homini, unctio aurum, &c. be left to them that delight and content themſelves in ſuch things: the plain and eaſie interpretation of the matter is, that they tendred to Chriſt, the chiefeſt and choiceſt commodities that their Country could afford: which they carried in their treaſures, as the Text calleth it, that is, in and among thoſe commodities that the men of thoſe Nations uſed to carry with them when they travailed, eſpecially when they meant to preſent any one to whom they went, as *Gen.*24.53. 1 *King.*10.2.

Verſ. 15. Out of Egypt have I called my Son.

The two allegations produced here out of the Old Teſtament, this and that out of Jeremy, in Rama was a voice heard, are of that fulneſs that they ſpeak of two things a piece, and may very fitly be applied unto them both, and ſhew that the one did reſemble or prefigure the other: as this Text of Hoſea, aimeth both at the bringing of the Church of Iſrael, in old time, and of the head of that Church at this time out of Egypt. Then a Joſeph nouriſhed his father; now a Joſeph doth ſo to his redeemer: then was Egypt deadly to every male child that was born, now is it a place of refuge and preſervation to this child.

Ver. 18. In Ramah was there a voice heard, &c.

Ramah ſtood not far from Bethlehem, though they were in two Tribes: and the cry that the poor Parents and children made in Bethlehem, when this matchleſs butchery was in hand, reach't to Ramah, and was plainly heard thither. Now obſerve the fulneſs of this Scripture as it is uttered by the Prophet, and as it is applied by the Evangeliſt. It was fulfilled in one kind, in the time of Jeremy himſelf, and then was the lamentation and weeping in Ramah it ſelf; for hither did Nebuzaradan bring his Priſoners, after he had deſtroyed Jeruſalem, and there did he diſpoſe of them, to the Sword, or to Captivity, as ſeemed good unto himſelf, Jer. 40.1. And imagine what lamentation and crying was then in that City, when ſo many were doomed there, either to be ſlain in that place, or to go to Babel, never to ſee their own Land again. Then was the cry in Ramah, and it was heard no doubt to Bethlehem. But now the Propheſie is fulfilled in another kind, when Herod deſtroyeth ſo many Children in Bethlehem, and in the Suburbs and Borders belonging to it: And now the cry is in Bethlehem, and it is heard to Ramah.

§. Rachel

Rachels grave was betwixt Bethlehem and Ramah, or at leaſt not far diſtant from either of them, *Gen.*35.16,20. 1 *Sam.*10.2. The Holy Ghoſt therefore doth elegantly ſet forth this lamentation, by perſonating Rachel [who died in the birth of her Ben-Oni, the Son of her ſorrow] ſorrowing for her Sons and Children that were thus maſſacred: And this ſheweth that the Text in the Prophet, aimeth in the firſt place and intention, at the matter of Nebuzaradan: for in Bethlehem, Rachel properly had no children at all, that City being inhabited by the children of Judah, which deſcended of Leah: but in Ramah dwelt Rachels children, that being a Town of Ephramites deſcended from Joſeph. Howſoever, Rachel may be ſaid to weep for the Babes of Bethlehem as her own children, though they were not ſtrictly and properly her ſeed, in regard of the intereſt that ſhe had in all the tribes of Iſrael, as being wife unto their Father: as Joſeph is often called the Father of Chriſt, being only husband to his mother. And ſee ſuch another phraſe, Gen. 37.10. Shall I, and thy mother come to bow down before thee? Whereas Joſephs mother was dead already.

Verſ. 19. But when Herod was dead, &c.

The end of Herod was not long after the maſſacre of theſe infants, and his bloodineſs which he had uſed all his life long, and topped up in the murder of theſe innocents, and in deſire to have done as much to the Lord of life, the Lord doth now bring upon his own head. This matter with the children of Bethlehem, we conceive to have been ſome three months more or leſs before his end, in which ſpace this was his behaviour, as may be collected out of Joſephus.

He had ſlain long before this, his two ſons Alexander and Ariſtobulus, and now was he about to do as much by his Son Antipater, a child too like the Father, and one whom he left by will the Succeſſor in his Kingdom: Him ſuſpected by him for ſome machination againſt himſelf he had now ſhut up in priſon, and intended him preſently for the execution, but that his ſickneſs whereof he died ſeizing on him gave ſome more ſpace to the impriſoned, and ſome hopes and poſſibilities of eſcaping. His diſeaſe was all theſe mixed together, an inward burning and exulceration, an inſatiable greedineſs and devouring, the Chollick, the Gout and Dropſie, his loins and ſecrets crawling with lice, and a ſtink about him, not to be indured. Theſe wringings and tortures of his body, meeting with the peeviſhneſs of old age, for he was now ſeventy, and with the natural cruelty which always had been in him, made him murderouſly minded above all meaſure: inſomuch that he put to death divers that had taken down a golden Eagle, which he had ſet up about the Temple: And when he grew near to his end, and ſaw himſelf ready to die, he ſlew his Son Antipater, and cauſed great multitudes of the Nobility and People to be cloſed up in a ſure place, giving command to ſlay them as ſoon as he was dead, for by that means he ſaid he ſhould have the Jews truly and really to ſorrow at his death. *Vid. Joſeph. Antiq. lib.*17. cap. 8, 9, 10. and *de Bel. lib.*1. cap. 21.

Verſ. 20. For they are dead that ſought the young childs life.

The like ſaying is to Moſes, *Exod.*4.19. where the word [they] may be underſtood of Pharaoh and his ſervants, which jointly ſought his life for the Egyptians ſake whom he had ſlain; and were now all dead and worn out in the fourty years of his being in Midian. But here [it is true indeed, that the ſeeking of the childs life may well be applied to Herods Servants, as well as himſelf] but that all they died with him or about the time of his death, who in flattery, or favour, or obedience to him, had promoted the ſlaughter at Bethlehem, and had ſought the childs life, I know not upon what ground it ſhould be conceived.

I ſhould therefore by the [they] in this place underſtand Herod and his Son Antipater jointly together: For if it be well conſidered how miſchievous this Antipater was againſt his own Brethren, and how he wrought their ruine and miſery, for fear they ſhould get betwixt him and the throne, yea, how he ſought the deſtruction of his own Father, becauſe he thought he kept him out of the Throne too long, it may very well be believed that he would bloodily ſtir againſt this new King of the Jews that the wiſemen ſpake of, for fear of interception of the Crown, as well as his Father: He died but five days before his fathers death, as it was touched before out of Joſephus; and thus God brought this bloodlineſs of the Father and the Son, and the reſt of their cruelties to an end, and upon their own heads at once, and in a manner, together; and thus may the words of the Angel be very fairly underſtood, Take the child and return to the Land of Iſrael, for Herod and Antipater are dead, that ſought his life.

Ver. 22. Archelaus did reign in Judea in the room of his Father Herod.

Herod had first named Antipater for his Successor in the Throne of Judea; but upon detection of his conspiracy against him, he altered his mind and his will, and nominated Antipas: and changing his mind yet again, he named Archelaus, and he succeeded him; a man not likely to prosper in a Throne, that was so bebloodied: His conclusion was, that in the tenth year of his reign, he was accused by the Nobles of Judea and Samaria, to Augustus, banished to Vienna, and his estate confiscate. Jos. Ant. lib. 17. cap. 15.

Ver. 23. He shall be called a Nazarene.

From Isa. 11. 1. where the Messias is called by the title Nezer, which indifferently signifieth A branch, and the City Nazaret: one and the same word denoting Christ, and the place where he should be born.

Reason of the Order.

THE Order of this Section dependeth so clearly upon the proper Order of that preceding, that that being made good, to lie where it doth, as in the proper place, the subsequence of this to it can nothing at all be doubted of. For whereas all the Evangelists have unanimously passed over in silence, all those years of Christs minority which intervened or passed, between his return out of Egypt, and this passage of his at twelve years old, there is nothing possible to be found in the Gospels, that can come between, to interpose this order and connexion. The carriage and demeanour of our Saviour in the time between, is only briefly comprised in the first verse of this portion, And the child grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom and the grace of God was upon him.

Harmony and Explanation.

Ver. 40. And the child grew, &c.

TWO years Old he was when he went into Egypt: and there he aboad in his Exile, a very small time, it may be some two or three months: about such a space as Moses had been hid in Egypt in his Fathers house from the fury of Pharaoh. When he returned to Nazareth his Mothers City, being now about two years and a quarter old, he was not weaned [if in this he followed the use and custom of the Jewish children, as it is is like he did] but ſtill ſucked his Mothers breaſts: As he grew in body, he grew much more in mind; for ſo the phraſe, He waxed ſtrong in Spirit, ſeemeth to be underſtood by the Evangeliſt; taking Spirit, not ſo much for the Holy Ghoſt, though it is paſt queſtion, he was filled with that, as for his Soul or ſpiritual part of his humane nature. And ſo he deſcribeth his growth in both parts, in the two expreſſions, The child grew in body, and waxed ſtrong in intellect and ſoul: filled with wiſdom, in an extraordinary manner above other children, and a graciouſneſs appeared in him both in perſon and actions.

Ver. 41. Now his Parents went to Jeruſalem, &c.

Joſeph is called the Parent of Chriſt, as Paul calleth preaching fooliſhneſs, 1 Cor. 1.21, 23. becauſe he was ſo commonly reputed by men: And as for Womens going up to this Feſtival, whereas the Law required only the Males appearance before the Lord, three times in the year, we ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak of it hereafter.

Ver. 42. And when he was twelve years old, &c.

At what age our Saviour ſheweth his admirable wiſdom in the Temple among the Doctors, in this Story; at the ſame age had Solomon ſhewed his, in the matter of the two Hoſteſſes, about the dead and living child, 1 *King.*3.25.28. For that he was twelve years old at that time, may be conceived upon theſe collections.

Firſt, Abſalom began to rebel in the thirty ſeventh year of Davids Reign, or three years before his death, or thereabout; This is to be picked out of that dateleſs reckoning of years, 2 *Sam.*15.7. And after forty years Abſalom ſaid, let me go pay my vow, &c. Theſe forty years are counted from the time that Iſrael asked a King: three of Sauls Reign, 1 *Sam.*13.1. and ſeven and thirty of Davids, and then began Abſalom to challenge the Kingdom: and the reckoning from that date giveth this hint and intimation, that as their asking a King then did ſore diſpleaſe the Lord, ſo now are they puniſhed in the proper kind for it, when they have ſo many Kings that they know not well which to follow, and many of them periſh in following the uſurper.

Secondly, Before his open rebellion, Abſalom had been two years in Jeruſalem, and not ſeen the Kings face, 2 *Sam.*14.28.

Thirdly, Before that time, he had been three years in deſerved exile in Geſhur, 2 *Sam.*13.38.

Fourthly, And two years had paſſed betwixt the rape of Tamar and ſlaughter of Amnon, which occaſioned him into that exile, 2 *Sam.*13.23.

So that counting all theſe years together, they appear clearly to be ten at the leaſt, betwixt the rape of Tamar and Davids death: and ſo are they ſo many of Solomons age at the ſame time.

Now that there was ſome good ſpace that paſſed betwixt theſe ſums of time mentioned, as betwixt the birth of Solomon and the rape of Tamar, betwixt Abſaloms ſeeing of the Kings face, and his breaking out after into that rebellion, and other ſpaces, it cannot be denied upon ſerious and conſiderate caſting up of the Story: But to find out the exact ſpace and meaſure of time is hardly poſſible; and ſo is it to determine the age of our Saviour at the time of his diſputing with the Doctors. For though the Evangeliſt ſay that he was twelve years old, yet hath he left it doubtful, whether current or compleat: and that it was a whole half year under or over, it cannot be denied, ſeeing that he was born about September, and this his diſputing was at the Paſsover, about March or April. So when we ſay Solomon was twelve years old when he began to Reign, and when he determined the controverſie of the two Hoſteſſes, it is not neceſſary, punctually to pick out and ſhew that ſpace of time to all exactneſs, it ſufficeth to ſhew that the Text bringeth him near to that age under or over. See Ignat. Martyr in Epiſt. ad Magnes.

Verſ. 43. The child Jeſus tarried behind in Jeruſalem, and Joſeph and his Mother knew not of it.

That morning that they were to depart to their own home, it was the cuſtom to go firſt to the Temple, and to worſhip the Lord, 1 Sam. 1.19. Now the multitudes that went together at theſe times were exceeding great and many, all the males of the Nation, and very many of the females being conſtantly preſent at theſe occaſions.

When therefore Joſeph and Mary, and the Galilean company that went along with them, departed from the Temple to go their Journey, it is likely that Chriſt ſtayed behind them in the Temple Court, where alſo he haunted, till they found him again. Now he having been abſent from them, and in other companies ſometimes before in the Feſtival week, as it can hardly be doubted, it is not to be wondred if they were not ſo punctually punctually exact, as to be ſure to bring him with them in their ſight out of the Temple and the City. For they knew not, nor could they conceive, that he had any thing to do, or how he could ſtay behind them when they were gone, and therefore though they ſaw him not, yet doubted they not but he was with ſome of his acquaintance or other, in that vaſt and numerous multitude: Yea, ſo confident they were of this, that when after a while they miſſed him, yet did they not ſuſpect his ſtaying behind them in Jeruſalem, but went that days journey forward, ſearching and inquiring for him among their kindred and acquaintance, that went along with them [for ſo are thoſe words to be underſtood] till they came to their lodging. And by that time, not having found him, they reſolve, and accordingly do, on the next morning return for Jeruſalem.

It is conceived by ſome, that the multitudes going to and from theſe feſtivals, went, the men by themſelves, and the women by themſelves, and the children indifferently with either parent, as they thought good, and ſo Mary ſuppoſed that Jeſus was with Joſeph, and Joſeph ſuppoſed that he was with Mary, and by this miſ-apprehenſion, they went their firſt days journey, till they met at their lodging, before they miſt him: But if that were certain, which is very doubtful, that they thus travailed males and females apart; yet it is clear by the Text, that they jointly miſt him in their firſt days journy, and betimes in the journey, long before they came to their Inn; and yet would not return to ſeek him at Jeruſalem, where they could not ſo much as ſuſpect that he would ſtay behind, when he ſaw all the company ſetting homewards; but they ſtill go on their journey, and inquire up and down in the company for him, till their not meeting him at night reſolves them, that he was not in the company at all.

Verſ. 46. After three days they found him in the Temple.

That is, on the third day: for one they ſpent in journying home-wards, though they miſſed him, the other in returning that journey to Jeruſalem, and on the third day they find him in the Temple, where he had ſlipped from them in the croud when they came to do their farewel-Worſhip.

§. In the Temple ſitting in the midſt of the Doctors.

Compare Pſal. 82. 1. Hag. 2. 7. Mal. 3. 1, 2.

The Sanhedrin, or great Bench of Judges and Doctors ſate in the Court of the Temple: This R. Solomon obſerveth upon the conjuncture of the end of the twentieth, and beginning of the one and twentieth Chapters of Exodus: for whereas the twentieth ends with, An Altar of Earth ſhalt thou make unto me, &c. and the one and twentieth begins with, And theſe are the judgments, his collection from hence is, that the Judges were to ſit in the Sanctuary. And to the ſame purpoſe, and far more largely ſpeaketh Maimonides; The Sanhedrin, ſaith he, ſate in the Sanctuary, and their number was ſeventy one, as it is ſaid, Gather me ſeventy men of the Elders of Iſrael, and Moſes was over them, as it is ſaid, and let them ſtand there with thee, behold ſeventy one. The chiefeſt in wiſdom among them, they made head over them, and he was the head of the Bench, and Wiſemen conſtantly call him Naſi [the Prince,] and he ſtands in ſtead of Moſes: And him that is chief among the LXX, they appoint ſecond to the head, and he ſits on his right hand, and he is called Ab beth Din, or the Father of the Court, and the reſt of the LXX ſit before them two, according to their Dignity, &c. And they ſit as it were in half the floor in a Circle, that the Naſi, and the Ab beth Din may ſee them all. And they erected alſo two other Courts of Judges, of twenty three men a piece, one by the Gate of the Court, and one by the Gate of the mountain of the houſe: Maimond. in Sanhedr. per. 1. 5. That is, one at the gate of the outer Court, and another at the gate of the inner. Now into which of theſe Societies our Saviour was got at this time, it is ſomething hard to determine, ſince being in any of them he may be ſaid to be in the Temple.

Reaſon of the Order.

ALthough there be a very large ſpace of time betwixt the Section laſt preceding, and the beginning of this, yet becauſe the Reader in his Bible can ſee nothing mentioned in any of the four that may come between, he will eaſily ſatisfie himſelf without any further diſcourſe, that the order is neceſſary, and the connexion undeniable. But it may be, he may wonder why the Evangeliſts have paſſed ſo much time in ſilence, without any mention at all of our Saviour Chriſt, or of any thing done or ſpoken by him: But when he ſhall obſerve in the very firſt words of this Section, that the Preaching of John, and his baptiſm was the beginning of the Goſpel, then will he ſee that they haſten to that and forward, as to the main aim, and chief intention of their writing, but that the conception and birth of Chriſt and his forerunner were neceſſarily to be related before.

In theſe collateral columns of the Text, and forward, where we ſhall have occaſion to uſe them ſo, the Readers eye muſt ſometimes help to lay them together, where the pen could not, without changing and tranſpoſing the natural method of the Text; as in this Section now in hand, it had been both as eaſie for me to have written the third verſe of Mark, after the fourth and fifth, as before them, and more agreeing to the columns on either ſide it; but that I would not be ſo bold as to change verſes without any reaſon, which Mark not without good reaſon did diſpoſe as they lie. And this cauteloufneſs have I obſerved all along as I go, where occaſion is offered; preſuming rather to trouble the Reader to rank them with his eye, then to tear the Text in the whole cloth, and then ſew it together at other edges. It will ſometimes be inevitable, but that we muſt invert and alter the order of one Evangeliſt or other, from what he had laid it; but whereſoever that ſhall be ſo, there ſhall be ſuch a reaſon given for it, as I hope ſhall be to the Readers ſatisfaction, and mine own excuſe.

Harmony and Explanation.

MARK I. Verſ. 1.

The beginning of the Goſpel.

THE beginning of that age of the world, which the Prophets ſo unanimouſly pointed out for the time of good things to come; and which they expreſſed ſometimes by the term of The laſt days, Eſa. 2.2. Mich. 4.1. Joel 2.28. Sometimes, of the acceptable year of the Lord, Eſa. 61.1. Sometimes, of the Kingdom of God, Dan. 2.44. & 7.14. and ſometimes, of a New Heaven, and a New Earth, Eſa. 65.17. And which the Goſpel it ſelf doth begin from the beginning of the Miniſtry and Preaching of John the Baptiſt, as in this verſe, and Matth. 11.13. Act. 1.22. & 10.37. So that though in our Chronicle account, and computation, we begin to reckon from the birth of our Saviour the ſecond Adam, as the age of the world before, was reckoned from the Creation of the firſt; yet in ſtrict and exact computing, the new world, as one may call it, or the age of the Goſpel began not before the ſetting forth of John, to preach and baptize; and this his Miniſtry is moſt fitly called the beginning of the Goſpel both in regard of his preaching and of his baptizing.

For, firſt, the Doctrine and Preaching of John, was of a differing ſtrain, and diverſe tenour from the litteral Doctrine of the Law: For that called all for works and for exact performance, Do this and live; and, He that doth not all the words of this Law, is curſed; But John called for repentance, and for renewing of the mind, and for belief in him that was coming after, diſclaiming all righteouſneſs by the works and performance of the Law, but proclaiming repentance for non-performance, and righteouſneſs only to be had by Chriſt. So that here were new Heavens, and a new Earth begun to be created; a new Commandment given, a new Church founded, juſtification by the works of the Law cryed down, and the glorious Doctrine of Repentance and Faith ſet up.

Secondly, Whereas Baptiſm was uſed before among the Jews, only for admiſſion of Proſelytes or Heathens to their Church and Religion, [as Vid. Aben Ezra, Gen. 35. Rambam in Iſſurei Biah per. 13.] now it is publiſhed and propoſed to the Jews themſelves to be received, and undergone, ſhewing unto them; 1. That they were now to be entred and tranſplanted into a new profeſſion. And 2. That the Gentiles and they were now to be knit into one Church and Body.

The Miniſtery of John being of ſo high concernment, as being thus the beginning of the Goſpel, and of a new World, it is no wonder, that St. Luke doth ſo exactly point out the year by the Reign of the Emperor, the rule of Pilate, Herod, Philip, and Lyſanias, the High Prieſthood of Annas and Caiaphas, that ſo remarkable a year might be fixed and known to all the World, and that the condition and the ſtate of the times might be obſerved when the Goſpel began. And here it might have been proper to have begun the ſecond part of this our task, and not to have driven over this Period of time, and to ſtop half a year after it at the baptiſm of our Saviour; but ſince his preaching and appearing to the World, is the great and main thing that the Evangeliſts look after, and ſince the preaching of the Baptiſt was but a Preface and forerunner unto that of his; it is not unproper, and may be very excuſable to make that our entrance to another part, and take this with us in our motion to our lodging and reſting there.

§. Of Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God.

This title of The Son of God, is proclaimed of Chriſt from Heaven, at his baptiſm, when he is to begin to preach the Goſpel, as it is ſaid here to be the Goſpel of the Son of God. And it was neceſſary that ſo much ſhould be intimated and learned concerning him, as the author of the Goſpel, Becauſe 1. The Goſpel was the full revealing and opening of the will of the Father. 2. The overthrow and ruine of the Rites and Ceremonies of Moſes. 3. The admiſſion of heathen and ſtrangers to be the Church and people of the Lord, whereas Iſrael had been his peculiar before. 4. It was a Doctrine of truſting in another, and not ones ſelf for ſalvation, and who was fit for doing the three former, or for being the object of the latter, but Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God, who came from the boſom of the Father, was the ſubſtance and body of thoſe ſhadows and Ceremonies, might raze that partition wall, which in the giving of the Law himſelf had reared, and did not only preach the Doctrine of the Goſpel, but alſo fully perform the Law.

Verſ. 2. As it is written in the Prophets.

It ſeemeth by the Syrian, Arabick, Vulgar Latine, Victor Antiochenus, Origen cited by him, and others, that ſome Copies read, As it is written in Eſaias the Prophet: and ſo Janſenius thinketh it was ſo written by Mark himſelf, but purpoſely changed by the Doctors of the Church, as we read it now, to avoid the difficulty which the other reading carried with it.

But, firſt, it were a very ſtrange and impious, though an eaſie way of reſolving doubts, to add to, or diminiſh from the Text at pleaſure, as the Text ſhall ſeem eaſie or difficult: This is not to expound the Bible, but to make a new one, or a Text of ones own head.

Secondly, In ancienter times then any of theirs that are produced, which read, In Eſaias the Prophet, it was read as we do, In the Prophets, as Janſenius himſelf ſheweth out of Irenæus, lib. 3. chap. 11.

Thirdly, The one half of the words alledged in the Text, are not in Eſay at all, but in Malachi: and the firſt half alſo, for that is conſiderable. For though ſometime the New Teſtament in Allegations from the Old, do cloſely couch two ſeveral places together under one quotation, as if they were but one; yet maketh it ſure, that the firſt always is that very place which it takes on it to cite, though the ſecond be another: as Acts 7.7. Steven alledgeth a ſpeech of God, as if uttered to Abraham alone; whereas it is two ſeveral quotations, and two ſeveral ſpeeches tied up in one; the one ſpoken to Abraham indeed, but the other to Moſes, almoſt four hundred years after; and that to Abraham is ſet the firſt, for he is the ſubject whereupon the allegation is produced.

Fourthly, It is a manner of ſpeech not uſed in the New Teſtament, to ſay, it is written, or it is ſaid in ſuch or ſuch a Prophet, but by him. We find indeed, It is written in the Law, Luke 10. 26. And, It is written in the book of Pſalms, Acts 1. 20. Yea, It is written in the Prophets, Joh. 6. 45. but no where that it is written in a ſingle Prophet.

Fifthly, To read as we do, As it is written in the Prophets, agreeth with the ordinary and uſual diviſion of the Old Teſtament, by the Hebrews, into תנך or Oraietha, Nebhyim, Chetubbim. The Law, the Prophets, and the Holy writs; approved and followed by our Saviour, Luke 24.44. and alluded to by the Evangeliſt here.

[Before thy face, &c. Thy way before thee.] The former is neither in the Hebrew, nor in the LXX at all: the latter is in them both, but clean contrary, for they both have it, The way before me.

But, firſt, The Evangeliſts and Apoſtles, when they take on them to cite any Text from the Old Teſtament, are not ſo punctual to obſerve the exact and ſtrict form of words, as the pith of them, or ſenſe of the place; as might be inſtanced in many particulars: ſo that the difference of the words would not prejudice the agreement in ſenſe, were there not ſo flat difference of perſon, as me and thee.

Secondly, The Majeſty of Scripture doth often ſhew it ſelf in requoting of places, in this, that it alledgeth them in difference of words and difference of ſenſe, yea, ſometimes in contrariety, not to make one place to croſs or deny another, but by the variety one to explain and illuſtrate another, as in correſponding places in the Old Teſtament might be ſhewed at large, as Gen. 10.22, 23. cited, 1 Chron. 1. 17. Gen. 36. 12. compared with 1 Chron. 1.36. 1 Sam. 25.44. paralleled, 2 Sam. 21.8. 2 Chron. 3. 15. with Jer. 52.21. and very many other places of the like nature: wherein the Holy Ghoſt having penned a thing in one place, doth by variety of words and ſenſe, inlarge and expound himſelf in another. And the ſame divine authority and Majeſty doth he alſo uſe in the New Teſtament, both in parallel places in it ſelf, and in citations in it, from the Old. So that this difference in hand, betwixt My face, in Malachy; and thy face, in Mark, is not contradictory or croſſing one another, but explicatory or one explaining another, and both together do reſult to the greater myſtery. For Chriſt is the face or preſence of the Father: and ſo is he plainly called, Exod. 33.14. and in Chriſt, the Father came and revealed himſelf among men: and the words in both places, both in the Prophet and in the Evangeliſt, are to be taken for the words of the Father; in the one, ſpoken of the Son, and in the other, to him: In Malachy thus, Behold I ſend my Meſſenger before me to prepare the way before my face; that is, before the Son, as he is in his own nature, the very brightneſs of the glory of the Father, and the expreſs image of his perſon, Heb. 1 3. and in Mark thus, to prepare the way before thy face, that is, before thee, O Son, when thou comeſt to undertake the work of Redemption, and to publiſh the Goſpel. And this change of perſons in Grammatical conſtruction is uſual in the Hebrews Eloquence and Rhetorique; as 1 Sam. 2.23. My heart rejoyceth in the Lord, I rejoyce in thy ſalvation. There is none holy as the Lord, for there is none beſide thee, &c. Zech. 12.10. They ſhall look look upon me, whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn for him: and 14. 5. The Lord my God ſhall come, and all the Saints with thee.

Luke 3. ver. 1. In the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæſar.

This Tiberius was the third Emperor of the Romans, the ſon of Livia, the wife of Auguſtus, and by him adopted into the family of the Cæſars, and to the Empire: A man of ſuch ſubtilty, cruelty, avarice, and beſtiality, that for all, or indeed for any of theſe, few ſtories can ſhew his parallel: And as if in this very beginning of the Goſpel, he were produced of ſuch a conſtitution, to teach us what to look for from that cruel and abominable City, in all ages and ſucceſſions.

Now Tiberius his fifteenth was the year of the world 3957. And the time of the year that John began to Baptize in it, was about Eaſter, or the vernal Equinox, as may be concluded from the time of the Baptiſm of our Saviour. For if Jeſus were baptized in Tiſri or September, as is cleared hereafter, he being then but juſt entring upon his thirtieth year, as the Law required, *Numb.*4. And if John being ſix months elder then our Saviour, as it is plain he was, did enter his Miniſtry at the very ſame age, according to the ſame Law, it readily follows, that the time mentioned, was the time when he began to Preach. It was indeed Tiberius his fifteenth when John began to baptize, but it may very well be queſtioned, whether it were ſo when our Saviour was baptized by him: For the exact beginning of every year of Tiberius his reign, was from the fourteenth of the Kalends of September, or the eighteenth of Auguſt, at what time Auguſtus died: Sueton. in Aug. cap. 100. That fifteenth of the Emperor therefore, in the Spring time of which John began to baptize, was expired before September, when our Saviour was baptized, and ſo his baptiſm is to be reputed in the year of the world 3958. which was then but newly begun, and in the ſixteenth year of Tiberius, but newly begun neither, unleſs you will reckon the year of the Emperor, as the Romans did the year of the Conſuls, from January to January: But this we will not controvert, nor croſs the common and conſtant opinion of all times, that holdeth our Saviour to have been baptized in Tiberius his fifteenth.

§. Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea.

Here is called Procurator Judeæ by Tacitus, *Annal. lib.*15. and hath this brand ſet upon him by Egiſippus, that he was Vir nequam & parvi faciens mendacium, De excid. Jeruſ. l. 2. *c.*5. A wicked man and one that made little conſcience of a lie; from which unconſcionable diſpoſition, thoſe words of his, What is truth, Joh. 18. 38. ſeem to proceed, in ſcorn of truth, and deriſion of it. He ſucceeded Gratus, in the government of Judea: managed it with a great deal of troubleſomneſs and vexation to the nation: and at laſt was put out of his rule by Vitellius, and ſent to Rome, to anſwer for his miſdemeanours. *Joſeph. Antiq. lib.*18. *c.*3.4,5. Philo in legatione.

§. Herod being Tetrarch of Galilee.

This was Antipas the ſon of Herod the great, and called alſo Herod after his Father, a man that after a long and wicked miſdemeanour, in his place, was at laſt baniſhed by Caius upon the accuſation of his Nephew Herod Agrippa, and Herodias his inceſtuous mate with him, as ſhall be ſhewed in a more proper place.

§. Tetrarch.

Some tying themſelves too ſtrictly, to the ſignification of the Greek word, underſtand by Tetrarch, him that governeth the fourth part of a Kingdom, for the Original word includeth four: and accordingly have concluded, that the Kingdom of Herod the great was divided by Auguſtus after his death into four parts, and given to his four ſons, Archelaus [in whoſe room they ſay ſucceeded Pontius Pilate] Herod Antipas, Philip, and Lyſanias. In this ſtrictneſs hath the Syrian Tranſlator taken the word, rendring it thus, Herod being the fourth Ruler in Galilee, and Philip the fourth ruler in Iturea. And the Arabick thus: Herod being head over a fourth part, even Galilee: and ſo in the reſt. But if the opinion be narrowly examined, theſe abſurdities will be found in it.

Firſt, It maketh a Tetrarchy to be nothing elſe, but exactly the fourth part of a Kingdom, whereas Pliny, *lib.*5. *cap.*18. ſpeaketh of Tetrarchies that were like Kingdoms, and compacted into Kingdoms, and he nameth Trachonitis for one. His words are theſe: Intercurrunt, cinguntque has Uerbes, Tetrarchiæ regnorum inſtar ſingulæ, & in regna contribuuntur, Trachonitis, Paneas, in qua Cæſarea cum ſupradicto fonte Abila. And in chap. 23.

he

he saith, Cœlosyria had seventeen Tetrarchies, Tetrarchias in regna descriptas, barbaris nominibus decem & septem.

Secondly, It divideth Herods kingdom into four parts, whereas it was parted only into three, to his three Sons, Joseph. Ant. lib. 17.

Thirdly, It maketh Lysanias to be Herods son, which he was not at all.

A Tetrarch therefore seemeth rather to be one that was in the fourth rank or degree of excellency and government in the Roman Empire: the Emperor that was Lord of all the Empire being the first, the Proconsul that governed a Province the second, a King the third, and a Tetrarch the fourth. So Mishneh, and Shalish in the Hebrew, signifie a man, second or third to the King.

Herod made Antipas [whom he had intended for King, but changing his mind, he changed his last will] Tetrarch of Galilee and Perœa. And the Kingdom he bestowed on Archelaus: And Gaulonitis and Trachonitus, and Batanœa, and Paneas he bestowed on Philip who was his own son, and own brother to Archelaus, to be a Tetrarchy, Josep. Ant. l. 17. c. 10.

§. Of Iturea.

This Country seemeth to have taken its denomination from Itur one of the sons of Ismael, Gen. 25. 15. and it lay * edging upon Arabia, but ‖ reckoned to Syria, and upon that reference mentioned by the Evangelist here. For he speaketh of these Countries and Tetrarchies, because Syria and Judea were but one Province, and under one Proconsul. And therefore as he nameth the government of Canaan, in the two Countries of Judea and Galilee, so doth he also the government of Syria, under three, Ituria, Trachonitis and Abilene: And this is agreeable to what he had done in Chap. 2. 1. when he spake of the time of our Saviours birth: for as he there dateth the Tax that then was, by the time of a governor of Syria, so doth he now the beginning of the Gospel by the time of the Rulers there, as well as in Judea. And this was also most sutable to the Roman Records, where, seeing that Syria and Judea were joyned together into one Province, it is not to be doubted, but their Governors were named together, as members of one body.

* Stra. lib. 16. ‖ Plin. lib. 5. cap. 23.

§. And the Region of Trachonitis.

The name of this Country, as it seemeth by Strabo, was taken from two mountains, or Rocks, called Trachones: and they very probably so called from the Hebrew word, טרח, which signifieth wearisomness, in regard of the irksom and tedious difficulty of passing over them: as Strabo instantly after them, speaketh of other mountains towards Arabia and Iturea, which he titleth ὄρη Νισβατα, hills hard to travel over. Josephus supposeth Uz the eldest son of Aram, to have been the first Inhabiter of this Country, Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 7. but whether it were that son of his or no, it is not so material to inquire, as it is to observe that it was reputed a Country belonging to Aram, or within the compass of Syria: very theevish in the time of Herod, and the Inhabitants living upon the robbery of the Damascens, that lay near unto them: Joseph. Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 13.

§. Lysanias.

He was not a son of Herod, as is supposed by some, nor an immediate son of Ptolomy Mennæus, neither, as is held by others. [For though Josephus Antiq. lib. 14. cap. 23. and de Bel. lib. cap. 11. telleth that Lysanias succeeded his father Ptolomy Mennæus, yet it cannot be the same man possibly, that St. Luke here speaketh of, for that Lysanias was slain by the means of Cleopatra, a good space of time before our Saviour was born, Jos. Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 4.] But the Lysanias here mentioned, might be the great Grandchild of Mennæus, or some one of that house, that bare the same name with Mennæus his immediate son and successor.

§. Abilene.

This Country was so named from the City Abila, which Ptolomy, lib. 5. cap. 15. hath reckoned for a City of Cœlosyria, [or as some Copies have it, of Decapolis] and with this title, Ἄβιλα ἡ λεγομένη Λυσανίου, Abila surnamed from Lysanias: see also Pliny, lib. 5. cap. 18. This word soundeth so near to the word Havilah, Gen. 2. 11. & 10. 7. that it may very well well be ſuppoſed to have deſcended from it, and the name of the place from that ſon of Chuſh, that planted with his brethren mentioned with him, in Arabia and thereabouts.

Verſ. 2. Annas and Caiaphas being the High Prieſt.

There could be but one High Prieſt properly ſo called at one time: and that Caiaphas was he at this time, it is moſt clear, both out of Joſephus, and out of the Scripture. Now Annas is ſaid to be High Prieſt with him, becauſe he was the Naſi or head of the Sanhedrin, and ſo repreſented Moſes, as Caiaphas did Aaron, and he was of the ſeed of the Prieſts, as well as Caiaphas was. An evidence of his being the head of the great Councel, is, in that when our Saviour was apprehended, he was firſt led to Annas, Joh. 18.13. and by him bound and ſent to Caiaphas, *ver.*24. and that Annas is firſt placed in the Councel, Act. 4.6. We ſhall have more punctual occaſion hereafter to look after this man, and then will we ſee what we can find ſpoken of him by Joſephus.

§. The Word of the Lord came to John.

Such was the commiſſion of the Prophets, as Jer. 1. 2. Ezek. 6.1, &c. And this proclaimeth John a Prophet, as well as they. And here had he his warrant for his Miniſtry, and this was the inſtitution of the Sacrament of Baptiſm. Now whether the word of the Lord that came to John and to the Prophets, be to be underſtood of his perſonal and ſubſtantial word, as *Joh.*1.1. or of the word of Propheſie ſuggeſted to them by the Holy Ghoſt; and whether John had this word imparted to him, by viſion, or dream, or rapture, or what other way, it is not ſo material to inquire, as it is difficult to reſolve; only this is not impertinent to obſerve, That whereas the race of the Prophets that were ſent to teach and to preach to the people by the word of the Lord, was expired and extinguiſhed long ago, in the death of Malachy the laſt of that race, there is now another race of ſuch preachers to be raiſed again, viz. John, and the great Prophet, and the Apoſtles, and this is the entrance or beginning to that glorious generation. For we are to diſtinguiſh, betwixt having the gift and ſpirit of Propheſie, and betwixt being ſent by that ſpirit for a conſtant Preacher to the people. Deborah and Barak, and Huldah and Hannah, and divers others both men and women had the ſpirit of Propheſie upon them, but never had warrant to go and preach, and to be conſtant miniſters to the Church. But Eſay, and Jeremy, and Ezekiel, and the reſt of that form, under the Old Teſtament, and John and the Apoſtles under the New, had not only the ſpirit of Propheſie upon them, to foretel things to come, but they had alſo the word of the Lord came unto them, which gave them commiſſion to be continual preachers, and entred them into the function of a conſtant Miniſtry. As ſee how the Baptiſt himſelf explaineth what is meant by this word of the Lord coming to him, *Joh.*1.33. He ſent me to baptize.

§. To John the ſon of Zacharias in the wilderneſs.

Vid. Suid. in voct. Ιωάνης.

The children of the Prieſts when they came to age, were to be inſtalled and inrolled into the ſervice of the Temple; their names being entred there, and the name of their father. To this cuſtom the Evangeliſt ſeemeth to refer, when he calleth, John the Son of Zacharias in this place, and at this time, when he was to enter upon his Miniſterial function: which though he did not at the Temple, as others uſed to do, but had another kind of employment laid upon him, by the Word of the Lord coming to him in the Wilderneſs in the place of his converſe; yet [as had he been there, he muſt have been inrolled and regiſtred, thus, John the Son of Zacharias began his Miniſtration at ſuch a time, or to this purpoſe, ſo] doth the Holy Ghoſt inrol him here, at his entrance into this his Miniſtry of another kind, the word of the Lord came to John the ſon of Zacharias. And the like paſſage we may obſerve in the ſame Evangeliſt concerning our Saviour at his being baptized, and when he alſo entred upon his function.

Matth. 3. ver. 1. Preaching in the Wilderneſs of Judea.

That is, in the Cities and Towns in the wilderneſs, as Joſh. 15. 61, 62. & 1 Sam. 23. 14. 24. ſome of which were probably within the territories, and under the command of Hebron the place where John was born: for there is mention of the Cities of Hebron, 2 Sam. 2.3.

Mark 1. ver. 4. John did baptize in the Wilderneſs.

It is the moſt likely that John began to preach in the place where he was born, and from thence went to other places as he ſaw occaſion, and the Spirit moved him: And indeed Hebron it ſelf was in a manner a City of the Wilderneſs, as well as the others mentioned, though there be no ſuch expreſſion concerning it, as is of them: and if thoſe words, Luke 2. So He was in the deſerts, till the day of his ſhewing unto Iſrael, were interpreted concerning his being in Hebron; the interpretation might very well be juſtified, though to avoid cavill and offence, we have expounded it of places, which the Scripture calleth Deſerts or Wilderneſſes in expreſs terms.

However, be it in Hebron, or out of Hebron that John was educated, converſed, and began to preach; certain it is, that he did the laſt of theſe in ſome Cities of the Wilderneſs, not far from Hebron: and if it be ſaid that he baptized alſo in theſe Cities where he preached, and as yet was not gone down to Jordan, till Jeruſalem and all Judea heard of him, and came to be baptized, and then he went thither for the conveniency of water: I ſuppoſe it croſſeth nothing, either in the Hiſtory or Myſtery, and it averreth no more concerning John now, then we ſhall find him doing hereafter; namely, baptizing in other waters beſides Jordan. And indeed how can it rationally be underſtood otherwiſe, then that John baptized firſt in theſe Cities and Towns, before multitude of company drew him down unto the River?

For, firſt, it cannot be conceived that he walked or ſtood in the open fields near Jordan, and there began to preach; but that he betook himſelf to Towns or Cities where was concourſe of people.

Secondly, it can as little be conceived, that when any people in this or that City embraced his Doctrine, and deſired to be baptized, that he ſhould bring them to the River, which was ſometime far off, or delay them till all the multitude ſhould meet him there together; unleſs it could be ſhewed that the water of Jordan was only allowed to be baptized in, and no other; the contrary to which we ſhall ſee anon.

The Story therefore and progreſs of his Miniſtery and baptizing, out of the three Evangeliſts may be compiled thus: That firſt he came preaching in the Wilderneſs of Judea, in the Towns and Cities that were there, about the place of his education; That he baptized there thoſe that were converted by his preaching, and that deſired to be baptized by him: That he went abroad from thence, up and down all the Country round about Jordan, and when his converts, and the concourſe were now grown numerous, he baptized them in Jordan, becauſe there was water enough, as John 3. 23.

§ And preach the baptiſm of Repentance.

The Evangeliſt uſeth this title or epithet, in oppoſition to Circumciſion, and baptizing of Proſelytes, which had been the way and door of admiſſion in to the Church before. They might very fitly be called the Circumciſion and baptiſm of perfomance, as this the baptiſm of repentance. For whoſoever received circumciſion was ingaged by it to the performance of the whole Law, Gal. 5. 2. And the like was every Proſelyte ingaged that received Baptiſm. But this baptiſm of John, or the baptiſm in the Chriſtian Church is clean of another nature. For whereas thoſe two challenged of every one that went through thoſe doors into the Church, that they ſhould ſtand debtors to the whole Law, and be obliged to a legal righteouſneſs: our baptiſm requireth a clean contrary thing, namely, that we ſhould be obliged to repentance, in regard that the performance of the Law is a thing that is to us impoſſible, and that we ſhould be buried with Chriſt in his death, and ſeek after his righteouſneſs, ſeeing that we have none of our own. Hence appeareth clearly, firſt, a reaſon why the baptiſm of John is called the beginning of the Goſpel, for it opened a door, and gave an inlet into the Church upon other terms, then had ever been before. And, ſecondly, that baptiſm belongeth to Children, though it be the baptiſm of repentance, and they know not what repentance means: For it requireth not their repentance at their receiving of the Sacrament, when they ſtand but in the door or entry of the Church, but it ingageth them to repentance for the time to come, or when they being now entred into the Church, ſhall come to the uſe of reaſon, and knowledg of the ingagement: And ſo was it with the children that were circumciſed: for they when they underwent that Sacrament, undertook obedience to the whole Law, and yet they knew not what, either obedience, or the Law meant: But that undertaking was, what they were to do when they came to the years of knowledge and apprehenſion.

Matth. 3. Verſe 2. And ſaying, Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand.

The Phraſe, the Kindom of Heaven, which is ſo frequently and commonly uſed in the Goſpel, is taken from, Dan. 2. 44. and 7. 14. And it meaneth the ſpiritual Kingdom of Chriſt in and under the Goſpel, as it is publiſhed and preached unto all Nations. For though the phraſe be generally and truely underſtood to mean the preaching of the Goſpel; yet doth it moſt properly and naturally ſignifie the preaching of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, or among all Nations; as might be ſhewed, by the ſignification of the word Heaven, by the manner of ſpeech here uſed, that it is at hand, and ſo again, Mat. 4. 17. when the Goſpel was now Preached already: by the Text of Daniel, from whence the phraſe is taken, and by divers places in the Goſpel where it is uſed; but the full clearing of this, I have choſen to refer to that difficult place which will call for it to be cleared, when the Lord ſhall bring us thither, Matth. 16. 19. To thee will I give the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven: where I conceive Chriſt to have foretold to Peter; that he ſhould be the firſt that ſhould Preach the Goſpel, and open the door of Faith unto the Gentiles, as Acts 15. 7. and 10.

Now, The Kingdom of Heaven ſignifying thus, not barely and ſimply the Preaching of the Goſpel, but the Preaching of it to the Gentiles and their converſion, it ſheweth how proper and pregnant an argument this was to inforce the doctrine and practice of Repentance upon the Jews, becauſe the calling of the Gentiles was near at hand, which would prove their rejection and caſting off, if they did not repent, as Deut. 32. 21.

Before the coming of Chriſt, theſe four Earthly Kingdoms that are mentioned by Daniel in the Chapters cited, bare all the ſway, and domineered over all the world with cruelty and tyranny: but when they were deſtroyed, at his coming he ſet up a Kingdom of his own, and ſwayed the Scepter of Righteouſneſs over all Nations, and ruled them with his word and Spirit. And whereas before his coming alſo, the Church conſiſted but of one Nation and Kingdom: and was couched upon a ſmall parcel of Earth, the Land of Canaan, and had earthly promiſes, and earthly rites; when he came and publiſhed the Goſpel, he gathered a Church of all Kingdoms and Nations, and Languages under Heaven; and built it up with Heavenly and Spiritual promiſes and inſtructions, and thus The Kingdom of Heaven may fitly be underſtood in oppoſition to theſe two earthly ones.

Theſe borowed phraſes, intend the removing of obſtacles and ſtumbling blocks out of the way, and plaining and clearing the way for men to come to Chriſt, and to the obedience of the Goſpel. The Jews conceive that the cloud of glory that led the people of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, did really and according to the letter, do what is here ſpoken of, for facilitating of their march and journey: as that it levelled Mountains, raiſed vallies, and laid all of a flat, that it burnt up buſhes and ſmoothed rocks, and made all plain, that they might travail without trouble or offence.

And ſome of them alſo ſay, that when Jeroboam ſet up his goden calves and Idolatry in Bethel, and Dan, that he and his wicked agents laid ambuſhments and ſcouts in the ways to Jeruſalem, to catch up every one that ſhould go thither to worſhip, and to this purpoſe they apply that ſaying of the Prophet, Hoſ. 5. 1. O ye Prieſts and O ye houſe of the King, ye have been a ſnare on Mizpah, and a net upon Tabor, And the revolters are profound to make ſlaughter, &c. If either of theſe things were undoubtedly ſo, as they ſuppoſe, how properly might this paſſage of the Prophet Eſay, and of the Evangeliſt from him, be thought to refer thereunto; but ſince they be but ſurmiſals, it is ſafeſt to take the words for a borrowed ſpeech, to expreſs what was ſaid before, the removing of obſtacles in the way to Chriſt.

Mat. 3. ver. 6. Confeſſing their ſins.

Not to John, but to God: For neither was it poſſible for John to hear their confeſſions, nor was it neceſſary. Not poſſible, becauſe of the vaſt multitudes that came to be baptized: nor neceſſary, for to tell him they had comitted ſuch and ſuch ſins, what conduced it either to their baptiſm or forgiveneſs.

Nor was this their confeſſion of their ſins, before there being baptized, but after: For firſt, if we ſhould ſtrictly take the Grammatical conſtruction of the word, that importeth their confeſſing, it is not ὁμολογησάμενοι, which would have denoted that they had confeſſed before they were baptized, but it is ὁμολογέμενοι, in both the Evangeliſts, that ſpeak of that matter.

Secondly

Secondly, It was far more agreeable to the end and doctrine of Baptism, that their confession of sin should be after their baptizing then before, in that they were baptized to repentance, ver. 11. and not e contra; the Sacrament was more intentionally to enter them into repentance, then repentance to enter them into the Sacrament; For, as was said before, it obliged them more properly to repentance after the receiving of it then before.

Thirdly, the gesture of our Saviour after his Baptism seemeth to have been according to the common custom and gesture of the people, and as he coming out of the water fell to prayer, so they when they came out, used to do, to make their penitent confession to the Lord.

Mat. 3. ver. 7. When he saw many of the Pharisees, and Sadduces coming to his baptism.

The Pharisees, Sadduces, and Esseans, the three Sects of the Jews; Josephus Antiq. lib. 13. c. 9. are those three Sheepherds spoken of, Zech. 11. 8. whom our Saviour at his coming was to cut off.

The two former, whom we have now in hand, are very frequent in mention in the Gospel: men of enmity one against another, yet both joynt enemies to Christ and to his Apostles.
